50 ~~00~~

52 Copies.

no cuts but edges sometimes trimmed too tight

PUBLIC LIBRARY
No. 37069
Class
CHILLICOTHE, O.

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT

WID'S

A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | NEW YORK, JANUARY 4, 1917. | NO. 1 | 25 Cents a $10.00 a Copy Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

PUBLIC LIBRARY No. 37169 CHICOPEE

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1423	Paramount Average	74.0	67.2	257
324	Metro Average	72.8	68.2	18
456	Fox Average	72.2	67.9	59
1186	Triangle Average	71.8	66.4	235
227	Vitagraph Average	69.9	67.1	39
310	World Average	67.7	61.2	25

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1423	Paramount	74.0	67.2	257
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	64	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
2	Girl of Golden West	95	85	1
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
4	Goose Girl	97	96	3
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
3	David Harum	82	68
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	86	53	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
2	Fanchon, the Cricket	93	95	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
4	Dawn of To-morrow	92	90	1
5	Arab	89	56	2
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
4	Secret Orchard	88	85
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
1	The Majesty of the Law	40	40
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
3	Explorer	69	57
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
4	Fatal Card	72	66
4	Zaza	91	67	2
3	Girl of Yesterday	95	83	1
5	White Pearl	72	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
6	Chorus Lady	70	65
4	Secret Sin	76	83	1
6	The Yankee Girl	58	54
5	Masqueraders	59	58
9	Carmen	80	91	2
9	Still Waters	85	80	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
5	Bella Donna	96	78	3
6	Armstrong's Wife	85	65
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	2
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
14	The Cheat	94	80	8
7	The Reform Candidate	80	49
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	6
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
7	Temptation	76	70	1
5	Foundling	79	77	1
3	Tongues of Men	77	51	1
3	Mice and Men	78	77	1
4	The Golden Chance	81	68	1
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	72	72
5	The Spider	85	63	1
7	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	62	3
7	Tennessee's Pardner	64	58
5	Madame Le Presidente	19	49
6	Nearly a King	54	52	1
10	Trail of Lonesome Pine	71	88	2
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	2
6	Diplomacy	59	50	1
10	Poor Little Peppina	89	80	5
11	To Have and To Hold	74	70	3
9	Ben Blair	71	64
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	61	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	2
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
10	Audrey	75	75	3
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	51	1
7	The Race	70	63
6	Eternal Grind	68	81	3
5	The Love Mask	61	54	2
6	Molly Make-Believe	93	87	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
9	Heart of Nora Flynn	68	55	4
6	Moment Before	50	63	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Ile	52	46
13	Maria Rosa	82	80	4
10	Alien Souls	68	64	1
10	The Fued Girl	59	51
14	Pasquale	78	50	3
12	Sweet Kitty Bellairs	70	57	2

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
17 Saints and Sinners	52	47
15 Thousand Dollar Husband	68	59	4
19 Gutter Magdalene	60	61	1
9 Evil Thereof	41	39
13 Making of Maddalene	62	54	3
20 Silks and Satins	86	88	14
13 Destiny's Toy	59	50
18 The Clown	78	54	3
18 Susie Snowflake	66	57	2
14 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
18 American Beauty	62	62	3
21 The Dupe	65	63	1
20 The Smugglers	53	49	1
24 Selfish Woman	72	69	4
28 Davy Crockett	67	62
28 Dream Girl	69	64	3
26 Under Cover	80	71	5
26 International Marriage	55	50	1
26 Common Ground	64	63
32 Hulda From Holland	95	96	21
28 House of Golden Windows	72	62	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
21 Little Lady Eileen	87	90	8
20 Stronger Love	50	50
20 Public Opinion	78	71	4
18 Rolling Stones	73	68	2
17 Honorable Friend	64	61	1
17 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
15 Each Pearl a Tear	76	71	2
16 Parson of Panamint	80	69	4
9 Big Sister	43	57
8 Reward of Patience	62	51
8 House of Lies	73	61
8 Daughter of MacGregor	56	45
12 Ashes of Embers	88	87	4
11 Quest of Life	55	55
9 Anton, the Terrible	43	48
10 The Lash	55	52
6 The Storm	73	55	1
7 The Intrigue	83	37
8 Her Father's Son	69	56
6 Witchcraft	38	43
5 The Kiss	71	67
5 Rainbow Princess	83	64
4 Seventeen	92	70
2 Miss George Washington	100	100	2
4 Heir to the Hoorah	81	69	1
5 Soul of Kura San	89	71
5 Son of Erin	85	66
4 Unprotected	54	50
3 Years of the Locust	34	43
4 Plow Girl	78	53
1 Yellow Pawn	40	60

TRIANGLE

1186 Triangle	71.8	66.4	235
8 Iron Strain	81	52	2
7 The Lamb	87	74	3
7 Old Heidelberg	71	61	1
8 The Coward	84	63	1
6 Martyrs of the Alamo	68	58	2
11 The Disciple	84	75	2
6 Matrimony	80	78	1
4 Sable Lorcha	65	54
4 Golden Claw	65	75
6 Double Trouble	65	62	2
5 Aloha Oe	56	65
4 Lily and the Rose	64	56
5 Jordan is a Hard Road	55	53
5 Winged Idol	53	54
3 Penitents	28	32
9 Edge of the Abyss	68	62
2 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
4 Cross Currents	47	45
8 Between Men	72	70	1
12 Let Katy Do It	85	64	6
4 The Corner	56	44
4 Missing Link	55	43	1
2 Beckoning Flame	67	47
8 Wood Nymph	54	51	1
7 The Conqueror	71	71
8 Price of Power	55	52
8 Green Swamp	80	78	1
10 Acquitted	68	50
5 D'Artagnan	59	54
15 His Picture in the Papers	89	78	4
10 Honor's Altar	78	72	2
10 Betty of Greystone	78	68	2
21 Peggy	95	91	14
6 Don Quixote	57	62
7 Last Act	80	78	1
10 Daphe and the Pirate	72	58	1
15 Hell's Hinges	92	88	9
15 Flying Torpedo	88	82	8
11 Bullets and Brown Eyes	86	76	3
11 Martha's Vindication	86	79	2
12 Moral Fabric	76	60	1
12 Hoodoo Ann	69	66	1
12 The Raiders	82	72
9 Habit of Happiness	96	86	4
7 The Waifs	70	58	1
6 Little Meena's Romance	63	59	1
13 The Aryan	85	84	6
6 Sold for Marriage	72	73	1
11 Stepping Stones	86	77	2
8 Sunshine Dad	31	41
7 Civilization's Child	66	61	1
11 Children in the House	79	64	2
8 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
14 The Good Bad-Man	91	80	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
12 Susan Rocks the Boat	75	66
14 Not My Sister	84	80	3
14 Child of Paris Streets	61	61
16 Primal Lure	81	75	4
7 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	55	54
15 Market of Vain Desire	83	66	4
12 Going Straight	80	77	3
18 Bugle Call	95	78	4
17 Reggie Mixes In	91	81	7
12 Sorrows of Love	67	71	1
15 Innocent Magdalene	66	68	1
12 The Dividend	67	65
16 Wild Girl of Sierras	39	48
15 Apostle of Vengeance	82	86	2
14 Casey at the Bat	41	49
20 The Phantom	87	77	7
22 Flirting With Fate	87	83	7
25 The Deserter	83	67	8
19 Little Sister Ma'am	71	64	2
21 Eye of the Night	73	55	4
13 Stranded	62	54
21 Captive God	67	67	2
17 Halfbreed	70	74	2
16 The Payment	82	72	3
14 Marriage of Molly O	46	44
14 Honor Thy Name	89	69	4
15 Devil's Needle	61	62	1
15 Shell "43"	91	62	2
18 Hell-to-Pay Austin	81	69	5
15 Lieutenant Danny, U. S. A.	66	64
12 Pillars of Society	57	53	1
13 Home	90	77	6
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
14 The Patriot	74	78	5
16 Social Secretary	89	72	5
11 The Thoroughbred	77	66
9 Little Liar	66	55
15 Wolf Woman	90	91	5
12 Dawnmaker	56	80	2
10 Diane of the Follies	68	73	1
14 Manhattan Madness	94	91	8
12 Plain Jane	89	81	3
9 Old Folks at Home	82	68
9 Jungle Child	53	52	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
12 Return of Draw Egan	91	86	5
10 Vagabond Prince	72	66	2
7 Somewhere in France	79	64
5 Corner in Collens	100	96	4
3 Sister of Six	82	58	1
8 Fifty-Fifty	94	86	3
3 War's Women	62	57
5 Atta Boy's Last Race	56	61
4 American Aristocracy	99	100	3
2 Microscope Mystery	40	27
4 Honorable Algy	94	75	1
5 Jim Grimsby's Boy	66	50	2
1 Children Pay	80	65

WORLD

310 World	67.7	61.2	25
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
1 Master of House	60	65
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
2 Marrying Money	80	62
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
3 Trilby	83	58	1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	50	57	1
3 Heart of Blue Ridge	85	72	1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
1 The Ransom	55	45
3 The Labyrinth	57	58
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
4 Camille	86	75	1
1 The Rack	100	60
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85	2
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
2 Then I'll Come Back to You	85	77	1
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
1 Social Highwaymen	75	75
3 Closed Road	87	81	1
5 Feast of Life	55	73
5 Her Maternal Right	56	72
4 Sudden Riches	79	70
1 Twin Triangles	80	30
5 Tangled Fates	55	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74	2
9 Perils of Divorce	60	61
11 La vie de Boheme	45	50
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
6 Weakness of Man	61	69
11 Sally in Our Alley	61	62
13 Paying the Price	69	70	1
11 Miss Petticoats	58	59
14 Woman's Way	75	74	4
11 Summer Girl	50	58
11 Rail Rider	66	71
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	70	69
8 Dark Silence	70	80	2
3 The Revolt	62	58
4 Gilded Cage	70	67
4 Hidden Scar	76	65
4 Scarlet Oath	70	56
5 Man Who Stood Still	68	59
5 Heart of a Hero	49	38
5 Bought and Paid For	90	95	3
3 Madness of Helen	43	35
1 The Rise of Susan	100	100	1
1 The Deep Purple	70	60
1 Without a Soul	89	90

METRO

324 Metro	72.8	68.2	18
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55

s	% P. P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
Heart of a Painted Lady...	85	75
High Road	80	80
Shooting of Dan McGrew...	80	85
Fiddleman	90	80
By Best Girl	60	60
Light of Way	70	85
Second in Command	77	80
The Vampire	80	90
Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
Silent Voice	77	87
An Enemy of Society	60	40
Song of Wage Slave	75	70
Jimmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
Final Judgment	80	85
Bunnington's Choice	92	90
Woman Pays	78	52
One Million Dollars	78	70
Barbara Frietchie	82	73
Yellow Streak	84	60
House of Tears	80	65
Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
Black Fear	73	57
What'll People Say?	80	84
The Turmoil	70	55
Cure of Heart's Desire	56	56
After Debt of Honor	46	47
Man in His Soul	80	80
The Upstart	65	70
Dimples	40	50
Corner in Cotton	58	50
Price of Malice	62	59
Soul Market	83	73	1
Blindness of Love	70	80
Lovely Mary	57	80
My Madonna	80	85
After Great Price	78	66
Wall Between	75	81
Kiss of Hate	55	70
Half-Million Bribe	71	47
Playing With Fire	80	78
The Come-Back	76	71	1
Snow Bird	81	76
Million a Minute	74	89
Spell of the Yukon	70	90
His Great Triumph	63	52
Scarlet Woman	78	77	1
Adrian's Divorce	77	58
Masked Rider	63	61
Flower of No Man's Land..	53	74
Purple Lady	83	61
Eternal Question	73	83
The Quitter	74	71
River of Romance	88	76	5
The Child of Destiny	44	55
Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
God's Half Acre	74	60	1
Weakness of Strength	64	49
The Pretenders	81	75	1
The Upheaval	50	59
Light of Happiness	72	73	1
Mister 44	95	94	3
Wheel of the Law	77	65
Dawn of Love	67	59
Iron Woman	47	60
Wife's Shadows	68	62
In the Diplomatic Service	69	86	2
Brand of Cowardice	65	49
Gates of Eden	81	55
Extravagance	80	81
The Wager	88	73
My Madonna	80	85
The Wager	90	70
The Sunbeam	73	50
Big Tremaine	75	85
The Black Butterfly	90	60

FOX

Fox	71.2	67.9	59
Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
St. Elmo	52	92
Fool There Was	82	96	2
Mr. Rameau	90	87	1
Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
The Idler	55	65
Celebrated Scandal	70	70
Anna Kerinina	67	65
Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
Walls of Jericho	40	35
Woman's Resurrection	80	45

Re-ports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
7 Two Orphans	84	86	2
1 Song of Hate	90	90
6 Regeneration	74	67	3
4 Wonderful Adventure	75	75
3 Sin	63	73
1 Little Gypsy	80	75
4 Soul of Broadway	81	78	1
1 Family Stain	90	60
1 Carmen	100	100	1
2 Blindness of Devotion	57	55
2 Woman's Past	77	45
8 Broken Law	84	64	1
7 Galley Slave	76	74	1
2 Unfaithful Wife	75	70
2 Mother's Secret	75	65
2 Soldier's Oath	82	62
4 Destruction	85	95
2 Green-Eyed Monster	45	85
1 Parisian Romance	80	80
1 Fourth Estate	85	85
5 The Serpent	92	93
4 Ruling Passion	55	60
4 Merely Marry Ann	55	46
6 Fool's Revenge	44	49
7 Fighting Blood	71	65
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
9 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
8 The Bondman	79	61	1
4 Wife's Sacrifice	56	60
7 Blue Blood and Red	81	64
4 Slander	80	73
7 Modern Thelma	57	48	1
8 Man of Sorrow	63	62	1
6 Blazing Love	67	65
8 Eternal Sapho	89	90	3
9 Sins of Men	76	61	1
1 Sins of the Parents	80	50
11 Battle of Hearts	60	60
8 Spider and the Fly	70	71	1
9 Hypocrisy	77	67
8 Woman's Honor	71	74
15 East Lynne	89	93	9
13 Ambition	71	67
14 Man From Bitter Roots	83	82	2
14 Caprice of the Mountains	68	65	1
14 Tortured Heart	71	68
16 The Beast	87	69	4
19 Under Two Flags	94	92	13
11 End of the Trail	70	72
12 Sporting Blood	57	54
11 Little Miss Happiness	74	67	2
16 Daredevil Kate	71	75	1
12 Unwelcome Mother	63	67
9 Her Double Life	81	88	1
6 Where Love Leads	60	55
8 Fires of Conscience	56	63
6 Straight Way	63	71
5 Ragged Princess	71	61
7 War Bride's Secret	66	41	1
5 Romeo and Juliet	82	84	2
1 Love and Hate	60	60
1 Mischief Maker	100	100	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
2 The Mediator	70	60

MUTUAL

94 Mutual	72.3	69.5	11
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	25

Re-ports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	83	83	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	58
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
4 Soul Mates	61	52
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
2 Highest Bid	58	67	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
4 Doorsteps	63	64	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
2 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	60	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
4 Judith of the Cumberlands	73	73
1 Manager of the B & A	30	50
1 Pearl of Paradise	50	75
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
13 The Count	87	77	8
6 The Pawnshop	72	79	2
4 Behind the Scenes	93	96	3
1 The Rink	100	95

PATHE

95 Pathe	67.9	69.3	8
1 The Spender	80	80
2 At Bay	82	86
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
2 Beloved Vagabond	85	80
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
2 King's Game	62	62
5 Madame X	75	93	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
6 Shadow of Her Past	29	85
4 The Fugitive	75	63
4 Little Mary Sunshine	88	75
5 Shine Girl	69	70

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
1 The Test	60	55
1 Saint, Devil and Woman	32	50
1 Light That Failed	70	65
2 Shadows and Sunshine	98	70
BLUEBIRD
140 Bluebird	59.1	60.9	15
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
1 Secret Love	20	20
1 Hops	20	15
6 Undine	78	89	2
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
1 Rupert of Hentzau	58	80
1 Strength of the Weak	80	80
2 The Flirt	42	77
1 Great Problem	80	62
2 Gaylord Waring	62	72
3 Crippled Hand	59	75	1
2 Gilded Spider	45	65
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
3 Son of the Immortals	63	71
3 Eye of God	57	82	1
2 Bobby of the Ballet	65	80
1 The Evil Women Do	20	20
7 Three Godfathers	66	74	1
12 Shoes	73	76	3
7 Broken Fetters	49	57	1
6 Love Girl	67	69	1
6 Grasp of Greed	71	75	1
6 Silent Battle	73	84
7 Secret of the Swamp	68	53	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
6 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	74
6 Little Eve Edgarton	59	63	1
6 Girl of Lost Lake	58	54
5 Unattainable	46	42
9 Saving the Family Name	79	53	1
4 Behind the Lines	48	54
6 Wanted—A Home	75	68
1 Chalice of Sorrow	70	40
2 Social Buccaneers	65	47
1 Stranger from Somewhere	45	20
1 Gloriana	60	60
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
UNIVERSAL
1 Jewel	75	70
1 Scandal	80	72
1 Langdon's Legacy	80	60
1 Love's Pilgrimage	60	60
1 College Orphan	70	60
1 Colorado	90	100
RED FEATHER
53 Red Feather	65.3	58.5	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
1 Beckoning Trail	85	60
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
2 Huntress of Men	35	20
2 Youth of Fortune	60	50	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
1 Place Beyond the Wind	80	80
GREATER VITAGRAPH
227 Vitagraph	69.9	67.1	39
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
3 The Juggernaut	70	70	2
5 The Island of Regeneration	80	78	3
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	69	2
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
1 Rights of Men	50	80
2 Turn of the Road	77	77
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
3 Great Divide	90	70	2
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
4 Green Stockings	89	90	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
2 Island of Surprise	95	97
4 Gods of Fate	63	58
7 A Night Out	79	73	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
4 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
2 Hero of Submarine D-2	82	75
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
4 Salvation Joan	81	57
5 God's Country and Woman	84	82	2
1 Love's Toll	60	80
5 Law Decides	77	59	2
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
8 The Suspect	79	76	1
2 Lights of New York	70	80
6 The Destroyers	65	52	1
1 Redemption of Dave Darcey	100	100
3 Man Behind the Curtain	87	75
7 The Shop Girl	76	76
3 The Conflict	67	47
5 Fathers of Men	65	60
7 The Tarantula	81	71	2
11 Daring of Diana	65	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
8 Light at Dusk	81	67	2
6 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
2 Footlights of Fate	60	87
7 The Combat	80	84
3 The Kid	59	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
1 His Wife's Good Name	30	90
5 Through the Wall	85	69	1
11 The Chattel	66	80	1
5 Prince in a Pawnshop	55	58	1
2 Blue Envelope Mystery	52	52
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
4 Last Man	85	68
1 Devil's Prize	40	50
2 Price of Fame	40	50
KEYS
73 K. E. S. E. Service	66.3	60.4	18
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
4 Graustark	88	90	3
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
1 The Rosary	80	20	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
1 The Alster Case	90	80
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
3 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
1 Little Shepherd of Bargain Row	90	70
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
2 Into the Primitive	40	50
2 That Sort	75	37	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
5 Return of Eve	85	84
4 Country God Forgot	74	67
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
1 Cossack Whip	90	13
SPECIAL FEATURES
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
3 The Christian	77	70	1
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
2 Fall of a Nation	65	90
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
8 The Common Law	90	96
4 Less Than the Dust	54	79
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
1 Civilization	40	60
2 Cabiria	45	45
1 Marvelous Maciste	70	50
2 Faded Flower	82	74
4 The End of the World	20	56
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
3 Iron Hand	60	30
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85
5 Whirl of Life	72	88
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100
5 The Melting Pot	78	53
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78
1 Hiawatha	40	100
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
2 The Alien	95	72
5 Eternal City	90	95
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
3 Little Girl Next Door	87	97
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80
1 Diana	75	100
5 Where Are My Children?	88	92
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86
8 Romeo and Juliet	87	53
1 Purity	92	86
1 The Clansman	99	100
MISCELLANEOUS
1 How Britain Prepared	80	100
1 Fighting in France	30	80
1 Spellbound	60	60
1 Lena Rivers	80	60
1 Man Who Couldn't Lose	60	60
1 The Old Crossroads	60	40
1 From Manger to Cross	90	40
1 Days of Thundering Herds	90	90
1 Exposition's First Romance	65	83
1 York State Folk	10	25
1 Feathered Nest	90	80
1 Puppets	50	40
1 Smash 'Em Kelly	48	35

(Continued on next page.)

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

WONDERFUL STAR IN ARTISTIC JUMPY ACTION SERIAL MELLER TYPE

Anita Stewart in

THE GIRL PHILIPPA

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	S. Rankin Drew
AUTHOR	Robert W. Chambers
SCENARIO BY	S. Rankin Drew
CAMERAMAN	Arthur T. Quinn
AS A WHOLE	Fast, interesting action; unconvincing, but entertaining
STORY	Made wild leaps and became rather involved, but held interest
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive, classy atmosphere, with splendid individual scenes, but seemed jumbled
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective; others a bit indistinct
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STAR	Delightful beauty, with magnetic personality
SUPPORT	Very good; one or two very fine
EXTERIORS	Many fitted atmosphere; some decidedly distinctive; some rather ordinary
INTERIORS	Generally fine for atmosphere
DETAIL	Very good, except story jumps
TIME	Sixty-five minutes

IN watching this offering you get something of an impression that there is too much story crowded into the footage. This packing of the action so closely together that melodramatic scene followed melodramatic scene, resulted in a loss of a sense of values, with the result that some of the action became funny when it should have been taken seriously. Most of the individual scenes were well handled, but, unfortunately, from the very first we found one stirring incident following another, with long titles to explain the jumps from one incident to the other, this development failing to allow for a proper building to the various bits of excitement.

At first these long titles and the hitting of the high spots only tended to bewilder the spectator and leave a question as to exactly what it was all about, but toward the end of the production there was one bit of "meller" after the other at such a rapid rate that the audience began to see something humorous in most of the incidents. It is never good to have an audience laugh at any serious production, but in this instance I can tell you that the general effect will be decidedly pleasing, even though your patrons do seem to make fun of the offering in spots.

I believe that it is principally the delightful personality of Miss Stewart which saves this. Mr. Drew is also deserving of considerable credit, because he has provided an exceptional amount of classy, distinctive atmosphere as a setting for the wild adventures having to do with the recovery of the "poipers," and this distinction of setting helps wonderfully in keeping this from becoming ridiculous.

There are oodles of scenes in this which carry all the melodramatic stunts of the modern exaggerated melodrama used in the serials, and from the manner in which the many loopholes in the story have been covered over by long explanatory titles, it might seem as if it had been the original intention to make this as a serial, with the offering reduced afterward to nominal feature footage.

The plot concerns itself for the most part with the attempt of German spies to secure the plans of a new explosive shell which had been sold to England by this country. The agents for England and those for Germany were so numerous, with an insufficient distinction between them, to make their identity rather confusing through most of the scenes.

Miss Stewart, as the cashier in the restaurant where much of the paper pursuit occurred, and Mr. Drew, as a young American artist who happened to be in the neighborhood, were the two characters who stood out throughout the offering.

The construction of the plot gave us to understand very soon that Miss Stewart was some sort of a princess, and consequently we were not surprised in the least to learn on the finish that she had been kidnapped as a child.

There was little that could be called the finished method of the dramatist in creating suspense, because the development throughout was very much a la serial, with the papers changing hands frequently as the various characters were shot up or wounded in the battle for the possession of the documents.

There was one touch which started them laughing, and it should certainly be eliminated. A group of German spies had just waited in an automobile to bombard an English spy who was racing along on a motorcycle, carrying part of the plans. The Englishman had been killed quick and the papers secured, and then a man was seen to calmly come to the automobile and start away with a pick and shovel. This nonchalant preparation to bury the dead tended rather toward the burlesque, or at least it will undoubtedly strike most members of your audience in that way.

Following this we had much battling, and the drama seemed to run wild, with the result that it failed to register effectively. Toward the finish, after the plans had been successfully delivered and the only thing which remained was to learn that Miss Stewart was a princess, which we already suspected, she was attacked by two Apaches in costumes which in themselves, made the characters seem like Keystone Komedians. When Mr. Drew started to the rescue he took off his hat and threw it out on the roadway. That started a laugh, and when he reached the scene he took off his coat before he started to whip the ruffian. That made the laugh general.

Despite the fact that too much action has been crowded into the footage, with too many long, explanatory titles used to cover the jumps, I believe that the personality of Miss Stewart and the general class of the atmosphere will make it seem worth while, and I have a hunch that your patrons will accept the wild-eyed action without taking it too seriously and consider the production, as a whole, rather good entertainment.

There werem any close-ups of Miss Sterwart which registered her unusual type of beauty perfectly, and in many instances we got camera angles which gave her features a distinction which mark her as an exceptional type.

In choosing his exterior locations, Mr. Drew gave us several beauty spots that will be remembered, and, while the battle scenes were not terrifically impressive, they were effective enough to more than fill the requirements of this offering.

In presenting this at the Rialto, Manager Rothapfel put over a clever bit of showmanship when he secured an unusual effect, which I believe has never been done before in any theatre. There is one place in the production where we have a close-up of an insert of a proclamation calling for the mobilization of troops. This placard is, of course, white, and it was shown as if it had been tacked against a wall, with the result that there was a black space on either side of the notice. Seeing an opportunity for an effect, Mr. Rothapfel secured about sixty feet of weekly film showing marching French troops—a great body of men swinging along in unison, straight into the camera. He placed this weekly film in his second projection machine so that when the proclamation appeared upon the screen he had the second operator project from the second machine the marching troops over the face of the other film, which gave the effect of a double exposure, with the troops marching down to the foreground apparently through the mobilization article. At the same time his orchestra played the Marseillaise, and this effect was cheered in his theatre, which surely evidences the advantage of attempting such unusual stunts. This would not be difficult for any one to arrange, although it takes capable operators to do it properly.

Anders Randolf, in the part of the traitor who had abducted Miss Stewart, gave a splendid performance, and a varied assortment of spies and diplomats were good types, although there were so many of them who looked somewhat alike that it was hard to tell just who was who.

The Box Office Angle

The name of Miss Stewart alone should be sufficien to pack them in on this offering. The name of the pr duction, coupled with that of the author, gives it add tional strength at the box office. Since the Hearst paper are giving much publicity to this offering, I would sa that it is a sure-fire box-office success.

Despite the fact that the general impression is one o rather badly jumbled action, I still believe that there ar enough entertaining qualities about this to guarante that most any audience will like it very much, and I say that you can consider yourself very safe in playin this and boosting it heavily.

I'd make it plain that this is a story of the preser war, having to do with a struggle between diplomat agents for the possession of important plans in whic an American artist and a cashier of a restaurant b came involved. That sounds interesting and promis considerable action. I would stay away from th "cashier becomes princess" thought, because the aud ences, to my mind, are no longer impressed by the Cin derella stuff. It has been done to death.

Many people may be interested to know that S. Ranki Drew, who directed this and played opposite Mis Stewart, is the son of Sidney Drew, the star of th Metro comedy series. Such human interest points ger erally give an added personal touch to the fan's con sideration of a production.

If you expect to play all the Vitagraphs produced, yo might announce that they intend to present Miss Stewar in eight big features in the coming year—one ever six weeks.

WESTERN MELER WITH DEPRESSING FINISH HARDLY ENTERTAINING

George Beranger and Claire McDowell in

MIXED BLOOD

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Charles Swickard
AUTHOR	Willard Mack
SCENARIO BY	J. Grubb Alexander
CAMERAMAN	Harry Maguire
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary action melo, with messy, depressing finish
STORY	Hardly entertaining
DIRECTION	Provided a few dramatic moments, but lacked coherent development
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to poor
LIGHTINGS	A few quite effective; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Occasionally good; generally ordinary
STARS	Held some scenes effectively
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere, but rarely artistic
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Messy
TIME	Sixty-one minutes

THERE is undoubtedly a certain class who like action melodramas, but, to my mind, they prefer stories which carry a love interest that develops smoothly and a proper trend of sympathy. In this offering there is considerable action, but the development leaves the sympathies rather uncertain, with a finish which is certainly depressing and may even be repulsive to many.

There is surely nohing unusual about the plot, it being what might have been accepted as a $25 one-reel script five years ago. We are introduced to an assortment of characters—a gambler, a sheriff, a saloonkeeper, a couple of free-and-easy women and a heroine, who was the daughter of a Spaniard and an Irish woman. The saloonkeeper, the gambler and the sheriff all got thei affections twisted between a couple of the women, wit several clashes resulting, the gambler finally shootin up the saloon and then starting on a getaway across th border, which had been suggested by the woman, wh wanted to get rid of him. She had conveniently learne that the town across the border was plague ridde Evidently no one else had heard of this.

The sheriff liked the Spanish-Irish girl, also love by the gambler, and the best scenes in the entire offe ing were found where the sheriff caught the gamble at his sweetheart's home and she shielded him after hid ing him in a closet. These few scenes were about th only effective bits in the entire film, and they wer made good principally by the work of Mr. Berange Mr. Stewart and Miss McDowell. Both Mr. Berange and Miss McDowell have had experience with Mr. Grif fith, and they have undoubtedly played this same situa tion many times in the past.

Escaping across the border with his sweetheart, th gambler found himself in a town where the dead wer strewn about the streets as if there had been a battl The sheriff afterwards came to this town to find th gambler dying, and he rode back across the border, tak ing the girl with him.

The many scenes on the finish showing the effect o the plague and the vultures flying above the city, nea the bodies of the plague victims, were certainly ob jectionably detailed. I can't figure this sort of thing a entertainment.

There was a lack of intelligent discrimination in th placing of the sympathy, with the result that any au dience will lose interest in what is to become of th various characters, and I have a hunch that most peopl will either walk out on this or decide that they don care what happens before it's half over.

The only good spots in this entire offering were few close-ups of Miss McDowell and Mr. Beranger, an these two artists were decidedly more effective in their close-ups than they were in the long shots, because at times they were inclined to be a bit theatric when seen at long range.

Roy Stewart, as the big sheriff, looked like a hero, but was unable to gain the proper sympathy because of the manner in which the story was handled.

Others in the cast were Wilbur Higby, Harry Archer and Mrs. Emmons.

The Box Office Angle

I don't consider this entertainment, because it is simply an ordinary action melodrama, without the essential elements of sympathy and romance. The depressing, repulsive scenes on the finish will leave a bad taste, and I fear that most any audience will feel that this is hardly what they care to see when they are seeking restful recreation.

If you have to play this I'd concentrate my advertising upon calling attention to the presence of George Beranger and Claire McDowell, saying that they are former Griffith stars, but I wouldn't promise very much either for the story, the production or the players. If you can skip this it would be well to do so, because I'm quite sure that it would not make a very favorable impression.

IDEAL PART SHOWS THE SUPREME "DOUG" AT HIS BEST

Douglas Fairbanks in

THE AMERICANO

Fine Arts-Triangle.

DIRECTOR	John Emerson
AUTHOR	Eugene P. Lyle
SCENARIO BY	John Emerson and Anita Loos
AS A WHOLE	Heroic, romantic farce; delightfully done
STORY	Central America revolutionary romance with comedy relief
DIRECTION	Provided distinctive, artistic atmosphere and mixed thrills with fun
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very fine
LIGHTINGS	Decidedly effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent; vignetting added distinction
STAR	Irrepressible "Doug" at his best
SUPPORT	Excellent
EXTERIORS	Some beautiful composition; all well chosen
INTERIORS	Distinctive and classy
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Sixty-one minutes

I BELIEVE that this will be the most successful production this very popular star has ever appeared in. There is a combination here of romance and love interest, red-blooded American heroics, convincing athletic thrills and delightful human comedy. The action rings true every moment despite the fact that the story concerns one of those Central American revolution things which are always considered more or less of a joke by Americans.

The director has provided an exceptionally artistic atmosphere, through having photographed all of the exteriors to advantage and through making the interiors look like what they were supposed to be. There was nothing "stagey" about any of the sets. They looked like honest-to-goodness palace rooms and big business offices.

I can think of no offering in which Mr. Fairbanks has appeared where he had the opportunity to register his personality as he did in this without at any time allowing it to be overdone. "Manhattan Madness" comes close to this offering, but it depended almost entirely upon a trick ending, while this was straight heroic melodrama made funny by the personality of the star and the intelligent handling of the director.

We had a delightful contrast provided in a Bert Williams type of colored porter, played by Tom Wilson, the slow awkwardness of this character serving as a wonderful bit of comedy contrast to Mr. Fairbanks' happy-go-lucky athletic prowess.

Americans will love "Doug" Fairbanks in this because he typifies the American as we all love to think of him.

I want to comment particularly upon the presence of Alma Reubens in this offering. Miss Reubens, a week or two ago, appeared with Bill Hart in "Truthful Tulliver" and made a decided impression. She has registered to advantage in many previous offerings. In this she adds another success, and it seems to me that she is reaching the point where she deserves real recognition, because I am quite sure that millions of fans have already marked her as a favorite.

The remainder of the cast were well chosen as to type and there was not a slip in any of the characterizations.

As usual, we had some athletic stunts by the star, but in this offering these were worked into the story so nicely that there was always a reason for them. The bit which will certainly bring down the house anywhere was the wild leap in which "Doug" tackled two "willuns" at once, grabbing one man with his arms and locking his legs about the neck of the other in such a manner as to hold them both securely until he put one out of commission.

The story of this was adapted from Eugene Lyle's tale of a South American revolution, published as "Blaze Derringer." It tells of a young American engineer's adventures in rescuing the imprisoned president of a small republic, which resulted in the overthrow of the "willunous" military dictator. Of course, there was the premier's daughter to add the proper love interest, and it was nicely handled.

Anita Loos provided the titles, and she registered at least a score of hearty laughs on the titles alone. They were all quite human.

In the supporting cast were Lillian Langdon, Tote Du Crow, Carl Stockdale, Spottiswoode Aitken and Charles Stevens.

The Box Office Angle.

You can figure yourself safe if you bill this as the greatest production in which "Doug" Fairbanks has yet appeared. I think he is the biggest drawing card in the films today without any exception, and if you don't clean up right on this it's nobody's fault but your own. You can bill it to the limit as a heroic romance of fun and thrills and tell them that "Doug" appears as the type of young American that we all love. Talk about his irresistible smile in your billing, and you can say that the story tells how one American managed to overthrow a Central American revolution and restore the former president.

You might mention the fact that Mr. Fairbanks has a new fun-maker, speaking of Tom Wilson as the colored porter who appears as Mr. Fairbanks' Man Friday. I would mention the presence of Alma Reubens, calling attention to her recent appearance in "Truthful Tulliver" and other Triangle offerings, since that may help some at the box office.

Go the limit on this and you should be able to bank a nice roll.

PICTURESQUE PIRATE ROMANCE THAT NEVER CONVINCES OR GRIPS

Pauline Frederick in

THE SLAVE MARKET

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... Hugh Ford
AUTHOR ..... Frederick Arnold Kummer
CAMERAMAN ..... Ned Van Buren
AS A WHOLE ..... Unconvincing pirate romance, artistically done
STORY ..... Elementary plot of pirate adventure
DIRECTION ..... Provided artistic atmosphere, with effective individual scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Many unusually artistic and distinctive CAMERA WORK ..... Helped production noticeably
STAR ..... Beautiful; distinctive personality
SUPPORT ..... Typical hero and pirate types
EXTERIORS ..... Many unusually artistic; all well chosen
INTERIORS ..... Very good; some effectively lighted
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes

ALTHOUGH this had to do with the days of the pirates bold, and the story was never convincing, the action was interesting and the atmosphere artistic and different, so that many may consider it a good bit of entertainment. Miss Frederick was presented as a Spanish maiden in distress, who was rescued by the handsome hero from the clutches of the mean old pirate, who was going to make her love him whether she would or not.

There was a little bit of "buried treasure" mixed in for good measure, and, on the finish, after Miss Frederick had stabbed the wicked old "willun" and had been placed on the auction-block to be sold as a slave, we found the hero racing to the rescue to buy her liberty with the treasure which had been buried.

As a story, this is pretty rotten; but, clothed in the romantic costuming, with picturesque exteriors and unusual lightings for the interiors, it becomes an artistic offering which will be generally accepted as worthy of spending an hour on.

Miss Frederick's personality is such that she can hold a scene rather well, even though there be no chance of making the action convincing. She is a beautiful woman and knows how to register to the best advantage. This provides an opportunity for her to "emote" while clad in all the radiant outfit such as a pirate's favorite should wear. On the finish, she is quite statuesque as the white slave being sold at auction.

Albert Hale, as the pirate bold, and Wellington Playter, as his wicked assistant murderer, made such vicious grimaces when first introduced that I fear that most plain, honest American folk will be inclined to chuckle quietly to themselves when they see them. The impression made by these two brings to mind the work of various Keystone Komedians in burlesquing wicked "willuns," and I've a hunch that most audiences will refuse to take the wickedness of this pair very seriously.

Thomas Meighan, as the hero, who, after meeting the lady fair on one or two occasions, was conveniently washed ashore after the pirates had captured the boat and maid, so that he might arrive at the psychological moment to rescue her, was a regulation hero, doing all of the usual stunts after the accepted system.

The scenes on shipboard were typical of what we have come to consider approved pirate methods, and there is little fault to be found with any of the atmosphere. The production fails to convince, simply because we do not take pirate stuff very seriously these days. Possibly if the two "willuns" had been able to impress a bit more dramatically, instead of touching the humorous spots so frequently, the story might have seemed more real.

Ruby Hoffman ,as the mistress of the pirate chief, who was supplanted by the capture of Miss Frederick, was a bit conscious of the fact tha she was playing a vampire "willuness."

The Box Office Angle

If you will go after this from the viewpoint of it being interesting entertainment because of the colorful presentation of the atmosphere of the old pirate days of the West Indies, you should be able, by tying that up with the presence of Miss Frederick as the star, to do considerable business. Thomas Meighan is a favorite with many as a hero and his presence may help.

I wouldn't talk much about the merits of this story from any angle except that it provided exceptional opportunities for artistic and unusual atmosphere. I would concentrate upon the presence of Miss Frederick as the beautiful victim captive of the wicked pirate chieftain. Make considerable fuss about this being a pirate story, reminding your patrons of the fact that they used to love to read about the bold, bad men who sailed under the Black Rover.

This isn't a big, dramatic offering, although there are one or two scenes which are fairly effective, but this is rather interesting entertainment because of the very unusual atmosphere.

TREMENDOUS IMPRESSIVE SPECTACLE WITH SUPERB MOMENTS

Geraldine Farrar in

JOAN THE WOMAN

Lasky Special

DIRECTOR.....Cecil B. De Mille
AUTHOR.....Jeanie Macpherson
CAMERAMAN.....Alvin Wyckoff
AS A WHOLE....Effective as spectacle, impressive as to atmosphere, but has conflicting sympathy because of theme
STORY.....That concerning Joan very forceful; modern incidents marred effect
DIRECTION....Made big scenes tremendously impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Some marvelous bits, but seemed out of focus at times
LIGHTINGS.....Many very effective and exquisitely artistic; generally distinctive CAMERA WORK.....Decidedly distinctive; except occasional out of focus scenes
STAR.....Dominating, impressive personality
SUPPORT.....Some remarkably distinctive characterizations
EXTERIORS.....Well chosen for atmosphere, with some unusually effective locations
INTERIORS.....Impressive; helped make atmosphere classy
TIME.....Two hours and fifteen minutes.

JOAN THE WOMAN can be played anywhere at advanced prices and make a most favorable impression so far as the merit of the production as a spectacle and dramatic historical story is concerned.

Producer De Mille has given us some wonderfully effective battle scenes and has presented an atmosphere of distinction in his dramatic moments which, combined with the dynamic personalities of the star and supporting cast, has made all of the dramatic moments truly impressive. There is an air of distinction and class about the entire offering which places it in the front rank of big productions, and certainly no one can see this offering without being impressed with the tremendous strides made in the last two or three years by our producers of big films.

Unfortunately, the author and producer have seen fit to tie their historical theme to a modern prologue and epilogue, with the very apparent purpose of attempting to take the sting out of the historical situation which presented the English and French as enemies. This use of the modern incidents is so plainly for that purpose that, to my mind, it fails utterly to accomplish its aim and, surely, it lessens the power of the historical spectacle. If we had been able to see Joan dying at the stake on the finish, with the flames that rose about her as the last thing on the screen, we could have gone out of the theatre tremendously impressed. When this scene dissolved into the modern situation again, we were brought back to the realization that this modern soldier had been dreaming all of this. The effect created by the big tragedy was lost in the following scenes of modern melodrama.

It seems to me to have been a pity that these modern scenes were used, and I believe that the production would be much more effective without them. I cannot feel that their introduction is needed to offset any possible thought of antagonism by the English, owing to the fact that the story of Joan is thoroughly known, and what happened in the centuries gone by will have no effect upon sentiment as it stands to-day.

The author and producer have bucked against another proposition which may mean serious opposition in certain sections, and that is a possible controversy with the Catholic Church. I am not thoroughly versed in the actual details of the life of Joan of Arc, but I presume that the author of this has followed rather closely the facts of history. That being the case, it seems unfortunate that there should be any criticism, but I fear that the detail given to the part played by the archbishop and the monks in the persecution of Joan may cause some agitation against the picture by the Catholic Church. That thought should at least be given some consideration when you are planning to handle this production.

There were many places, particularly in the early part of the offering, where some intelligent cutting to shorten scenes somewhat and quicken the tempo would have helped very decidedly in the resultant effect. The production was very interesting, but did not truly grip until it worked into the first of the spectacular battle scenes, and then the tempo was truly stirring, with the spectacular action handled in a masterly manner.

The dramatic scenes having to do with Joan's visit to the king were very well handled, and the scenes of the torture preceding the burning at the stake were made doubly effective by unusual lightings.

Miss Farrar, as Joan, realized the dignity and inspired power of the character sufficiently to make Joan the dominating figure through all of the dramatic action.

In the supporting cast, Theodore Roberts, as Cauchon, the archbishop; Hobart Bosworth, as General La Hire, and Tully Marshall, as the mad monk, made these characters tremendously impressive. Wallace Reid, as Eric Kent, the Englishman who fell in love with Joan, made a handsome hero, his splendid physique adding to the suggested strength of his characterization. Raymond Hatton, as the weakling King, handled this difficult characterization with splendid shadings of emotion. Charles Clary, as the traitorous advisor of the King, was effective, without overplaying, and Cleo Ridgley made the small part of the King's favorite stand out noticeably.

Others in the cast were Marjorie Daw, James Neill, Larry Peyton, Horace B. Carpenter, Stephen Gray, Hugo B. Koch, Ernest Joy, John Oaker, Wm. Conklin, Walter Long, and Emilius Jorgensen.

The titles were very well prepared, there being a number of new ideas incorporated in the decorations. These helped materially in keeping the note of distinction predominant throughout the film.

Many times it seemed that scenes were out of focus, not only in the background, which is permissible, but in the foreground, where the characters were. Since we occasionally had a title that was a bit off focus, it was very difficult to determine whether this faulty focusing was in the projection or in the film itself. This was not serious enough to affect the ordinary patron, but if the film was off focus it is to be seriously regretted.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that this offering can be considered a big money-getter, despite any possible opposition from the Catholic Church. The story, being based upon historical facts, is really not subject to any forceful attack, and the combination of the historical character of Joan of Arc and the very popular prima donna, Geraldine Farrar, should mean much money at the box office.

I believe that some intelligent editing would make the offering decidedly more effective, and I think it would be better without the modern story incidents, but as it stands it is certainly an impressive spectacle, stirring at times, with an atmosphere of distinction and class which marks it as a very much worth-while special feature.

You should be able to get advanced prices anywhere on this. In fact, I think this could be played, and probably will be, as a road attraction.

ARTISTIC ATMOSPHERE AND DELIGHTFUL STAR MAKE THIS A WINNER

Marguerite Clark in

SNOW WHITE

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR	J. Searle Dawley
AUTHORS	Grimm Brothers
ADAPTED BY	Winthrop Ames
CAMERAMAN	H. Lyman Broening
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally well done fairly classic
STORY	Loved by kids; known to all
DIRECTION	Made it exquisitely artistic, impressive, classy and human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some wonderful bits; generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Generally fine; some exteriors very artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Delightful personality
SUPPORT	Exceptionally well chosen
EXTERIORS	Some remarkably fine; all very good
INTERIORS	Distinctive
DETAIL	Fine, with one slip
TIME	Eighty-three minutes

MISS CLARK scored a tremendous success in "Snow White" as a play at Winthrop Ames' Little Theatre. That should be kept in mind when anyone tells you that the grown-ups will not enjoy this. Of course, this is primarily a visualization of a fairy tale, and as such appeals particularly to children. It has been so well done, however, as to make it a distinct artistic success, and I believe that most grown-ups, particularly the discriminating community audiences, will enjoy this very much.

While I don't feel that any large percentage of film patronage is made up of children, despite the fact that most reformers think so, I do know that there is a tremendous possibility of pulling business of both kiddies and adults when you have something which appeals particularly to the children. A production which you know to be good and which has a particular appeal for children is a pretty safe bet. You will find today that most grown-ups insist that they go to the circus in order to take the children. Nevertheless, they seem to enjoy it. The answer is that we are all children, and, except for the small percentage of hardened cynics who may say that they don't care for fairy tales, I believe that you'll find enough patronage for an offering of this sort to play to capacity.

The story of Snow White is too well known to need telling here. I can assure you that it has been beautifully presented, humanly told and produced in an atmosphere of distinction and artistic class. There are many beautiful lightings, the costumes are elaborate, the camera work for the trick effects was well done and in every way the production is worthy of enthusiastic commendation.

It is unnecessary for me to tell you exhibitors how popular Miss Clark is today. She is fast becoming the favorite star of millions. This isn't a personal opinion, but the opinion of hundreds of exhibitors, who have come to that decision after playing her in a number of offerings.

The manner in which Producer Dawley has kept the human element predominant in this fanciful fairy tale gives it an added interest for all grown-ups, and he has even registered many pleasing bits of comedy, the character of the court chamberlain having been handled in such a manner as to make it truly funny. The peculiar coat-tails of this pompous, effeminate official will get laughs from any audience, anywhere. The little touch on the finish where one of the dwarfs got caught under these ever-present coat-tails gives the production a fine bit of comedy for the kick-off.

The scenes in the witch's cave were exceptionally well lighted and the scenes in the home of the dwarfs were quite evidently made by a man who was in love with his work. Surely, Mr. Dawley was a happy choice for the production of such a well-known children's classic.

I want to comment particularly upon a number of exteriors, photographed in Florida with a back light, because I have rarely seen more artistic locations used in any production.

The story of Snow White as told in this screen production carries nicely, holding the interest all the way. It becomes a human little plot, which, despite the occasional fanciful twists, seems to be quite real.

While the details in all of this was excellent, and an attempt was made to present distinctive titles which would be artistic, there was one slip in the preparation of an insert which surely should have been remedied. In preparing the written proposal from the prince for the hand of Snow White in marriage, the sentence was started with dots and finished with dots. This is always absolutely wrong and is confusing to many. It would have been just as easy to have made the wording which they desired to show fill the entire screen, with the remainder vignetted, and certainly such a fine production should not have even such a technical error.

In the supporting cast were Creighton Hale, Dorothy G. Cumming, Lionel Braham and Alice Washburn.

The Box Office Angle.

I certainly believe that you can do an exceptional business with this, and to my mind it will be no one's fault but your own if you don't. In addition to having Miss Clark as your drawing card you have the possibilities of getting all the kids for your matinees, and when you get the kids in great numbers you, of course, get many grown-ups who are not in the habit of coming out regularly. I'd make a particular fuss about Miss Clark's having starred in this for two years, in New York, at the Little Theatre, because that will give added prestige to the offering in many communities where they're not aware of the fact that this has ever been produced upon the stage.

You can guarantee in no uncertain terms that this is an artistic triumph and you can safely call upon all of your literary and educational societies, asking them to see this offering as a sample of what film producers are trying to do in the way of providing clean, wholesome entertainment.

I've a private hunch that a large percentage of the regulars have grown somewhat tired of the problem sex plays and the bing-bang melodramas, which have come so fast in recent months, and, even though they might prefer a problem drama well done to a fairy tale, I believe that they will welcome an artistically presented fairy tale with such a popular star as Marguerite Clark as a bit of relief from the strain of the heavier productions.

To make a big success of this you will have to exploit it, and I can tell you without reserve that you can feel perfectly easy about making much fuss over the artistic beauty of this offering. I'd start a real campaign for the kiddies on this, and I believe that you can successfully play this for more than one day, even though you have been accustomed to change daily. This sort of film helps to bring out those who aren't regular attendants at your theatre, and it is good enough that when the kiddies and grown-ups have seen it they will recommend it to their friends.

WILD EYED ISLAND TREASURE MELLER WITH ATHLETIC HERO

George Walsh in

THE ISLAND OF DESIRE

Fox Film.

DIRECTOR	Otis Turner
AUTHOR	J. Allen Dunn
SCENARIO BY	Otis Turner
CAMERAMAN	Charles Kaufman
AS A WHOLE	Wild-eyed adventure "meller"
STORY	Everything from lost treasure to cannibals
DIRECTION	Provided action, but little else
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some effective; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Splendid close-ups and generally good
STAR	Shaggy-haired, hairy-chested hero
SUPPORT	Wicked "willuns," cannibals, etc., and maiden in distres
EXTERIORS	A few very good; island atmosphere well handled; volcano very poor
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Several bad breaks
TIME	Fifty-four minutes

IT must be that there is a market for this sort of wild-eyed junk, because Mr. Fox persists in making it. I can understand how anything like this might get by, because the intelligent will think this funny on account of it being so impossible, and the unintelligent may "eat it up" as a thrilling story of adventure without ever stopping to argue about the impossible scenes incorporated therein.

This is a wild tale of a quest for hidden treasure in the South Sea, the trip being made by the hero, who was an athletic young reporter; a Chinese murderer and a wicked "willun."

Many reasons were found for making the trip to the South Sea one continuous battle between the three, who had started out together in quest of this treasure. They tried several times to kill the hero, without success, and he posed a la Adam in bathing trunks through much footage, with his hair floating in the breeze, both from his head and his bulging chest.

One title said that the three spent their time in characteristic manner, and we saw our hero going through physical exercises, with the Chinaman smoking "hop" and the "willun" playing solitaire while he gulped down the booze.

There were a couple of mutinies, a little fire and several other exciting happenings before this odd trio reached their destination. On the "Island of Desire" was found a beautiful damsel whose father had died just before the trio arrived. We then had many exciting fights between the three to gain possession of the fortune in pearls left by the old man, with the wicked "willun" trying also to grab the girlie.

After having fought through about a thousand feet, they pulled a volcano, which was very poorly done in miniature, and this had just disappeared beneath the waves in a very poor double exposure when we found the boat attacked by a swarm of cannibals. It looked right black for our hero for a moment, but he promptly loaded a cannon, which was about the size of something you might buy as a toy for your eight-year-old boy, and with one shot from this he blew up more than forty canoes. Oh, boy! That was some shot! They neglected to tell us what he put in this toy cannon that might have such terrifying explosive powers.

The annihilation of the cannibal fleet left the hero and the heroine sailing peacefully home with the pearls.

George Walsh as the hero of this wild-eyed story displayed considerable muscle and much willingness to battle. In one of the free-for-alls the Chinese "willun" dropped a big rock on Friend Hero's shoulder, with the result that he seemed to have been put out of commission for a few weeks. But, however, after working without the arm for a few scenes we found him blithely using it again just as if it had never been touched.

Margaret Gibson, as the maiden in distress, was acceptable, but didn't star up any great amount of interest.

Herschel Mayall and William Burress, as the "willuns," were really wicked. Others in the cast were Sam Searles, Hector Sarno, Willard Louis, Marie McKee and Anna Luther.

While the photography was not always perfect, I want to comment particularly upon the fact that there was an intelligent use of camera angles, which helped decidedly in making much of the action effective.

The titles were not particularly good, there being entirely too much use of profanity where it was not necessary, and surely most everyone will feel that much of the overacting of the players was unfortunate, because at times it became quite funny.

The Box Office Angle.

If you are catering to a clientele such as are used to eating up the "blood and thunder" stuff dished out as melodrama in the popular-priced theatres, this should be a big winner. They give you barrels of action, plenty of rough stuff and enough wild-eyed "meller" to suit the most rabid fan. If you are catering to a community house which is discriminating and generally prefers a convincing drama of intelligent situations, I'd certainly dodge this, unless you made it very clear that this is a very wild, rough-and-tumble "meller."

The many impossible angles in this may be overlooked for the reason that the story never convinces, and, after going so far, an audience may be willing to accept whatever comes with the thought of watching the action without worrying about whether or not it might have ever happened.

If you are going to play this catering to the melo fans play up George Walsh as an athlete and get all you can out of the publicity possibilities of his physique. You might say that this is a stirring adventure story of lost treasure, Chinese murderers, cannibals and a beautiful maiden in distress. Ask "What would you do for a million dollars worth of pearls?"

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ANCIENT THEME ORDINARILY HANDLED FAILS TO REGISTER

Alice Brady in

A WOMAN ALONE

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Harry Davenport
AUTHOR	Willard Mack
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE	Painfully ordinary one-reel, dragged into five
STORY	Obvious; convenient; hackneyed
DIRECTION	Failed to lift offering
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Just good
STAR	Terribly handicapped
SUPPORT	Painfully ordinary
EXTERIORS	Lacked distinction
INTERIORS	Ordinary; a few good bits
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

POSSIBLY some of you fellows have audiences which like the good old convenient, obvious melodramas of the "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model" type, and, if so, they may think this good.

It is beyond me how such stories as this are purchased. If this was the first one that Willard Mack had put over with the film manufacturers I'd understand that it had been bought because of his name. But, since he's had so many bad ones lately, the only thing I can figure is that he sold them all at once, sprinkling them around the different offices. He must've dug up all the old stuff he had stowed away in his trunk and unloaded it in a general clean-up.

The plot of this tells of a girl who got lonely as the wife of a telegraph operator. The son of the railroad's president liked her looks and asked her to go to the city with him, and she refused, but after an argument with hubby she decided to go to her aunt.

The sleek "willun" loomed up at about the time she got to the aunt's, and so the husband misunderstood and wifey went to the city to live. When about down an out, an old friend "ran across her," this being conveniently arranged by the old friend being a chauffeur who ran over her in an automobile. The chauffeur had formerly been a railroad foreman who had conveniently discovered the affair between the "willun" and the wife. Now he conveniently happened to be the chauffeur of a friend of the "willun," the result being that the "willun" was immediately put in touch with the wife again, so that he wickedly secured her a position as a cloak model and saw to it that she had money enough to buy fine clothes and live in a nice flat.

As something which was wonderfully distinctive and very new (?) they now presented a scene of Miss Brady showing off gowns. This has been done only about nine hundred and fourteen times.

After giving the cloak model a taste of fine clothes and nice living, the "willun" came to her home—he did—and insisted, quite impertinently, that he was ready to cash in on his interest. A mighty struggle ensued, as we've come to expect in such situations, and then, at this psychological moment, just when we were tearing our hair with anxiety (?), the hero burst through the door and rescued his wife.

Up to this time we had been a little uncertain as to whether or not this husband guy was going to be a hero. Certainly, at first he had an unsympathetic part, and, unfortunately, he lacked the proper personality to make you like him. He registered in a negative fashion all the way.

Before the days of one-a-week five-reelers, this story might have been accepted for a cheap one-reel. There's surely nothing about it that is unusual, and it is painfully obvious and convenient as to development.

Producer Davenport, in visualizing this, has failed utterly to improve upon the story. If he had gone into great human detail, with the development of the mental condition of the wife left alone, and had afterwards rewritten the convenient melodramatic situations on the finish, combining with all this an artistic distinction to the general atmosphere, the production could have been made a bit more acceptable. If there was ever a story that needed atmosphere to make it presentable, this was it. The producer's work in dressing it up was pretty poor.

The titles were unnecessarily explanatory and frequently stated obvious facts such as any school child would understand without a diagram.

There was much footage of trains pulling in and out—in fact, much too much.

In the supporting cast were Edward T. Langford, Ed. M. Kimball, Justine Cutting, J. Clarence Harvey, Arthur Ashley and Walter D. Greene.

The Box Office Angle

An average audience may accept this because of Miss Brady's presence, even though they'll groan many times as the obvious, hackneyed old plot unfolds. If you have a discriminating, critical community audience, I'd dodge this, because they'll certainly feel that they are being imposed upon. There are no big dramatic scenes of true force, nor is there any big, underlying theme properly developed. The thought of showing the effect of leaving a woman alone would have been good had it been given the proper attention, but in the development of this plot it is a very ordinary incident.

You cannot safely promise that this is distinctive or out of the ordinary, from any angle, and if you have to play it, I would go very, very easy in my advertising, simply stating that it was a human presentation of the evils resulting from a husband's failure to realize the dangers of forcing his wife to live in a lonely community.

Miss Brady does her best to help this, but she has such scant opportunities as to be unable to make any real impression. It would be advisable to forget this if you can.

GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD

UNIVERSAL

LEO DELANEY

FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER

VITAGRAPH FILMS

Have Been Shown in Six Years Past

Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

BEAUTIFUL SURF EXTERIORS AND PERSONALITIES SAVE THIS

Harold Lockwood and May Allison in

PIDGIN ISLAND

Yorke-Metro

DIRECTOR.....Fred J. Balshofer
AUTHOR.....Harold McGrath
SCENARIO BY.....Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer
CAMERAMAN.....Tony Gaudio
AS A WHOLE.....Beautiful surf stuff makes it
STORY.....Provides action, but lacks smooth development and suspense
DIRECTION.....Gave good individual scenes, but jumpy construction
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very artistic and effective
LIGHTINGS.....Some exquisite exteriors; interiors effective
CAMERA WORK...Splendid angles; many distinctive bits
STARS...Personalities that please; handled to advantage
SUPPORT.....Some good types effectively presented
EXTERIORS.....Surf locations remarkably well handled
INTERIORS.....Very good
DETAIL.....Good
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes

I BELIEVE the cameraman is deserving of the greatest amount of credit for this offering. The story had considerable of the smuggler-detective-mystery stuff, but the development was not smooth, nor was the suspense particularly well maintained. Except for the fact that there were many odd camera angles, scores of beautiful exteriors taken along a storm-stirred coast, and Chinatown scenes which were lighted just right to make them seem mysterious and unusual, this would have been rather an ordinary offering. Of course, Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison have become decided favorites, and we see Mr. Lockwood in the first of this doing a bit of detective work, disguised as a bum—which is always good—with Miss Allison introduced as a maid of mystery. The interest is held nicely about half-way, but then the end becomes obvious.

It is unfortunate that greater care was not used in the construction of the scenario to maintain properly the element of suspense so that there would be more surprise toward the end. Most fans will know too soon just what the finish is going to be.

In the first reel or two there is a possibility of confusion, because Miss Allison is introduced and we are shown that she is the daughter of a smuggler. We then go into a sequence showing Mr. Lockwood trap some opium smugglers. Since there is a young lady who appears in these opium smuggling scenes who resembles Miss Allison somewhat, the audiences are going to be led to believe that she is figuring in that sequence when, as a matter of fact, she is supposed to be resting on the lakes near Pidgin Island, without any knowledge of the opium smuggling in which her father is concerned. It might be that Miss Allison did figure in this incident originally, because in the hazy lighting of the Chinatown scenes I couldn't swear whether it was she or not. In any event, the production has been so edited now as to give you to understand that she was not the girl in that part of the story, according to what we see later on.

The last two or three reels were devoted to love scenes between Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison, and to her assisting in the recovery of pearls which her father was attempting to smuggle into the country by use of an aeroplane, which was to drop them on storm-tossed Pidgin Island.

I believe that any one will enjoy this production, because of the wonderful scenes of the surf. Outside of that there is little to make it more distinctive than the ordinary action melodrama having to do with smugglers.

There were two beautiful sunset bits taken across the rolling surf, and many of the exteriors were exquisite bits of composition.

In the supporting cast were Lester Cuneo, Fred Wilson, Lillian Hayward, "Doc" Pomeroy Cannon and Yukio Avyoma.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that the personal popularity of Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison will make this a good box office attraction, and undoubtedly many have read this story by Mr. McGrath and will want to see it visualized.

I would concentrate my advertising upon the beauty of the exteriors, guaranteeing that the production is one of the most artistic offerings ever screened in which surf scenes predominated.

I would refer particularly to the recent Lockwood-Allison production, "Mister Forty-four," in which there were many beautiful exteriors, and make it plain that this production has been photographed by the same cameraman.

I wouldn't go too strong in promising that the story is "great," because many may feel disappointed in the production as developed on the screen. However, if you will concentrate upon the personalities of the stars and the beauty of the exteriors and so center the attention upon them, I'm quite sure that your patrons will be more than pleased.

Joseph M. Attie

SEVEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

In Theatrical and Photoplay Productions

IN FRANCE

Author of Two Successful Plays—Produced in Paris

A native of Algiers, educated in France, I have traveled extensively in North Africa and could supervise any costume production relating to that pitcuresque land.

PLAYED JUVENILE LEADS TWO YEARS
In Motion Pictures in Paris

DESIROUS OF OPPORTUNITY AS JUVENILE LEAD or as COSTUME AND DETAIL PRODUCER
For Recognized Company

Address—CARE OF THIS OFFICE

"DOUBLE EXPOSURES" OF STAR AND GOWNS MAKE THIS ENTERTAINING

Kitty Gordon in

VERA THE MEDIUM

Kitty Gordon Film Corp.

DIRECTOR ..... G. M. Anderson
AUTHOR ..... Richard Harding Davis
AS A WHOLE ..... Kitty makes it interesting
STORY ..... "Vampire who reforms" stuff
DIRECTION ..... At times splendid; often very "stagey"
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Close-ups and some scenes perfectly handled; many scenes very old-school
LIGHTINGS ..... Some bits excellent; many sets too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... At times excellent; frequently ordinary STAR ..... Worked figure and gowns to the limit; dominated all the action
SUPPORT ..... Hitchcock rather good; others ordinary EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary; not many INTERIORS ..... A few good; several quite "stagey;" some camera angles used too often
DETAIL ..... Acceptable
TIME ..... Sixty-seven minutes

KITTY GORDON'S "figger" and a beautiful assortment of gorgeous raiment make this decidedly interesting and quite acceptable as entertainment. The story is unusual, and yet it is a very old theme.

The plot tells of a woman of the world who wagered herself against a thousand dollars that she could win a man away from his family in a week. She moved into the flat across the hall, and, as the days passed, forced herself upon the righteous husband so thoroughly that he "fell" very easily when she laid a trap for him on the last day.

We then had the good old situation twisted from "Camille," with the man's daughter pleading with the woman that daddy be allowed to return to them. The woman reformed and discovered that the man with whom she had made the wager was a sweetheart from her youth.

On the finish we had a title in which the vampire said that she was a good woman, even though the world didn't think so, and that may be, but I'd like to know who paid for her gowns.

Most of the action of this occurred in the two apartments, the apartment hallways and on the balconies of the apartments, which looked down on the driveway. It seemed like a continuous performance, with the husband always coming home and Miss Gordon always framing some way to meet him. That was the main action throughout the offering, it happening at least fifteen or twenty times.

There was a decided variance in the atmosphere presented, because some of the scenes were very poorly photographed on account of the settings being so arranged as to make it stiff and unnatural and decidedly "stagey." At other times the camera work made the atmosphere classy, and most of the close-ups were particularly well handled.

Miss Gordon gave us many "double exposures," the famous back and quite some of the front being presented for observance quite frequently. She wore about forty-three gowns, and several of them were very "niftik." Surely Miss Gordon photographed wonderfully well throughout. In many of her close-ups she was perfectly lighted, and she screened to better advantage than she ever has in any of her past productions. It was certainly not her fault that this was not a truly big offering. As it stands, you can figure that this will be considered quite interesting and rather better than the average program release.

Walter Hitchcock, as the family man who "fell," handled a difficult characterization very nicely.

Joyce Fair as the daughter was rather pretty, but lacked depth.

Harris Gordon was introduced as the wayward son in order to provide the reason for the plot, but somehow he failed to come home through the week which followed. Possibly he got "stewed" because father wouldn't let him play with Kitty.

The story, particularly the explanatory incidents relating to the previous life of Miss Gordon, were rather jumpy and were helped along by explanatory titles, which didn't altogether cover the gaps. This was possibly due to the fact that it was originally intended to present this offering in more footage.

In one of the titles they spell bosom thus: "Bossom." That should be caught immediately, because it will get a laugh at the wrong time.

The weakest spot in the story is the situation where Miss Gordon is shown to be making preparations to go home, when the man comes to collect the wager. She says: "My God, I forgot the wager!" Since she had, in writing, a statement from the husband that he was ready to go away with her, it would have seemed logical that she could have declared the wager won, and hence there would have been no necessity for her agitation.

The supporting cast, outside of the principals mentioned, were rather ordinary.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that Miss Gordon pulls rather well at the box office in most sections, despite the fact that she has had several very ordinary pictures. You can safely promise that she photographs to better advantage in this than in anything in which she has appeared. You can say that she has scores of beautiful gowns, and you can make quite some fuss over the fact that this story was written by Richard Harding Davis. Those points should bring you some business, and I feel sure that most any audience will think that this is an acceptable offering, even though they do not become enthusiastic about it. The chief asset of the film is the abundant display of Miss Gordon. Since many seem to prefer that to other detail, you may find that this will be a very successful film.

You can undoubtedly stir up a lot of interest in this by asking the question: "Would you believe that a beautiful woman could deliberately win a happy husband from his home in the short space of one week, after the man had publicly denounced her as a menace to the community? See Kitty Gordon triumph because of her magnetic personality in 'Vera, the Medium.'"

Try to get a lot of photographs of Kitty exposing her famous (because of the press agent) back, and talk about the wonderful gowns she wears. That ought to bring out those who like to look at the beautiful—gowns.

WID'S BINDERS Are Sent Prepaid, $1.50.

THEATRIC, UNCONVINCING, CONVENIENT PLOT BADLY OVERPLAYED

Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt in

THE LAST SENTENCE

Edison-K.-E.-S.-E. Service

DIRECTOR	Ben Turbett
AUTHOR	Maxwell Gray
SCENARIO BY	Edward H. Griffith
CAMERAMAN	Fred S. Brace
AS A WHOLE	Overplaying and theatric mannerisms mar ordinary action drama
STORY	Female "Enoch Arden," with coincidence situation on finish
DIRECTION	Painfully old school; permitted constant overacting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally clean-cut, but old-school methods
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many too uniform; not artistic or distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Good straight stuff
STARS	Overplayed
SUPPORT	Rather theatric; unconvincing
EXTERIORS	Some good snow stuff, but many ordinary
INTERIORS	Some very good; some "junky"
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Sixty-eight minutes

IT is possible that some audiences may consider this acceptable entertainment, because at the end we have a coincidence situation which is a bit better than the early part of the story, and consequently fairly interesting, but I fear that your regulars will be so thoroughly out of patience before the finish is reached that they'll mark this as decidedly not worth while.

The chief fault with this is that all of the characters have overplayed in almost every scene, the action being unconvincing because of the theatric tendencies of all the players. It was about like an old 10-20-30 "rep" show melodrama, with the additional fault that many of the characters played to the camera rather than to the people they were conversing with. Almost every gesture was mechanical and noticeably theatric. The note of conviction was lacking all the way.

From the general calibre of the work in this I'd say that the offering is an old one, because the methods employed were decidedly old-school. The story contained nothing new and the main incidents have been used so often that most audiences will guess the developments long before the story reaches them.

It is the tale of the artist who married a fisher maid and learned that she could not adapt herself to her new conditions. She was deserted and the husband afterward heard that she was dead. He married again and then the first wife pulled the "Enoch Arden" stuff, showing up at the wrong time. The bigamist denied knowing his first wife and she died in a snow drift.

We now hurdled enough years to permit the first wife's child to grow up, and we found her secretly marrying the spoiled son of wealthy parents. The son was then sent to Canada to reform, and eventually we found the daughter brought before her own father, who was a judge, on a charge of having murdered her child.

It became necessary for the father to pronounce the death sentence upon his own child, he being stricken with paralysis when he did so. Of course, on the finish, we learned that she had not killed the child, but had taken it to her husband in Canada. This finale was quite "flat."

One of the funny angles of the final attempt to arouse some dramatic suspense was a number of scenes showing the young husband riding like mad across the snows of Canada to reach a telegraph station so that he might send a wire clearing his wife. He did a lot of trick riding, which seemed entirely unnecessary, and he finally fell from his horse, for no apparent reason other than to make it a little more "dramatic" when he dragged himself into the telegraph office.

The overacting in this was possibly the fault of the director, because every character was guilty. The situations were lacking in human strength, to begin with, and the theatric presentation by the cast made them even less effective.

In the supporting cast were Grace Williams, Gladys Gane, Herbert Prior, Elaine Ivans, Raymond McKee and Mrs. Wallace Erskine.

The Box Office Angle

It is possible that you can get this by as a filler on a night when you are not too particular, but I'd be very careful regarding it, because it is an old-fashioned, ordinary action drama, with nothing unusual about the story, and surely nothing distinctive about the playing or atmosphere. The overacting keeps it from being convincing, and although the final scenes are fairly dramatic, it is rather overdrawn coincidence and discriminating audiences will not be greatly impressed.

If you are catering to an audience which likes its drama a little over-emphasized, as, for instance, the sort of audiences which generally support the cheap repertoire companies, then they may think this very acceptable. I have an idea, however, that most of the old repertoire patrons have become picture-wise to the extent of appreciating the difference between convincing and unconvincing drama.

It would be better to go very easy on this if you feel that you must book it. There is nothing decidedly wrong with it save the very important basic principles of weak, ordinary, unconvincing plot and very mechanical, theatric overplaying. If you feel that your audiences will like this sort of production and you intend to play it, use a line something like this: "If you were a judge and your daughter was found guilty by a jury, would you have the strength to pass sentence of death upon her?"

I'm not much of a lawyer, but I have a hunch that it would be impossible for any father to serve as judge in a case where his daughter was the prisoner—but maybe no one will argue that point with you.

I Am Making a "ROLL OF HONOR" of the BEST FEATURES Once a Month
WATCH FOR IT

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

MARSHAL FARNUM
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CARROLL FLEMING
PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
UNIVERSAL

CHARLES GIBLYN
FEATURE PRODUCER

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

EDGAR LEWIS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

WILFRID NORTH
DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES
THANHOUSER NEW ROCHELLE

HENRY OTTO
Directing
Harold Lockwood and May Allison

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

CHARLES M. SEAY
FEATURE PRODUCER

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from page 4.)

SERIALS

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
12 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
8 Mysteries of Myra	87	86

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Yellow Menace	60	50
1 Liberty	100	100
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
8 The Iron Claw	94	93
1 The Diamond Runners	87	90

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
4 Shielding Shadow	88	86
8 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
1 Scarlet Runner	85	95
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	45

"WID'S" IS READ NOT SKIMMED

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | NEW YORK, JANUARY 11, 1917. | NO. 2 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

REASON PERCENTAGES ARE MISSING

Because of the unusual number of special features recently released I found myself a bit behind on some reviews. In order to get as many in as possible this week I omitted the tabulated percentage reports. The percentages will apear as usual next week.

The Postoffice Department has found a new technicality every month for some time now to delay the granting of a second class mailing permit to Wid's. I cannot afford to increase the size of "Wid's" until Uncle Sam's servants in their wisdom decide that I, who serve only my readers, am entitled to the privileges now accorded many publications controlled by advertisers.

GUSHY STAR (?) IN PAINFULLY ANCIENT IDEA POORLY PLAYED

June Caprice in

A MODERN CINDERELLA

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	John G. Adolfi
AUTHOR	Florence Auer
CAMERAMAN	Rial B. Schellinger
AS A WHOLE	Insipid, slushy, light comedy
STORY	Painfully poor
DIRECTION	Allowed much overplaying; presented forced contrasts
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable; sometimes poor
LIGHTINGS	Frequently lacked definition; never distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Used many tricks, with little result
STAR	Gushed and acted too much
SUPPORT	Very unimpressive
EXTERIORS	Nothing remarkable
INTERIORS	Acceptable; some rather cheap
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-five minutes

THIS "Modern Cinderella" thing has been done so much that I had a hunch that it was through. Possibly Mr. Fox is working on the basis on which another producer has insisted that he works, that being to give the public the same old stories week after week, because they seemed to like them.

It is possible that such a policy can be adopted to a certain extent, particularly where a personality is presented in the same type of character frequently, but I can't consider Caprice a personality. From where I sit, she registers as a fairly good-looking kid who tries so hard to act and gushes so much in an attempt to ooze cuteness that she kills any of the natural sweetness which she may have. In this offering she does the jumping-up-and-down stuff and pouting, until you feel like yelling murder.

The story is the ancient stuff about the kid sister who wanted to be grown up, contrary to her parents' wishes, with the Cinderella idea predominating to the extent that they even pulled some Cinderella scenes, with Caprice later doing a modern reproduction of Cinderella losing a slipper on the way home from the dance.

Of course, on the finish the hero, who had entered into an agreement with Caprice to make older sister jealous, decided that it was younger sister he wanted.

It is possible that this sort of inconsequential stuff may be accepted by some audiences who are not very particular about what they see, but surely this can't be considered a well-played, well-constructed, well-produced film.

We had canoeing scenes and a couple of dance bits and various bits of society outdoor sports stuff, with the cameraman doing a different sort of double exposure, fade-in or dissolve about every twenty scenes. [illegible] the entire offering centered about Caprice and I doubt very much if she will register in a manner to satisfy generally.

In one place Caprice jumped off a yacht lying at anchor, in order to make the hero rescue her [illegible] and he, instead of swimming back to the yacht with her, which was about ten feet, swam all the way to shore, which was about one hundred yards. He looked like a guy that might do that sort of thing.

Betty Prendergast, as Caprice's sister, "acted" almost as much as Caprice did. Her profile, which came in view decidedly too often, had quite a suggestion of the type of nose which we have always associated with the step-sisters of Cinderella.

Stanhope Wheatcroft gave his usual performance of too much acting.

Frank Morgan, as the hero, might have had a chance if it had not been necessary for him to appear as foolish as Caprice, but, surely, some of the things he had to do in this, and some of the things he did do whether he had to or not, will keep him from registering as a favorite.

Others in the cast were Grace Stevens and Tom Brooke.

The Box Office Angle.

You undoubtedly know by now whether or not Caprice has any pull at your box office. If you've never played her, my advice would be to continue to do the same. If you have played any of her recent pictures, I can tell you that this is as bad as any of them have been.

It is a combination of incident after incident, attempting to contrast what was supposed to be cuteness on the part of Caprice with peevishness on the part of her sister. Much happens, but little is of any importance.

VERY HUMAN SITUATIONS VERY WELL HANDLED MAKE THIS HIT

Dorothy Phillips and Maude George in

THE PIPER'S PRICE

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Joseph De Grasse
AUTHOR	Mrs. Wilson Woodrow
SCENARIO BY	Ida May Park
CAMERAMAN	King D. Gray
AS A WHOLE	Tense human drama beautifully handled
STORY	Splendid situations nicely developed and twisted
DIRECTION	Gave good atmosphere, tense action and fine little touches
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STARS	Held difficult situations perfectly, making action human
SUPPORT	Very good types; kept human
EXTERIORS	Good composition and lighting
INTERIORS	Distinctive class to atmosphere
DETAIL	Some fine little touches
TIME	Sixty-six minutes

I believe that human drama dealing with conditions which are found everywhere is the most popular material for film stories at this moment.

In this offering we get the situation of a man who was compelled to have business dealings with his divorced wife, which resulted in a misunderstanding with his second wife, whom he loved.

The fourth principal character is an old friend of the first wife, who remained her faithful lover, until she finally realized the folly of her renewed affair with her divorced husband and turned to the old friend as a haven, deciding to give up her divorced husband to his second wife because of the coming of a child.

The husband returned to his home when he learned that his divorced wife had married her old friend, and started to shoot himself, his action being halted by the crying of his baby.

Producer De Grasse is deserving of real credit for having made all of this action decidedly human and truly tense and dramatic. Miss Phillips, Miss George, William Stowell and Lon Chaney must be commended for having handled the rather difficult characterizations with just the right shadings of emotion to keep them from being modern and make them ring true.

The atmosphere of the entire offering was decidedly classy, with scores of little human touches carefully introduced at just the right moment. There were a number of good twists in the development of the story, the suspense being nicely maintained. There was no overplaying on the part of the principals, and in some of the more important scenes the points were registered with such a pleasing suggestion of repressed power as to call for particular comment, since a year ago the same artists were in most instances overplaying, possibly because of direction.

The titles were very well worded and properly placed to bring out the psychology of the situations. There were some good contrasts provided, these being particularly well handled where we found the second wife receiving a phone call in the presence of her old friend, with the husband soon afterward receiving a call from his wife in the presence of his first wife.

There was one scene which could have been bettered. Miss Phillips was shown to enter a room and look over her husband's shoulder and then to exit without being heard. The angle of the door made this seem rather questionable, whereas it would have been just as easy to have had her come from a point which would have made it more reasonable to suppose that she could not have been seen or heard.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that you can do very well with this, particularly if you have had any success with this director's recent offering, "The Price of Silence."

This is one of the most human dramas of modern society conditions of recent months, and it has been very effectively played and produced. You can safely boost this as a particularly tense human drama, presenting a new angle on the divorce problem in a decidedly interesting manner.

From the general audience viewpoint, I'd say that this is one of the best Bluebirds of many weeks, because it hits home many times and deals with situations which might develop in thousands of American cities any day.

To arouse interest in this, you might use lines like this: "Is it safe for a man who is married the second time to meet his first wife frequently in adjusting business affairs? See 'The Piper's Price.'"

INTERESTING NUT REPORTER MURDER MYSTERY; WILL GET OVER

Hayward Mack and Gertrude Selby in

THE DOUBLE ROOM MYSTERY

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Hobart Henley
AUTHOR	Stella Wynne Herron
SCENARIO BY	E. J. Clawson
CAMERAMAN	Stephen S. Norton
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, although unconvincing
STORY	Fanciful newspaper yarn with obliging twists
DIRECTION	Gave fine atmosphere touches, good action and held interest despite story
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good; at times uneven
LIGHTINGS	A few very effective; generally acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Good
STARS	Gave good characterizations
SUPPORT	Acceptable; a few good types
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Some good atmosphere bits
DETAIL	Newspaper life overdrawn a bit
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

CONSIDERED as entertainment, this is fairly interesting. It is a melodrama dealing with the sort of characters who sometimes work as reporters. Attempts to inject comedy met with varying success.

The story is obliging to the extent of providing several convenient coincidences. As a matter of fact, the hero reporter calmly rests in bed while his boss prepares to fire him, and then the much-sought murderer rushes into his room. That is the one central situation. Of course, after several hours figuring things out, the reporter finally dopes a way to make the murderer his prisoner, and, after doing so, he calmly proceeds to his office and writes up the story, registering a real "beat."

There are some police court incidents early in the action, which are fairly interesting, because good types were used and some human touches put over. Gertrude Selby as a slavey in a boarding-house, provided the heroine persecuted by the "willun," who was afterwards urdered by the escaped crook just as he was about assault the heroine servant girl. This was immediely before the murderer burst into the reporter's room nd held him prisoner until the searchers had departed. They saved us from the love interest between the reorter and the servant, for which I am thankful, showg the slavey and the man servant about the house beg started on their honeymoon by the reporter, who vidently was ready to continue as he had been in the ast, which was quite logical, since such characters— nd we have many of them in this land of independence -drift along just about as this man was pictured.

The most necessary thing to help this along would e to give the titles considerable attention. Much of the ttempted comedy as it now stands fails utterly and freuently injures what might be effective scenes with ost members of an average audience.

Hayward Mack as the reporter made this character ather human and, although he may have overdrawn bit in one or two places, I have known a number of ast such "nuts" as he is supposed to depict. The character will register as interesting, at least, anywhere.

Miss Selby is pretty and did rather well with the small opportunities as the boarding-house slavey.

Others in the cast were Edward Brady, Edward Hearn and Ernest Shields.

The Box Office Angle.

If you are catering to audiences which like action melodrama with a bit of the unusual and some suspense, I have a hunch that this will be considered rather good entertainment. They will probably laugh a few times at some of the overdrawn bits, such as the escape of the crook who is unwisely left alone with the captain of police, and the thoughtlessness of the owner of the jewelery store, who ran down the street after two thieves, leaving his store entirely unprotected. But, considered as amusement for an hour, I don't believe you will find many complaints.

The title should pull you some business in a theatre which has been playing Red Feathers regularly, and I would make it plain in my advertising that this is a story of an unusual type of newspaper reporter.

VERY ANCIENT ONE REEL IDEA WISHED ON SWEET STAR

Bessie Love in

NINA THE FLOWER GIRL

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Lloyd Ingraham
AUTHOR	Mary H. O'Connor
CAMERAMAN	Frank Urson
AS A WHOLE	Never grips and lacks distinction
STORY	Old theme with obvious development
DIRECTION	A few good touches, but frequently missed fire
PHOTOGRAPHY	Occasionally artistic, but generally drab
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Nothing to do
SUPPORT	Lacked distinctive personalities
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Just acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

CERTAINLY Bessie Love has been terribly handicapped by the material provided recently.

This offering is the well-known former one-reel of the blind girl and her hunchback sweetheart, which did such excellent service in the years gone by. As the offering develops, the coming action is quite obvious, and, although there are a few human little touches that appeal, the principal incidents fail to hold the interest properly and the offering never grips.

After wandering along for several reels, we find Miss Love's sight being restored by an operation, with the hunchback boy fearing that this will ruin his life because his sweetheart can now see him.

We got a flash of him starting to jump to death under a moving train, and then there is considerable footage of the finish of the operation on the blind girl's eyes. Suddenly we see the hunchback coming from a hospital with his back straightened, and he and his sweetheart lived happily ever after, because the man who had asked her to marry him obligingly stepped aside.

I have an idea that most of the regulars in your audience will groan a bit when the hunchback looms up after the operation. Most of them will know that he is going to get back into the story, because the development has planted that as the logical ending. Some may even suggest what came to my mind—that the scenario writer might be going to have him jump in front of the train so that the wheels might cut the hump from his back. Surely this is anything but fitting material for a five-reel feature.

There were some scenes in the studio of some artists which presented one shapely miss in black tights and another as a "hula" dancer, but that sort of thing can't save a feature.

In the supporting cast were Elmer Clifton, Bert Hadley, Loyola O'Connor, Alfred Paget, Adele Clifton, Rhea Hines, Jennie Lee, Fred Warren and Mrs. Higby.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd go very easy on this—and, in fact, if you don't have to play it I'd dodge it, because it lacks the essentials. Miss Love has so little to do that she can't save the production, and the story is so ancient and has been so frequently done that every regular will know it by heart. The production lacks distinction as to atmosphere, and if you have to play it I certainly would not make any promises.

If Bessie Love has any pulling power in your territory, be careful about this, because a few more productions of this type will kill her off. If she is without pulling power for you, this is certainly a poor bet.

GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD

UNIVERSAL

LEO DELANEY

FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER

VITAGRAPH FILMS

Have Been Shown in Six Years Past

Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

POORLY PRODUCED MEXICAN SUPERSTITIOUS PLOT FALLS FLAT

Blanche Sweet in

THE EVIL EYE

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	George Melford
AUTHOR	Hector Turnbull
SCENARIO BY	George D. Proctor
CAMERAMAN	Percy Hilburn
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing melo obvious and poorly done
STORY	Never grips; becomes wild-eyed at end
DIRECTION	Situations missed fire; atmosphere "pictury"
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; at times lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	Some good; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Not enough close-ups; same angles held too long
STAR	Had authority, but handicapped by "meller" action
SUPPORT	Youthful principals and a bunch of arm-waving "extras"
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; rather well lighted
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

SURELY this is a "weak sister."

The plot is centered about the simple fact that Mexican laborers became panic-stricken because of a superstition that a doctor's lamp worn by Miss Sweet in treating an epidemic was an evil eye, which caused them to throw away her medicine, the consequence being that many died.

In addition to this, we had the time-honored incident of the heroine's weak-willed brother, who ruined the servant girl, with the hero suspected until the finish, when the brother confessed and the hero and heroine came to a "clutch."

As a background to this painfully poor central incident, we had a lot of "extras" presented as Mexican laborers in a Southern California vineyard. They did the arm-waving mob stuff upon any and all occasions.

After two or three tiresome reels, establishing the fear of the natives for the woman doctor's "evil eye," the wild-eyed "meller" of the assembling mobs was started, this being enhanced by an attempt to burn out Miss Sweet's eyes with a poker, the hero, of course, rescuing her at the proper moment. Then weak-willed brother's confession came for a finale.

I think this is one of the Paramounts that you should dodge if you can. It lacks conviction and surely it will not register as entertainment with the average audience. The action will not be taken seriously, and Miss Sweet, although she stands out above the weak supporting cast, is unable to carry the production.

There are a few good exteriors nicely arranged for artistic lighting effects, but the offering as a whole is surely not distinctive as to atmosphere.

In the supporting cast were Tom Forman, Webster Campbell, J. Parks Jones, Ruth King, and William Dale.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd say that this one should be sidestepped. If you are playing Paramount for a week or for three days, I would put this on the shelf and put something in its place.

If Miss Sweet has pulling power in your territory and you can afford to give them a weak picture and take a chance on the effect of the criticism which will result, then you might put this through. I consider that poor business.

Even with an audience which likes melodrama, I'd say that they will consider this unconvincing as to the wild-eyed action and tiresome, because of the fact that we have too many scenes played too far from the camera, with not enough close-ups to give the necessary intimacy to bring out the human touches.

This story might have made a good one-reel if it had been carefully done. It is surely not feature material.

CUTE KIDDIE IN TRIM PARTS MAKES IT ENTERTAINING

Baby Marie Osborne in

TWIN KIDDIES

Balboa-Pathe

DIRECTOR	Henry King
AUTHOR	Calder Johnstone
CAMERAMAN	William Beckway
AS A WHOLE	Entertaining because of cute star
STORY	Impossible situation, but will be accepted generally
DIRECTION	Registered cuteness of kiddie contrasted against melodrama
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally too uniform, with some effective exteriors
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	No attempt for effects; double exposures fine
STAR	Had much to do and did it well
SUPPORT	Nothing unusual, but satisfactory
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty; many ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient, but acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

THIS is another of the Little Mary Sunshine productions, and, as usual, everything depends upon this youngster's cute tricks. The production is not elaborate, nor is the story truly convincing, but we have plenty of Little Mary Sunshine, and, because of that, I believe most audiences will consider this a pleasing bit of entertainment.

The story provided an uncanny coincidence, in that we had the daughter of a workman at a mine, exactly similar in appearance to the grand-daughter of the owner of the mine, Baby Marie playing both parts. In the latter part of the offering, this likeness was explained through there having been a family connection, but I have an idea that your audiences will not worry a great deal over whether this might be possible or not. They will take the plot for what it is worth and enjoy the antics of the kiddie without stopping to analyze.

A strike threatened at the plant, and the owner came on a visit, bringing his grand-child with him. A neglectful nurse allowed the grand-child to wander in the woods, and there she met the youngster who looked like her, and, in typical kid fashion, they agreed to trade the pretty dress of one for the toy boat of the other.

Suddenly aroused, the nurse searched for her charge, came across the workman's child attired in the grandchild's dress and carried her away to the rich man's home, despite all her kicking and yelling in protest. The grand-child wandered in the woods until found, and she was put to bed ill from the exposure.

The next development was the change denoted in the home of the wealthy man because of the bright, sunny disposition of the stolen kiddie, who felt that she was having a short stay in Fairyland. The child's father called at the owner's home for an arbitration meeting, discovered his child, and, when the owner learned that his grand-child was ill and realized the fate of the families of the strikers, he declared the strike off.

The double exposure scenes showing Little Mary Sunshine in both characters were made in pretty exteriors and were exceptionally well handled. They will puzzle even your most expert fans, because there is not the least sign of a division line between the characters. Baby Marie timed her action perfectly in these scenes, making them uncanny in their realism.

There were many cute little kid dialect titles, and in one place we had a typical touch of a kiddie's imagination when the lost youngstser saw some shaking bushes, and we had a double exposure registering her fear that concealed behind them was an awful dragon.

In the supporting cast were Henry King, Ruth Lackaye, Daniel Gilfether, R. Henry Grey, Loretta Beecker, Edward Jobson, and Mignon Le Brun.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that you can safely count on this as a production which will prove entertaining anywhere. I wouldn't bill it as a tremendous offering or any such rot, but would make it plain that it is a simple little story of the effect of a cute kiddie upon a wealthy old tyrant who was oppressing his workmen. It will not be necessary for you to say much about the story if you have played the recent Baby Osborne films, because I believe they have made a very favorable impression, and certainly they are clean-cut, wholesome offerings that should appeal particularly to the kiddies and to folks who like a pleasing little bit of entertainment devoid of sensational and sex angles. There is a touch of melodrama in this, but not enough to be objectionable.

You might stir up considerable discussion by asking in your advertising if your fans think there is another child in the world like Little Mary Sunshine. Say that you are going to show them her twin, asking them to pick out which is which. The double exposures will be so good that you can pretend that you don't know whether they found the twin for Baby Marie or not. You can say it looks like it.

POORLY HANDLED MELO WITH CONTRASTY SPOTS

Douglas Gerrard in

POLLY PUT THE KETTLE ON

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Douglas Gerrard
AUTHOR	Grace Henry Bailey
SCENARIO BY	Elizabeth C. Hendrix
CAMERAMAN	Anton Naty
AS A WHOLE	Poorly handled; never arrives
STORY	Combiantion of old favorites, with melo bits added
DIRECTION	Atmosphere lacked distinction; action unconvincing; grouping very poor
PHOTOGRAPHY	Not good
LIGHTINGS	One or two effects, but generally poor and frequently bad
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	Theatric and too old for juvenile
SUPPORT	Kids cute at times; others ordinary
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Only acceptable
DETAIL	L. A. cops in N. Y., and other slips
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

ORDINARY melodrama with kid stuff figured to save it is about where this may be classed. Since the kid stuff was not well-handled, it is a question in my mind as to whether it will save the offering, because I have a hunch that most audiences will decide that this is wofully lacking in the accepted essentials.

The plot is one of those obvious, convenient melodramas in which the characters wander about doing things which dovetail so as to bring about action which we anticipate, because it has been done so many times in the past.

These included the wonderful play accidentally sent by a friend. We find that this play is produced and becomes a great success without any one knowing whose it was. I'll say they don't do such things.

The hero lost his eyesight in one of those convenient explosions, and then, on the finish, we had the customary operation, with the "wonderful" specialist permitting the patient to remove the colored glasses while he was sitting and staring straight into an open fireplace. 'Tain't done!

The atmosphere of the offering was very poor, with the lightings detracting from the general impression. Throughout we found characters grouped in a painfully theatric manner, the principals being placed so that they could play to the camera, with many scenes showing four or five people grouped in such a "stagey" manner that any child would feel that the scene was not natural.

At first we got some college stuff, which suggested that Mr. Gerrard must have a peculiar idea as to American college life. The kids were allowed to occupy considerable footage, one incident of their burlesquing a movie scene being dragged in. It was fairly humorous.

In the cast were Ruth Clifford, Zoe Rae, Thomas Jefferson, Anna Dodge, Martha Maddox, George Gebhardt, Lawrence Noskowski, Armin Von Harder, T. D. Crittenden, Lena Baskette and Marvel Spencer.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't see any pulling power in the title of this, and surely I don't believe that the name of Douglas Gerrard will help particularly. It is possible that you can stir up a little interest by calling attention to the presence of Zoe Rae and several other cute kiddies, but it isn't really a kid picture.

If it is not necessary for you to play this, I'd dodge it. It lacks distinction and has no real personalities to help carry the poor story. If you have to play it, I'd go very easy with my advertising and let it slide through. If you have not promised much, many of your patrons may think it a satisfactory little melodrama.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

POOR HANDLING KILLS GOOD SUSPENSE SITUATIONS; IS INTERESTING

Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell in

ON DANGEROUS GROUND

Brady-World Film

DIRECTOR	Robert T. Thornby
AUTHOR	Burton E. Stevenson
CAMERAMAN	Lucien Andriot
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, but fails to grip
STORY	"Woman spy" stuff with good possibilities
DIRECTION	Failed to realize on material; situations lacked tenseness; battle stuff poor
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; poor in spots
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many lacked definition
CAMERA WORK	Varied; often rather poor
STARS	Worked hard; helped somewhat
SUPPORT	Poor
EXTERIORS	Rather ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable; some good; some poor
DETAIL	Several slips
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

WHILE this story has several unusual situations and the entire offering can surely be called interesting, it fails to become distinctive, principally because the action has not been handled so that it might grip.

Throughout the offering the director has been unable to make his dramatic situations tense and a very poor supporting cast has handicapped the two stars in their efforts to keep the action human.

There are many details which were not correct, such as uniforms which didn't belong, willow trees in an exterior which was supposed to be Heidelberg, etc. The make-ups on several of the minor characters were very poor.

Most of the battle stuff was poorly handled, the battles for the most part being "suggested" by the use of smoke pots..

We find early in this story the very unusual situation of a beautiful girl rushing into an American's room in a hotel and welcoming him as her husband. She afterwards explained that this was done for the reason that she was a spy and needed his passport to escape. The forgery of the passport was not convincing, because passports generally contain photographs and descriptions and cannot be forged by the simple insertion of the words "and wife."

The action from this situation down to the point where an escape was made from the hotel was fairly good, and at least interesting. The situation calling for Miss Kane to proceed to undress in front of a window blind in order to make the guard outside believe that she and her "husband" were retiring as usual, this and the previously mentioned situation being the most startling incidents of the successful novel, "Little Comrade," from which this production was adapted.

Following the escape, which was made possible by a member of the secret service who conveniently arrived to aid the fugitives, we had a chase through the woods with four soldiers in pursuit who were either crippled or had bad eyesight, since they were very close to the fugitives once or twice, but seemed unable to either shoot them or catch them. Finally these soldiers allowed the fugitives, who were suspected of having papers of tremendous importance, to swim across a rather narrow river and escape, the reason given being that this river marked the boundary line between the two armies. Since no soldiers were in evidence, it is hard to understand why the Germans would not pursue across the river. It would surely have been worth the effort.

The following scenes, which showed Mr. Blackwell going out to look at a dead soldier while Germans came along and captured Miss Kane, seemed to be painfully convenient, because there was apparently no other reason for him leaving her alone save that he wanted to take a look at the battlefield. When she was captured, the man who could furnish evidence against her was conveniently killed by a sharpshooter, and then the commanding officer just "happened" to be an old friend of her American sweetheart, and so she was released.

Miss Kane is a beautiful girl and registered rather well in most of her scenes, with Mr. Blackwell doing the hero in an acceptable manner.

The support was decidedly poor, there being considerable unnecessary overacting. In the supporting cast were William Bailey, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Frank Leigh, Florence Ashbrook and John Burkell.

The Box Office Angle.

You may be able to do quite a little business on this, because of the presence of Gail Kane and the fact that you can announce this as a production of the successful novel, "Little Comrade."

If you will talk about the unusual situation of the beautiful woman rushing into an American's room to welcome him as her husband, you will arouse considerable interest, and it is possible that your audiences will not stop to criticise too severely, providing you have not made any unreasonable claims for the production.

Whatever you do, don't promise that this is a "gripping, stirring, spectacular war drama," because it isn't.

Joseph M. Attie

AT LIBERTY

JUVENILE

LEAD

OR

DETAIL

ASSISTANT

ON

COSTUME

PRODUCTIONS

A native of Algiers, educated in France, I have traveled extensively in North Africa and could supervise any costume production relating to that picturesque land.

SEVEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

Producing and Playing in France

Address Care WID'S, TIMES BLDG., N. Y. C.

QUAINT CONTRASTS PROVIDE SOME WHOLESOME HUMOR

Ruth Stonehouse with Jack Mulhall in

FIGHTING FOR LOVE

Red Feather.

DIRECTOR	Raymond Wells
AUTHOR	Raymond Wells
SCENARIO BY	Fred Myton
CAMERAMAN	R. E. Irish
AS A WHOLE	Pleasing light entertainment
STORY	Not to be taken seriously
DIRECTION	Gave beauty spots, considerable fun and snappy action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some exceptionally fine; some ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Many exquisite bits; some too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Pleasing
SUPPORT	Got over desired impression
EXTERIORS	A few wonderfully beautiful; generally well chosen
INTERIORS	Quite impressive, except floor of throne room
DETAIL	Good enough for comedy
TIME	Sixty-eight minutes

IN order that no one shall gain the wrong impression, they've tacked a title on to this at the very beginning which explains that the production is not to be taken seriously, but has been written for entertainment purposes only.

Considered from the viewpoint of whether or not it passes an hour pleasantly, I would say that most any audience would consider this quite enjoyable. There is plenty of action and the entire atmosphere provides a very quaint contrast between the rough and ready cowboy of Arizona and the army of a small, hardly-on-the-map kingdom in central Europe.

We've had many Western pictures and we've had many "little kingdom" pictures. This production, which contrasts the methods of the kingdom with those of the roughneck cowboys, is really quite funny at times.

The atmosphere of this is "in and out." Some of the scenes in and about the European palace were wonderfully beautiful, and they were lighted in such a manner as to show them to exquisite advantage. There were other scenes, however, which looked rather cheap and were not photographed to the best advantage, with the result that they pulled down the standard of class that should have been held throughout.

Ruth Stonehouse as the princess was pleasing, but most of the attention was centered upon Jack Mulhall as the hero cowboy, because he was given the comedy business.

Noble Johnson as an educated Indian handled his part very well, but the title writer hung a few phrases on him which seemed rather overdone even for the comedy effect which was being tried for.

Jean Herscholt as the wicked "willun" king proved to be quite an efficient harem keeper and was a good type for the degenerate royalty stuff.

Some of the titles in this were particularly well handled and registered a few laughs, but others were a bit overdone and consequently missed fire.

There was one little incident which will probably interest many, that being the scenes where the European "chickens" made such an effort to make good with the stalwart American Indian. Surely these "chickens" were "fighting for love."

The title writer, in calling the "willun" king's country "Bewaria," is sure of at least one laugh, because every audience will "come to" when they read that caption.

Others in the supporting cast were J. F. Briscoe and Ruby Marshall.

The story of this was very simple, having to do with a millionaire cowboy and his fighting companion, who wandered into a small European kingdom, learned that the queen was threatened with war by a neighboring "willunous" monarch and consequently sent for a handful of roughneck cowboys from the West to come over and clean up the "kink's" army, which they did.

The Box Office Angle.

Although this fails at times to ring true, I believe that everyone will overlook any of the minor shortcomings and accept the broad strokes of comedy as good entertainment. Undoubtedly the contrast between the dinky little kingdom and the free and easy manner of the Western cowboys provides an element of fun which has not been used to any extent before.

I wouldn't bill this like a circus, but I'd play it as regular program stuff and emphasize the fact that it is a delightful little comedy full of real action and romance. Be sure they all understand the comedy element, because many would enjoy this who would have no use for it if it were straight melodrama.

In your advertising you might use lines of this sort: "Could you imagine the result if a score of Arizona cowboys, veterans of the Spanish-American War, butted in on a war between a couple of one-horse kingdoms in central Europe. See 'Fighting for Love.'"

While Miss Stonehouse is starred in this with Mr. Mulhall featured in support, I believe you will be justified in giving Mr. Mulhall equal prominence in the billing because he is the central figure in the comedy action.

DISTINCTIVE ATMOSPHERE IMPRESSES, BUT PLOT SLUMPS AT END

Norma Talmadge in

PANTHEA

Talmadge-Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR	Allan Dwan
AUTHOR	Monckton Hoffe
SCENARIO BY	Allan Dwan
CAMERAMAN	Roy Overbough
AS A WHOLE	Impressive, effective atmosphere, but drama slumped at end
STORY	Started great; slumped, but held nicely until finish, when missed fire; scattering sympathy
DIRECTION	Made atmosphere distinctive; registered good individual incidents, but permitted faulty ending
PHOTOGRAPHY	Mostly dark backgrounds with spotlighting; generally effective but occasionally lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective bits; at times too contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Made characterization interesting; was over-exposed occasionally
SUPPORT	Some fine types, giving good characterizations
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Distinctive
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Seventy-eight minutes

WHEN Petrova played "Panthea" the character was presented as a dominant woman of repressed power, who suggested at all times tremendous force held in restraint. I believe that the success of the story as played was due to Petrova's personality. In the film we find Miss Talmadge working hard in her emotional scenes, but coming down to lighter moments in her delightful girlish manner, with the unfortunate effect that the heavier dramatic bits failed to grip and convince as they should have, because we somehow felt that the little beauty was hardly forceful enough to dominate the action.

The production started off with a swinging tempo that really stirred, because it was straight melodrama presented in an effective manner, in distinctive settings, with a predominence of spotlighting that gave an added touch of class to the atmosphere. These scenes had to do with the part of the story suggested, but not shown, in the play, and consequently the director had a free hand to color as he saw fit.

The incidents leading up to the shooting of the guard and the escape from prison were carefully handled, and then, following these rushing melodramatic moments, we had an exceptionally effective sequence of scenes dealing with a fire at sea. I have seen many directors attempt to picture a burning ship and the resultant panic, but seldom, if ever, have I seen it more effectively done than in this offering.

We then came to the story proper, showing Panthea's rescue and her weeks in the home of the English family, which resulted in her elopement with the young musical genius, who married her and took up his residence with her in Paris.

It was from this time on that the story seemed to slip, because of developments which showed us the gradual weakening of the husband on account of his inability to achieve success, which was followed by the wife's agreement to give herself for one month to an impressario in return for his producing the weak-kneed husband's opera. This situation, in varied forms, has been done many times in the films, and somehow it fails to register as effectively as it should.

The scenes registering the development of this sequence were so handled as to make the sacrifice seem truly repulsive to the wife, and yet she doesn't gain the proper sympathy from the average audience.

When, at the end of the month, the impressario refused to carry out his agreement to kill himself, the wife murdered him and was afterwards taken prisoner, to be sent to Siberia with her husband, the audience feels that something should have been done to provide a way out of this obnoxious situation. The title which comes after we see them in Siberia, stating that the husband's letters should have reached his father, with the result that England would rescue them, is supposed to register a happy ending. But when it was flashed at the Rialto there was a noticeable murmur in the house, making it plain that the ending was not satisfactory. Truly, it left the sympathy scattered to the wild winds.

Throughout the production Mr. Dwan used the effective technique of dark sets with spotlighting, and, while this may register as decidedly distinctive with many, it may not appeal to many others, because at times it became quite contrasty and frequently there is a lack of proper definition.

Miss Talmadge demonstrated that she has true depth as an emotional actress, and if she fails to reach the dominance expected in this part, it may only be due to the fact that Petrova is so well remembered in the character.

Very frequently Miss Talmadge suffered from overexposure. It seemed to me that some of this was unnecessary, and I have a hunch that a good many members of your audience are going to feel that some of it is being forced upon them.

In the supporting cast, L. Rogers Lytton, as the impressario, made that characterization stand out in a truly repulsive manner.

As the weak husband, Earle Fox was a well-chosen type, and he registered his points nicely—possibly a bit too nicely to hold the sympathy properly.

Murdock McQuarrie, as the police agent, made his bit loom up, he being assisted in this by a very effective make-up, part of which was an exceptionally well-done scar.

George Fawcett, as the police official, had an unfortunate moustache, because it hit me right between the eyes that he looked exactly like Frank Daniels in that make-up. I'm sure that many of your regulars are going to be reminded of Daniels in the part of Kernel Knutt when they see Fawcett in his uniform, decorated with this moustache.

Eric von Stroheim made a small bit stand out early in the offering by the authority with which he carried his scenes. He appeared as the lieutenant who arrested Miss Talmadge.

Frank Currier had a few splendid scenes as the old doctor, and, in fact, the entire cast was exceptionally well chosen as to type, with many of the bits very nicely handled.

The Box Office Angle

I believe you can safely make a lot of noise about this and get much real coin with it without having any one raise any serious objections. The story misses fire in some of the more dramatic incidents through failure to convince or grip, but it has been presented in such a distinctive atmosphere with such an exceptional cast of types that you'll not find many who will say that they don't like it.

In advertising this, I'd make a lot of noise about it being a remarkable story of a beautiful Russian political fugitive, who, after marrying a young Englishman, sacrificed herself for his career. You can talk particularly about the fact that this has been lavishly produced, because the staging is surely distinctive enough to merit your promise.

It might be inadvisable to mention the fact that this was Petrova's great success, because it would naturally tend to make your audiences compare Miss Talmadge with Petrova, which isn't altogether desirable in this particular production.

INTERESTING NOVELTY, BUT DISCONNECTED TIRESOME DEVELOPMENT

Allan Holubar, Matt Moore and Jane Gail in

20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA

Universal Special

DIRECTOR ..... Stuart Paton
SCENARIO BY ..... Stuart Paton
AUTHOR ..... Jules Verne
PHOTOGRAPHY BY ..... Eugene Gaudio and staff
AS A WHOLE ..... Impressive novelty quite interesting, although fails to grip as drama
STORY ..... Told backwards; much wild-eyed adventure with obliging coincidences
DIRECTION ..... Missed fire on dramatic scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... At times very fine; occasionally lacked definition; undersea stuff marvelous
LIGHTINGS ..... Many very artistic and effective; some not so good
CAMERA WORK ..... Submarine views real novelty; other scenes varied
STARS ..... Personalities helped carry burdensome plot
SUPPORT ..... Some good; some overplayed
EXTERIORS ..... Many beautiful bits; some ordinary; bottom of sea locations very interesting
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good
DETAIL ..... Good, considering nature of offering
TIME ..... Two hours and five minutes

YOU can figure on this as a production which will surely register as slow but interesting, and consequently entertaining, almost anywhere. It is an unusual novelty. It is a very unwieldy plot as pictured and the present assembling gives most of the submarine scenes immediately, with the story going back a generation in the second part to tell with considerable detail the incidents which led up to the action which we have seen.

The wisdom of this construction is questionable. As a matter of fact, it would seem to me that the bulk of this offering should have been held strictly to the story as written by Jules Verne, without undue attention given to any development that might have occurred before the story opened.

The hundreds of scenes taken on the ocean bottom, under water, are certainly a novelty, but, because of the limited action possible where the characters are all wearing diving suits, these scenes become after a time more or less tiresome. The same is true of the scenes of the submarine, because of too little dramatic incident. Most of the incident which we saw was the result of obvious coincidences.

The spectacular scenes having to do with the revolution in India, which was tied in to get over the part of the story preceding Vernes' novel, were fairly well handled in very big sets, but they will not be effective enough to justify the footage given to them.

The chief fault as it stands is that the story fails to grip at any time, and the incidents are accepted as they unfold chiefly because of the unusual atmosphere in which they are enacted.

Jane Gail, as the wild girl discovered on Mysterious Island, was decidedly interesting in her Eve costume, and her early scenes were effectively lighted. In a number of dramatic situations in which she apppeared, her emotional work was the best of any of the principals.

Allan Holubar, as Capt. Nemo, the inventor of the submarine, was presented in a make-up which made it impossible for him to do much except emote with his eyes. He did this on any and all occasions, using his heavily-haired eyebrows for all they were worth.

Matt Moore, as the young hero, was quite pleasing when he had an opportunity, but there was really so little to the story that he did not become a prominent factor in the offering.

Your audiences will like this if they are sufficiently impressed by the novelty of the undersea photography. If not, they will think it quite tiresome.

In the supporting cast were Edna Pendleton, Curtis Benton, Howard Crampton, Wallace Clark, Martin Murphy, Leviticus Jones, William Welch, Dan Hanlon and Lois Alexander.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the reputation of this story, which at the time it was written was truly a wonderful forecast of coming inventions, and the fact that you can advertise the novelty of the photography under sea, you can probably do a very big business. I wouldn't advise that you play it for a long run, because I fear that most of your audiences will be rather disappointed with the production, feeling that it drags badly and becomes tiresome, and consequently they will not recommend it to their friends.

The production as now assembled gets so little of the best part of Jules Verne's book onto the screen that many may be particularly disappointed from that angle.

The introduction of so much footage telling about incidents which were not incorporated in the original novel will also be objected to. There will possibly be little objection to the detail, because of the fanciful character of the offering. However, many may think that the yacht used in the scenes supposed to be preceding the Civil War was entirely too modern as to equipment.

I'd suggest that you play this, bill the undersea stuff and the name, without any guarantee as to the production itself, get what money you can and get through with it before it has a chance to die on your hands.

You can't say too much about the undersea stuff, because it is wonderfully novel, but there's little else to the offering worth making any fuss about.

UNCANNY SINCERITY OF CUTE STAR MAKES OLD STUFF REGISTER

Ella Hall in

HER SOUL'S INSPIRATION

Bluebird

DIRECTOR ..... Jack Conway
AUTHOR ..... Harris Anson
SCENARIO BY ..... Maie Havey
CAMERAMAN ..... Ed J. Kull
AS A WHOLE ..... Star's quaint sincerity made this very human STORY ..... Ancient, obvious theme saved by handling
DIRECTION ..... Little twists and intimate contrasts made old stuff register
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some excellent; some ordinary and indistinct
LIGHTINGS ..... A few very good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK ..... Just good
STAR ..... Human sincerity gives quaint appeal
SUPPORT ..... Handled characterizations very well
EXTERIORS ..... Some very good; surf stuff helped; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable; not unusual
DETAIL ..... Some good little bits
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes

IT is remarkable that such an old idea as the child who was left homeless while another took her place with wealthy relatives is still good for five reels of entertainment, but surely Producer Conway and Miss Hall, with the aid of sincere work on the part of the supporting cast, have been able to take this obvious old plot and make it register, with a human note predominating sufficiently to make it seem real. Even to the hardened old "regular" who begins to growl about it being old stuff, there will be moments in this when he will chuckle and others when he will feel the humanness of Miss Hall's characterization.

Of course, on the finish, after many adventures, we find our homeless heiress, Miss Hall, a successful dancer, who comes into her own when she no longer needs it, but all of her little struggles accompanied by her mongrel pup have been crowded with little intimate touches sincerely played, and somehow you can't help but enjoy the bubbling optimism of this youngster. I believe Miss Hall can portray the kiddie of fourteen to sixteen with more sincerity than most any other film favorite.

Regarding the work of the supporting cast, one scene by Ed. Hearn stuck out. It was the bit where he came home drunk and found the little waif asleep in his shack and was brought to the realization of her innocence by her snuggling his hand close to her cheek as she muttered, "Daddy, I'm so tired." Unfortunately, Mr. Hearn's make-up was noticeable in his close-ups. This is surely to be regretted, because he did a nice bit of characterization.

The entire cast was well-chosen as to type, the others being Marc Robbins, Alice May Youse, Marcia Moore, Margaret Whistler, R. Hasset Ryan and Ray Whittaker.

The Box Office Angle.

It would seem to me that Ella Hall should be a real box office value for you, since she has appeared in a number of exceptionally successful productions. There is an uncanny sincerity about the way she plays the youngster absolutely lacking in worldly knowledge, and I believe that her characterizations of such little girls have won her a very large following.

While this story isn't big, all of the action centers about her, and I believe you can safely promise that all of her admirers will consider it a delightfully human little story, made entertaining by the quaint little bits of pathos and humor registered by the star.

In billing this I'd concentrate all of my attention upon Miss Hall, referring in all of my advertising to the fact that she has appeared in "Jewel," "The Love Girl" and many other distinctively human offerings.

INTERESTING PREACHMENT, FINE TOUCHES, BUT PLOT MISSES FIRE

William Farnum in

THE PRICE OF SILENCE

Fox Special

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Lloyd
AUTHOR ..... William Piggott
SCENARIO BY ..... Frank Lloyd
AS A WHOLE ..... Interesting, impressive at times, but plot doesn't grip
STORY ..... Obvious melo with preachment sidelights
DIRECTION ..... Gave distinctive atmosphere, but unable to overcome artificiality of plot
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good
LIGHTINGS ..... A few excellent; many too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Good; not remarkable
STAR ..... Forceful, but seemed cramped in store clothes
SUPPORT ..... Some splendid; others ordinary
EXTERIORS ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Some quite impressive
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes

THIS is avowedly a preachment against child labor. There are many human bits, with splendid character touches, some of which were quite pathetic and some decidedly humorous. But, as a whole, the action and the story proper failed to convince or grip, principally because it was quite obvious that the dramatic situations were simply a means to an end.

Some of the oldest of the melodramatic basic principals were introduced. There was one of those "martyr" endings which killed off the love interest.

Mr. Farnum, presented as a senator, who, through meeting a boy cripple in one of the factories, became the champion of child labor agitation, was forceful at all times and dominated most of the action, but we have come to know Mr. Farnum as a blue-shirt hero, and somehow he doesn't seem exactly at ease in store clothes.

Gordon Griffith, who played the crippled boy, gave a splendid performance and made his work stand out almost as strongly as that of Mr. Farnum.

Charles Clary gave the proper suggestion of repressed power as the villain, and provided effective opposition to Mr. Farnum.

The other members of the cast were rather ordinary.

There were a number of what could be called big scenes in this, showing the legislature in session and crowds assembled outside, and these helped to make the offering impressive. Some of the scenes of the factory were very well handled.

The plot provided one of those situations where the beautiful girl's guardian was under financial obligations to the villain and the hero used his influence to kill the great reform measure in order to save the girl from exposure. After accepting this bribe to get the money to save the girl and destroy the evidence, he confessed his action and was sent to prison, his confession causing the passage of the bill.

I feel quite certain that most members of your audience will raise the same question which came up in my mind—why not destroy the evidence immediately after accepting the bribe and then proceed to have the bill passed? The villain could not accuse him of having accepted a bribe, although he might sue him for the $100,000 which he had borrowed. Incidentally, I'd like to know how a loan constitutes a bribe, anyway. Of course, as presented, it is presumed to be more dramatic, although I believe that the present arrangement takes the sympathy away from the character despite the "martyr" stuff on the finish, and since the love interest is gone the ending is not altogether satisfactory.

After reading the synopsis sent out by the company, it would seem that this production has been changed quite a bit from the original idea of the story, it evidently being realized that the plot itself had many weak spots.

In the supporting cast were Ray Hanford, Frank Clark, Vivian Rich, and Brooklyn Kellar.

The Box Office Angle.

Mr. Farnum's presence in this will undoubtedly make it a good box office attraction. The fact that the story is a preachment against child labor also gives it a popular appeal, and it will undoubtedly prove quite acceptable almost anywhere, because it is surely interesting and has enough good moments to make it register as better than the average program release.

The introduction of a couple of old types, who provided some very good comedy, and a couple of crippled children, who registered pathetic touches, gave it a human appeal at times, and I believe that you can figure that it is a safe bet to plug pretty strongly, feeling that most every one will decide that it is quite worthwhile.

I would concentrate my advertising, however, on the star and the theme of the story. Don't promise that it is the greatest production of recent times, etc., because such a promise is unnecessary and may get you in bad. You can say that there are thousands of characters appearing in the production and promise that some very realistic scenes have been presented, showing Mr. Farnum addressing the legislature on his great child labor reform bill.

Mr. Farnum's appearance in dress clothes, in a part where he has only one chance to bust a guy on the jaw, may appeal as a novelty, and I'd call particular attention to the fact that this is the first production in many months in which he hasn't worn the faithful old blue shirt.

QUAINT ATMOSPHERE AND STAR'S TRICKS LIFT SCANT PLOT

Mary Pickford in

THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN

Pickford-Artcraft

DIRECTOR	Maurice Tourneur
AUTHORS	Elaine Stearn and Charles Whittaker
CAMERAMEN	John Vanderbroeck and Lucien Andriot
SCENIC SETS BY	Ben Carre
AS A WHOLE	Atmosphere, development of incidents and human touches make this very entertaining
STORY	A scant skeleton; ancient and obvious
DIRECTION	Registered quaintness and star's cute tricks to splendid advantage
PHOTOGRAPHY	Most of it very effective; at times uncertain
CAMERA WORK	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Generally very good; fitted atmosphere
STAR	Registered pathos and quaint bits of humor beautifully
SUPPORT	Some exceptional types; all very good
EXTERIORS	Some wonderful surf stuff and excellent atmosphere
INTERIORS	Fitted picturesque atmosphere
DETAIL	Carefully handled
TIME	Eighty minutes

I BELIEVE that this will register everywhere as very satisfying entertainment. The story is truly scant, decidedly ancient and rather obvious, and yet, because of the atmosphere provided by Producer Tourneur and the scores of delightful little human touches registered by the star, most of your fans will never stop to complain about the plot, because they will have lived with the people of this Scotch island for an evening and will have laughed heartily over the many cute little tricks of their favorite of the screen.

There were a few moments when the pathos really registered, although it missed occasionally because of the obvious trend of the story, but surely most any audience will be stirred by the swing of the tempo at the opening and the same swing on the finish.

The greater part of this moved at a slower tempo registering the human bits quietly, with many, many audience-appeal touches of animals and a few quaint little incidents which had little to do with the story and yet registered much as to character.

Unfortunately, this production as shown at the Strand had been trimmed of almost one-sixth of its footage, and since I took the trouble to see this a second time in its proper length, I can tell you definitely that the cutting seriously marred the tempo and the continuity in many of the sequences. This was particularly true of the finish.

In the cutting at the Strand, one character, who provided a human contrast at the first and figured very definitely in the finale, was eliminated entirely.

M. Tourneur managed to develop the situation of Little Mary being caught a prisoner on the boat which had been her home, when it was cast adrift and began to go to pieces on the rocks, into a situation that really held very well. These scenes were made sufficiently realistic to cause a large percentage of the women in the audience to become decidedly nervous as to the outcome.

It is unnecessary for me to tell you that little Mary was wonderful. She always is. There is no other who can do the little things in just the same way, time after time, and win us no matter how often we may have seen her.

Matt Moore, as her fisherman sweetheart, was a happy choice, because of his sincerity and likeable personality.

There were some wonderful types among the minor characters, and not a weak spot in the cast.

Many beautiful surf scenes and some unusual shots made with night photography helped make the offering distinctive. The titles were particularly well worded, being kept in the dialect of the characters without at any time losing their smoothness.

The story, briefly, tells of two sweethearts on a little Scotch isle, whose happiness is unclouded until the boy is informed that he is really the son of a titled lady. Her visits to him are misunderstood by Little Mary, since her lover is sworn not to reveal his identity, and she, in her grief, casts her boat adrift, with the result that she is caught and comes very close to death before being rescued by her lover. Realizing the depth of their affection, the boy's parents then agreed that they should live happily ever after.

When you realize that Producer Tourneur has presented a truly entertaining seven-reel production from this scant material, you must agree with me that he is really a genius.

Others in the cast were Kathryne Browne, Ed. Roseman, Warren Cook and Joel Day.

The Box Office Angle.

Of course, you can get much real money with this. As compared with "Less Than the Dust," it is tremendously better as entertainment, and I believe that the atmosphere is of a more human character, with many more appealing touches developed through the presence of quaint types.

I would bill this to the limit, promising a delightful entertainment, and I would devote all of my attention to the star and the atmosphere, telling nothing of the story. Make a particular appeal for the co-operation of all Scotch societies, and you will probably find that they will be very much interested.

Make it plain that this presents Little Mary as a human little Scotch lassie in a very quaint, picturesque atmosphere.

HACKNEYED PLOT BADLY OVERPLAYED FAILS TO CONVINCE

Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness in

THE MASTER PASSION

Edison-K.-E.-S.-E. Service

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR	Everett MacNeil
CAMERAMAN	George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing, and overacted old-school drama
STORY	Hackneyed and obliging
DIRECTION	Atmosphere rather good, but action very theatric
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Very good; a few too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Few effects; not enough good close-ups
STARS	Personalities lacked necessary magnetism
SUPPORT	Quite ordinary; painful attempt to be French
EXTERIORS	Some quite artistic
INTERIORS	Many very good; others quite poor
DETAIL	Quite convenient
TIME	Sixty-five minutes

THIS is rather an old-school, theatric drama based on a hackneyed theme, with the entire cast overplaying all the time. The action doesn't convince and the story lacks the human elements to make it truly interesting and appealing.

It is the old-time theme of the wife who ran away to become a great singer, but this one, after being ditched by her friend, with whom she eloped, was fortunate enough to be made the protege of a great prima donna, who obligingly fell ill about the time the protege had reached the point in her training where she might take her place. Truly, "They do it in the movies."

The deserted husband made a fortune by a session over the telephone—you know, one of those stock market deals that they get over quick with one title and a short scene—and then he took his grown-up daughter to Europe so that they might wander around until the author got ready for them to bump into mother.

It didn't take many scenes for this, because a penniless count who had been mother's lover saw a chance to get his hooks on the millions of the young American girl's father, and so he ditched mother to arrange an engagement with daughter, not knowing, of course, that she was his ex-sweetheart's daughter.

Mother, now a successful prima donna, discovered the situation and managed to put the penniless count out of commission. When the telephone millionaire discovered, however, that the prima donna had not been true to him for eighteen years, even though he knew she had run away with another guy, he walked out on her and said he could never forgive her.

Since it wouldn't do to have an unhappy ending on this sort of a production, the author changed his mind real quick and sent hubby back to the sorrowful prima donna wife. They finished with a "clutch."

In the first part of the offering we had Richard Tucker doing a he-vampire part, apparently under instructions to make it rather "Frenchy." Later on we had Bigelow Cooper doing the penniless count with rather undue emphasis on the French gestures.

Mr. Conness and Miss Trunnelle, and, in fact, all the other members of the cast overplayed upon any and all occasions. They didn't make their action ring true at any time, and consequently this will certainly not have any great effect upon any audience.

We had a rescue stunt that was rather humorous, it being a runaway horse attached to a sleigh in which daughter was frantically pretending that she was greatly scared. Our young hero grabbed a sled from a friend and coasted down a hill until he had gone ahead of the runaway, and then he jumped out in front of the horse with a heroic pose that might have suggested that he was going to bat the "wild" animal on the right ear. As the horse approached, he made a wild leap, which was very funny, because the runaway by that time was barely jogging. The hero had to jump toward the horse to reach him, because he stopped almost before he got to him. This should be good for a laugh almost everywhere.

The general atmosphere of the offering was rather commendable, but the photography lacked the vignetting effects and intelligent discrimination in camera angles such as we find in artistic successes of recent months.

In the supporting cast were A. Lincoln, Helen Strickland, William Wadsworth, Ann Leonard, Raymond McKee, and Olive Wright.

The Box Office Angle.

If you occasionally run ordinary stuff to fill in on bad nights this may be acceptable, because it has a rather good atmosphere and may satisfy the average patron, even though he fails to consider it convincing. The overplaying of the various characters and the obliging coincidences of the plot development keep it from registering as anything but ordinary "movie" stuff.

Don't promise very much on this, because, if you do, you are inviting an argument. If you need a filler put it over quietly and try to have an alibi ready for those who may kick.

Considered as a whole, this is about on a par with the class of productions which we used to get in single and double reel stuff of a few years ago, with the footage stretched into five instead of two or three reels.

While Miss Trunnelle and Mr. Conness have been in a great many films, I can't feel that they have the essential personalities to prove big box office assets.

VAMPIRE STUFF WITH UNUSUAL ATMOSPHERE SURELY INTERESTING

Cleo Madison in

BLACK ORCHIDS

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Rex Ingram
AUTHOR	Rex Ingram
CAMERAMAN	Duke Hayward
AS A WHOLE	Interesting and unusual, with good moments
STORY	Rather different; will impress generally despite depressing incidents
DIRECTION	Effective atmosphere provided made offering register
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; occasionally just good
LIGHTINGS	Very effective; often artistic; mostly spotlight effects
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Distinctive vampire characterization
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Good; not remarkable
INTERIORS	Decidedly distinctive, except for a few which were very ordinary
DETAIL	One or two bad points
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

CLEO MADISON is a beautiful girl and knows right well how to handle a vampire characterization.

In this offering we get an unusual story decidedly suggestive of the more daring French production. It is a story within a story, with the author of the vampire tale telling his daughter of the novel he has just written in order to explain to her the danger of trifling with men.

This story-within-a-story idea takes the curse off the fact that the vampire tale is a tragedy, since it brings the characters back to modern times for the finish.

The vampire tale tells of a crystal gazer, played by Cleo Madison, who is loved by both father and son. The father arranged it so that his boy would be sent to war, in order to get rid of him, and he even saw to it that his regiment was to be the first on the firing line.

Meanwhile, the vampire began to favor a friend of the father, and he attempted to poison him. Learning of his attention, the vampire switched the glasses so that the father was poisoned, and she then married the father's friend, only to leave him when the son afterwards returns.

The vampire made her husband believe that her lover had insulted her, so that a duel would be fought, trusting to her lover's skill as a swordsman to save him.

The husband was left for dead and the lovers went away together, but what had been described as "the best sword arm in France" seemed to have lacked the killing power, because hubby got up and walked around for a couple of days in the same blood-stained shirt, while he trailed the lovers, until he finally locked them together in a dungeon to meet their doom.

The introduction of a hunchback and a chimpanzee, employed by the vampire in her plottings, gave an added touch of gruesome distinction to this offering.

While there were a few moments which were quite impressive, the situation showing the walking about of the husband, for two days after he had been left for dead will cause the story to lose its grip. Nevertheless, it will be considered interesting.

There were some very good types in the supporting cast, the entire action, however, centering about Cleo Madison, the others simply providing a frame for her characterization.

In the supporting cast were Richard La Reno, Francis McDonald, Wedgwood Nowell, Howard Crampton and William J. Dyer.

The Box Office Angle

If Cleo Madison is a favorite in your community—and she is generally—you should be able to do particularly well with this, because you can announce that she appears in an exceptionally powerful vampire characterization, which is effectively contrasted against a characterization, also done by Miss Madison, of an innocent, carefree young beauty. The story is rather heavy in spots, but is unusual enough to be interesting.

It is quite possible that some of your regulars will take exception to the final scenes, following the duel, but you can feel pretty sure that they'll consider the offering as a whole worth while, if for no other reason than that it is different.

INTERESTING BUT ORDINARY MELO WITH POLICE CHIEF AS CROOK

Emmy Wehlen in

VANITY

Pop. P. & P.-Metro

DIRECTOR	John B. O'Brien
AUTHOR	Aaron Hoffman
SCENARIO BY	Wallace C. Clifton
CAMERAMAN	Harry B. Harris
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, although unconvincing, crooked police-murder-mystery stuff
STORY	Conveniently planned melo holds fairly well
DIRECTION	Many scenes lacked class; dramatic moments didn't grip, but offering will be accepted
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; frequently lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many rather poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Pretty; kept emotions in check
SUPPORT	Helped action quite a bit; some good types
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Lacked real class; a few poor
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-five minutes

THE author of this has prepared one of those murder-mystery-suspense things that never really worries anyone as to how it is going to finish, although the characters are presumed to be greatly excited over the danger of the consequences. The chief of police is presented as all kinds of a crook in this, and in some places I believe the story rather oversteps the bounds in this regard.

Miss Wehlen is a little girl he fancied, with the result that he "framed" a charge against her and made her act as stool pigeon in collecting evidence against the hero, who was suspected of murder.

Of course, the star and the hero fell in love, and then, when she betrayed him, he thought she was all wrong, but all through the story the author had an ace up his sleeve in another character, who had been carried along for no other reason than to bring to light after her death the fact that she was the second wife of this crooked police chief, which made it possible for the hero to be set free, because the chief of police was a bigamist and could not afford to prosecute.

Of course, the hero had never committed the crime, it having been one of those struggle things to kill a blackmailer who knew something about the boy's father. It seemed that father had been a real rough guy in the years gone by in the West, a few scenes of this being shown to prove how "rough" he was. He had accidentally killed a man in a quarrel. Hence the blackmail.

The tempo of the dramatic action in this was decidedly slow in many places, there being many unnecessary scenes used to pad out the development.

There was a general lack of distinction in the settings, and when we first saw the gambling resort said to be fashionable, we surely didn't find a very fashionable-looking gathering sitting about the table.

Miss Wehlen will please in this because she held her emotions sufficiently under control that, while she did practically nothing, it was far better than to try too much and fail.

Paul Gordon, a very good-looking lad, was a pleasing hero.

Thomas O'Keefe looked like a real crook, as the chief of police; and Edward Martindell was the hero's father.

Others in the cast were W. W. Black, J. W. Hartman, Esther Evans, Norman Kaiser, Tom Cameron, Dixie Marshall and Emile Agoust.

The Box Office Angle.

Most audiences will consider this interesting and acceptable, because there is a lot happening, with many twists and turns to the plot which, though convenient, are fairly absorbing. Certainly very few, if any, will be thrilled or convinced by the action, because it doesn't grip as true drama.

If Miss Wehlen's name has any box office value in your community, you will be able to play this and get by nicely. If she has no box office value, you will be missing nothing if you skip it.

If you've had any trouble over censorship, or any supervision by the police authorities over your productions, I would be very careful about this, because it presents the chief of police as forty-three kinds of a blackguard.

CROOK PLAY OF SPLENDID SUSPENSE SHOULD GO BIG

William Courtenay and Mollie King in

KICK IN

Astra-Pathe

DIRECTOR	George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR	Willard Mack
SCENARIO BY	Ouida Bergere
CAMERAMAN	A. C. Miller
AS A WHOLE	Very interesting crook play
STORY	Has much action, doesn't always convince, but holds; ending weak
DIRECTION	Kept action moving, but offering lacked distinctive class
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary; little attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Will register satisfactorily
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Ordinary, but fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

THE fact that this was rather successful as a play in New York may be generally known, and, if so, it should help the film adaptation. In any case, you can consider this an interesting crook drama with enough action to hold the interest nicely up to the finish.

The production is lacking in distinction of atmosphere, there being little or no attempt to secure effective lightings, with many of the scenes played at such a distance from the camera as to lose some of the intimacy which helps so much in making the characterizations human.

The play contained many good lines, which helped decidedly in registering certain points, and these were sadly missed in many of the scenes.

The offering was just like many other crook plays in the early scenes and failed to hold particularly well until it got down to the situation which justified the play.

Unfortunately, the ending doesn't get over particularly well on the screen, because the charity of the commissioner when he learns about the coming of his baby is received with such a shock that it seems like a decided let-down.

There was a lack of close-ups which might have helped materially in making the action more gripping, the production having been made without many of the new ideas which have been incorporated into our most successful recent productions in evidence.

Mr. Courtenay, as the hero, was a splendid type, and he registered what was to be done quite satisfactorily. He hardly looked the part of a crook at any time, but we know that there are some crooks who don't look it, so that point shuld be passed.

Miss King, as the heroine, handled her scenes rather well, although all of the principals would have shown to decidedly better advantage had they been introduced to the audience more intimately.

Others in the cast were John Boyle, Robert Clugston and Suzanne Willa.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you should be able to do very well with this by billing it as an adaptation of a big New York play success, and, while the distinctive class of some of our better recent pictures is absent, there is enough good, snappy action in this to put it over as a very satisfactory offering with even a discriminating audience.

It is to be regretted that the producer didn't make this a more intimate study, because, by doing so, he could have made some of the scenes decidedly more intense, and consequently more human and convincing.

You might use lines such as these in billing this: "Is a crook allowed to go straight after being caught once? See 'Kick In.'" "Is our treatment of reformed criminals fair? See 'Kick In.'"

WID'S BINDERS Are Sent Prepaid, $1.50.

UNUSUAL COMBINATION OF REINCARNATION CONTRASTS FAIRLY DONE

Valkyrien and Harris Gordon in

THE IMAGE MAKER

Thanhouser-Pathe

DIRECTOR	Eugene Moore
AUTHOR	Emmett Mixx
CAMERAMAN	George Webber
AS A WHOLE	Fanciful reincarnation melo mildly interesting
STORY	Ancient romance contrasted with modern; only fair construction
DIRECTION	Fair atmosphere; action moderately interesting, although very conventional
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good
LIGHTINGS	Rather ordinary; not many effects
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Didn't impress particularly
SUPPORT	Ordinary; many poor "extras"
EXTERIORS	Florida, with beach sands for Egypt
INTERIORS	Just good; etxerior sets "stagey"
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

THIS story is a mixture of Egyptian scenes, suggesting the story of "The Image Maker of Thebes" contrasted against a modern situation, with two modern lovers presented as the reincarnation of the Egyptian lovers. The modern sweetheart was a sculptress and a film star, the lover being the son of wealthy parents idling in Florida.

The love-at-first-sight effects which manifested themselves between these two were tied up to the Egyptian romance by having the same characters appear in the Egyptian episodes.

The action throughout was melodrama, which, while it may prove fairly interesting, will never be considered convincing or gripping. Most of the time it was just plain "movie" stuff, and the introduction of a film company making scenes added to the theatric atmosphere which pervaded the entire offering.

A number of large exterior sets were built for this production, and they looked very good at a distance. Unfortunately, the director moved too close to them very frequently, with the result that what was supposed to be portions of the old tombs of Egypt loomed up very plainly as painted canvas and compo board.

In the supporting cast were Inda Palmer, Arthur Bauer and Morgan Jones.

The Box Office Angle.

This thing is different enough that a great many of your patrons may consider it good for that reason, even though it is never anything more than interesting considered as drama.

If Valkyrien has any box office value in your section, you may be able to do a little business with this, but I wouldn't boost the production too strong except as an interesting study in reincarnation. I would devote most all of my advertising to questions such as these: "Whom do you think you were two thousand years ago? Do you believe in reincarnation? See 'The Image Maker.'" "Do you think you were ever an Egyptian princess in the by-gone days? See 'The Image Maker.'"

ARTISTIC HANDLING MAKES DICKENS CLASSIC DISTINCTIVE

Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in

GREAT EXPECTATIONS

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Robert G. Vignola
AUTHOR	Charles Dickens
CAMERAMAN	William Marshall
AS A WHOLE	Artistic, distinctive atmosphere makes quaint story entertaining
STORY	Best moments nicely handled
DIRECTION	Made production classy and kept in period nicely
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many unusualy artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STARS	Made characterizations human, although overshadowed by atmosphere
SUPPORT	Some splendid types
EXTERIORS	Very well chosen; some very artistic
INTERIORS	Excellent
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

UNDOUBTEDLY the lightings and care with which the atmosphere of the period has been maintained will do much towards making this a pleasing bit of entertainment. The youthful stars registered some splendid moments, but were really overshadowed by the story and the atmosphere.

There was a splendid element of suspense in the development up to a certain point, where, unfortunately, one title anticipates about thirty feet, when it could have been much more effective without this title.

The title to which I refer was one wherein it was stated that the old convict had left his daughter with Lawyer Jaggers. I mentioned this at the showing, and so the title may be removed. It will certainly help the action if that is done.

Aside from this one point, the story moves nicely, with several interesting bits of melodramatic action and a tempo which at times makes the possibilities very absorbing.

Frank Losee, as the old convict, gave a splendid performance, and Grace Barton, as the mad spinster, made her characterization stand out.

Herbert Prior handled the part of Lawyer Jaggers with a nice mixture of dignity and sympathetic concern.

Others in the cast were Marcia Harris and W. W. Black.

The Box Office Angle

By billing this as a particularly well-handled adaptation of a Dickens story presented in an artistic correct atmosphere, you should be able to make an especial appeal to the literary societies and the schools. You can safely promise that it is an absorbing drama of human frailties, bearing the general tendency of failing to appreciate what has been done to us.

It is possible that the names of Jack Pickford and Louise Huff will not mean much in your territory, but you should be able to pull business by laying the greater emphasis upon the name of the story, with the promise that it has been beautifully produced.

There is enough of the ordinary melodrama in this to please the average patron, who knows nothing about Dickens, and consequently this should be a very satisfactory offering in any theatre, at any time. The story as adapted is not so complicated but that anyone can follow it without any effort.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

MARSHAL FARNUM
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
FEATURE PRODUCER

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
1310 Avenue P, Brooklyn, N. Y.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

EDGAR LEWIS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

WILFRID NORTH
DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES
THANHOUSER NEW ROCHELLE

HENRY OTTO
Directing
Harold Lockwood and May Allison

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

CHARLES M. SEAY
FEATURE PRODUCER

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

I Am Making a "ROLL OF HONOR" of the BEST FEATURES Next Week

WATCH FOR IT

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. NEW YORK, JANUARY 18, 1917. | No. 3 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
338	Metro Average	73.4	69.1	19
472	Fox Average	71.1	68.9	64
1438	Paramount Average	72.7	66.6	259
1207	Triangle Average	72.9	66.3	236
235	Greater Vitagraph Av.	66.7	66.1	43
321	World Average	69.7	62.2	26

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1438	Paramount	72.7	66.6	259
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
2	Girl of Golden West	95	85	1
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
4	Goose Girl	97	96	3
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
3	David Harum	82	60
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	88	53	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
2	Fanchon, the Cricket	93	95	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
4	Dawn of To-morrow	92	90	1
5	Arab	89	56	2
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
4	Secret Orchard	88	85
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
1	The Majesty of the Law	40	40
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
3	Explorer	69	57
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
4	Fatal Card	72	66
4	Zaza	91	67	2
3	Girl of Yesterday	95	83	1
6	White Pearl	70	73
4	Blackbirds	57	58
6	Chorus Lady	70	65
4	Secret Sin	76	83	1
6	The Yankee Girl	58	54
5	Masqueraders	59	58
9	Carmen	80	91	2
9	Still Waters	85	80	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
5	Bella Donna	96	78	3
6	Armstrong's Wife	85	65
[illegible]	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	2
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
14	The Cheat	94	80	8
7	The Reform Candidate	80	49
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	[illegible]
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	[illegible]
7	Temptation	76	70	1
5	Foundling	79	77	1
3	Tongues of Men	77	51	1
3	Mice and Men	78	77	1
4	The Golden Chance	81	68	1
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
5	The Spider	85	63	1
7	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	62	3
7	Tennessee's Pardner	64	58
5	Madame Le Presidente	19	49
6	Nearly a King	54	52	1
10	Trail of Lonesome Pine	71	88	2
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	2
[illegible]	Diplomacy	59	50	1
10	Poor Little Peppina	89	80	5
11	To Have and To Hold	74	70	[illegible]
9	Ben Blair	71	64
[illegible]	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	61	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	2
[illegible]	Saleslady	75	66	1
10	Audrey	75	75	3
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	51	1
7	The Race	70	63
6	Eternal Grind	68	81	3
5	The Love Mask	61	54	[illegible]
6	Molly Make-Believe	93	87	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
9	Heart of Nora Flynn	68	55	4
6	Moment Before	50	63	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	46
13	Maria Rosa	82	80	4
10	Alien Souls	68	64	1
10	The Fued Girl	59	51
14	Pasquale	78	50	3

WID'S

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
12 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	70	57	2
17 Saints and Sinners	52	47
15 Thousand Dollar Husband	68	59	4
19 Gutter Magdalene	60	61	1
Evil Thereof	41	39
13 Making of Maddalene	62	54	3
20 Silks and Satins	86	88	14
33 Destiny's Toy	59	50
18 The Clown	78	54	3
18 Susie Snowflake	66	57	2
14 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
18 American Beauty	62	62	3
21 The Dupe	65	63	1
20 The Smugglers	53	49	1
24 Selfish Woman	72	69	4
25 Davy Crockett	67	62
18 Dream Girl	69	64	3
26 Under Cover	80	71	5
26 International Marriage	55	50	1
26 Common Ground	64	63
32 Hulda From Holland	95	96	21
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
21 Little Lady Eileen	87	90	8
20 Stronger Love	50	50
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
19 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
18 Honorable Friend	70	62	1
17 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
16 Each Pearl a Tear	76	72	2
17 Parson of Panamint	81	70	5
10 Big Sister	47	58
5 Reward of Patience	62	54
9 House of Lies	76	64	1
9 Daughter of MacGregor	51	43
12 Ashes of Embers	88	87	4
11 Quest of Life	55	55
9 Anton, the Terrible	43	48
10 The Lash	55	52
6 The Storm	73	55	1
7 The Intrigue	85	87
8 Her Father's Son	69	56
6 Witchcraft	38	43
5 The Kiss	71	67
5 Rainbow Princess	83	64
4 Seventeen	92	70
3 Miss George Washington	100	100	3
4 Heir to the Hoorah	81	69	1
5 Soul of Kura San	89	71
5 Son of Erin	85	66
4 Unprotected	54	50
1 Nanette of the Wilds	20	10
4 Years of the Locust	45	45
4 Plow Girl	78	53
1 Yellow Pawn	40	60

TRIANGLE

1207 Triangle	72.9	66.3	236
5 Iron Strain	81	52	2
7 The Lamb	87	74	3
7 Old Heidelberg	71	61	1
8 The Coward	84	63	1
6 Martyrs of the Alamo	68	58	2
11 The Disciple	84	75	2
6 Matrimony	80	78	1
4 Sable Lorcha	65	54
4 Golden Claw	65	75
6 Double Trouble	65	62	2
5 Aloha Oe	56	65
4 Lily and the Rose	64	56
8 Jordan is a Hard Road	55	53
8 Winged Idol	53	54
3 Penitents	28	32
9 Edge of the Abyss	68	62
2 Submarine Pirats	85	78	1
4 Cross Currents	47	45
8 Between Men	72	70	1
12 Let Katy Do It	85	64	6
4 The Corner	56	44
4 Missing Link	55	43	1
8 Beckoning Flame	67	47
3 Wood Nymph	54	51	1
7 The Conqueror	71	71
8 Price of Power	55	52
9 Green Swamp	80	78	1
10 Acquitted	68	50
5 D'Artagnan	59	54
15 His Picture in the Papers	89	78	4
10 Honor's Altar	78	72	2
10 Betty of Greystone	78	68	2

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
21 Peggy	95	91	14
6 Don Quixote	57	62
7 Last Act	80	78	1
10 Daphe and the Pirate	72	58	1
15 Heil's Hinges	92	88	9
15 Flying Torpedo	88	82	8
11 Bullets and Brown Eyes	86	76	3
11 Martha's Vindication	86	79	2
12 Moral Fabric	76	60	1
12 Hoodoo Ann	69	66	1
12 The Raiders	82	72
9 Habit of Happiness	96	86	4
7 The Waifs	70	58	1
6 Little Meena's Romance	63	59	1
13 The Aryan	85	84	6
6 Sold for Marriage	72	73	1
11 Stepping Stones	86	77	2
8 Sunshine Dad	31	41
7 Civilization's Child	66	61	1
11 Children in the House	79	64	2
8 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
14 The Good Bad-Man	91	80	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
12 Susan Rocks the Boat	75	66
15 Not My Sister	82	78	3
14 Child of Paris Streets	61	61
16 Primal Lure	81	75	4
7 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	55	54
16 Market of Vain Desire	83	69	4
15 Going Straight	80	77	3
18 Bugle Call	95	78	4
17 Reggie Mixes In	91	81	7
12 Sorrows of Love	67	71	1
15 Innocent Magdalene	66	68	1
12 The Dividend	67	65
16 Wild Girl of Sierras	39	48
15 Apostle of Vengeance	82	86	2
14 Casey at the Bat	41	49
20 The Phantom	87	77	7
22 Flirting With Fate	87	83	7
25 The Deserter	83	67	8
19 Little School Ma'am	73	64	2
21 Eye of the Night	73	55	4
14 Stranded	57	54
22 Captive God	68	69	2
18 Half Breed	70	74	2
17 The Payment	82	72	3
15 Marriage of Molly O	46	44
15 Honor Thy Name	89	69	4
16 Devil's Needle	61	62	1
16 Shell 43!	91	62	2
19 Hell-to-Pay Austin	82	70	6
16 Lieutenant Danny, U. S. A.	61	60
13 Pillars of Society	56	51	1
14 Home	90	79	7
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
15 The Patriot	76	79	5
16 Social Secretary	89	72	5
11 The Thoroughbred	77	66
9 Little Liar	66	55
15 Wolf Woman	90	91	5
12 Dawnmaker	56	80	2
11 Diane of the Follies	70	72	1
15 Manhattan Madness	95	92	9
12 Plain Jane	89	81	3
9 Old Folks at Home	82	68
11 The Jungle Child	58	58	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
12 Return of Draw Egan	91	86	5
10 Vagabond Prince	72	66	2
9 Somewhere in France	79	66
6 Corner in Colleens	97	94	4
3 Sister of Six	82	58	1
8 Fifty-Fifty	94	86	3
3 War's Women	62	57
5 Atta Boy's Last Race	56	61
5 American Aristocracy	99	100	8
2 Microscope Mystery	40	27
4 Honorable Algy	94	75	1
5 Jim Grimsby's Boy	66	50	2
1 Children Pay	80	65

WORLD

321 World	69.7	62.2	26
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
1 Master of House	60	65
1 The Dragon	60	30

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
2 Marrying Money	80	62
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
3 Trilby	83	58	1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	50	57	1
3 Heart of Blue Ridge	85	72	1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
1 The Ransom	55	45
3 The Labyrinth	57	58
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
1 Camille	86	75	1
1 The Rack	100	60
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85	2
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
2 Then I'll Come Back to You	85	77	1
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
1 Social Highwaymen	75	75
3 Closed Road	87	81	1
5 Feast of Life	55	73
5 Her Maternal Right	56	72
4 Sudden Riches	79	70
1 Twin Triangles	80	30
5 Tangled Fates	53	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74	2
9 Perils of Divorce	60	61
12 La vie de Boheme	48	50
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
6 Weakness of Man	61	69
9 Sally in Our Alley	61	62
13 Paying the Price	69	70	1
11 Miss Petticoats	58	59
14 Woman's Way	75	74	4
12 Summer Girl	53	55
11 Rail Rider	66	71
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
9 Dark Silence	77	78	2
3 The Revolt	62	58
6 Gilded Cage	73	66
5 The Hidden Scar	77	64
4 Scarlet Oath	70	56
6 Man Who Stood Still	70	61
6 Heart of a Hero	55	43
6 Bought and Paid For	91	92	4
4 Madness of Helen	53	36
1 The Rise of Susan	100	100	1
1 The Deep Purple	70	60
2 Without a Soul	80	90
1 Men She Married	80	50

METRO

338 Metro	73.4	69.1	19
1 Her Reckoning	60	40

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
2 Shooting of Dan McGrew	80	85
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	85
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
9 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
9 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
4 Yellow Streak	84	60
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
5 Man and His Soul	84	84	1
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
4 Price of Malice	62	59
4 Soul Market	83	73	1
1 Blindness of Love	70	80
2 Lovely Mary	57	80
1 My Madonna	80	85
4 Her Great Price	78	66
7 Wall Between	75	81
4 Kiss of Hate	55	70
5 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
6 Playing With Fire	80	78
9 The Come-Back	76	71	1
5 Snow Bird	81	76
4 Million a Minute	74	89
1 Spell of the Yukon	70	90
3 His Great Triumph	63	52
7 Scarlet Woman	78	77	1
6 Dorian's Divorce	77	58
6 Masked Rider	63	61
6 Flower of No Man's Land	53	74
7 Purple Lady	83	61
8 Eternal Question	73	83
10 The Quitter	76	73
12 River of Romance	88	76	5
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
11 God's Half Acre	74	60	1
11 Weakness of Strength	68	52
9 The Pretenders	83	74	1
6 The Upheaval	56	63
8 Light of Happiness	72	73	1
3 Mister 44	95	94	3
7 Wheel of the Law	77	65
8 Dawn of Love	67	59
5 Iron Woman	47	60
3 Life's Shadows	68	62
8 In the Diplomatic Service	69	86	2
4 Brand of Cowardice	65	49
4 Gates of Eden	81	55
6 Extravagance	80	81
2 The Wager	88	73
1 My Madonna	80	85
1 The Wager	90	70
2 The Sunbeam	73	50
2 Big Tremaine	75	85
2 Black Butterfly	85	65
1 Stolen Triumph	70	45
1 Awakening of Helen Ritchie	65	75
1 Pidgin Island	90	85

FOX

472 Fox	71.1	68.9	64
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
5 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
7 Two Orphans	84	86	2
1 Song of Hate	90	90
6 Regeneration	74	67	5
4 Wonderful Adventure	75	75
4 Sin	63	80
1 Little Gypsy	80	75
4 Soul of Broadway	81	78	1
1 Family Stain	90	60
1 Carmen	100	100	1
2 Blindness of Devotion	57	55
2 Woman's Past	77	45
8 Broken Law	84	64	1
7 Galley Slave	76	74	1
2 Unfaithful Wife	75	70
2 Mother's Secret	75	65
2 Soldier's Oath	82	62
4 Destruction	85	95
2 Green-Eyed Monster	45	85
1 Parisian Romance	80	80
1 Fourth Estate	85	85
5 The Serpent	92	93
4 Ruling Passion	55	60
4 Merely Marry Ann	55	46
6 Fool's Revenge	44	49
7 Fighting Blood	71	65
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
9 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
8 The Bondman	79	61	1
4 Wife's Sacrifice	56	60
7 Blue Blood and Red	81	64
4 Slander	80	73
7 Modern Thelma	57	48	1
8 Man of Sorrow	63	62	1
6 Blazing Love	67	65
9 Eternal Sapho	85	87	3
9 Sins of Men	76	61	1
1 Sins of the Parents	80	50
11 Battle of Hearts	60	60
8 Spider and the Fly	70	71	1
10 Hypocrisy	76	68
8 Woman's Honor	71	74
16 East Lynne	89	86	9
14 Ambition	71	67
14 Man From Bitter Roots	83	82	2
14 Caprice of the Mountains	68	65	1
14 Tortured Heart	71	68
17 The Beast	83	69	5
19 Under Two Flags	94	92	13
12 End of the Trail	74	75
13 Sporting Blood	65	62	1
13 Litle Miss Happiness	77	69	3
17 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
11 Her Double Life	84	89	2
7 Where Love Leads	63	57
8 Fires of Conscience	56	63
6 Straight Way	63	71
5 Ragged Princess	71	61
7 War Bride's Secret	66	41	1
5 Romeo and Juliet	82	84	2
1 Love and Hate	60	60
1 Mischief Maker	100	100	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
2 The Mediator	70	60

MUTUAL

95 Mutual	72.1	69.4	11
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	75
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
9 Miracle of Life	83	80	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	85
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	86	82
1 The Decoy	50	85
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	58
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	60
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
4 Soul Mates	61	52
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
2 Highest Bid	58	67	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
4 Doorsteps	63	64	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
2 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	60	1
2 Strength, Ronald Mackenzie	75	72
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
1 Manager of the B & A	30	50
1 Pearl of Paradise	50	75
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
13 The Count	87	77	8
8 The Pawnshop	69	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
2 The Rink	98	98	1

PATHE

98 Pathe	66.3	69.3	9
1 The Spender	80	80
2 At Bay	82	86
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
1 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	90
1 Beloved Vagabond	85	80
1 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
2 King's Game	62	62
5 Madame X	75	93	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	63

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
5 Little Mary Sunshine	90	77
5 Shine Girl	[illegible]	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
1 The Test	60	55
1 Saint, Devil and Woman	32	50
1 Light That Failed	70	65
3 Shadows and Sunshine	98	80	1

BLUEBIRD

145 Bluebird	60.3	63.0	15
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
1 Secret Love	20	20
1 Hops	20	15
6 Undine	78	89	[illegible]
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
1 Rupert of Hentzau	58	80
1 Strength of the Weak	80	[illegible]
2 The Flirt	42	77
1 Great Problem	80	62
2 Gaylord Waring	62	72
3 Crippled Hand	59	75	1
2 Gilded Spider	45	65
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
3 Son of the Immortals	63	71
3 Eye of God	57	82	1
2 Bobby of the Ballet	65	80
2 Evil Women Do	45	45
7 Three Godfathers	66	74	1
12 Shoes	73	76	3
7 Broken Fetters	49	57	1
6 Love Girl	67	69	1
5 Grasp of Greed	71	75	1
6 Silent Battle	73	84
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
6 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	74
6 Little Eve Edgarton	59	63	1
6 Girl of Lost Lake	58	54
5 Unattainable	46	42
9 Saving the Family Name	79	53	1
5 Behind the Lines	52	56
6 Wanted—A Home	75	68
2 Chalice of Sorrow	68	55
2 Social Buccaneers	65	47
1 Stranger from Somewhere	45	20
2 Gloriana	75	75
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
1 Honor of Mary Blake	60	50

UNIVERSAL

1 Jewel	75	70
1 Scandal	80	72
1 Langdon's Legacy	80	60
1 Love's Pilgrimage	60	[illegible]
1 College Orphan	70	60
1 Colorado	90	100

RED FEATHER

58 Red Feather	65.9	59.4	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	[illegible]
1 Beckoning Trail	85	60
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
2 Huntress of Men	35	20
2 Youth of Fortune	60	50	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
[illegible] Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
1 The Mainspring	65	65
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
1 Mixed Blood	65	65

GREATER VITAGRAPH

235 Greater Vitagraph	66.7	66.1	43
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
[illegible] The Juggernaut	70	70	2
5 The Island of Regeneration	80	78	3
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	[illegible]	2
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
1 Rights of Men	50	80
2 Turn of the Road	77	77
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
3 Great Divide	90	70	2
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
4 Green Stockings	89	90	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	[illegible]
2 Island of Surprise	95	97
4 Gods of Fate	63	58
7 A Night Out	79	73	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
1 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
3 Hero of Submarine D-2	75	70
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
4 Salvation Joan	81	57
6 God's Country and Woman	86	84	[illegible]
1 Love's Toll	60	80
5 Law Decides	77	59	2
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76	2
2 Lights of New York	70	80
6 The Destroyers	65	52	1
1 Redemption of Dave Darcey	100	100
3 Man Behind the Curtain	87	75
8 Shop Girl	78	79	1
3 The Conflict	67	47
[illegible] Fathers of Men	65	[illegible]
7 The Tarantula	81	71	2
11 Daring of Diana	65	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
9 Light at Dusk	83	71	3
6 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
2 Footlights of Fate	60	87
9 The Combat	83	86	1
3 The Kid	59	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
1 His Wife's Good Name	30	90
5 Through the Wall	85	69	1
11 The Chatter	66	80	1
5 Prince in a Pawnshop	55	58	1
2 Blue Envelope Mystery	52	52
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
5 The Last Man	86	68
1 Devil's Prize	40	50
2 Price of Fame	40	50
1 Dollar and the Law	70	70

KEYS

75 K. E. S. E. Service	67.9	61.4	18
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	[illegible]	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
4 Graustark	88	90	3
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
1 The Rosary	80	20	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
1 The Alster Case	90	80
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
1 Little Shepherd of Bargain Row	90	70
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
2 Into the Primitive	40	50
2 That Sort	75	37	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
5 Return of Eve	85	84	2
4 Country God Forgot	74	67
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
1 Cossack Whip	90	13

SPECIAL FEATURES

1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
3 The Christian	77	70	1
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
2 Fall of a Nation	65	90
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
8 The Common Law	90	96	4
4 Less Than the Dust	54	79	2
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
2 Civilization	40	60
2 Cabiria	45	45
1 Marvelous Maciste	70	50
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
4 The End of the World	20	56
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
3 Iron Hand	60	30
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
5 Whirl of Life	72	88	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
2 The Alien	95	72
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
3 Little Girl Next Door	87	97	2
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
1 Diana	75	100	1
5 Where Are My Children?	88	92	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
9 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	82	57	1
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	3

SERIALS

12 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40

(Continued on last page.)

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same percentage, we have placed the one with the higher percentage of repeats first.

Reports	Features	Company	% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeats
5	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith Special	100	100	4
5	American Aristocracy	Triangle	99	100	3
5	The Floorwalker	Chaplin-Mutual	97	100	2
32	Hulda From Holland	Paramount	95	95	21
8	Mister 44	Metro	95	94	3
8	The Ne'er-do-Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
6	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	97	91	4
15	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	95	92	9
5	Behind the Scenes	Chaplin-Mutual	94	93	3
8	The Iron Claw	Serial	94	93
19	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	92	13
21	Peggy	Triangle	95	91	14
8	The Common Law	Selznick	90	96	4
5	The Eternal City	Fam. P. Spec.	90	95	3
7	Rags	Triangle	90	95	4
5	The Serpent	Fox	92	93
6	Bought and Paid For	World	91	92	4
9	Habit of Happiness	Triangle	96	86	4
15	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	90	91	5
6	Molly Make-Believe	Paramount	93	87	5
15	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	92	88	9
5	Where Are My Children?	Univ. Special	88	92	2
8	Fifty-Fifty	Triangle	94	86	3
12	Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	91	86	5
21	Little Lady Eileen	Paramount	87	90	8
7	Prince and the Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
8	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	89	88	2
16	East Lynne	Fox	89	86	9
12	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	88	87	1
12	Battle Cry of Peace	Vita. Special	95	80	4
20	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	14
5	Bella Donna	Paramount	96	78	3
14	The Cheat	Paramount	94	80	8
18	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	78	4
11	Her Double Life	Fox	84	89	2
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
17	Reggie Mixes In	Triangle	91	81	7
9	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	85	87	3
9	The Old Homestead	Paramount	88	83	6
14	The Good Bad-Man	Triangle	91	80	4
9	Carmen	Paramount	80	91	2
15	The Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	82	8
6	God's Country and Woman	Vitagraph	86	84	2
22	Flirting With Fate	Triangle	87	83	7
7	Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	2
12	Plain Jane	Triangle	89	81	3
14	Home	Triangle	90	79	7
10	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	89	80	5
13	The Aryan	Triangle	85	84	6
5	Return of Eve	K-E-S-E Serv.	85	84	2
5	Madame X	Pathe	75	93	3
5	A Man and His Soul	Metro	84	84	1
15	Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	82	86	3
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	1
8	The Combat	Vitagraph	82	86	1
6	Undine	Bluebird	78	89	2
15	His Picture in the Papers	Triangle	89	78	4
5	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	77
5	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	82	84	2
11	Still Water	Paramount	85	80	6
11	Martha's Vindication	Triangle	86	79	2
14	Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	83	82	2
7	Scarlet Woman	Metro	78	87	1
13	The Count	Chaplin-Mutual	87	77	8
7	Wild Flower	Paramount	88	76	4
20	The Phantom	Triangle	87	77	7
12	River of Romance	Metro	88	76	5
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	Paramount	88	76	2
5	What Will People Say?	Metro	80	84
6	Excuse Me!	Pathe	90	73	2
11	Stepping Stones	Triangle	86	77	2
7	Helene of the North	Paramount	85	78	1
5	Alice in Wonderland	S. R. Special	76	86	1
13	Maria Rosa	Paramount	82	80	4
11	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	86	76	3
5	Kindling	Paramount	80	82
7	The Lamb	Triangle	87	74	3
16	The Social Secretary	Triangle	89	72	5
7	Gentleman From Indiana	Paramount	85	76
6	Extravagance	Metro	80	81
5	Chimmie Fadden	Paramount	90	71
5	Whirl of Life	S. R. Special	72	88	3
5	Man From Mexico	Paramount	90	70	2
15	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	78	3
5	The Soul of Kura San	Paramount	89	71

MUCH FOOTAGE OF STAR BEING FOOLISH MISSES FIRE BADLY

Lillian Walker in

INDISCRETION

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR.....Wilfrid North
AUTHOR.....William A. Lathrop
CAMERAMAN.....Thomas A. Molloy
AS A WHOLE.....Lacked purpose and wandered badly
STORY.....Much foolishness led to one incident; an ancient idea
DIRECTION.....Gave us too much inconsequential matter
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent, although lacking artistic distinction
LIGHTINGS.....A few fine; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Not enough vignetting; generally acceptable
STAR.....Worked too hard being vivacious had unfortunate character
SUPPORT.....A few good types, but others lacked distinction
EXTERIORS.....A few very fine; generally rather ordinary
INTERIORS.....Some good; some only fair
DETAIL.....Very little
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes

WHOEVER picked this out as a five-reel script was guilty of more than "Indiscretion." There was not enough material here for a good one-reel, and surely the idea has been done as an incident hundreds of times.

It may be that they figure that the first few scenes, in which Miss Walker disports herself in a bathing suit, very much a la Annette Kellermann, and the title, will be enough to pull business. I can't imagine any intelligent audience feeling that this offering amounts to anything.

We get four reels showing this young lady doing various foolish little things, such as smoking cigarettes in a boarding school, taking rides, unchaperoned, etc., etc., until finally, in the fifth reel, she is lured to a roadhouse by a married man, is caught there and becomes co-respondent in a divorce suit. Going to the wife, she told her story and the wife obligingly told her that it would be all right so long as she didn't do it again. I've seen some pretty bad junk in the way of stories, but I certainly figure that this was a very "weak sister."

Most of the footage is occupied by scenes of Miss Walker in a bathing suit, driving a car, riding horseback, fishing, wading in a stream, etc., etc. She was not photographed to the same advantage that she has been in a number of her recent productions, and consequently there were many places when she didn't look as pretty as she has in the past.

No matter how partial audiences are to any particular star, it is quite probable that they'll become tired of seeing them in the course of five reels in which nothing of especial interest happens.

Walter McGrail, as Miss Walker's sweetheart, was lacking in the necessary qualities of authority and poise to make him register as a sure-enough hero.

Thomas R. Mills, as the luring husband, was a sneaky little villain. The other members of the cast failed to make any impression.

The Box Office Angle

If you can afford to shoot a weak one by once in a while, get the money on this and offer alibis afterward. You can probably do some business with this by billing the name and using some of the photographs showing Miss Walker in a bathing suit. Personally, I don't think this is good business, if you have a community house. But there are so many different kinds of communities that far be it from me to undertake to say what you can or cannot do in your own particular town.

As an honest-to-goodness feature, this one fails to arrive at any time and would probably prove disappointing. Remember, that if you bill this strong, with the use of the name and photographs of Miss Walker in bathing costume, you are going to lead them to expect something that doesn't materialize. They have the scenes in bathing and she is finally in a roadhouse with the villain, but those things won't register as exciting with your regulars any more.

PAINFULLY OBVIOUS LIGHTWEIGHT OFFERING MISSES FIRE

Fannie Ward in

BETTY TO THE RESCUE

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Frank Reicher
AUTHORS	Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun
CAMERAMAN	Dent Gilbert
AS A WHOLE	Obvious, unconvincing plot, poorly handled
STORY	Painfully poor
DIRECTION	Failed to lift story out of rut
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; nothing unusual
LIGHTINGS	Acceptable; some only fair
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary; groupings poor; not enough close-ups
STAR	Couldn't save it
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Orange groves and mine stuff; not artistic
INTERIORS	Acceptable; bad back drop in cabin
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

SURELY a few more productions like this are going to seriously injure Miss Ward's box office possibilities.

This is a light, inconsequential, unconvincing romance, which is perfectly obvious from the first, with touches of melodrama which fail to become dramatic. The story is one of those "hero provided for heroine without her knowledge" things, with the worthless gold mine from which she thought her money was coming finally developing into a fortune-giving Godsend.

The audience knew from the first that the gold mine was all right and consequently it was only a question of wading through a lot of footage until the characters found it out. Certainly this is not feature material for a producing company of the first class.

Mixed in with this plot were a few scenes which gave us an insight into the industry of orange growing, and this may be interesting, from an educational viewpoint, but surely they are not worthy of the footage given to them. The fact that they owned the oranges, and the fact that frost killed them was the reason for their being in the "drama" (?).

At the start we had Miss Ward introduced as a tousle-headed girl in overalls, her title being, "Betty of the Orange Country." There was a bit of business having to do with an irrigation ditch, which was certainly inane. I want to register here an emphatic kick against the fact that Miss Ward's lips in this introduction were so heavily made up as to be very noticeable. Through the remainder of the film her make-up was all right, and it is unfortunate that this unfavorable impression should be made where she was introduced. Jack Dean was presented wearing a beard, as Miss Ward's guardian, a sort of W. J. Locke character. Mr. Dean was acceptable, but his personality will not arouse any real enthusiasm.

The other characters were quite ordinary, there being a scheming engineer who, after he had found it was impossible to purchase the mine, tried to marry the heroine, and the usual assortment of miners, etc.

After the footage had gotten down toward the end we found Miss Ward having a dream, which told her that her mine was worth much money, and the next day she landed at the mining town in a comic opera outfit, carrying a big gun. I can't understand why it was considered necessary for her to be equipped with a gun.

By way of added suspense (?) we found the hero on a train which was held up by a bridge being burned, which they explained by a title, and some miners "salted" Miss Ward's mine so that she could find gold and then be disappointed and think her mine worthless. They even sent her to a gambling house for one last chance before the "willun" proposed and was accepted, the miners, of course, discovering among the nuggets which they had planted in the mine one lost by Miss Ward at the gambling-table, which they had never seen before. This brought to light what the audience and the "willunous" engineer had known all the time—the fact that the mine had real gold in it.

The miners then went in to take a look at it, and after one glance at the side of the wall, said: "It's worth a million." SOME quick estimators, those boys.

There was a general lack of distinction about this offering, there being very little that could be called artistic, and we found in the cabin interior, which was used quite frequently, a very bad back drop, painfully noticeable through the door upon frequent occasions. There was a lack of close-ups, which might have given the story intimate touches to help it over, and there was really nothing to redeem the entire offering.

In one place they dragged in a basket of kittens and, while I am generally decidedly in favor of animal and kid stuff, I must admit that this was surely dragged in.

Of course, the plot finished with the bearded bachelor doing a clutch with the maid of the mine. She had to ask him, but they got to it just the same.

In the supporting cast were Lillian Leighton, James Neill, Charles H. West and Theodore Duncan.

The Box Office Angle

Although this is painfully light, terribly obvious and surely lacking in the essentials of dramatic development, it is quite possible that the average audience will pass it over without subjecting it to severe criticism. Certainly it isn't what could be called a good production, and I can guarantee you that if you play it your patrons will not be enthusiastic over it, and rather a good percentage of them will kick.

Miss Ward's personality is not given a fair chance in this, and there is nothing in the story or the production to lift it. I'd advise you to dodge it if you can. If Miss Ward has proven a drawing-card in your community, a few more like this one will kill her forever, and since it is quite possible that she will be given some worth-while vehicles soon, it is just as well to keep her as strong as possible for the future.

MUCH POOR COMEDY CHEAPENS DRAMA WITH GOOD MOMENTS

Virginia Pearson in

BITTER TRUTH

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Kenean Buel
AUTHOR	Mary Murillo
CAMERAMAN	Frank Kugler
AS A WHOLE	Has fine dramatic moments, but awful comedy cheapens it
STORY	Combination of "reformed crook" stuff and "Governor's Lady" theme
DIRECTION	Registered some good drama, but comedy injured it seriously
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some good; much of it muddy; close-ups excellent
LIGHTINGS	A few very effective; others poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Wonderfully beautiful; gave excellent distinction in two characterizations
SUPPORT	Some excellent types; some bits overdone
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; boat stuff interesting
INTERIORS	Lacked class, but acceptable
DETAIL	A few bad spots; generally good
TIME	Seventy-two minutes

SOME one ought to take Mr. Fox out into the quiet country and carefully explain that his attempts to inject comedy into dramatic productions often seriously injure the dramatic development of his stories.

We had here a story which incorporated the idea of the play, "The Governor's Lady," and presented other characters in a parallel theme, dealing with "the reformed crook and his sweetheart," the sweetheart in this case seeking revenge against the judge who had sent her and her lover up, she becoming a vamaire who figured in "The Governor's Lady" idea almost separating the successful man from his home-loving little wife.

This is presented in six parts. We get at least one thousand feet of very cheap, poorly done, overdrawn comedy, which is dragged in at the most undesirable times, with the result that it so cheapens the production that the dramatic story loses most of its significance. If this comedy were eliminated, except for possibly a few flashes, the offering would register as a very good drama, with some human touches that would certainly appeal.

Without doubt, Miss Pearson's personality will do much to carry this offering. She is surely beautiful and has been given scores of close-ups which register her beauty in a most effective manner. In the first part of the story she appeared as a young girl, and the suggestion of girlishness was truly startling, since we have known her generally as a red-blooded society woman of big dramataic situations. In the last half of the offering she became a vampire, seeking revenge against the judge who had sentenced her to prison, and in the scenes where she developed a successful campaign against her victim we found her a truly tempting vampire. In one or two places it seemed that she was a bit too vampirish, but, considering the fact that she was playing a part rather than presenting her natural self, as shown by the character, this was entirely within reason.

William H. Tooker, as the judge, later become governor, gave a forceful characterization in a difficult part, and his work would have been more effective were it not for the fact that the cheap comedy scenes are sure to get any audience into a frame of mind which will make it impossible for them to appreciate the dramatic situations as played.

Alice May was a splendid type for the governor's wife.

Jack Hopkins held the sympathy nicely as the reformed crook.

The scenes on board the Albany boat were rather interesting, and the bit where Miss Pearson was seen to leap into the water was particularly well handled.

There were some splendid types introduced as characters of the slums, and many little touches of the East Side saloon will register as decidedly human.

The story carried along to the point where the vampire was about to succeed in trapping her victim, the judge, into a scandal which would have ruined his chances for nomination as governor, when she came to a realization of the wrong she was doing, and confessed to the plot, in which she had a part. That, of course, brought the happy finish, with the judge recognizing the worth of his wife's love, and the vampire turning again to her reformed crook to become the wife she had planned to be in the years before.

The photography was quite varied in this, with some of the scenes clear-cut and others decidedly muddy. There were plenty of close-ups properly placed, however, and all of these were perfect photography.

There is one point which many will undoubtedly complain about, that being that the judge would certainly have recognized in the vampire who made such an impression on him, the girl he had caught in his own home in such a dramatic manner, and had afterward sentenced to prison.

The Box Office Angle

Without the comedy, I would say that this would please almost anywhere as a dramatic offering. With the cheap comedy that is now present it is a decided question in my mind as to whether an intelligent audience will enjoy this, because I fear that the comedy will ruin the dramatic situations for them. The cheaper class of patronage will undoubtedly think this excellent, because the comedy may appeal to them as much as the drama.

Certainly, Miss Pearson is worthy of centering all of your attention on, if you are going to play this, and her beauty may be sufficient to carry the offering over. If you are playing Fox films before an intelligent community audience, I'd register a decided protest with my exchange against so much cheap comedy being injected into the offering.

In advertising this you might call particular attention to the fact that Miss Pearson appears as a beautiful young girl of about eighteen in the early part of the story and afterwards as a vampire with villainous intentions, giving both characterizations a distinctive touch, which makes her work truly remarkable.

BIG SET SHOWING CONGRESS HELPS FAIR PLOT STAR IMPRESSIVE

Robert Warwick in

THE MAN WHO FORGOT

Brady-World

DIRECTOR ..... Emile Chautard
AUTHOR ..... James Hay, Jr.
CAMERAMAN ..... Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly interesting, but never gripping
STORY ..... Combination of "lost memory," with reformer and boss political melo
DIRECTION ..... Had some very good moments, but failed to make action truly convincing
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Varied; at times lacked definition
LIGHTINGS ..... Often gave pleasing effect, but faces lacked definition; sometimes very contrasty
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STAR ..... Forceful and dignified as white-haired reformer-hero
SUPPORT ..... Very good, except newspaper owner
EXTERIORS ..... Some fine Washington bits; generally quite acceptable
INTERIORS ..... A few very fine, particularly Congress scene; generally acceptable
DETAIL ..... Very good; although convenient at times
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes

DESPITE the presence of many "Hurrah!" titles dealing with preachment against the liquor interests and the fact that this is a story recording the success of a reformer in battle against the wicked corruptors of politics, I fear me that this will not truly impress the average audience to the extent of gripping them as tense human drama. It will be interesting to most every one and will be generally accepted as a good bit of entertainment, with some unusual action and impressive settings.

Most audiences will be particularly impressed by the big set, which is a reproduction of Congress in session. This set was used for the World production, released some months ago, entitled, "The Velvet Paw," as were several other sets supposed to be in the Capitol building. A man sitting behind me was very emphatic in explaining to his friend that these film companies get permission to do things like that—"They can take pictures anywhere nowadays." There's the best evidence in the world that this was a good set. It looked real.

The story of this gets away to a bad start, because it is based on that old, threadbare thought of lost memory. The plot hinges about the fact that the hero could not remember his past and, although he knew that he wanted to fight liquor, and he had been able to amass a fortune with which he did the fighting, he could not conscientiously deny the accusations concerning his past, because he really didn't remember what had happened in the earlier years of his life.

Of course, there was the usual "willun" and the woman who swore falsely, with the heroine always having faith in her hero, and the grand finale where the political crooks were bested and the hero and heroine did a clutch.

There were scenes of a demonstration for prohibition upon the steps of the Capitol and, according to the story, the country has been voted "dry." Undoubtedly this will come some time in the present generation, and it may be that the film will be particularly interesting to many because of the preachment contained therein. As a matter of fact, considered as drama, there are too many titles, with many of them being entirely unnecessary. In spots the offering becomes written preachment, rather than pictures.

Doris Kenyon, as the heroine, was quite pleasing, and there were a number of excellent types in the supporting cast.

J. Reinhart, as the newspaper owner, was surely miscast, and his characterization of this publisher spoiled a good many scenes.

Others in the cast were Gerda Holmes, Alex K. Shannon, Ralph Delmore and Fred Truesdell.

The Box Office Angle

You can safely say that this is an interesting story of a tremendous political battle in Washington, showing the prohibition interests lined up against the liquor syndicate. You can talk about handsome Robert Warwick and the wonderful views of Congress in session.

It will not be necessary for you to promise that this is a tense human drama. Keep the soft pedal on that and make the most of your noise about how interesting and unusual this offering is. Emphasize the prohibition angle in accordance with the trend of your particular community.

I'd make a particular play upon the scene of Congress in session, because this is a perfect reproduction, and in order to stir up some interest in this you might ask in your advertising how many of your fans have ever seen Congress in session, and whether they thought it was possible to photograph inside such a large building. Make it a question as to whether this big scene is a studio scene or the real thing, and ask your patrons to decide. Tell them that you don't know, and see if they do. That should start a good argument and bring some additional business.

Joseph M. Attie

AT LIBERTY

A native of Algiers, educated in France, I have traveled extensively in North Africa and could supervise any costume production relating to that picturesque land.

SEVEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

Producing and Playing in France

Address Care WID'S, TIMES BLDG., N. Y. C.

VERY SLOW DEVELOPMENT MARRED CHARACTERIZATION PLOT AT TIMES

Frank Keenan in

THE CRAB

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Walter Edwards
AUTHOR.....C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN.....Robert Newhard
AS A WHOLE.....Small-town human stuff hit and missed in spots
STORY.....Slow development of characterizations
DIRECTION.....Registered some points beautifully, but others missed fire
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good, but few effects
LIGHTINGS.....A few good bits; generally to uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Just good
STAR.....Unusual characterization; generally excellent; missed at times
SUPPORT.....Kid splendid; a few fine types
EXTERIORS.....Excellent small-town atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Fitted story
DETAIL.....Very good
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes

YOU will probably find this rather a tricky offering, because it is one of those slow characterization things that has very little story and moves quite deliberately from situation to situation. It has a number of splendid touches and at times it is remarkably human in the points developed, but, nevertheless, many of your regulars may feel that it is entirely too slow, and because of this slowness of tempo they may lose interest and consequently fail to be impressed by the better points when registered.

In the first reel we were introduced to the characters of the village and to "The Crab," who is an old grouch, feared by all, played by Mr. Keenan. In the second reel his wife died, and we were given an insight into his love for the woman who passed out of his life. We then had Thelma Salter, the little blonde-haired kiddie, coming into the story in need of a home, with Mr. Keenan taking her practically on a dare. The balance of the footage was devoted to her gradual softening of this old crab's heart.

Personally, I believe that this sort of story is what the more intelligent fans like to see. In other words, I believe that they want characterization, with an underlying theme, more than they do action melodrama. Nevertheless, this sort of thing must be perfectly done to register. If it slips at half a doze npoints, the general effect is seriously marred.

In this offering the action does drag badly at times, and there are other moments where Mr. Keenan is permitted to overstep a bit in his expressions of emotion, with the result that his scenes miss fire. Because of the peculiar lines in his face, Mr. Keenan is undoubtedly one of the most difficult men appearing before the camera to handle. Properly timed, his scenes are tremendous. If they are allowed to hang a few seconds too long, or if he is permitted to twitch certain muscles once or twice too often, his scene is ruined. In this offering, Mr. Keenan had scores of scenes that were beautifully done, but there are a few places where his action did not register. These few bits will naturally detract from the general impression.

Little Thelma Salter, as the kiddie, had some exceptional bits, but in her case, also, the cutting permitted her scenes to remain just a trifle too long, with the result that they caused a let-down in the tempo, which marred the general effect. As a matter of fact, it was editing as much as anything else which was at fault in this offering. The film was quite short, however, as presented, and it was possibly the desire to keep it in feature length that caused these shortcomings.

In the supporting cast were Ernest Butterworth, Gertrude Claire, Thomas Guise and J. P. Lockney.

The Box Office Angle

Since Mr. Keenan has had a number of very successful offerings, and particularly because he is generally known to be at his best in parts typifying the grouch, I'd say that you should be able to bill this heavily and do considerable business with it.

This offering isn't, by any means, the best thing Mr. Keenan has done, but there are enough human bits to command the respect of almost any audience and, while many may feel that it misses fire, at certain times, you will hardly find that there will be any general tendency to severe criticism.

I would also play up the presence of Thelma Salter, because this little kiddie has done many good things in the last few years, and the promise of a human little story, with Mr. Keenan and Miss Salter as the central figures, surely sounds interesting.

If your fans know anything about the authors, you might announce that this was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, because C. Gardner has penned a few "peaches" in the past.

Be careful that you don't promise specifically that this is an exceptionally powerful or human offering, because, unless a film is truly tremendous, it is generally dangerous to say that it will be considered the "biggest of the year," or anything of that sort. It always better to stick to specific statements which you can stand back of.

CLASSY ATMOSPHERE AND STARS

Myrtle Stedman and House Peters in

THE HAPPINESS OF THREE WOMEN

Morosco-Paramount

DIRECTOR.....William D. Taylor
AUTHOR.....Albert Payson Terhune
SCENARIO BY.....Adele Harris
CAMERAMAN.....Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE.....Classy atmosphere, lightings and personalities made old situations entertaining
STORY.....“Hero unable to prove alibi because of woman” idea
DIRECTION.....Made offering distinctive and action interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Many very effective; some quite artistic CAMERA WORK.....More vignetting would have helped; generally good
STARS.....Personalities that pleased; he a bit conscious in playing nervous
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types
EXTERIORS.....Well chosen; some very well lighted
INTERIORS.....Generally classy
TIME.....Fifty-seven minutes

PRODUCER TAYLOR is deserving of considerable credit for this production because he has taken a situation which is pretty well remembered by most every one who has attended the films with any degree of regularity and he has clothed it with an atmosphere which has made it very good entertainment.

The stars helped materially, in that they both have pleasing personalities, and the supporting cast was made up of some excellent types. On a few occasions Mr. Peters seemed to overplay a bit in his anxiety to register the fact that he was nervous, but generally his work was very pleasing. Miss Stedman was beautiful and gave a nice characterization of the false wife who felt that it was perfectly all right to be friendly with an ex-sweetheart.

The plot was the old stuff of placing the hero in a compromising position where all was lovely, but looked bad, with a man accused of a bank robbery bumping into the hero and heroine at a time which would provide an alibi for the accused.

MAKE OLD ALIBI IDEA REGISTER

Because of the scandal which would result, the hero was unable to come forward and prove the alibi, but through a little mental-suggestion work he managed to secure a confession from the real criminal in time to save all concerned from unhappiness.

The watchman, who actually committed the robbery, was so much larger than the man he accused, which served as a means of trapping him into a confession, that his story seemed decidedly crude. The type chosen for this fitted, if we were to take it that he suddenly conceived the idea of robbing the bank. From his early manner we might have thought that he was a crook who had gained his position in order to rob the bank, and under those circumstances his story would have been unworthy of his experience. Fortunately, they failed to diagram the watchman's past, so that this point will be passed over.

There were a number of effective night scenes, with automobile headlights, etc., and, considered as a whole, the offering will be accepted as rather entertaining, chiefly because it has been nicely handled.

In the supporting cast were L. W. Steers, Daisy Robinson, William Hutchinson, Lucille Ward and Milton Brown.

The Box Office Angle

Although this idea for a plot will surely register as quite an “old friend” with your regulars, it is possible that a large percentage of your patrons will not recognize it so easily, and for that reason it may be considered a very safe offering. In any case, the atmosphere, the types and the personalities of the players and the manner in which the action has been handled justify your billing this as good entertainment, beautifully done.

Myrtle Stedman and House Peters should pull you some business, and the name listens well. I wouldn't tell them very much about the story, but would play up the stars and the title, leaving the details to the imagination of your patrons.

You might arouse some interest in this by lines like these. “Did you ever lie to your husband? See “The Happiness of Three Women.’” “Did you ever lie to your wife? See ‘The Happiness of Three Women.’” If you've found “teaser” campaigns successful, you might start by using these lines, without mentioning the name of the picture for a few days, and then tie it up with the name of the film and the name of your theatre.

“WILL MARRIAGE” IDEA AGAIN; ACTION FAILS TO REGISTER

Lillian Gish in

THE HOUSE BUILT UPON SAND

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Edward Morrissey
AUTHOR.....Mary H. O'Connor
AS A WHOLE.....Half-baked plot weakly registered
STORY.....Combination of old junk, poorly put together
DIRECTION.....Had a few good touches, but much very old impossible matter
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally soft and artistic; occasionally quite ordinary LIGHTINGS.....A few fine bits; much of it very ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Generally very good
STAR.....Fitted character
SUPPORT.....Ordinary
EXTERIORS.....A few splendid; most of them ordinary
INTERIORS.....A few cheap; others good
DETAIL.....Acceptable
TIME.....Fifty-seven minutes

THE good old will which provides that the children must marry to inherit an estate, looms up in this, with the addition of the wonderfully original and entirely new (?) situation of a wife misunderstanding her husband's attentions to a woman neighbor, whose husband also misunderstands.

To make this even more original and thrilling, they hand us, toward the end, the original situation of burning up an old, barn-like building, which had been used as a club, with the innocent husband of the neighbor's wife trapped in the burning building, where the woman conveniently fainted and the man stood around, like a lunkhead, until the smoke was rolling under the door in quite some clouds. He did the “rescue” thing down the burning stairs and then went back to rescue the drunkard husband of the woman neighbor and, of course, this caused the final blow-up between the suspicious wife and the hero. Since they had been living under the same roof without speaking, in an effort to stick it out for six months, when the estate could be collected, we had supposed that the estate had something to do with the plot. But, somehow, on the finish, they forgot all about the estate and allowed the couple to split up and afterward come together for a clutch, without any reference as to what happened to the money.

Miss Gish, as the flitter-flutter society bud who knew nothing about the serious angle of life, fitted rather well into the character, and she registered a few little scenes that were quite pleasing. But, considered as a whole, I believe this is quite hopeless as an offering expected to make a genuine appeal to the average American audience. It is a weakly tied-together combination of old stuff that never gets anywhere as to dramatic developments.

The best incident in the entire offering is a little comedy bit where Miss Gish takes her husband's pipes and cleans them all up with soap suds. It was the only touch in the entire offering that actually rang true.

There was one series of three titles, following the rather forced elopement when the husband carried his bride away to his country home after the civil ceremony and before the religious ceremony, which will undoubtedly get some ha-ha's in certain sections. These titles came where the husband had gone in to see the executor of the estate, and he was inquiring regarding the bride. They read: "Well, how's she taking it?" Answer: "She's in bed, and won't get up." Answer: "Such is married life. You'll get used to it in time."

While many of the interiors and some of the exteriors were photographed in such a manner as to give them an artistic distinction, there were many other sets and exteriors which were decidedly ordinary and, as a whole, the offering doesn't rank as an artistic success.

The Box Office Angle

I doubt very much if this will pull you much money or please many patrons. It lacks any genuine heart interest, because Roy Stewart, as the hero, was conscious all the time that he was acting, and the melodrama fails to really convince, so that there was nothing left save the cute tricks or dramatic incidents. We didn't get enough of either to make the production truly interesting.

Unless you have to play this I believe it would be quite advisable to pass it over, because, to my mind, it lacks the essentials. Starting off with the old "will" stuff and finishing up with the burning building and the misunderstood hero, I fear your regulars will complain regarding the age of the situations.

STAR'S PERSONALITY HELPED POOR OFFERING, SUPPORT WEAK

Ethel Clayton in

THE BONDAGE OF FEAR

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Travers Vale
AUTHOR	Rosalind Ivan
CAMERAMAN	Max Schneider
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing melo, with one or two good spots
STORY	Convenient, but had possibilities; not well developed
DIRECTION	Failed to provide classy atmosphere or make action truly human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; lacked definition at times
LIGHTINGS	Often too uniform; didn't show principals to best advantage
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Lifted offering at times; had a few splendid scenes
SUPPORT	Failed to register; seemed to be acting
EXTERIORS	A few good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Lacked class
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

THIS production wandered slowly through a couple of reels, planting the fact that the country girl heroine married a wealthy city chap, while the "willunous" unsuccessful suitor lurked in the offing, and then we arrived at the first situation when, for purposes of the scenario, the husband and wife went to a bungalow in the country for a little rest, without taking any servants except the chauffeur, despite the fact that three had been seen floating about the house in town.

The "willunous" unsuccessful suitor followed to the country and the husband was obligingly summoned to the city immediately. Taking the chauffeur with him, he left the wife alone in the country, which was an impossible situation.

The "willunous" ex-suitor attacked the wife while she was alone, and a burglar conveniently arrived to kill the "willun." The wife secured the recolver and covered the burglar, but he informed her that she couldn't afford to hold him because of the scandal which would result from the dead man being found in her bedroom, which was another incident of unable-to-prove-alibi stuff, and so she submitted to blackmail through a good many scenes following the disposal of the dead man's body by the burglar.

Finally, when the blackmailing burglar-murderer arrived at her home one night, the wife killed him and then 'phoned the police and dramatically told them that a burglar was coming into her room, asking what she should do. When told that she should get a weapon and defend herself, she said that she would, and fired a shot while the receiver was open, thus providing an alibi for her having killed the man, with the result that she lived happily ever after with her hubby.

It may be that certain elements in your patronage will find this quite interesting, but surely the more intelligent will not be impressed, and it certainly lacks the human note that makes real drama.

The general atmosphere of the offering was lacking in class, and most of the characters failed to make any of their business register effectively.

Miss Clayton, as the wife, had much footage, with little or nothing to do, but she managed to make the two situations provide interest.

Rockliffe Fellowes, as the husband, seemed ill at ease most of the time, his eyes shifting nervously to the front very frequently as if he were asking the director what he should do next. He certainly didn't make a favorable impression.

John Bowers, as the "willun," scowled around through quite a lot of footage until he was finally shot and sunk in the lake.

Arthur Ashley, as the burglar-murderer, took such pains to appear "willunous," particularly in his close-ups, that his overdrawn characterization missed fire.

Your regulars may accept this as an ordinary bit of melodrama, partly because of Miss Clayton's presence, but surely they'll never enthuse over it or consider it a good film.

In the supporting cast were Ed M. Kimball, Frances Miller, William Nash, Elsa Bambrick and George Morgan.

We found in this some decorated titles which were certainly crude in most instances. The drawings presented with the titles in many cases were so exaggerated as to be funny, and surely these titles are going to interfere decidedly with the possibility of some of the better situations having a chance to register. Decorative titles are an excellent thing if they are well done, but when they are poorly done they are decidedly worse than the ordinary printed title.

The Box Office Angle

Figuring on the prestige of Miss Clayton's popularity, you may get this by, but you will very probably find a number of your regulars who will want to know why they don't manage to make her stories a bit more human. I wouldn't promise anything specific as to the merit of the production, but would depend entirely upon Miss Clayton's popularity and the name of the film, in case I was going to play this.

If you are catering to audiences who like ordinary melodrama, the fact that there are a couple of situations in this may be sufficient to carry it over with them. If you have an intelligent community audience I would be cautious about playing this sort of thing too frequently, because they'll certainly kick in time—or if they don't kick they'll go elsewhere to be entertained.

OBVIOUS PLOT FAIRLY DONE ONLY MILDLY INTERESTING

Dorothy Bernard in

THE RAINBOW

Sherrill-Art Dramas

DIRECTOR.....Ralph Dean
AUTHOR.....Augustus E. Thomas
SCENARIO BY.....Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN.....Wm. A. Reinhart
AS A WHOLE.....Too long, didn't grip, but fairly interesting
STORY.....Rather obvious; development too detailed DIRECTION.....Poor camera angles and composition; failed to give intimacy to make situations human PHOTOGRAPHY.....Some fine effects, but generally lacked definition
LIGHTINGS.....Some artistic; many left faces indistinct
CAMERA WORK.....Generally too far from action; failed to give intimacy to characters
STAR.....Tried hard, but mis-cast
SUPPORT.....Some overplayed; others quite acceptable
EXTERIORS.....Good; not remarkable
INTERIORS.....Generally good; not photographed to advantage
DETAIL.....Good
TIME.....Sixty-seven minutes

DOROTHY BERNARD has considerable ability as an emotional actress, and has a personality that registers with true force in tense dramatic situations, but I cannot feel that she was altogether a happy choice for the innocent ingenue character in this offering. Miss Bernard looks entirely too sophisticated to do the unsuspecting-child thing. She did her durndest with this part and looked rather girlish in some scenes, with her hair down, but those eyes gave the lie to her registered actions.

The selection of Miss Bernard as the ingenue of this offering made the task of having the scenes register in a convincing manner rather difficult, but this could have been accomplished had the characters been handled more cleverly in the grouping of the scenes.

We found upon almost every occasion that the camera angles were poor, characters being allowed to work at too great a distance from the camera, or to come down to the foreground in a stilted manner.

The grouping was not good, and there was a decided lack of close-ups, which would have given the necessary intimacy to help hold the attention and register the proper appeal. In most of the scenes, particularly those in which no attempt was made to secure a light effect, we found characters at a distance from the camera, with the lightings failing utterly to give the proper definition, so that the expressions registered might be caught by the audience. There were many light effects which were rather good, but the poorly lighted scenes allowed the interest to sag, so that the general effect wasn't satisfactory.

For some reason, this production has been allowed to run in six part, when surely it would have been much more satisfactory in less footage. If many of the long scenes where the camera is held at the same angle were trimmed down and the tempo quickened, the dramatic action would have a decidedly better appeal.

The plot has to do with a husband who allowed his wife to leave him rather than to disillusion her regarding her brother, who killed himself. The brother had misappropriated all of the wife's fortune and the husband secretly provided her with an income until the last reel, when she learned what he had been doing and they came to a clutch again.

In the meantime, we had much footage, in which the daughter of the estranged parents was slowly bringing them together, because she loved them both.

Jack Sherrill, as the brother, appeared in a number of scenes at the first of the offering and, unfortunately, he was permitted to overplay in almost every bit. The character was that of a weak young man, decidedly wild in his ways and equipped with an unreasoning temper, but, even with such a character, the scenes as played by Mr. Sherrill registered too emphatically.

While there is a certain amount of interest in the development of this story, it is rather an obvious theme, with no one greatly perplexed as to how it will end. I can't consider it a truly forceful dramatic offering. Surely the situations fail to grip, and frequently they are unconvincing.

The supporting cast presented several good types, but nothing in the way of an exceptional characterization which could be exploited in your advertising. In the cast were Jean Stuart, Jean La Mott, Robert Conness, Eleanor Gist, Marion Adams, Jack Hopkins and Sydney Wingfield.

The Box Office Angle

Although this is too long and never really grips, it is fairly interesting at times and you may be able to play it as a "filler" very acceptably.

I surely would not promise anything definite regarding the merits of the production, but would rather center the attention upon the fact that Dorothy Bernard is the star and that the story was written by Augustus Thomas. Undoubtedly the offering would be better in less footage, but I hardly thing that it will be cut, now that it has been released.

It's a question if the title alone means a great deal in the average community, despite the fact that the play has been done rather extensively both by touring companies and stock companies. If you play this you should emphasize the fact that this has been a successful legitimate attraction.

PERSONALITIES AND HUMAN TOUCHES HELP OLD ALIBI IDEA

Antonio Moreno and Peggy Hyland in

HER RIGHT TO LIVE

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR.....Paul Scardon
AUTHOR.....Paul West
CAMERAMAN.....Robert A. Stuart
AS A WHOLE.....Human touches make old situations rather entertaining
STORY.....Planted weapon, with no new twists, can't-prove-alibi-because-of-scandal idea,
DIRECTION.....Made some incidents quite human, and action generally quite plausible, with slip on political meeting scene
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally clean-cut; few effects
LIGHTINGS.....Acceptable; sometimes fine; sometimes too contrasty
CAMERA WORK.....Generally good; not unusual
STARS.....Pleasing personalities helped offering
SUPPORT.....Well-chosen types
EXTERIORS....None exceptionally artistic, but very good
INTERIORS.....Just good; one hallway set poor
DETAIL.....Good, except political meeting riot
TIME.....Sixty-seven minutes

CONSIDERING the fact that this is an obvious plot, rather well-known to most regulars, I believe that the offering has been exceptionally well handled in order to keep it interesting, and there have been many little human touches planted at proper moments to take the curse off some of the situations.

After getting the characters all nicely planted, we found our hero accidentally leaving his cane at the "willun's" home, and immediately all of your regulars will know that trouble is to result.

Soon after we found the heroine and three kiddies—her brother and two sisters—conveniently dropping in at the hero's bungalow in the country to find shelter for the night. The hero arrived and slept on the floor with Bobby Connelly, giving up his bed to Miss Hyland and her kid sisters.

The "willun," with the hero's cane, murdered the wicked political boss, and then the hero couldn't prove his alibi without dragging the heroine into a scandal.

To make it a bit more "intrickut," the "willun" learned that the heroine could prove an alibi for the hero ,and so he sent her away to another city, where she was locked up in a hotel room.

They then resorted to the old paper hat stunt, with the kiddie taking a newspaper from the dresser drawer, which told of the arrest of the hero. The heroine climbed down the fire-escape and boarded a train without a ticket, was put off and got the last coach on the fly, riding into town on the steps, so that she might arrive to prove the alibi.

The "willun" was convicted and the lovers lived happily ever after.

By introducing some good human touches in the incident where the orphan children moved from their old home and registering many little bits of business throughout the offering, in which Miss Hyland, Bobby Connelly and a couple of cute kiddies figured, Director Paul Scardon managed to keep this entertaining. In the scenes where the children ran away to take refuge in the poorhouse, we found some excellent types, and this incident was nicely handled so as to keep it from being impossible melodrama.

Considering the fact that this was the third picture in one week to contain this unable-to-prove-alibi situation, it seems to me that somehow these plots appear to run in flocks. From my angle, I can't feel that any great scandal could result from the hero having spent the night in the same bungalow as the heroine, with three kiddies as chaperones.

Miss Hyland was quite pretty in most of her scenes, and Tony Moreno has a truly likeable personality. These facts added materially to the pleasing qualities of the offering.

The production, as a whole, is acceptable entertainment, although it surely is not convincing or gripping drama.

There was one situation which was certainly an error as handled. We found an opposition political party rushing into a political meeting to break up the session, carrying many banners declaring in favor of the opposition candidate. We frequently have, in politics in this country, instances where rough-necks are sent to break up political meetings of the opposition, but when these things occur they are done under cover and never with banners to make it plain that the opposition is countenancing such despicable tactics. If an opposition party anywhere in this country should pull such a riot as pictured, openly, it would kill their chances for carrying an election.

In the supporting cast were Mrs. Costello, Helen Connelly, Mildred Platz, John Robertson, Jack Ellis and Julia Swayne Gordon.

The Box Office Angle

I have a hunch that you can get this by as rather a pleasing bit of entertainment, despite the hackneyed situations, because of many littls bits of business which will appeal.

I'd suggest that you talk particularly about Miss Hyland and Mr. Moreno, with a mention of Bobby Connelly, and center the attention upon their personalities rather than upon the story itself. Don't promise that it is a tense dramatic offering. Talk about the fact that it is an entertaining little human story.

ALFRED DE GAETANO
FILM CUTTER
FOX FILMS
"BITTER TRUTH"

LEO DELANEY
FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER
VITAGRAPH FILMS
Have Been Shown in Six Years Past
Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

STAR'S PERSONALITY AND ATMOSPHERE LIFT STORY LACKING HERO.

Ethel Barrymore in

THE AWAKENING OF HELENA RICHIE

Rolfe-Metro

DIRECTOR	John W. Noble
AUTHOR	Margaret Deland
SCENARIO BY	John W. Noble
CAMERAMAN	H. O. Carleton
AS A WHOLE	Well-done, but lacked love interest
STORY	Interesting, but scattered sympathy
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere, artistic photography and some good dramatic moments
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally artistic; a few particularly fine bits
LIGHTINGS	Generally very good; a few lacked definition
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Personality helped decidedly
SUPPORT	Some very fine types
EXTERIORS	Well-chosen for atmosphere
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

MISS BARRYMORE'S personality and the splendid atmosphere provided by Producer Noble will save this from severe criticism, and if the story appeals to your patrons, it will be considered an excellent offering.

It seemed to me that the story as screened lacked the essential element of heart interest, the star's love for the child being insufficient to offset the noticeable absence of any other love interest.

Miss Barrymore played with a splendid suggestion of repressed emotion, and her personality easily dominated the action. She was photographed to advantage in most of her scenes, with some very fine close-ups.

Robert Cummings, as her lover, made his part stand out, and Maury Steuart, playing the part of Little David, was quite satisfactory in the child's part. There were a number of very good types cast for the other characters.

The story centered about a mysterious woman in a small village, who was maintained in luxury by her drunkard husband and was frequently visited by a man thought to be her brother by the villagers. This visitor was a lover who was now trying to break away from the bond, and, realizing the love of this woman for an orphan boy, who had been placed in her care, he demanded that she give up the boy, or he would not marry her.

She refused this demand, but it became known that her visitor was not her brother, and the authorities started to take the child from her. After a dramatic recital of the story of her life, she started to leave the village, alone, but on the finish was greeted with the overwhelming surprise of finding the child placed in the coach beside her as she started away.

Others in the cast were Frank Montgomery, Hassan Mussalli, William Williams, Hattie Delaro, Mary Asquith and Charles Goodrich.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the fact that this is a rather well-known story and a play which was a success, I believe that you can figure that it will go over almost anywhere because of the prestige Miss Barrymore and the name of the story. It will never be a tremendous success of the "repeat" kind, because it lacks the big essential love interest, but you can probably do rather well with it at the box office, and most of your patrons will accept it as a very well done production of an unusual story. If for no other reason than that it is a bit different from the many hackneyed plots now being foisted upon picture patrons, this should register as worth-while entertainment.

I would center all of my attention upon the star and the fact that this was a successful play. You might call it an absorbing story of a motherless woman's love for an orphan child. You might say "Can a bad woman be redeemed by the love of a child not her own?"

"WILL MARRIAGE" PLOT UNCONVINCING, BUT FAIRLY INTERESTING

Mabel Taliaferro in

A WIFE BY PROXY

Columbia-Metro

DIRECTOR	John H. Collins
AUTHORS	John Clymer and Charles A. Logue
SCENARIO BY	John H. Collins
CAMERAMAN	Arthur A. Cadwell
AS A WHOLE	Awful story made fairly interesting
STORY	Will forcing marriage and "badger game" situations, with Cinderella heroine; some junk
DIRECTION	Handled some scenes rather well; story a terrible handicap
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; at times contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective, although occasionally contrasty, with halation from high lights
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STAR	Appealing personality helped offering
SUPPORT	Some good types; "willuns" and hero lacking
EXTERIORS	A few; not unusual
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Seventy-four minutes

IT would seem that when they're hard up for a story these days, that they take all the old situations and jumble them up in a hat, draw them out, one at a time, and tie them together into a plot. This one was certainly a weak bunch of old junk.

Starting off with the heroine sent to the hero by a dying father because he had saved the life of the uncle of the hero at one time, we soon learned that the hero would not get his uncle's fortune unless he married by November. Oh, boy! That's some new stuff.

They then gave us about three or four thousand feet of the old badger game, with the young chap who would benefit by the will if the hero didn't marry conspiring with a "vamp" and her hubby to string the hero along until it would be too late for him to find another wife, and then inform him that she was married.

They worked this out in much detail, but when the blow came they allowed the hero two days' grace and he, under advice from his attorney, married Miss Taliaferro, who had been his housemaid. Since we knew that she was the heroine, this was no news to us, because we had it figured out all the time that this would come, sooner or later.

Miss Taliaferro then arranged to have the vampire call, and the hero told the "vamp" that he'd marry her now, but he would have no money, since his wife had refused to return the coin to him after the marriage. Of course, the "vamp" said she didn't want him without coin, and then they handed us about two hundred feet on the finish, trying to make us believe that Miss Taliaferro was going back to Ireland alone.

Of course, the hero caught the same boat to stop her, and they made their honeymoon trip to Ireland and back. If they don't walk out on the finish of this I'm a bad guesser. It certainly is dragged out unmercifully.

As the production stands, Miss Taliaferro is rather crowded into the background, with entirely too much attention given to Sally Crute's efforts to play a vampire. About all there is for Miss Taliaferro has been provided by bits of padding, these being for the most part a lot of scenes showing her arrival in this country carrying a large, home-made cage containing a poll-parrot.

There was some good comedy in Miss Taliaferro's arrival, and there was a bit of good comedy in the situation where the hero considered marrying his homely housekeeper.

I can see no reason why this should be allowed to run in the present footage, because it certainly has been very much padded with unnecessary scenes.

We had a lot of light effects, some of which were effective, but occasionally the high lights in the foreground against the dark background were so strong that they became contrasty and resulted in bad halation.

Robert Walker, as the hero, failed to make any real impression, and when he finished the fight with the vampire's husband he looked more like a deckhand than a hero.

The Box Office Angle

If your patrons are willing to stand for the old stuff in the way of stories, with a very obvious development, there is enough fairly interesting action in this to get it by. Miss Taliaferro has a number of scenes in which she has an opportunity to register good little bits of comedy business, and if she has pulling power in your community I'd say that you can figure this as an offering which will just get over. The general atmosphere has been helped by the lightings, and if your regulars aren't critical on stories they may not kick.

I'd suggest that you make no mention of the plot angles, because they will certainly sound very familiar, and it would be advisable to talk about Miss Taliaferro and make no definite promises as to the production itself.

OBVIOUS CONVENIENT MELLER WITH LIGHT EFFECTS FAIRLY INTERESTING

Valeska Suratt in

THE VICTIM

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Will S. Davis
AUTHOR	Will S. Davis
CAMERAMAN	A. Lloyd Lewis
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing, convenient melo, with many light effects
STORY	Lots of action, but lacked heart interest
DIRECTION	Provided much "meller" and many light effects, but failed to make it human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; at times very contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective; others contrasty, with halation
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good; sometimes poor
STAR	"Emoted" in every scene; failed to arouse sympathy
SUPPORT	Good types; mostly "meller" characters
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Lacked class, but acceptable
DETAIL	Very good; often effective
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

THIS offering starts out with some splendid action having to do with some crooks tunneling from a house into a bank building, in an effort to rob a bank, with detectives catching them just as the safe door was blown open. This incident caused the arrest of Miss Suratt, who was the innocent daughter of a criminal father.

Having been sent up for a term, she came out to face the bitter world, with the usual result (in the "movies") of landing in the gutter. She was finally rescued by our hero doctor, who married her, about the fourth reel, and then a blackmailing detective got busy. The night he came to collect, however, the wife's father turned up at the house, he having escaped from prison meanwhile, and he killed the detective.

Because of the very new (?) situation of finding Miss Suratt with the gun in her hand, over the dead man's body, she was accused and subjected to several hundred feet of "third degree."

The father-murderer escaped to a barn, which was conveniently burned, and when the doctor-husband was summoned to care for the nearly dead murderer, he confessed, which brought freedom to Miss Suratt again.

There were many light effects introduced into this, and, except for the fact that some of them were entirely too contrasty, these were rather effective and helped the production decidedly.

Miss Suratt photographed better than she has in some of her other offerings, but her make-up was still entirely too much in evidence. Surely, at no time did she look the innocent maid deserving of a great deal of sympathy. She is certainly not the type to be cast as an "innocent young thing."

There was much action in this, but the story was painfully convenient, the melodrama rushing along until a situation was needed, with the author deliberately bringing whatever characters were needed together at just the right time to affect the desired situation. This was noticeable at the very first, when detectives were brought in at just the right moment to check the robbery. It was painfully noticeable in the meetings between the hero and heroine, and the final blow came when the escaped convict-father arrived at the house where his daughter was living, apparently without knowing that she was there, at just the right moment to be able to kill the blackmailing detective.

There was one scene where the doctor-husband handed Miss Suratt a newspaper, telling of her father's escape, and from his action it surely registered that he knew about her father, yet the following scenes indicated that she was paying blackmail because she was afraid to tell him concerning her father.

The best portions of the offering were the incident having to do with the bank robbery and the scenes showing the third degree treatment of Miss Suratt. These were effective, but I fear that most audiences will accept them and fail to be thrilled.

Throughout the offering Miss Suratt "acted" upon any and all occasions. Feeling that she was supposed to play the innocent heroine, she frequently lifted her eyes to the ceiling in a manner that was almost funny, because of her general appearance.

There were some good types in the supporting cast, but no personalities that stood out particularly.

(Continued on following page)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

MARSHAL FARNUM
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
FEATURE PRODUCER

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
1310 Avenue P, Brooklyn, N. Y.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

EDGAR LEWIS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

WILFRID NORTH
DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES
THANHOUSER NEW ROCHELLE

HENRY OTTO
Directing
Harold Lockwood and May Allison

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

CHARLES M. SEAY
FEATURE PRODUCER

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
(Continued from page 36)
3 Liberty	88		92
3 Grip of Evil	73		67
3 Who's Guilty	78		78
8 The Iron Claw	94		93
1 The Diamond Runners	87		90
4 Shielding Shadow	88		86
6 Secret of Submarine	73		79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50		50
2 Scarlet Runner	58		53
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20		60
1 Girl and the Game	73		45

(Continued from preceding page)

In the cast were Herbert Heyes, Claire Whitney, Joseph Granby, John Charles, Charles Edwards and Oscar Nye.

The Box Office Angle

If you're catering to audiences which "eat up" the wild-eyed melodramatic stuff, this should go big. If your audiences are intelligent and discriminating, they will not be impressed, because most of the action lacks the necessary note of conviction. It is just action, conveniently provided, without the human touch to make it grip.

If Miss Suratt's name is worth anything at your ticket-window, following her recent productions, then you may be able to do quite well with this. It should fit in particularly for a Saturday audience, where you cater to those who like the blood-and-thunder stuff, without stopping to analyze as to the "why "and "wherefore...

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | NEW YORK, JANUARY 25, 1917. | NO. 4 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

REASON PERCENTAGES ARE MISSING

Because of the unusual number of special features recently released I found myself a bit behind on some reviews. In order to get as many in as possible this week I omitted the tabulated percentage reports. The percentages will apear as usual next week.

The Postoffice Department has found a new technicality every month for some time now to delay the granting of a second class mailing permit to Wid's. I cannot afford to increase the size of "Wid's" until Uncle Sam's servants in their wisdom decide that I, who serve only my readers, am entitled to the privileges now accorded many publications controlled by advertisers.

BADLY PHOTOGRAPHED UNCONVINCING MELLER THAT NEVER ARRIVES

Gladys Coburn in

THE PRIMITIVE CALL

Fox Film.

DIRECTOR	Bertram Bracken
AUTHOR	Bertram Bracken
CAMERAMAN	Rial B. Schellinger
AS A WHOLE	Cheap Indian "meller" poorly done
STORY	Convenient "meller" mess; never registered
DIRECTION	Got action without conviction in messy atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Not fit to release; much footage out of focus
LIGHTINGS	Poor
CAMERA WORK	Bad
STAR	Is not one
SUPPORT	Cheap "meller" types
EXTERIORS	Mostly on Palisades; poorly photographed
INTERIORS	Messy
DETAIL	Poor
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

THERE'S certainly nothing to commend this and much to condemn it. It is cheap melodrama, poorly played, with an appalling amount of footage that is badly out of focus.

The story had to do with an educated Indian who fell in love with a society girl whose father wanted to steal all the lands owned by the Indian's people. That was an obliging situation to start with.

The girl was shown to be a senseless society "simp" who bragged to her father that she could make the Indian sign the "poipers."

Of course, after much footage the Indian "fell," and immediately the "simp-vamp" turned on him. The Indians, for revenge, stole the superintendent's blind child and the betrayed chief took the white "vamp" into the wilds to force her to live as nature intended.

The superintendent, to whom the "vamp" had given the "poipers," gave them back to the Indian so that his child would be returned to him, and the Indian finally released the girl, saying that there was no hope for her.

An effort was made to register the fact that she had fallen in love with the Indian and that she now wanted to return, but his Indian sweetheart claimed him and the "vamp" faced the cruel world without having accomplished anything. In other words, this was a lot of cheap melodramatic action that never got anywhere.

George Larkin was introduced in a character portraying a brainless society fop, which is about the last thing in the world that George should be cast for. He was shown with a tiny moustache on his upper lip which was certainly ridiculous.

Fritz Lieber made a good Indian, despite his German name.

To star Gladys Coburn is certainly a case of brainless insistence on the part of the producer, because she isn't a star. She does nothing in this to justify her being placed in such a position.

There were many long titles which attempted to make the action appear to have a touch of psychology, but such titles, when presented with this sort of a picture, make the action even more unsatisfactory.

A majority of the scenes were made on the Palisades, which peculiar rock formation will surely be recognized in most parts of the country.

Others in the supporting cast were John W. Dillon, Lewis Sealy, Velma Whitman and Kittens Reichert.

The Box Office Angle.

If you're catering to a low-brow audience which likes wild "meller" without much rhyme or reason, possibly you can play this on a rainy night. Certainly I wouldn't advise you to use this production anywhere if you expect to retain the confidence of intelligent patrons.

I can't see any box office value in the name of the "star," and the "primitive call" title is about as much suggestive of the story as if it had been named "The Red Undershirt."

There's no possible chance of this action ever registering as human with any one, it being just a lot of disconnected melodramatic incidents put together to form an improbable, unconvincing plot. Dodge it if you have any regulars who know a good film when they see it. You can be excused for refusing this if you took no other exception to it than the fact that the photography isn't fit to run in any good theatre.

ANCIENT OBVIOUS PLOT IDEA NEVER HAS A CHANCE

Marie Doro in

LOST AND WON

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... James Young
AUTHORS ..... Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf
SCENARIO BY ..... Margaret Turnbull
CAMERAMAN ..... Harold Rosson
AS A WHOLE ..... Unconvincing, obvious melo that never registers
STORY ..... Terribly ancient; painfully obliging "bet" plot
DIRECTION ..... Apparently lost heart and followed 'script
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
STAR ..... "Rags to Society" part
SUPPORT ..... Acceptable
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
EXTERIORS ..... Nothing unusual
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Fifty-seven minutes

I CAN'T understand why any one should purchase such a story as this. It is the old formula No. 87, based on the man who bets with some friends that he can take a girl from the streets, dress her up and make one of them marry her within a year's time. If the men who are accredited with writing this really have any intelligence they probably think rather contemptuously of the movie folk who buy such junk.

When the dressed-up girl had been educated and introduced to the four friends they all "fell" so hard at first sight that the four insisted on splitting her first dance into two minutes each. Such a terribly overdrawn situation as that gives you an idea as to the class of this story.

Of course the hero who made the wager was forced to the wall—in one title—and fell in love with the girl, and then the "willun" gave the hero a job in his bank and stole from his cashoox, afterwards charging him with theft.

The girl then became a newspaper reporter and played detective. Learning that the "willun" had given a $20,000 necklace to a "vamp," and since, conveniently, the stolen amount was twenty "thou," she, of course, knew that he was the thief. This cleared the hero and provided the clutch. Junk? Well, I should say so.

It certainly seems a pity to put Miss Doro in such stories as this and expect her to make an impression. The entire offering carries an atmosphere of "Well, we've got to do this thing, so let's get it over with," and consequently it surely will not stand a chance of convincing a discriminating, intelligent audience. There are dozens of loop-holes which were certainly awful.

Elliott Dexter was the hero and looked handsome, but had little chance to do anything else. Mayme Kelso was a luxuriant "vamp," and Carl Stockdale was the "willun."

The Box Office Angle

Possibly you can do a little on this if Miss Doro pulls them in in your community, but I certainly would not make any promises regarding the production because your regulars will begin to groan when the plot starts to unfold and they will heave a number of groans as it develops. Because of the situations provided it never has a chance, and surely if you have to play it I wouldn't advise you to let them get any idea as to what the story is about. It is one of our oldest formulas.

Planted in a house where they don't care, this may drift by, because it has considerable action and is of the surface "meller" type.

POWERFUL CHARACTERIZATIONS HELD UNTIL CONFUSING FINISH

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson in

THE TRUANT SOUL

Essanay—K-E-S-E Service

DIRECTOR ..... Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR ..... Victor Rousseau
AS A WHOLE ..... Slow but powerful for five reels, then confusing rabid melo
STORY ..... Simple, but powerful until hit final complications
DIRECTION ..... Lacked artistic distinction, but registered splendid dramatic pauses; ran wild on finish
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Consistently good
LIGHTINGS ..... Lacked artistic touch, but good
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good
STARS ..... Forceful personalities; very human characterizations
SUPPORT ..... Played with impressive reserve
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Just good
DETAIL ..... Good; confusing on finish
TIME ..... One hour and fifty minutes

IT is certainly to be regretted that this has been permitted to run into excess footage. In the first five reels we found a powerful characterization in a simple, impressive story that was practically complete at the end of about the sixth reel.

The story had told of the struggle of an eminent surgeon to combat the drug habit with the aid of a nurse, who fought against a valet forcing drugs upon the wealthy doctor in the hope of benefiting by his wealth. If they had quit at that point, this would have registered as a tremendous film.

I was about ready to go home when suddenly they started the story all over by bringing in a twin half brother of Mr. Walthall, of course also played by the star. This gave us a feeling of confusion, as they attempted by many titles to explain all about how the villainous half brother had been trying to benefit by the surgeon's weakness for drugs.

They then gave us a lot of wild melodrama in which the villainous Walthall was murdered, the valet started to burn the house and was caught in his own trap, and the hero Walthall rescued the nurse, so that they could live happily ever after and build a new hospital in place of the one destroyed by fire.

Certainly these final situations are going to give any audience the feeling of confused plot threads, and the ordinary melodrama on the finish will leave a bad taste, rather overshadowing the splendid dramatic work early in the picture.

Fortunately, Producer Beaumont gave us many splendid close-ups of Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson, and these close-ups, which continued throughout the entire offering, gave the necessary touch of intimacy to make the action convincing.

Had the story stopped when it should have it would have been a big, virile, human drama. By overstepping into the improbable twin-brother stuff and the cheap melodrama, the effect of the early scenes was certainly discounted.

As most of you know, Mr. Walthall is wonderful in such characterizations as this, and Miss Charleson is not only a capable actress, but decidedly beautiful when properly lighted.

Patrick Calhoun, as the valet, made his part stand out through the offering because of his poise and repose. The other characters were very well handled.

It was noticeable in the wildly melodramatic scenes that the men had considerable difficulty in breaking through doors on many occasions. Since none of the doors were heavily built, this weakened several of the situations.

In the supporting cast were Anna Mae Walthall, Mary Parkyn and U. K. Haupt.

The Box Office Angle

While there is an element of weirdness about many of the situations, and some people may feel that they won't want to see it if they know that it is a "dope" story, I can tell you that Mr. Walthall has made this characterization very human and tensely dramatic without making it repulsive.

You can safely promise that it is a very big, powerful characterization—one of the greatest things Mr. Walthall has ever done—and it is possible that if you give the proper emphasis to Mr. Walthall's work your audiences will be impressed and overlook some of the wildness and confusion in the latter part of the offering.

Surely that should bring you business, considering the fact that Henry was the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation," and has done hundreds of exceptionally powerful characterizations.

It would be advisable to write your exchange and ask them if this might be edited by them, or by the Essanay company, so as to bring it down to about five or six reels, and eliminate the twin brother element and the wild finish. I can tell you definitely that intelligent editing could do this. Whether or not the producers will agree with me is, of course, another matter.

ELEMENTARY PLOT PROVIDES ENTERTAINING CHARACTERIZATIONS

Dorothy Dalton in

CHICKEN CASEY

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Raymond B. West
AUTHOR	J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN	Charles Stumar
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE	Obvious, but handling made it interesting
STORY	Designed to present characterization
DIRECTION	Handled scant opportunities to advantage
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Her personality held attention
SUPPORT	Good, but were for most part a background
EXTERIORS	A few storm bits very good
INTERIORS	Excellent
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

THIS offering was very evidently designed to afford Miss Dalton an opportunity to appear both as a queenly-beauty actress type and a roughneck of the slums.

The very obvious story had to do with the author of a successful novel, the heroine of which was a girl of the slums. An actress who wanted to play the part in a dramatization of the novel was told that it would be impossible, since she was too queenly, and so she put on a wig and a lot of rags and drifted into a "dump," where friends had taken the author to prove to him that he didn't know anything about the life he had written of in his novel.

The actress afterwards practically forced herself into the author's apartment at about three in the morning, making him believe her pitiful story of "no place to go," the result of this interesting experiment being that the author finally asked her to play the part in his stage adaptation, with a clutch between them on the finish.

One situation, where some relatives from a home town came to the author's apartment while the actress was there, seemed to have been dragged in by the heels. It certainly isn't of any value.

Miss Dalton gives a very interesting contrast between her two charaterizations, and there are a number of little human bits of business which will register with most any audience. We had some good types in the "dump" in the slums, and the atmosphere of this "joint" was nicely handled.

Mr. West, the producer, has really lifted the offering from start to finish by intelligent handling, but I feel that it will only be interesting and never really convince the average audience.

Charles Gunn, as the author, handled this part rather nicely, making an excellent foil for Miss Dalton. The other characters were decidedly incidental.

In the supporting case were Howard Hickman and Thomas Guise.

The Box Office Angle.

If Miss Dalton has developed into a good box office proposition in your community because of the numerous offerings in which she has appeared prominently, you can probably do right well with this, for you can safely say that it is an entertaining bit of characterization work by this clever star. Most of your regulars will consider it worth while, even though they don't enthuse over it.

In advertising this you might use lines of this type: "Do you realize what extremes in characterization some actresses can go to? See Dorothy Dalton in 'Chicken Casey'"; "The author of the most successful novel of the year found that he knew but little of the life which his story told of. See 'Chicken Casey.'"; "If a storm-soaked girl in rags asked for shelter at your door at three in the morning, and you were a bachelor author, would you take her in or send her out in the storm? See 'Chicken Casey.'"

LEO DELANEY
FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER
VITAGRAPH FILMS
Have Been Shown in Six Years Past
Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

Send Me Your Reports
I TABULATE AND AVERAGE THEM

PERSONALITIES AND HUMAN BITS MAKE LITTLE ROMANCE ENTERTAINING

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson in

LITTLE SHOES

Essanay—K-E-S-E Service

DIRECTOR ..... Arthur Berthelet
AUTHOR ..... Eleanor M. Ingram
SCENARIO BY ..... E. T. Lowe, Jr.
AS A WHOLE ..... Appealing, entertaining romance
STORY ..... Possibly improbable, but surely appealing
DIRECTION ..... Kept action human, with good individual scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Not exceptional, but quite satisfactory
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
STARS ..... Human characterizations made situations register
SUPPORT ..... Some good types; kids excellent
EXTERIORS ..... A few very good
INTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere nicely
DETAIL ..... Generally very good
TIME ..... Sixty-seven minutes

I'D say that this should register, particularly with the ladies and those who enjoy an appealing little romance, with the action centered entirely upon the personalities of two lovers. The production has been carefully handled, with an excellent development of situations and a scenario which gave some delightful twists with a nice element of suspense.

The story opened with a little rich girl giving her shoes to a ragged waif so that he might buy new ones. He promised to come back to her some day to marry her.

The boy secured a job with a cattleman of South America, and when we found him grown to manhood he had achieved success.

The main incidents began with Mr. Walthall coming back to New York in search of his little princess. He was told that she had married, but afterwards he met a girl and fell in love with her, and after several misunderstandings and disappointments, all of which were cleverly handled, he finally discovered that this girl was his real princess, he having received information regarding the marriage of a relative of hers who lived in the same house.

While the atmosphere of the offering is not exceptionally artistic, it is quite acceptable. There was one bad scene where Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson were shown to win a prize at dancing, because the timing of the action of the dancers was so bad as to make it appear ridiculous. There is such a wide variance of opinions in this country as to what constitutes graceful dancing that this scene will appear bad in most sections.

There was one bad character, and I can't understand just why he was engaged. This character was Mr. Walthall's secretary, or companion, and he certainly was a sad "simp." He had one of those funny little moustaches which made his action seem even more ridiculous.

In the supporting cast were U. K. Haupt, Victor Benoit, Mary V. McAllister, Patrick Calhound, Jack Paul and B. C. Turner.

The Box Office Angle.

In advertising this you might hook up some such suggestion as this: "Dante loved at eight, and so did the hero of 'Little Shoes.' Do you believe in such faithful romances?"

You will have to make almost your entire advertising appeal to those who care for human little love stories intelligently played. I'd call this a delightful romance of a ragged urchin who became wealthy and lived his life with the one purpose of some day "finding his princess." Of course, you can play up Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson, and I'd refer particularly to Miss Charleson's work in "The Prince Chap," since that is one of the best characterizations she has given us.

This isn't a big offering, but it is a very pleasing little bit of entertainment for those who like romance. The more prosaic cynical audiences who want red-blooded drama, and the low-brow gang who ask for wild "melderdrammer" may not like this.

HANDLING MAKES SUSPENSE IMPRESSIVE. SLUMPS AT END

Mary MacLaren and Harrison Ford in

THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M.

Bluebird

DIRECTOR ..... Lois Weber
AUTHOR ..... Thomas Edgelow
SCENARIO BY ..... Lois Weber
CAMERAMAN ..... Al Siegler
AS A WHOLE ..... Excellent entertainment, well constructed story, beautifully handled STORY ..... Very good suspense with splendid human touches DIRECTION ..... Registered classy atmosphere and kept action human PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Splendid
LIGHTINGS ..... Many artistic effects; generally excellent
CAMERA WORK ..... Particularly pleasing
STARS ..... Made characters live; pleasing personalities
SUPPORT ..... Some very good types
EXTERIORS ..... Artistic composition made them distinctive
INTERIORS ..... Excellent
DETAIL ..... Very good
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes

FOR the most part this was a study of mental conflict. There was a splendid element of suspense introduced, and at one time this was developed to almost an uncanny degree. The mystery drama was relieved very frequently by little human touches and nice bits of comedy. From start to finish the offering showed the touch of intelligent direction, the atmosphere being distinctive, with all of the characters behaving like human beings and making their action register in a convincing manner.

The essential difference between most of Miss Weber's productions and the "things" done by so many of our mediocre producers is the fact that in almost all of Miss Weber's films we find a thought. We also find that Miss Weber invariably gives us a mental conflict rather than a physical one.

Mary MacLaren, who is a youngster with a very appealing personality, and Harrison Ford, who is certainly going to find himself possessed of a very large following after this picture has had some circulation, both gave characterizations which registered because they were natural and never overdrawn. Of course, Miss MacLaren is entirely a "find" of Miss Weber's, and we've seen enough of this producer's work with practically unknown people to understand that she is, to a great extent, responsible for the molding of her characterizations.

The story concerns a wealthy idler, very much bored with life, who was told by a fortune teller that he would die at midnight on a certain date. A previous prophecy that he would meet with an accident was confirmed, and while recovering from his fractured wrist in the country he met Miss MacLaren, whose sympathy for unfortunates gave him a new understanding of the possibilities of life.

This man almost forgot the prophecy of death until he learned that the fortune teller herself had died on the date she had said she would. They then worked up to the moment of the prophecy of death with an excellent element of suspense created, these scenes being perfectly handled by Miss Weber and by Mr. Ford in his playing.

Finally, at midnight, in a nerve-shaking condition, he heard the clock strike, and then turned to the telephone to confirm the hour, learning that it was really six minutes past twelve. Almost immediately his friends rushed in to inform him that the fortune telling had been but a plan of their's to wake him out of his boredom, and then the hero, without delay, got in touch with the girl from whom he had been separated through a misunderstanding, he allowing her to believe that he cared for another, because he didn't want to have her care when he thought he was going to die so soon.

The final "clutch" was held a bit too long after the story broke, and although these scenes were very pretty, I believe it would be better to shorten the finish.

In the supporting cast were Evelyn Selbie, Willis Marks, Frank Brownlee, Bertram Grassby and Charles Mailes.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that you can make a lot of noise about this as an exceptional story, showing the power of mental suggestion. Play up the fact that it was produced by Lois Weber, who has given us "Hypocrites," "Where Are My Children?", "Jewel," "Scandal," "The People vs. John Doe," and other big successes. Mention the fact that Mary MacLaren appeared in "Shoes," "Wanted—A Home," "Idle Wives," and other features, and promise that Harrison Ford is an exceptionally pleasing leading man, new to Bluebird films.

In advertising this I'd center attention on the big situation, but be very careful not to give away the story. For instance, say: "Do you believe in fortune tellers? Do you think any one can prophesy when you are going to die? See 'The Mysterious Mrs. M.'"

Dwell upon the fact that this is a very humanly portrayed study of the conflict of mental powers, and make a catchline of the fact that "All Lois Weber productions have a thought behind them."

If it means anything in your community, you might advertise the fact that this Bluebird was chosen for presentation at the Rialto Theatre in New York, which is now booking on the open market basis, selecting only the best offerings from various programs.

It might be good business to announce that Lois Weber made this, and refuse to tell anything else about it. Playing up this mystery angle might have exceptional results.

FAST ACTION MELO JUMPY, UNCONVINCING, NOT WORTH WHILE

Vincent Serrano in

A MODERN MONTE CRISTO

Thanhouser-Pathe

DIRECTOR	W. Eugene Moore
AUTHOR	Lloyd Lonergan
CAMERAMAN	George Webber
AS A WHOLE	Cheap serial-meller movie
STORY	Very jumpy, wild-eyed action
DIRECTION	Got action and little else
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; not artistic
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	Rather "actory" and camera conscious
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	A few good surf bits; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Decidedly convenient
TIME	Sixty-one minutes

AS a "movie" action "meller," this is there. Few could ever take it seriously, because the story is wildly improbable, and the handling has failed to give any human touch.

The plot is all about a doctor, falsely accused by a rival, who escaped when arrested and in later years was shipwrecked on an island where he found a fortune in pearls. He returned and finally avenged himself on his enemy by taking the "willun" with him in one of the "willun's" rotten ships so that both could meet death together.

There were terrific jumps in the continuity, with such wildly impossible happenings as the rescue of the "willun's" child, who was with the doctor on the island, by aviators. We never learned how the doctor escaped. He just "escaped."

Before this we had seen the hero doctor working as a deckhand on one of the "willun's" rotten boats, apparently without knowing that the boat belonged to the "willun." When it sank in the storm he had rescued the "willun's" daughter, who had wandered aboard before the boat sailed.

When the hero doctor returned for his revenge there was no change in his appearance, save that he had shaved his moustache and his hair was white. Eventually the child, who had last seen him when she was about four years old, recognized him, and yet his enemy, who had been his pal for years, didn't recognize him. Truly, "They do it in the movies."

Mr. Serrano and Thomas Curran, who played the "willun," were both quite camera conscious most of the time, and none of the cast managed to make their action register as human.

Others in the cast were Helen Badgley, Gladys Dore and Boyd Marshall.

The Box Office Angle

If you cater to audiences who like wild-eyed melodrama without stopping to worry or care about whether it is possible or not, this may go over beautifully. Surely there is a lot of action, and although it is ridiculously overdrawn, the type of audience which loves the blood-and-thunder stuff may consider this good entertainment. I'd be afraid of this for a discriminating community patronage, because they'll undoubtedly think this very funny where it is supposed to be serious.

I question the pulling power of Vincent Serrano's name because he isn't what we might call a recognized star in the "sticks."

JUMPY MESSED UP MELLER. MORAL LOST IN SHUFFLE

Anna Murdock in

ENVY

With Shirley Mason and George Le Guere
McClure—Seven Deadly Sins—Triangle Exch.

DIRECTOR ..... Richard Ridgely
CAMERAMAN ..... George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE ..... Jumbled, jumpy "meller," witn shapely limbs displayed
STORY ..... Rambling, unconvincing; titles and action jarred
DIRECTION ..... Allowed everyone to overact; provided wild "meller" bits
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Just fair; sometimes poor
LIGHTINGS ..... Ordinary and poor
CAMERA WORK ..... Acceptable
STAR ..... Pretty, but camera-conscious; displayed much silk hosiery
SUPPORT ..... Juveniles acceptable; others ordinary
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable
DETAIL ..... Muddled
TIME ..... Fifty-two minutes

I CAN'T feel that any one will "Envy" McClure's this. It started off fairly well, but soon commenced to miss fire, and finished with a lot of wild "meller" that was certainly cheap. Frequently we had rather interesting displays of lower extremities, which were not unpleasant to inspect, but after a time many of these seemed to be rather forced upon us, which kills the novelty and makes one fail to sit on the edge of the seat. It was just like going to a burlesque show where you see them all in tights. That doesn't interest you nearly so much as if you viewed some diplomatically exposed ankles.

I have no inside information on this, but it looked to me as if they made a lot of footage with a lot of story and then decided that it was all wrong and cut it down to a very little bit of footage, deciding to use a lot of titles in order to make the story something that it wasn't when they started.

Whether this was the case or not, that certainly is the impression it registers. In many places the action seems to jar with the titles provided, and we had many long titles that are used in an attempt to bridge over bad jumps in the story development. I can only say that if this is the story as it was originally intended, the McClure people should certainly give more attention to their 'scripts before they start out to make "master pictures" for present-day film fans.

The plot told about a country girl who envied an actress, and then learned that the actress had an awful time because her brother was a crook and she had only a few months to live.

After starting with this they worked into some wild melodrama, and seemed to forget that they were trying to register a moral. The moral got lost in the shuffle. After comparing the lower extremities displayed by Miss Murdock and Miss Mason—Miss Mason registering hers without any stockings—there may be some difference of opinion as to whether there is any chance for "Envy" there.

The wild-eyed melodrama on the finish, in which the crook tried to kill Miss Murdock, seemed to be badly muddled, because there was a title saying that he would report it to "the sport," evidently meaning an elderly lover, and I can't understand why he should think that the lover would be pleased to know that he had murdered the actress. Anyway, the title served to bring all the characters together on a yacht, where we had a free-for-all fight that was decidedly "meller."

One of the funniest bits was the scene where Miss Murdock raced in a motorboat to the rescue of Miss Mason with George Le Guere riding on behind on a surf board. Whoever thought out that bit must have been seeing serial "mellers."

There was certainly no class or artistic distinction to the atmosphere and the entire cast seemed camera conscious and inclined to overact in most of the scenes.

In the supporting cast were Jessie Stevens, Lumsden Hare, William Wadsworth and Robert Cain.

The Box Office Angle

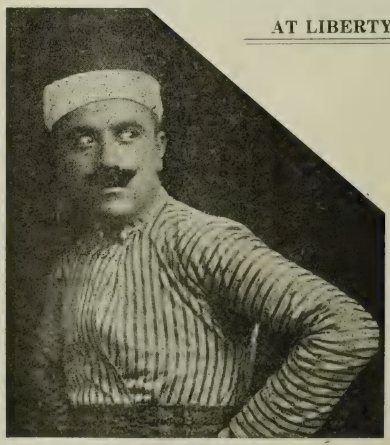
Because of the tremendous amount of publicity that has been given to these pictures you can possibly get some money with them. I fear that most audiences will be sadly disappointed, and it is a question as to whether you can afford to play this stuff and offer alibis afterwards.

Certainly this is not a high-class production, and I wouldn't make any specific promises of that nature. You can say that it is filled with action, if you like, but don't promise that it preaches a tremendous moral, because they lose the moral early. The other features in this series may be better, and so I would say that you can safely take a chance on this one getting by without too many kicks, and you can hope that the next will be better.

The fact that you get a new star in each adds a certain element of chance which may bring them back, even though they don't like this.

Joseph M. Attie

AT LIBERTY



A native of Algiers, educated in France, I have traveled extensively in North Africa and could supervise any costume production relating to that picturesque land.

SEVEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

Producing and Playing in France

Address Care WID'S, TIMES BLDG., N. Y. C.

WORST SCENAROIST'S NIGHTMARE OF RECENT MONTHS

Ruth Stonehouse in

LOVE AFLAME

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Raymond Wells
AUTHOR	Raymond Wells
SCENARIO BY	Fred Myton
CAMERAMAN	R. E. Irish
AS A WHOLE	Wild-eyed, impossible junk
STORY	Scenario writer's nightmare
DIRECTION	Hard to consider it seriously
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Acted too hard
SUPPORT	A wild assortment
EXTERIORS	Not artistic
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Mostly impossible
TIME	Fifty-five minutes

ALTHOUGH they attempted to do a lot of comedy in this, most of it fell very flat. The funniest parts of it were the incidents which were supposed to be serious. I had my mind made up that this was to finish up as some character's nightmare, because I couldn't believe that any company would release such a lot of junk as a serious production.

The story told of a girl who wanted to be a boy—Miss Stonehouse—who ran away from home when it was suggested that she marry a sickly-looking "thing" called Reginald. When she ran away she left a note, saying that he could marry her if he could catch her.

At the same time, three men had made a bet that they could reach Constantinople by November 6th, the inference being that no woman could do such a thing. When the runaway girl, wearing boy's clothes, landed on a freight train she soon met the young hero, who was headed for Constantinople, and about every other scene they had a title in which he said that he must be in Constantinople by November 6th. This was used so often, in a hope for comedy, that it certainly wasn't funny.

This team then had adventures with hoboes, experiences on freight trains and stowed away on a steamship, all the time being pursued by the insignificant-looking Reginald.

When Reggie discovered them on the boat they did a wild dive into the water and swam to a little launch on which they found three wild-looking pirates. They threw the pirates into the briny after a little fight—which was SOME impossible stunt—and then they landed on a cannibal isle. After many exciting (?) experiences here with lions and elephants they were about to be cooked when a volcano cut loose and broke up the festivities.

Meanwhile, pin-head Reginald had hired a boat and started for the South Seas, according to a title, in search of "an island." How in Hades anyone could write such a bit of business as sending this man in search of "an island" in the South Seas, without any other information outside of the fact that the boat was near an island when the fugitive jumped off, is surely beyond me.

Anyway, pin-head Reggie landed on the island in time to see the volcano break loose. The hero had taken the king of the cannibals to the top of the volcano and shoved him into the crater, and then he and the girl took Reginald's launch and sailed to Constantinople, arriving on the 6th. When they arrived they found the other men there, all with wives.

I've seen a lot of awful stuff, but, oh, boy! This was SOME script. They tried to register comedy, but I can't feel that in making this junk they expected the impossible adventures to register as interesting melodrama. It almost looks as if someone had set out to see how bad a picture they might make, reaching for the wildest limits of "movie" melo adventures.

I could fill a couple of pages telling you things that were wrong with this film, but one of the funniest incidents—which surely wasn't intended to be funny—was the peculiar motion given to the interior of the pirate boat. It resembled the movement that might result from a German and a Frenchman trying to dance a fox-trot to the tune of "Yacka hula hicky dula." They surely must've had some funny storm on the sad sea waves to have given a boat exactly that motion.

In the supporting cast were Fronzee Gunn, Jean Herscholt, Raymond Whitaker, Jack Mulhall, Nita White and Noble Johnson.

The Box Office Angle.

If you have any respect for the opinions of your patrons I certainly wouldn't play this. If, by any chance, yau can't get away from it, I'd plainly say that it was probably the wildest story of comic opera adventure ever screened. You can promise them that it's wild enough to make anybody laugh, and possibly some people will want to see it and consider it a comedy—which it is—because you get most of your laughs from the scenes that are supposed to be serious.

SLOW MOVING STORY MISSES FIRE OFTEN HELPED BY STAR

Anita Stewart in

THE GLORY OF YOLANDA

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Marguerite Bertsch
AUTHOR	Maibelle Heikes Justice
CAMERAMAN	Fred Held
AS A WHOLE	Bad story poorly handled
STORY	Innocent maiden accepting career and then refusing to pay; fails to register
DIRECTION	Action slow and lacked power; atmosphere not distinctive
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; lacked artistic distinction
LIGHTINGS	Quite ordinary; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Terribly handicapped
SUPPORT	Painfully ordinary
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Didn't impress
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

THE story, support and atmosphere provided here was certainly a terrible handicap for Miss Stewart. This beautiful star has proven her ability, and it seems unfortunate that she should be asked to carry such a burden as this.

Starting very slowly, this plot developed in a painfully draggy manner without ever really hitting a high spot. Miss Stewart was a Russian peasant girl who loved to dance. Attracting the attention of a duke, she was taken to the city and established in a beautiful home, with wonderful clothes, and given instructions for the Imperial Ballet.

Finally, after success came, the Duke wanted to collect, but she refused, and so she was sentenced to Siberia with her artist lover, who had drifted in about the third reel.

When her mother died her brother was brought in as a protector and he killed the "willun." On the finish, a prince who had been carried all through the story, standing around in a "simp" sort of fashion, with his eyebrows raised continually, said that he'd see to it that they were pardoned, so we left the lovers starting for their honeymoon in Siberia with the understanding that they were to return soon because of the influence of good fairy, "Prince Eyebrows."

Since this entire plot built up to the dancing situation, we naturally expected some dance scenes. When we got to that point we found a score of young women doing an ensemble number on the stage, and then after this was over Miss Stewart came out of her dressing-room and bowed before the curtain, being showered with flowers. Of course this was all wrong, and since that fact has been registered emphatically with the company, I understand that it is quite possible that scenes will be made to put this particular incident over a little better.

The entire offering was lacking in the necessary dramatic moments to make it register as worth while, and the work of the supporting cast was so ordinary that it handicapped Miss Stewart and kept her from registering as effectively as she generally does.

In the supporting cast were Denton Vane, Evart Overton, John Ardizonia, Bernard Sigel, Madam Rofimonda and Mr. Turin.

The Box Office Angle

This story might have ben a good one-reeler six years ago, but it certainly is not present-day feature material. If Miss Stewart has a big box office draw in your community you may be able to play this and sneak by with a carefully prepared alibi when they come out and kick. If you have a community where it is necessary to deliver all the time, I'd surely dodge this.

There is no question in my mind as to Miss Stewart's power to pull you business, and of course her work helps this in spots.

If you play this, talk about Miss Stewart and forget to say anything at all about the production. Instead of making any specific promises about the merit of the offering, you might say that it is a story of an innocent Russian maiden and her mother, who thought that a beautiful home and wonderful clothes came free as a part of the training for the Imperial Russian Ballet. That sounds interesting, and that really is the basis of the plot which is dragged through unnecesary footage.

IMPRESSIVE STAR IN SPY MYSTERY UNCONVINCING, BUT GETS OVER

E. H. Sothern in

THE MAN OF MYSTERY

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Frederick Thompson
AUTHOR	A. C. Gunter
CAMERAMAN	Charles J. Davis
AS A WHOLE	Sothern's prestige and atmosphere may carry it
STORY	A bit jumpy and messy, but interesting
DIRECTION	Overshot mark in trying for lightings; allowed theatric characterizations that marred humanness of story
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some very good; some too contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Many spotlight effects; some good; some gave halation
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	A bit theatric, but rather impressive
SUPPORT	Mostly foreign types; some too "actory"
EXTERIORS	Some very good; some just acceptable
INTERIORS	Generally good; mostly dark backgrounds
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-one minutes

YOU will probably find that this will register as a satifactory offering with most of your patrons, principally because they will not be able to put their fingers on any specific thing which they think is wrong about it. The fact that Mr. Sothern is the star will impress a good many of them, and the offering is filled with spotlight effects against dark backgrounds, which gives it a certain distinction and lifts it out of the ordinary cheap production class.

I'm sure that your discriminating fans will not be enthusiastic about this, even though they accept it, because the action lacks the human note which gives a picture genuine appeal. There are so many foreign types, foreign names and involved situations, with continuity that jumps hither and thither, that the general impression is rather a messy one.

The story concerned a diplomat who was near to losing his wife's love because of a plotting mother-in-law, who was involved in a spy system which threatened the government.

This diplomat, who was possessed of much beard, found himself near Vesuvius at a time which gave him an inspiration. He plotted to have it understood that he was killed by an eruption of this volcano, and, through visiting a sanitarium where they changed the personal appearance of the patients by "baking" them, he managed to come back into his world incognito, without even his friends or his wife recognizing him.

He carried out the plans he had made before his announced "death," and finally trapped his mother-in-law and her accomplice at the same time gaining the love of his wife.

While the action doesn't convince, it is fairly interesting and there is a certain amount of suspense. It doesn't grip as a drama, but it holds the attention fairly well.

Charlotte Ives, in support of Mr. Sothern, was quite pleasing, but she was about the only character in the supporting cast who really registered in that manner.

Brinsley Shaw, as Stroggi, the "willun," was entirely too much inclined to overact, with the result that his scenes became funny at times.

Others in the cast were Vilda Varesi Mr. Roberts and Mr. Siegel.

The Box Office Angle.

The name of Mr. Sothern should be worth money at the box office, despite the fact that neither of his other offerings have been anything to rave over.

If your patrons are intelligent and discriminating, I wouldn't make any specific promises in reference to the quality of this production, because they may disagree with you emphatically. You'd better just talk about the star and say that it is a story of diplomatic mystery.

I wouldn't make too much fuss about the thought of a man who was believed to be dead and came back to life again, because that thing has been done so much that it'll sound painfully ancient. We've had about sixteen hundred and eighty-four variations of the "Enoch Arden" idea in films, in the last few years, most of them poor. Consequently this basic idea wouldn't make any

GOOD ATMOSPHERE AND TENSE MOMENTS. SLUMPS AT END

Frank Keenan in

THE BRIDE OF HATE

With Margery Wilson

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Walter Edwards
AUTHOR	John Lynch
SCENARIO BY	Monte M. Katterjohn
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Charles Kaufman
AS A WHOLE	Powerful drama in distinctive atmosphere
STORY	Held beautifully with big moments; end rather convenient
DIRECTION	Handled difficult situations nicely; the "Before the War" times beautifully
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; a few muddy bits
LIGHTINGS	Some particularly artistic bits; occasionally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Decidedly impressive; dominated action
SUPPORT	Miss Wilson very appealing; others excellent
EXTERIORS	Very well chosen; quite artistic
INTERIORS	Excellent; some particularly well dressed
DETAIL	Generally fine; had a few slips
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

AN unusual story this, providing Mr. Keenan with a peculiar part which he handles in his forceful, dominating manner.

The atmosphere of "Before the War" times was beautifully registered, with many particularly artistic exteriors and interiors, some of which showed that infinite care had been taken in securing the proper effects.

The plot told of a wealthy Southern doctor, known for his generosity, whose grand-niece was ruined by a young man, who had taken advaniatge of the doctor's generosity and friendship.

While the doctor was winning a very pretty slave in a poker game on his return from a trip to St. Louis, the ruined girl killed herself rather than face her guardian.

Converted into a vengeful fiend by his loss, the doctor deliberately planned to introduce the guilty young man to the slave he had bought, and in the course of time he managed to arrange a marriage between these two. The slave was presented as a Spanish girl.

Immediately after the ceremony he publicly declared that the bride was a nigger and his slave, thus bringing disgrace upon the young man.

Up to this time the picture was tensely dramatic and beautifully done. It slumped from here with a convenient finale, which sent the villain into the fever district to be killed off while the doctor met the man from whom he won the slave, dying in the fever district, and learned that, after all, the heroine wasn't a nigger, but a sure-enough white girl.

According to the name on the birth certificate shown, it was evidently intended at one time that the girl should turn out to be the daughter of Keenan's son, but since this was not definitely referred to I presume they decided to skip that point and forget to change the birth certificate insert. That insert should be altered, because it certainly is unnecessary to have it quite so convenient as to make this girl Mr. Keenan's grand-daughter. He could accept her as his ward without that.

There was also an error in the showing of inserts in the big scene where the girl was publicly declared white, since the bill of sale was flashed where it should have been the birth certificate.

Mr. Keenan carried most of the big situations without allowing the dramatic pauses to run too long, and the work of Miss Wilson as the slave girl carried a decided appeal.

Jerome Storme, as the willun, played a number of difficult scenes with a truly intelligent timing of his changing emotions.

The poker game was well done and the general atmosphere was particularly pleasing, but I must call somebody down for permitting the showing of modern life boat equipment on a Mississippi steamer before the war.

The Box Office Angle

You can safely promise that this is an unusual story with truly tense dramatic moments, and you should be able to get some money with it because Mr. Keenan has had a number of big productions and this affords him an opportunity to do the sort of distinctive characterization for which he is so well known.

You can say that this is a story of a man who had a heart as a big as a washtub, who was made a fiend by a friend who betrayed his confidence. Promise that it is rich in artistic atmosphere, registering the picturesque life of the South before the War.

Margery Wilson has done a number of very pleasing things in Triangle productions in recent months, and undoubtedly she has rather a large following. I'd call attention to the fact that she supports Mr. Keenan in this.

HUMAN TOUCHES HELP VERY ANCIENT OBVIOUS PLOT

Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore in

A GIRL LIKE THAT

Famous Players—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Del Henderson
AUTHORS	Rosewell Dague and Paul West
CAMERAMAN	Lewis W. Physioc
AS A WHOLE	Ancient idea fairly well handled
STORY	"Innocent girl forced to be crook, saved by hero's love" idea; Formula No. 63
DIRECTION	Gave some human touches, but many scenes missed fire
PHOTOGRAHY	Varied
LIGHTINGS	Some good; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Made characters human
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Small-town atmosphere, but not artistic
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Several slips
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

MISS FENWICK and Mr. Moore tried hard to make this human, and the characterization given by Mr. Moore helped a lot in keeping some of the wilder melodrama from registering as entirely impossible.

Miss Fenwick, as the innocent daughter of a crook forced to take part in a proposed bank robbery, with the result that she, because of her love for the cashier eventually trapped the robbers, held the center of most of the action with a characterization which pleased. Certainly her work will do much towards making this acceptable with the average audience, even though they kick pretty hard about the story.

This old, old formula has seen such service that it seems criminal to try to get back into action as a five-reel feature.

There is nothing that could be called suspense in the development of the situations, and any audience will be far ahead of the story all the way. The general atmosphere of the offering was not what could be called artistic, but the small-town stuff was rather well handled.

The safe in the bank, which was the object of attack, and consequently very much in evidence during the development of the plot, must have been a very, very old safe, because its face was quite "wrinkled." It seems inexcusable that such a prominent company should permit such an awful prop in a feature production.

The final situation was very badly developed, because there was no logical need for Miss Fenwick to allow the robbery to proceed as it did. The robbers could have been, and should have been, arrested for murder, instead of permitting the robbery to go on. As pictured, it would seem that Miss Fenwick was as guilty as any of the others. It was also noticed that, despite the fact that he had warning of the intended attempt on the bank, the sheriff didn't arrive until after most of the excitement was over. The two bank robbers fell like dead men when shot, but immediately afterwards they got on their feet and marched away as captives. Truly, "They do it in the movies."

The cluch on the finish was delayed unnecessarily.

Olive Thomas, as Mr. Moore's sister, was rather pretty, and she possibly may be worth watching if given some opportunities.

Others in the cast were Tom O'Keefe, Edwin Sturgess, Harry Lee, Jack Dillon and Alice Thomas.

The Box Office Angle

Because of the fact that Miss Fenwick and Mr. Moore registered some nice human bits, it may be possible for you to get this by as entertaining.

Miss Fenwick has been starred in a number of productions, but has never appeared to advantage until this picture and her recent Famous Players offering. Mr. Moore is a well-known favorite and their names may be worth more than you think at the box office.

To stir up a bit of interest in this you might use lines along this style: "Sure you would never suspect 'A Girl Like That.'" Use this line for several days before announcing that this is the name of a picture that you are to show on a certain date.

STAR'S PERSONALITY HELP OLD IDEA. VERY WELL HANDLED.

Ethel Barrymore in

THE WHITE RAVEN

Rolfe-Metro

DIRECTOR	George D. Baker
AUTHOR	Charles A. Logue
SCENARIO BY	George D. Baker
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Martinelli
AS A WHOLE	Rather well done; impressed despite obvious development
STORY	Provided unique contrasts in atmosphere; an old idea, rather obvious, but holds interest
DIRECTION	Gave splendid atmosphere and good action, with many good close-ups
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; a few poor spots
LIGHTINGS	Many decidedly effective
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Good characterizations, but lost kick on finish
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Very well handled
DETAIL	Generally good; a few nice bits
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

CERTAINLY this is a novelty, if for no other reason than that the offering opens with Miss Barrymore as a dance-hall girl in an Alaskan roughneck resort. Later the character becomes the sort of part we have come to expect Miss Barrymore in, but I believe the novelty of the opening gives you an exceptional opportunity for advertising. The star handled this part beautifully, with the exception of a few points, the most important of which was the final scene where she allowed the climax to slump badly when she failed to register the proper surprise upon discovering herself face to face with her sweetheart, when she expected to face a bearded, unknown brute.

The story told of a girl whose father had been ruined by a villainous partner, the girl being discovered in a dance hall in Alaska, where she was trying to find a way to make it possible for her to train her voice in the East in the hope of some day meeting and crushing her father's betrayer.

She offered to give herself for one night to the winner of a big card game in order to secure necessary funds to go East. A bearded stranger won, and then, because of her pleading, he agreed to allow her to proceed on condition that she would come to him to "pay" when he called.

The body of the story dealt with her success in opera, and her trapping the villain who had ruined her father. She fell in love with a young man, but when, at the height of her triumph, she received a notice that the man who had won her in the Alaskan camp was claiming her, she turned from her sweetheart to go to the faraway country to pay her debt.

When she reached Alaska she found what had once been a cabin transformed into a beautiful home, and the man who claimed her was her youthful sweetheart, who had removed his beard. Since the audience well knew all the time that the sweetheart was the bearded stranger, there was no great element of suspense in this, but nevertheless it was decidedly interesting and well developed.

Miss Barrymore's failure to register surprise on the finish allowed the climax to slump badly.

In trapping the villain, a telephone was concealed on a small table under some flowers, when it would have been much better to have concealed only a very small phone transmitter.

The stock exchange scenes were well handled and gotten through with in a hurry, which helped.

Miss Barrymore's characterization was a bit "cold," but will register very well with almost any audience. The novelty of seeing her as a dance hall girl and then as a successful prima donna makes the offering rather a novelty.

Walter Hitchcock gave the necessary dignity to the villainous partner and kept this character nicely within bounds at all times.

William Davidson was rather pleasing as the hero, although at times he seemed to fall a bit short of the possibilities of some of the situations.

George H. Wright as Smithson, made this part stand out.

They gave up a close-up of a five-dollar bill on which a message had been written from the villainous partner to the girl's father, advising that he use it to buy a gun with which he kill himself. This bill was not real money, and I believe that real money should have been used. At one time there was a general impression that money could not be photographed, but I've seen it used quite often in films, and certainly in this case some portion of a bill would have registered to much better advantage than the "phoney" which was used.

Others in the cast were Phil Sandford, Ethel Dayton, H. H. Patee, Mario Majeroni, Viola Fortescue and Ned Finlay.

The Box Office Angle

With the opportunity to talk about Miss Barrymore appearing as a dance hall girl who afterward becomes a successful prima donna, this becomes a real business-getting possibility. You can safely promise that the production has been well produced, and, even though the idea of the plot is a bit old and somewhat obvious, I am quite sure that it will satisfy generally. The atmosphere does much toward carrying it.

You might call this a tense, dramatic story of a woman willing to give herself to the highest bidder to avenge her father's ruin.

ELEMENTARY PLOT MISSES FIRE; LACKS NOTE OF CONVICTION

Constance Talmadge in

A GIRL OF THE TIMBER CLAIMS

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Paul Powell
AUTHOR	Mary H. O'Connor
AS A WHOLE	Obvious, unconvincing lightweight offering
STORY	Old idea with old incidents; failed to register
DIRECTION	Handicapped by lack of material and personalities
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just acceptable; muddy at times
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Had lots of "pep," but didn't quite ring true
SUPPORT	Very ordinary; lacked personality
EXTERIORS	Mostly woods; not really artistic
INTERIORS	Ordinary; some very bad back drops
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-six minutes

THIS lacks the essentials to make it rank as a success. The story was obvious from the first and rather convenient in many of the incidents, with no real personalities in support of Miss Talmadge to make an impression.

The plot told of an effort to "jump" timberlands owned by Miss Talmadge, whose father died about the third reel, leaving her to lead the timber folk against the land grabbers.

The government investigator, who was conveniently able to gain a place with the pirates, was placed on her land as a squatter, and she promptly shot him, afterwards nursing him back to health and falling in love with him.

Later, the squatters burned the investigator's cabin, with one of their gang in it, thinking that they had killed the hero. The heroine found when she came to see the investigator afterwards that he was her hero and that he hadn't been burned at all.

Miss Talmadge fussed around a lot and registered a few good little moments and bits of business, but on the whole, her characterization didn't exactly ring true. The entire offering, in fact, seemed to be on such an artificial plane that it didn't convince or grip.

It will probably be noticed by a good many that the youth playing the contemptible secertary was allowed to remain on the job by the hero, even after he had proven himself a pretty cheap rascal. That certainly was an error on somebody's part.

In the supporting casts were A. D. Sears, Clyde Hopkins, Beau Byrd, Bennie Schumann, Joseph Singleton, T. A. Turner, Charles Lee and Mrs. Talmadge.

The Box Office Angle.

The fact that Miss Talmadge has a very big part in "Intolerance," is about the only angle that gives this a box office value. The story is ordinary, obvious melodrama, presented in a rather ordinary manner.

I'd advise that you dodge this if you can, but if you have to use it center all of your attention upon Miss Talmadge from the "Intolerance" angle—she being the Babylonian girl in that big picture—and also from the fact that she is the sister of Norma Talmadge.

There is an incident which deals with a young man who was always proclaiming how big his heart is, and yet he lacked the initiative to defend himself from land grabbers. The girl drove the men from his land and told him that if his heart wasn't so big he might be better able to take care of himself. You might use that angle in your advertising, saying: "Is your heart so big that you can't take care of yourself? Think it over! See 'A Girl of the Timber Claims.'"

OLD REP SHOW MELLER FAVORITE RATHER ORDINARY

Vivian Reed in

THE PRINCESS OF PATCHES

Selig—K.-E.-S.-E. Service

DIRECTOR	Al Green
AUTHOR	Mark Swan
SCENARIO BY	Gilson Willets
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary production of old "meller" favorite
STORY	Famous old "rep" show play
DIRECTION	Followed accepted melo methods
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary; muddy in spots
LIGHTINGS	Too uniform; sometimes poor
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	Didn't stand out
SUPPORT	Quite ordinary
EXTERIORS	Not artistic
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

MOST of the folks who patronized the old "rep" show companies, who changed their bills over night, playing at ten-twenty-thirty, will remember "The Princess of Patches." In the days of Jessie Mae Hall, Chester Devon and other "rep" show favorites this melodrama of the ragged heiress and her tramp friend was one of the sure-fire offerings. As transferred to the screen, the production has about the same standard that it had on the stage, because surely it is only ordinary melodrama, as produced by Selig.

The characters are portrayed by an ordinary but acceptable cast, with no personality standing out in a manner to make it register above the others. The general atmosphere of the production lacked distinction and frequently the photography was muddy.

The story told, with considerable detail, how the heiress was being kept from her inheritance by the "willuns," but, of course, on the finish she triumphed with her friend, the tramp, the big scene which was provided to make it a real melodrama being the destruction of a houseboat by an explosion. Since those who were trapped on the boat discovered the burning fuse and could have very easily put it out, instead of wildly rushing about and then swimming to shore, the explosion missed fire entirely as a thrill. It was the oldest of the old tricks from ordinary "mellers."

Because of the introduction of quite a bit of comedy, this may register as acceptable with the sort of audience which formerly patronized the "rep" shows.

Violet de Biccari, who played the princess early in the production, was a rather pleasing youngster and registered a few good bits of comedy with some funny pickaninnies.

Miss Reed, who was the princess in the final reels, was pretty, but didn't make any unusual impression.

The Box Office Angle

If you happen to be catering to the sort of patronage which formerly supported the ten-twent'-thirt' "rep" shows, they'll probably accept this as interesting and may even be pleased with it as melodrama. Certainly I would not present this sort of thing in a theatre where you have a discriminating community audience which knows the possibilities of film production from having seen real features.

There is no advertising angle except to call this one of the most famous melodramas of the stage. I want to warn you against playing up the explosion of the houseboat, because it was rather sad as a "thrill."

SLAP STICK HOKUM FARCE MADE AT CONEY SHOULD REGISTER

Marie Dressler and Johnny Hines in

TILLIE WAKES UP

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Harry Davenport
AUTHOR	Mark Swan
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Edward Horn
AS A WHOLE	Coney Island comedy with many laughs
STORY	Provided skeleton for slapstick hokum, titles will help
DIRECTION	Kept things moving
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Caught some odd angles
STARS	Registered some good bits
SUPPORT	Fitted as fillers
EXTERIORS	Chosen for laugh possibilities
INTERIORS	Acceptable; Coney Island stuff interesting
DETAIL	Mostly hokum
TIME	Forty-eight minutes

SINCE Marie Dressler scored a tremendous success in "Tillie's Punctured Romance" with Charlie Chaplin, and that offering is to be reissued very soon, I'd say that you can count on this as a production which is a good, safe bet anywhere.

It is mostly rough-and-tumble hokum comedy constructed around the skeleton of a story provides a reasonable situation for all the comedy stuff. The situation is simply that of two neighbor families, where Johnny Hines is the henpecked husband of one and Miss Dressler the muchly-abused wife of the other. Both of the abused parties are putting up the coin for their dominating partners.

When left alone, they decided to go out and start something, with the result that they joined forces and took a trip to Coney Island. The remainder of the picture is devoted to their experiences in the many fun-providing devices of the big amusement resort. These will undoubtedly register as a pleasing novelty in most sections, with many of the bits of business providing plenty of fun.

Miss Dressler works rather hard making grimaces, but her work will hardly register as overplaying, save with the supercritical. Mr. Hines gets in a number of good little touches and is, on the whole, rather a satisfactory team-mate for Miss Dressler.

From the very first, we had many long titles, which were written somewhat along the line of George Ade's slang. At first these antagonized a bit, because it seemed that they were being forced into the story, but after you got accustomed to their presence they helped materially in getting laughs. These titles, as a whole, do much toward keeping the offering moving.

In the supporting cast were Frank Beamish, Rudy de Remer, Ruth Barrett and Jack Brown.

The Box Office Angle.

While this is really only the regular slapstick hokum comedy which we find in many of the Keystones, extended into feature length, still I believe that the name of Miss Dressler, properly exploited, will be sufficient to carry it over, and it should be a good bet almost anywhere as a relief from many of the ordinary features now presented as drama.

For a Saturday attraction this should be a "bear," since it'll appeal particularly to the kiddies because of the Coney Island stuff. In the small towns, where most of your patrons have never seen one of the big amusement parks, many of the devices introduced into this will be real novelties.

I would emphasize particularly the fact that most of this picture was made in Coney Island, the greatest amusement resort in the world, and call attention to the fact that you can see more of Steeplechase Park in this picture than can be seen by spending a day at Coney Island. You get the benefit of the fun from most of the best laugh-getters.

UNCONVINCING WHITE SLAVE MELLER DOCTORED WITH TITLES

William Conklin and Lois Meredith in

SOLD AT AUCTION

Balboa-Pathe

DIRECTOR	Sherwood MacDonald
AUTHOR	Dan Whitcomb
CAMERAMAN	Joseph Brotherton
AS A WHOLE	White slave "meller," doctored with titles; a sad mess
STORY	Unconvincing, convenient, wild-eyed "meller"
DIRECTION	Worked with broad strokes; lacked fine touches
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Handicapped by situations
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Very ordinary
INTERIORS	Poor
DETAIL	Made funny by titles
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes

HAVING finished this as a very convenient plot leading up to a white slave situation where a girl was to be sold at auction to a number of bachelors, among whom was her own father, the producers evidently decided that this was entirely too "raw," and so they have rearranged all of the titles so that the woman conducting the auction sale is called a lady who has made a fortune by arranging matrimonial adventures. Her drunken lover is called her brother and the auction proposition is supposed to be to sell the girl to a husband. This change of the titles will hardly fool any one, since the action is too plainly made to present the vulgar coarseness of the popular conception of "white slavers."

The first of the story is the ancient, convenient situation of a woman who was keeping a child as guardian, taking the money and substituting her own child, making the heiress a servant.

The abused servant ran away and got on a very obliging freight train which took her to New Orleans, where her father lived. Then we had the white slave stuff, finishing with her father trying to buy her at auction, which, of course, straightened everything out.

There was a woful lack of artistic distinction about this offering, the direction being done with a broad stroke and much surface action which left it painfully unconvincing. It was rather evident that the picture had been cut quite a bit and there was none too much attention given to detail.

In one place, where the "drunk" picked up the heiress-waif in his automobile and drove her to the home of the white slave merchant, he started with one chauffeur and finished with another. That's sure going some!

The white slave dealer wore several low and behold gowns, which I presume was done to prove that she was "that sort."

In one place they had a title with a bit of action which is sure to register a yell, because the title said that the father was "troubled with memories of the past," and then we had a scene of him seated in his home surrounded by a bunch of wild women, with one of them doing an Oriental dance. Just what this had to do with "memories of the past" was rather hard for me to determine.

Miss Meredith and Mr. Conklin were both badly handicapped by the situations provided, and, as a matter of fact, it couldn't be truthfully said that any one gave an intelligent characterization in this.

In the supporting cast were Marguerite Nichols, Frank Mayo, Charles Dudley and Lucy Blake.

The Box Office Angle

If you are catering to an element which accepts cheap melodrama and likes a touch of the rough stuff now and then, you can probably play this and get it by. If you have a discriminating community audience, I certainly would not touch this with a ten-foot pole.

The attempt to smooth over the stiuations by changing the titles has certainly not accomplished the desired purpose, because most any one will see what has been done.

There's nothing about the production to justify your promising a worth-while entertainment, and you can't talk about the auction situation, because the titles now in the offering make this decidedly ridiculous. They may have a marriage market in the Far East, but that sort of thing hasn't become the custom in this country.

The title which says that the heiress "has been stunned by the rapid rush of events" will probably fail to register. I presume that she was stunned by something else which has been removed from the film in the white-washing process.

I'd say that this would be a good one to dodge, unless you cater to a transient audience which likes cheap melodrama.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ELEMENTARY ETERNAL TRIANGLE PLOT FAILS TO REGISTER

Franklyn Farnum and Leah Baird in

THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	William Worthington
AUTHOR	George Hively
SCENARIO BY	Fred Myton
CAMERAMAN	Friend F. Baker
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing; dreary; uninteresting
STORY	Ancient "misunderstood-situation, wronged wife who seeks vengeance" junk
DIRECTION	Didn't help
PHOTOGRAPHY	Rather good
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective
CAMERA WORK	Good
STARS	Ordinary
SUPPORT	Very ordinary
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some very good; others ordinary
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

RUBE GOLDBERG might claim some connection with this plot, because about the only thing it proved was that "Father Was Right."

The plot takes an awful lot of footage to get over the time-honored situations of the society man who married a country girl and afterward neglected her, only to misunderstand when he found a friend trying to embrace her, with the result that he got a divorce which made the wife an avenging "willuness," since the shock of the divorce killed her mother.

In one title we found that she had become the mistress of the man who had caused her unhappiness, and then in due time she made love to her ex-husband, now happily married, and played with him until the man who was keeping her found the ex-husband with her, this resulting in a fight, whereupon the avenging one shot her keeper and then accused the ex-husband of the crime.

Meanwhile, the ex-husband's second wife had left him flat, and we finished up with a court room scene. About the time the jury was ready to pronounce the ex-hubby guilty of murder, he died in his cell. Pleasant little thing, isn't it?

Neither Mr. Farnum nor Miss Baird registered a personality that would make any decided appeal, and surely this is an unfortunate story, because there's no sympathy for any of the characters.

Gertrude Aster, as the second wife, gave the most pleasing performance of any of the cast.

From the atmosphere viewpoint, the production was rather good, but good lightings and reasonably good sets can't save such a story as this.

In the supporting cast were Charles Perley, Countess Du Cello and Seymour Hastings.

At frequent intervals in this we had a double-exposure effect, bringing in a white-robed figure, who must have been Mr. Symbolical, because I couldn't exactly dope out who else he might be. When the first wife found that her divorce caused the death of her mother, Mr. Symbolical took her soul from her body and later, at frequent intervals, he visited her to approve or disapprove of what she was doing.

The Box Office Angle.

I certainly would say that most of your regulars will consider this very disappointing. It lacks sympathy, a real love interest, and in the end doesn't solve any problem or preach any point. It is poorly produced, being very slow, and lacks the human touches which save many poor stories.

I doubt if the names of Mr. Farnum and Miss Baird will pull you anything at the box office, and although the title is sensational, I'd say that you should be careful about boosting this very strongly, because the dramatic situations miss fire.

CRUDE, WILD-EYED MELLER SURELY IS A SIN

Holbrook Blinn in

PRIDE

McClure-Seven Sins-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
CAMERAMAN	George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE	Crude "meller"; unconvincing, jumpy cheap
STORY	Awful
DIRECTION	"Movie meller" methods
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good and bad
STAR	Had him playing a cheap "willun"
SUPPORT	Nothing to rave over
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Just acceptable
DETAIL	Jumpy; convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

AFTER seeing two of these "Sins" I am quite impressed with the title chosen for them. We heard so much about the McClure people going to show us how to make good films that possibly we took these things too much to heart.

The "Sins" they have committed will certainly hurt the business if any new patrons are brought to the theatres because of their ads. to see these offerings as examples of advanced art in making of feature films.

This, second in the series, is another cheap melodrama with wild-eyed action which never convinced, and it isn't even interesting because it is such palpable junk. Most of the situations would fit in properly if they were making a burlesque on the old movie melodramas, and I have a hunch that those responsible for this have patterned their productions after the sensational serials, which have managed to make money even though they don't raise the standard of film production any.

There is one thing to be seriously considered in the booking of these wild melodramas as features. I believe there is a certain psychology which makes serials acceptable to the average audience, even your intelligent patrons, where they would balk at accepting a five-reel feature of the same calibre. Your intelligent patrons accept your feature production to be something worthy of their spending an evening to see. They consider the serial as a "filler." Now, if you are going to give them one of these wild things as the main portion of your evening's entertainment, I believe you are going to get a serious kick. Certainly this has not been done in such a manner as to make any favorable impression upon an intelligent audience.

Holbrook Blinn has been unfortunate in most of the things he has done before the camera. Capable actor that he is, he has been cast in various productions which certainly didn't add anything to his prestige as an artist.

In this he is presented as a typical cheap "willun" of the ordinary "meller" breed, and in some scenes it is quite ridiculous, particularly if you happen to know of any good thing Mr. Blinn has ever done, to see him putting over the rough stuff.

In the first of these "Sins," Shirley Mason was shown to us in great detail. To be sure that we had a perfect idea as to what constitutes this McClure star, they sent her out in one situation, in this offering, in a bathing suit, so that she could drive an automobile to escape. Of course, there were two reasons for her wearing the bathing suit. One was to show her bare legs and her "figger," since it was one of those suits what had no frills. The other reason was to equip her properly to meet the emergencies of the trip, because the director knew that the scenario called for her running off a cliff in the automobile, landing in a lake across which she tried to swim to escape the "willun." As usual in such circumstances in our wild-eyed "mellers," the hero was conveniently placed so that he might be looking through field glasses at the exact spot where the accident occurred, and consequently he rushed to the rescue.

There were so many things wrong with this that it isn't worth while for me to detail the slips. Suffice it to say that it is cheap "mellerdrammer" that loses any thought of characterization to suggest a moral.

The story—at least they called it one—has to do with a girl's desire to marry a count who is a "phoney," and the desire of Mr. Blinn, the wicked wealthy "willun," to possess her. Of course, George LeGuere, as the hero, appears at the psychological moment, sometimes in rather ridiculous situations.

In the supporting cast were Helen Strickland and Guido Colucci.

The Box Office Angle

I must tell you again that it is possible, because of the tremendous advertising given these offerings, that you can get the money with them, although it will be harder on this one than it was on the first because the first was one bad.

If you can safely take your chances to give an alibi after you've disappointed your regulars, then you may be able to get some money with this. Personally, I would not play this stuff in a community house.

If you are catering to a transient patronage or to a class that likes the blood-and-thunder stuff, then go to it.

STAR REGISTERS STRONGLY IN FRIVOLOUS WIFE CLASSIC

Alice Brady in

THE HUNGRY HEART

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Emile Chautard
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, with very good moments
STORY	Had several good situations, developing pathos that registered
DIRECTION	Gave interesting atmosphere touches; developed characterizations carefully
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied between good and fair
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; others quite ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	One of her best characterizations; will register big
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Venice bits very good; several others quite artistic
INTERIORS	Generally too much furniture, but quite acceptable
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-four minutes

MISS BRADY has a real opportunity in this, and I am glad to report that she gives us one of the best characterizations she has ever registered in her screen work. There are many close-ups, and these help decidedly in putting the dramatic points over, since they held the necessary touch of intimacy with the characters.

The story has been adapted from the famous play "Frou-Frou," the central thread of the plot concerning a frivolous young wife whose sister gradually usurps the wife's place in her home, causing the wife to elope with the young lover, which brought disgrace when the husband killed the lover in a duel.

At the end, the wife, weak from illness, came home to beg forgiveness before she died, and this scene was decidedly well handled. She was forgiven, the film ending with her death.

Miss Brady, as the frivolous wife, registered the varying emotions of this little butterfly, building in the more powerful dramatic scenes to a strength which made her characterization quite impressive.

Gerda Holmes, as the sacrificing sister, who managed to take the wife's place in her own home, held this characterization nicely within bounds, and we had a number of very effective scenes between Miss Brady and Miss Holmes.

George MacQuarrie, as the husband, gave a dignity to his characterization which carried many tense moments with just the proper dramatic pause. Mr. MacQuarrie had both poise and authority.

Edward T. Langford, as the wife's lover, handled a difficult part without allowing it to slump.

There were times when the action seemed a bit stilted, but, for the most part, this was kept quite human and moved smoothly.

The scenes of Venice were very well handled. M. Chautard getting very artistic shots of this "propped" set, which has been so well-constructed that it will certainly make many decide that the film was really photographed in Italy.

In the supporting cast were Alec B. Francis, John Dudley, Edna Whistler, Charles Hartley, Josephine Earle, Horace Haine, Ray Carrara and Mrs. J. H. Brundage.

The Box Office Angle

With Miss Brady's name to exploit and the additional prestige of the fact that this is an adaptation of the famous old play which most everyone has heard of even though they may not have seen it, I believe that you can get some money with this offering.

You can safely promise that it is a human drama telling of the habit created by a frivolous wife's failure to realize soon enough her duty to her home.

The story will hold them after they're in, but I'd advise that you concentrate your advertising upon the title and the name of the star rather than upon the elements of the plot, because I have a feeling that many have tired of the "eternal triangle" problem stories unless they have some decidedly unique angle.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

MARSHAL FARNUM
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
FEATURE PRODUCER

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
1310 Avenue P, Brooklyn, N. Y.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

EDGAR LEWIS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES
THANHOUSER NEW ROCHELLE

HENRY OTTO
Directing
Harold Lockwood and May Allison

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

CHARLES M. SEAY
FEATURE PRODUCER

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID'S IS READ NOT SKIMMED

I Am Making a "ROLL OF HONOR" of the BEST FEATURES Each Month

WATCH FOR IT

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 1, 1917. NO. 5 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
549	Fox	72.3	67.6	72
1518	Paramount	71.8	66.5	268
380	Metro	70.3	66.2	33
269	Vitagraph	68.8	67.5	52
1384	Triangle	71.4	63.9	304
359	World	67.6	60.4	31

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1518	Paramount	71.8	66.5	268
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
2	Girl of Golden West	95	85	1
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
4	Goose Girl	97	96	3
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
3	David Harum	82	68
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
3	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	86	53	1
1	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	56	1
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
4	Secret Orchard	88	85
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
1	The Majesty of the Law	40	40
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
3	Explorer	69	57
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
4	Fatal Card	72	66
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
6	White Pearl	70	73
4	Blackbirds	57	58
6	Chorus Lady	70	65
4	Secret Sin	76	83	1
6	The Yankee Girl	58	54
5	Masqueraders	59	58
10	Carmen	80	91	2
9	Still Waters	85	80	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
6	Armstrong's Wife	85	65
8	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	2
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
15	The Cheat	94	78	5
7	The Reform Candidate	80	49
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	6
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
7	Temptation	76	70	1
6	The Foundling	79	77	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
4	Mice and Men	79	78	1
5	Golden Chance	77	66	1
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
5	The Spider	85	63	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
7	Nearly a King	49	49	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	89	5
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	2
7	Diplomacy	58	53	1
11	Poor Little Peppina	86	82	5
13	To Have and To Hold	73	69	3
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	61	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	2
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
10	Audrey	75	75	3
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	51	1
7	The Race	70	66
6	Eternal Grind	68	81	1
6	Love Mask	61	54	2
7	Molly Make-Believe	90	88	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
10	Heart of Nora Flynn	69	56	4
6	Moment Before	50	63	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	46
13	Maria Rosa	82	80	4
11	Allen Souls	68	66	1
11	Fued Girl	61	54
15	Pasquale	78	52	3

Reports	% P.	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
13 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59		2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62		4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53		1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
12 Making of Maddalene	62	54		3
20 Silks and Satins	86	88		14
13 Destiny's Toy	59	50
15 The Clown	78	54		3
15 Susie Snowflake	66	57		2
14 World's Great Snare	72	78		4
18 American Beauty	62	62		3
21 The Dupe	65	63		1
20 The Smugglers	53	49		1
24 Selfish Woman	72	69		4
36 Davy Crockett	67	62
28 Dream Girl	69	64		3
27 Under Cover	79	75		5
27 International Marriage	55	51		1
27 Common Ground	61	64		1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95		23
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63		3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72		3
21 Little Lady Eileen	87	90		8
20 Stronger Love	50	50
21 Public Opinion	82	72		4
19 Rolling Stones	63	63		2
18 Honorable Friend	70	62		1
17 Victory of Conscience	59	60		2
17 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71		2
18 Parson of Panamint	80	68		5
11 Big Sister	47	58
10 Reward of Patience	62	55
10 The House of Lies	73	61		1
10 Daughter of MacGregor	51	44
13 Ashes of Embers	87	86		5
11 Quest of Life	55	55
9 Anton, the Terrible	43	48
11 The Lash	59	52
6 The Storm	53	53		1
9 The Intrigue	85	44
8 Her Father's Son	69	56
7 Witchcraft	41	44
5 The Kiss	71	67
6 Rainbow Princess	84	69
5 Seventeen	92	72
4 Miss George Washington	100	100		3
8 Heir to the Hoorah	78	69		1
6 Soul of Kura San	89	75
6 Son of Erin	83	69
6 Unprotected	61	59
5 Years of the Locust	53	51
4 Plow Girl	78	53
2 The Yellow Pawn	40	55		1
3 Nanette of the Wilds	23	45		2
1 Martyrdom of Philip Strong	32	25
1 Coney Island Princess	40	50		1
8 Road to Love	80	40		1
8 Oliver Twist	88	25		1
2 Victoria Cross	30	60		1
2 Traveling Salesman	80	63		2
2 Right Direction	70	63		1
2 Snow White	100	100		2
1 Redeeming Love	40	50		1
2 Slave Market	100	99		2
2 Evil Eye	20	38		1
2 Great Expectations	80	23
2 Happiness of Three Women	80	33		1
2 Betty to the Rescue	38	38
2 Girl Like That	50	33

TRIANGLE

1381 Triangle	71.4	63.9	304
9 The Iron Strain	81	65		2
8 The Lamb	85	73		3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63		1
10 The Coward	83	66		1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56		2
12 The Disciple	84	75		2
7 Matrimony	81	74		2
5 Sable Lorcha	64	53
5 Golden Claw	65	74
7 Double Trouble	64	61		2
6 Aloha Oe	59	65		1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
6 Jordan Is a Hard Road	54	52
6 Winged Idol	53	52
8 Penitents	28	32
10 Edge of the Abyss	68	61
3 Submarine Pirate	85	78		1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
9 Between Men	72	69		1
12 Let Katy Do It	85	64		6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	53	43		1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50		1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78		1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76		5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69		2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68		2
22 Peggy	95	91		15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
8 Last Act	80	78		1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57		1
16 Hell's Hinges	93	88		10
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81		8
13 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	77		3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77		2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62		1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65		1
14 The Raiders	79	71
12 Habit of Happiness	92	86		4
8 Waifs	70	59		1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60		1
15 The Aryan	84	85		6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70		1
14 Stepping Stones	87	75		2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64		1
12 Children in the House	79	64		2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
15 The Good Bad-Man	91	81		4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60		3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Bot My Sister	82	78		3
15 Child of Paris Streets	62	61
17 Primal Lure	81	76		4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
17 Market of Vain Desire	84	68		5
16 Going Straight	80	77		3
19 Bugle Call	95	89		5
18 Reggie Mixes In	91	81		8
13 Sorrows of Love	66	71		1
16 Innocent Magdalene	66	66		1
13 The Dividend	67	64
17 Wild Girl of Sierras	43	49
17 Apostle of Vengeance	83	85		3
15 Casey at the Bat	41	48
20 The Phantom	87	77		7
22 Flirting With Fate	87	84		8
25 The Deserter	83	67		8
20 Little School Ma'am	71	64		3
22 Eye of the Night	73	56		4
15 Stranded	62	54
23 Captive God	68	69		2
19 The Half-Breed	72	76		2
17 The Payment	82	72		3
15 Marriage of Molly O	46	44
16 Honor Thy Name	89	71		4
17 Devil's Needle	62	62		1
18 Shell 43!	91	64		4
20 Hell-to-Pay Austin	82	70		6
16 Lieutenant Danny, U. S. A.	61	60
14 Pillars of Society	56	55		1
16 Home	91	81		9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62		1
15 The Patriot	76	79		5
10 Social Secretary	60	72		7
12 The Thoroughbred	78	68		1
10 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91		6
12 Dawnmaker	56	80		2
11 Diane of the Follies	70	72		1
15 Manhattan Madness	95	92		9
12 Plain Jane	89	81		3
10 Old Folks at Home	84	69		1
11 The Jungle Child	58	58		1
10 The Rummy	68	50		1
12 Return of Draw Egan	91	86		5
12 Vagabond Prince	73	66		3
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
8 Corner in Colleens	94	98		5
4 Sister of Six	71	54		1
10 Fifty-Fifty	90	83		4
3 War's Women	62	57
8 Alfa Boy's Last Race	58	63
9 American Aristocracy	99	95		6
6 Microscope Mystery	45	38
7 Honorable Algy	86	75		3
9 Jim Grimsby's Boy	62	54		2
7 Devil's Double	96	96		5
6 Children Pay	74	63		3
3 Children of the Feud	55	40		1
4 The Criminal	40	34
3 Gamble in Souls	83	75		2
2 Wharf Rat	20	25
4 Matimaniac	100	94		4
4 The Sin Ye Do	100	80		3
4 Heiress at Coffee Dan's	40	35		1
3 Three of Many	35	23
4 House Built Upon Sand	88	73		3
2 Female of the Species	90	85		2
4 Truthful Tulliver	100	100		4
3 The Weaker Sex	92	91		3
3 The Little Yank	22	47		1
3 The Bride of Hate	80	73		3

WORLD

359 World	67.6	60.4		31
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
1 Master of House	60	65
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
3 Trilby	83	58		1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	60	57		1
1 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	72		1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
1 The Ransom	55	45
4 The Labyrinth	66	65
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
5 Camille	83	77		1
3 The Rack	89	60
1 Fine Feathers	70	70
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85		2
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
2 Then I'll Come Back to You	85	77		1
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
3 Closed Road	87	81		1
5 Feast of Life	55	73
5 Her Maternal Right	56	72
4 Sudden Riches	79	70
1 Twin Triangles	80	30
5 Tangled Fates	55	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74		1
9 Perils of Divorce	60	61
12 La vie de Boheme	48	50

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
8 Weakness of Man	61	69
11 Sally in Our Alley	61	62
13 Paying the Price	69	70	1
11 Miss Petticoats	58	59
14 Woman's Way	75	74	8
12 Summer Girl	53	55
11 Rail Rider	66	71
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
10 Dark Silence	77	78	2
4 The Revolt	66	63
7 The Gilded Cage	75	70
6 Hidden Scar	77	67
4 Scarlet Oath	70	56
6 Man Who Stood Still	70	61
6 Heart of a Hero	55	43
2 Without a Soul	80	90
7 Bought and Paid For	91	92	5
6 Madness of Helen	58	47
4 The Men She Married	53	45
2 Deep Purple	80	75
5 All Man	49	53	1
3 Broken Chains	35	37
4 Rise of Susan	86	96	4
3 World Against Him	32	30
1 Woman Alone	40	40
1 The Man Who Forgot	40	20

METRO

380 Metro	70.3	66.2	33
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
2 Shooting of Dan McGrew	80	85
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	85
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
4 Yellow Streak	84	60
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
8 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
5 Man and His Soul	84	84	1
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
1 Blindness of Love	70	80
2 Lovely Mary	57	80
1 My Madonna	80	85
4 Her Great Price	78	66
7 Wall Between	75	81
4 Kiss of Hate	55	70
5 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
8 Playing With Fire	80	78
9 The Come-Back	76	71	1
6 Snow Bird	80	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Youkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
8 Scarlet Woman	71	84	1
7 Dorian's Divorce	69	59
6 Masked Rider	63	61
8 Flower of No Man's Land	53	74
7 Purple Lady	83	61
8 Eternal Question	73	83
11 The Quitter	69	73
13 River of Romance	88	74	6
8 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
11 God's Half Acre	74	60	1
11 Weakness of Strength	68	52
9 The Pretenders	83	74	1
6 The Upheaval	56	63
8 Light of Happiness	72	73	1
9 Mister 44	89	92	4
7 Wheel of the Law	77	65
8 Dawn of Love	67	59
5 Iron Woman	47	60
3 Life's Shadows	68	62
10 In the Diplomatic Service	67	84	4
5 Brand of Cowardice	64	51
7 Gates of Eden	65	46
9 Extravagance	72	84	3
4 The Wager	86	56
1 My Madonna	80	85
1 The Wager	90	70
5 The Sunbeam	45	38
6 Big Tremaine	65	81	2
6 Black Butterfly	63	78	3
3 Stolen Triumph	50	43
3 Awakening of Helena Richie	55	62
1 Pidgin Island	90	85
1 Vanity	60	40

FOX

549 Fox	72.3	67.6	72
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
8 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	60	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
8 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	82	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
9 Blue Blood and Red	82	68
5 Slander	80	72
9 Modern Thelma	57	47	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
8 Blazing Love	69	67
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
1 Sins of the Parents	80	50
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
9 Spider and the Fly	70	70	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
9 A Woman's Honor	71	73
18 East Lynne	88	87	9
15 Ambition	71	67
16 A Man From Bitter Roots	84	82	8
16 Caprice of the Mountains	68	66	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
18 The Beast	88	69	5
20 Under Two Flags	94	92	14
14 End of the Trail	75	77
15 Sporting Blood	60	56	1
14 Little Miss Happiness	77	70	3
17 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
12 Her Double Life	84	89	3
8 Where Love Leads	66	59
10 Fires of Conscience	62	67
7 The Straight Way	65	71
5 Ragged Princess	71	61
7 War Bride's Secret	66	41	1
8 Romeo and Juliet	82	84	8
1 Love and Hate	60	60
1 Mischief Maker	100	100	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
2 The Mediator	70	60
1 Battle of Life	75	60
1 The Vixen	75	75

MUTUAL

98 Mutual	71.7	69.1	11
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	55
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	83	83	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	80
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	55
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
2 Highest Bid	58	67	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
4 Doorsteps	63	64	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	55
8 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	80	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
1 A Welsh Singer	40	40
1 Manager of the H & A	30	50
1 Pearl of Paradise	50	75

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25
MUTUAL-CHAPLIN
1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
14 The Count	87	84	8
8 The Pawnshop	69	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
5 The Rink	99	99	4
PATHE
105 Pathe	68.9	71.4	9
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
9 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
3 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
8 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	63
6 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78
5 Shine Girl	69	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
1 The Test	60	55
1 Saint, Devil and Woman	32	50
1 Light That Failed	70	65
3 Shadows and Sunshine	98	80	1
1 Prudence the Pirate	70	75
1 Arms and the Woman	55	50
BLUEBIRD
177 Bluebird	58.8	58.6	17
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	55
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
3 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
4 The Crippled Hand	61	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
4 The Eye of God	64	82	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
2 Evil Women Do	45	45
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
13 Shoes	72	76	3
8 Broken Fetters	61	57	1
7 The Love Girl	64	66	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
6 Silent Battle	73	84
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	50	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
9 Saving the Family Name	79	53	1
8 Behind the Lines	52	56
8 Wanted—A Home	75	68
2 Chalice of Sorrow	68	55
2 Social Buccaneers	65	47
2 Stranger From Somewhere	68	48
2 Gloriana	75	75
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
1 Honor of Mary Blake	60	50
1 Black Orchids	90	90	1
1 Bugler of Algiers	95	65
UNIVERSAL
1 Jewel	75	70
1 Scandal	80	72
1 Langdon's Legacy	80	60
1 Love's Pilgrimage	60	60
1 College Orphan	70	60
1 Colorado	90	100
1 The Campbells Are Coming	94	86	1
RED FEATHER
65 Red Feather	64.4	60.9	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	90
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
1 Beckoning Trail	85	60
8 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
8 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	45
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
GREATER VITAGRAPH
269 Vitagraph	68.8	67.5	52
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
4 The Juggernaut	70	73	2
6 Island of Regeneration	84	80	4
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	80	2
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
4 The Great Divide	87	71	2
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
2 Island of Surprise	95	97
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
7 A Night Out	79	73	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
4 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
3 Hero of Submarine D-2	75	70
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
5 Salvation Joan	85	57
6 God's Country and Woman	86	84	2
1 Love's Toll	60	80
6 The Law Decides	81	66	3
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76	2
2 Lights of New York	70	80
6 The Destroyers	65	52	1
1 Redemption of Dave Darcey	100	100
3 Man Behind the Curtain	87	75
8 Shop Girl	78	79	1
3 The Conflict	67	47
6 Fathers of Men	68	64
7 The Tarantula	81	71	2
12 Daring of Diana	62	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
10 Light at Dusk	84	71	3
6 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
2 Footlights of Fate	60	87
11 The Combat	83	85	1
3 The Kid	59	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
3 His Wife's Good Name	54	75
8 Through the Wall	78	61	1
12 The Chattel	71	82	2
6 Prince in a Pawnshop	56	58	1
3 Blue Envelope Mystery	53	57
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
5 The Last Man	86	68
1 Devil's Prize	40	50
2 Price of Fame	40	50
2 Dollars and the Law	48	75
1 Enemy to the King	40	40	1
2 Whom the Gods Destroy	40	75	1
1 Indiscretion	35	65	1
1 Man of Mystery	40	50	1
4 My Official Wife	91	86	2
KEYS
79 K. E. S. E. Service	67.9	61.7	19
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	70
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
8 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
1 The Alster Case	90	80
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	92	2
1 Little Shepherd of Bargain Row	90	70
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	56
2 Into the Primitive	40	50
2 That Sort	75	37	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
5 Return of Eve	85	84	2
5 The Country God Forgot	75	65
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
1 Cossack Whip	90	13

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

CONVENIENT MELLER OF ANCIENT STYLE HAS WELL BALANCED CAST

Viola Dana in

THREADS OF FATE

Columbia-Metro

DIRECTOR ..... Eugene Nowland
AUTHOR ..... Richard Barry
SCENARIO BY ..... June Mathias
CAMERAMAN ..... John Arnold
AS A WHOLE ..... Ordinary, convenient, obvious melo fairly well done
STORY ..... Very slow, very ancient and always obvious
DIRECTION ..... Gave right good atmosphere and a few good scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
LIGHTINGS ..... Some quite effective; others just fair
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good
STAR ..... Cute at times
SUPPORT ..... Badly handicapped by story
EXTERIORS ..... Some well lighted
INTERIORS ..... Some good; others just fair
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Sixty-eight minutes

THERE is surely nothing distinctive about this and the story was such a slow, obvious, convenient melodramatic plot that I can't feel that any audience anywhere will enthuse over it.

It is the old stuff about the waif adopted by others who falls in love with a man who first feels that he cannot marry her because she is wealthy and afterwards faces the situation where she claims that she is unworthy because she knows not whom her parents are.

They introduced characters for two reels and then conveniently brought them all together for a lot of ordinary melodrama centering about some restless miners who wanted to strike. Surely that's no new thought!

The lightings of many of the scenes and the playing of many of the cast were worthy of a better plot. The production carried something of the atmosphere of the old Edison productions, since we found quite a bit of the Edison lighting technique in evidence and many of the old Edison players in the cast.

In the supporting cast were Nellie Grant, Helen Strickland, Augustus Phillips, Fred Jones and Richard Tucker.

The Box Office Angle.

An intelligent community audience will not consider this a real production because of the story. But it is quite possible that you can get this by with an intelligent audience as an acceptable offering because there are many little human bits, and the good-natured fan may overlook the fact that the plot is so painfully convenient and decidedly "meller."

In a theatre where they "eat up" wild melodrama, this may register as a very good production despite the slowness in getting under way, because they pull most of the old melodramatic tricks here, even to the fight between the "willun" and the "shero's" father, where the willun tries to stab him with a knife. You can almost hear the "Gallery Gods" in "Peanut Heaven" applaud while this fight is under way.

If Viola Dana has pulling power in your town this may get by, because she has an opportunity to register a few cute bits. If she has been unable to pull you any real business, I'd certainly dodge this offering because the story is such a handicap as to overshadow the rather well-handled atmosphere and the evenly-balanced work of the supporting cast.

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
SPECIAL FEATURES
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
4 The Christian	80	77	1
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
3 Fall of a Nation	67	87
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
9 The Common Law	90	96	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
4 The Libertine	86	91	4
1 My Country First	60	60
2 Foolish Virgin	25	50	1
2 Pride of the Clan	100	80	2
7 Less Than the Dust	60	82	4
6 War Brides	65	53	5
1 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
2 Civilization	40	60
2 Cabiria	45	45
1 Marvelous Maciste	70	50
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
4 The Iron Hand	64	40
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
6 The Whirl of Life	69	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	68	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
4 Little Girl Next Door	75	95	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
5 Where Are My Children?	88	92	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
10 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	82	60	2
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1
SERIALS
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
9 Iron Claw	92	91
2 Diamond Runners	84	83
4 Shielding Shadow	88	86
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	45

DELIGHTFUL COMBINATION OF ACTION, HUMOR AND PATHOS

George Beban in

HIS SWEETHEART

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Donald Crisp
AUTHORS	George Beban and Lawrence McCloskey
CAMERAMAN	J. O. Taylor
AS A WHOLE	Classy mixture of human pathos and gripping melo; will go big
STORY	Had speed, pathos and humor
DIRECTION	Provided excellent atmosphere and exceptionally fine action with good story development
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many decidedly artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Wonderfully human characterization
SUPPORT	Excellent types humanly played
EXTERIORS	Well chosen; artistic composition
INTERIORS	Splendid atmosphere
DETAILS	Excellent
TIME	Sixty-seven minutes

THIS should be a positive "clean-up" anywhere because it combines good human character touches with snappy melodrama that has a kick in it. There is speed to it all, with the touches of pathos and humor beautifully planted to give the proper relief to the rushing action of the melodrama.

The first reel is a little classic in itself, planting carefully the characters of Mr. Beban as an Italian ice dealer living in a basement; Helen Jerome Eddy as the daughter of the cobbler living in the basement next door, and a picturesque assortment of other types belonging in that section of the city.

Mr. Beban bought a lot of furniture and fixed up his basement, and in response to the question as to when he would be married, told the inquisitive one that "his sweetheart" was coming on the next boat.

We then saw the excitable Italian at the dock pushing everybody to one side in his anxiety to reach the figure rushing down the gangplank, and it isn't until we get the close-up that we realize that the "sweetheart" he has been awaiting is his mother.

The expression on the face of the girl next door when the taxicab drew up and Mr. Beban got out, ready to escort "his sweetheart" into the basement, was a wonderful bit of expressive emotion. Miss Eddy plainly registered her questioning, "Will she be pretty?" as she watched anxiously in a jealous questioning fashion.

The story then rushed into a political campaign, with Joe the Iceman putting out placards and making speeches for the District Attorney, who was running for Governor.

Crooks were after the District Attorney and eventually attempted to kill him while he was out riding with his wife. Mr. Beban and his mother happened to be near after the attempt, with the result that they helped the injured man.

The mother then, in an attempt to help raise money with which to buy a little home in the country, arranged to do washing for the candidate's wife, unbeknownst to her son.

The weakest spot in the story is the planting of a diamond pin in a clothes hamper by the candidate's child, so that the mother was accused of theft. The situation where the child picked up the pin and carried it to the hamper was decidedly forced and is surely a weak link. It was not done naturally.

This convenient spot was leaped quickly, however, and we find a true touch of pathos in the contrast where the Italian iceman was addressing a crowd of voters, asking them to vote for the candidate, while policemen marched away with his mother, who was charged with the theft of the pin. The wild pleadings of the iceman did not save the mother from conviction, and she was sentenced to two years in prison.

The crooks, planning again to "get" the candidate, happened very casually to bump into the Italian and enlisted his aid for the final attempt.

They prepared a golf ball, filling it with nitroglycerine, and this was trusted to the iceman to plant on the golf links in place of the candidate's ball, so that he would strike it and cause an explosion which would result in his death. It may all sound a bit wild to you, but I can tell you that an attempt of this sort was made not long ago, as many of you may remember from the newspapers.

While Mr. Beban was preparing to plant the ball, Miss Eddy was pleading with the candidate's wife, and at this convenient moment the child picked up another piece of jewelry and carried it to the clothes hamper. This, of course, brought a realization of the injustice done, and the two women hurried to the golf links to secure a pardon for the mother.

This has been nicely developed with parallel action, which provided a certain amount of suspense, and we found the District Attorney candidate just ready to strike the ball, which had been exchanged by Mr. Beban. The iceman saw his sweetheart approaching as the candidate raised his club, after telling his wife to wait until he had made the stroke. The Italian made a wild leap and landed at the candidate's feet just before his club descended.

Of course, we had a happy finish, but I will give them credit for introducing a bit of a novelty in the silhouette clutch, which fitted perfectly with the scene shown through the open window.

This story is much better in the screening than it is in the telling, because Director Crisp has given us an atmosphere that convinced and the characterizations of the entire cast were decidedly human. I believe that this is one of the best audience-appeal films of recent months.

George Beban needs no introduction in Italian characters. He is surely supreme in such portrayals.

Helen Jerome Eddy, as the girl, has an appealing sweetness that is irresistible, and all of the other characters were decidedly well handled.

In the cast were Sarah Kernan, Harry De Vere and Kathleen Kirkham.

The Box Office Angle

You can go the limit on this, promising that it is an exceptionally interesting human-interest melodrama. I'd bill it as a story of speed, pathos and humor, with thrilling action and distinctive atmosphere.

You can safely call attention to Mr. Beban's characterization in "The Alien" and "Pasquale," and I believe you can feel pretty safe in promising that this production will hit as hard and appeal as strongly as anything Mr. Beban has ever done.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ARTISTIC, WELL PLAYED OFFERING DECIDEDLY TOO MORBID

Wedgwood Nowell, Betty Schade, Nicholas Dunaew and Claire Du Bray in

THE REWARD OF THE FAITHLESS

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Rex Ingram
AUTHOR	E. Magnus Ingleton
SCENARIO BY	Rex Ingram
CAMERAMAN	Ralph Perry
AS A WHOLE	Artistic, interesting, but rather oppressive
STORY	Wronged-woman-buried-alive-returning-for-vengeance idea; interesting but morbid
DIRECTION	Artistic, with good individual scenes, but depressing tone to it all
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very fine
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STARS	Registered good individual scenes
SUPPORT	Some splendid types
EXTERIORS	Some very fine; a few ordinary
INTERIORS	Splendid; fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Sixty-three minutes

DECIDEDLY interesting, exceptionally artistic and rather well played, this offering still lacks the human touch of a strong thread of sympathy and the predominence of depressing incidents tends to give the entire offering a a shroud of gloom, which somehow keeps it rather too oppressive to register as good entertainment. No one can deny the fact that it has been well done, but, nevertheless, many may feel that it isn't just what they want when they seek entertainment.

The story tells about a girl of the streets who became the ward of a princess whose husband had formerly entertained the girl of the streets in his apartment. It was not long before the husband and the girl were planning the death of the wife, so that they could enjoy her wealth.

A disappointed lover of the wife stayed in the background through the early reels until the wife, upon accidentally learning of her husband's unfaithfulness, permitted them to bury her alive, with the result that she escaped from her tomb with the aid of her one-time sweetheart.

In later years she managed to meet her husband and tempt him away from the girl of the streets, and, through a request for a certain ring which the husband thought was worn by the wife in her tomb, she managed to get him to visit the tomb on a "dark night."

When hubby discovered that the tomb was empty he staggered back through the door to face his wife in a shroud. Overcome by this apparition, he staggered away to a convenient cliff and fell, ka-plewy, into the sad sea waves. The female of the streets went back to the streets and wifey and her one-time sweetheart were happy ever after.

Betty Schade was the girl of the streets; Wedgwood Nowell was the hubby; Nick Dunaew was the pictureque Russian sweetheart, and Claire Du Bray was the princess. They all handled their individual scenes rather well, but the action was decidedly too unusual to be convincing. Although it can be called interesting, it certainly didn't register as human.

There was a small part—that of a girl seen in several cafe bits—which stood out. She was a splendid type and played with an ease which registered very effectively.

Producer Ingram seems to have a failing for introducing hunchbacks and deformed types into his pictures. I believe that this is decidedly an error of judgment, because these unfortunates are not always welcome sights, and surely there were many scenes in this where such types figure which were decidedly unnecessary and not altogether pleasing.

In the supporting cast were William J. Dyer and Richard La Reno.

The Box Office Angle

You can safely say that this is an artistic production, and you might call it "the rise and fall of a girl of the streets who was unable to play fair when given a chance." However, I would be very cautious about this if you have a discriminating community audience, because the offering deals with rather depressing situations and lacks human touches and humorous bits to lift it from the depths of unpleasant morbidity.

I doubt if the names of any of these players will pull much at the box office, and so this would surely not be worthy of special booking. If you get it on regular program service and must play it I would not promise much except to say that it is exceptionally artistic, rather unusual as to story and quite well played.

HART IN ACTION STORY THAT WILL REGISTER ANYWHERE

William S. Hart in

THE GUN-FIGHTER

Ince—Triangle

DIRECTOR	William S. Hart
AUTHOR	Monte M. Katterjohn
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Joe August
AS A WHOLE	Very good Hart subject; has big action scenes
STORY	Follows Hart formula, but holds very well
DIRECTION	Registered fine atmosphere and snappy action, with some tense moments
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective
CAMERA WORK	Very good; some great cloud effects
STAR	Dominant personality that appeals
SUPPORT	Some great types
EXTERIORS	Well chosen
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes

THIS is a good safe bet and will undoubtedly register as splendid entertainment. It starts off with good swinging action and although it slows about halfway because of a mental conflict which is a bit too long, it gets started again with action that carries right up to the last moment, holding perfectly.

This time we get Mr. Hart in a character who finally came to a realization of the attitude of his fellow men toward him because of the fact that he had killed thirty men and was known as "The Killer."

It had been his code never to draw a gun before the other man, but, because of his wonderful dexterity and ability to shoot straight, he had always killed his man.

He was placed in a position where he promised not to kill again, and then we found him facing a condition which made it necessary for him to kill, and I am glad to say that they allowed him to act humanly and proceed to shoot up a few people, instead of doing the impossible stuff of trying to take the wild desperadoes alive.

After rescuing the heroine, who had inspired his change of heart, from the clutches of another desperado, "The Killer" (Mr. Hart) died from his wounds on the desert, while the girl rode home on his horse.

There were some wonderful types in the supporting cast, and Margery Wilson, as the little girl who thought that all killing was murder, had just the sort of appealing face to register effectively.

There were several wonderful exteriors showing long-distance shots, and in one place, where Mr. Hart was coming to the rescue of the girl, we found some truly beautiful cloud effects. The atmosphere throughout was splendid.

Mr. Hart, as usual, dominated the action, although I believe the situation where he was undergoing the mental struggle with himself was held a bit too long. The tempo slumped decidedly at this point.

In the supporting cast were Roy Laidlaw, J. J. Dowling, Milton Ross, Georgie Stone and J. P. Lockney.

The Box Office Angle

It isn't necessary for me to tell you what you can do with a Bill Hart picture. All that you need to know is that this one has plenty of good action and is sufficiently different to register as decidedly pleasing with all your regulars.

There is a unique advertising possibility here, in that you can call Mr. Hart "The Killer" and mention the fact that he has thirty notches on his gun.

Make a play on this point: "Is it murder to kill a man if he draws on you first?"

You might also ask how many men there are in your town who could shoot the necks off eight bottles—four with each hand—at ten paces, using a Colt "44." Just say that Bill Hart does it in "The Gun-Fighter." Offer a prize to anyone who can do it.

CLOSE-UPS AND SPOTLIGHTS HELP POOR MELO

Alma Hanlon and Bigelow Cooper in

GOD OF LITTLE CHILDREN

Apollo-Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR	Harry Chandlee
CAMERAMAN	M. W. Hall
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing, obvious, but fairly interesting
STORY	Old blackmail idea dragged into feature length
DIRECTION	Spotlightings helped; development episodical
PHOTOGRAPHY	Spotlighting good; many other scenes poor
LIGHTINGS	Unusual amount of trick stuff
CAMERA WORK	Good and poor
STARS	Close-ups rather good
SUPPORT	Good types
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Registered acceptably
DETAIL	A bit jumpy
TIME	Forty-eight minutes

THE old plot idea of the girl under the control of a crook, who married a wealthy man and afterwards had to pay blackmail until the final clash, when the crook was killed, has been dragged into five-reel length here. Most of your regulars will know the plot and the action isn't altogether convincing.

The use of many close-ups and spotlighting for most of the interiors helped the offering quite a lot, and it is really because of these two technical tricks that the production has a possible chance. With the average audience, this will register as acceptable melodrama, although surely no one will ever enthuse over it much.

Miss Hanlon and Mr. Cooper carry most of the action, and, although the situations are time-honored, they do rather well with them.

Charles Hutchinson and Wiliam Hartman, as the blackmailing "williuns," were quite "wicious."

The development of the story was rather jumpy and broken up into episodes, but, since the plot thread is so elementary and simple, you will probably have no specific objection to this.

In the supporting cast were Jack Burns, Blanche Burns and William Miller.

The Box Office Angle

It is quite posible that you can count upon this to register as a "filler" on an evening when you don't promise too much. The frequent use of close-ups and the spotlighting helps the production decidedly and gives a little bit of distinction which lifts it somewhat out of the rut of routine "movie meller."

Miss Hanlon's recent appearance as the star of "The Libertine" and "The Whip" afford you an opportunity to play her up in your billing, which should help some at the box office.

ELABORATE MELLER THAT MISSED FIRE BECAUSE LACKED BALANCE

Gladys Brockwell in

ONE TOUCH OF SIN

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Richard Stanton
AUTHOR	L. Genez
CAMERAMAN	J. D. Jennings
AS A WHOLE	Convenient melo with cheap comedy, elaborately done
STORY	Too much plot; no balance to action; didn't convince
DIRECTION	Let action run wild and players overact, killing effectiveness of atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some quite effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Worked hard, but situations kept emotions from registering
SUPPORT	Louis good; others ordinary; Jack Standing bad
EXTERIORS	Rather good atmosphere
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good, except convenient
TIME	Sixty-three minutes

DESPITE the fact that the atmosphere of this was rather good and there were a few fairly effective moments, the general impression is decidedly unfavorable because there is a wild rush of unconvincing melodrama with situations piled on top of one another in a manner which loses all balance and kills the effectiveness of any of the scenes.

The plot told of a girl who trusted until the baby came, and then the scene shifted to a Western mining camp, where the "willun" had gone, and the girl came to find her father, who had been previously sent there by the "willun."

Father had died and the girl suddenly became a dance-hall worker, but when the ex-lover "picked her" almost as soon as she started to work, she rebelled and tried starving.

In despair, she stole some money, and a fat hero rescued her from jail by marrying her. This seemed to displease her, since she almost killed the "willun," thinking it was her newly-married husband.

Finally the husband made a lot of money and then we had a wild melodramatic finish, with the "willun" shooting the wife and being pursued into the mine by the fat hero, with a convenient treacherous Mexican blowing up the mine as the men struggled, so that it was flooded with water.

After this wild spurt they came to a finar clutch and let it go at that.

All through this offering the objectionable Fox attempt to inject cheap comedy helped to interfere seriously with the possibilities of the story proper.

Most of the melodramatic action was badly overplayed, principally by Jack Standing, as the "willun." Without the cheap comedy and with more intelligent editing the offering might have made a decidedly more favorable impression.

Willard Louis, the fat hero, was about the only character that was not overplayed badly.

Miss Brockwell had some good scenes, but in most of her dramatic moments the film was not well cut and her work failed to register on that account. It generally over-reached.

There were some good types introduced, and with a bit more intelligent handling of the comedy, some of them would have been splendid.

We had the routine kid and animal stuff, which helped a little at times, and at other times seemed to jar.

The dance hall atmosphere was very good and the flooded mine scene was well handled, the general impression created being that the picture had been elaborately produced. It is a pity that such atmosphere should be ruined by unintelligent direction of action and poor editing.

There were many titles of the "sob sister" type, some of which were so extravagant as to over-reach badly.

In the supporting cast were Sedley Brown, Carrie Clark Ward, Jack McDonald, Frankie Lee and Charles Edhler.

The Box Office Angle

I'd say that this should go rather big in a house where you cater to melodramatic fans of the type who formerly supported the "rep" shows and the cheap "mellerdrammer" theatres. The discriminating community audience would undoubtedly feel rather insulted by many of the crude spots in this which the audience of the cheaper type would accept as very effective.

This is essentially a picture for the masses. It is comparatively elaborate and may impress your lovers of ordinary melodrama. If you are playing the big stuff and expect to use "The Honor System," which I have not as yet seen, in which I understand Miss Brockwell has a very prominent part, it would seem to me inadvisable to play this before you play "The Honor System," because Miss Brockwell would certainly not make the sort of impression which would help business on the bigger film later on.

LEO DELANEY
FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER
VITAGRAPH FILMS
Have Been Shown in Six Years Past
Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

Send Me Your Reports
I TABULATE AND AVERAGE THEM

ORDINARY RUINED GIRL STUFF WITH TOO MANY SOB TITLES

Jane Gail and Stanley Walpole in

THE GIRL WHO DIDN'T THINK

Creative Film Corporation—State Rights

DIRECTOR	William Haddock
AUTHOR	Viola Stuart
CAMERAMAN	Leon Wagner
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary "tempted girl" melo with many sob titles
STORY	Ancient "ruined girl stops wedding" plot with passion frills
DIRECTION	Routine "movie" caliber
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Generally ordinary; sometimes poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not artistic
STARS	Failed to convince
SUPPORT	Rather poor; overacted
EXTERIORS	Quite ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Much that was unnecessary
TIME	Sixty-eight minutes

THIS may register with the cheaper class of patronage despite the fact that it is the old, old "ruined girl" stuff that finishes where she brings the baby to the wedding and stops the ceremony. The action is burdened with scores of titles of the Laura Jean Libby type, telling about the wicked, passionate man and the innocent, trusting females.

According to the action, the poor, suffering heroine accepted the fine gowns and furnished flat quite cheerfully, but the titles told us that she was having an awful time.

None of the action in this will convince any intelligent audience, and there were many places—particularly the scenes in which the heroine's father and mother figured—where the acting was so bad as to be funny.

Just to add to the righteous touch of it all, we found that the hero discovered the pure and innocent female, the third on his list in the picture, in a cheap cabaret, where a lot of chorus girls did a posing act in tights. The title told us that this young lady was of the type that men chose for their wives. The title also said that she was wise in the ways of men, and I presume that she was being chosen as a wife because she was willing to patronize the sort of cheap cabaret which presented such crude bits of posing as we saw in the film. Not satisfied with giving us a long shot of these poses as a bit of background, they were registered in close-ups with titles to describe them which should register a laugh most anywhere.

The hero-willun in this had one mistress when the story opened and took unto himself another, which caused several arguments between the two. Eventually he found the female in the cabaret and asked her to marry him, with the first mistress having done a high dive into the river and the second bringing her child with her, stopping the wedding with the third, just as the final words were to be pulled.

On the finish they registered a little "forgiveness-repentance" stuff which indicated that the hero-willun was to marry the mother of the child, after all.

In the supporting cast were William Manderville, Agnes Neilson, May Simon, Helen Milholland and William Butler.

The Box Office Angle

This is pretty crude stuff to offer an intelligent audience, but you may find that it will register, even though the plot is very ancient, with patrons who aren't particular about the finer points.

I surely wouldn't play this in a community house, because it lacks any touch of originality or real dramatic or artistic merit, but if you have a theatre where you cater to transient business or to patrons who like the productions which are a bit off-color as to general theme, then this may register with them.

Certainly there is nothing of interest in the entire offering except the fact that the story deals with a man's improper relations with several women. My argument against this sort of production is not primarily against the plot idea, but against the manner in which it is presented. I have seen this sort of a story done in a way to make it real drama and decidedly worth while. In this case it seems to me to be a production which has been made principally because it deals with unconventional conditions.

UNCERTAIN SYMPATHIES MAKE THIS HARD FOR POPULAR STARS

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in

MONEY MAGIC

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	William Wolbert
AUTHOR	Hamlin Garland
SCENARIO BY	A. Van Buren Cowell
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, with human spots; will please generally
STORY	Simple, but has appealing moments
DIRECTION	Not particularly distinctive, but satisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY	Fine and fair
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	Made characters human
SUPPORT	Very good types
EXTERIORS	A few quite beautiful; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-three minutes

ALTHOUGH this is decidedly slow at times and has a good many scenes which are surely not necessary, there is a good study of human emotions provided, the story being based upon the love of two healthy young people who were held by other ties.

The girl (Miss Storey) was married to a very wealthy miner, who was partially paralyzed as a result of a wound, and the man (Antonio Moreno) was engaged to an invalid who was in the West for her health.

The story, after a lot of unnecessary footage in getting started, shows that the miner was really in love with Miss Storey, who seemed to be in love with him. The miner was then shot and appeared about to die, this resulting in his calling Miss Storey hurriedly so that they might be married before his death. This was not particularly well handled, because they failed to have a doctor going to work on the injured man until after the marriage, which seemed rather unusual. He was saved after the wedding, but remained a cripple.

The meeting with Mr. Moreno was nicely developed until it was shown that these healthy young people were naturally more fitted for one another. Then we had considerable footage of the husband going East to see his father, sister and other relatives, whom we found were for the most part decidedly ordinary.

There was one situation which seemed to register in the action that Miss Storey refused to accept her husband's father into their home, but the titles in the film gave this scene another meaning. These bits were evidently dragged in, and, taken all in all, the story hardly provided sufficient material for a five-reel feature.

Finally realizing the true situation, the invalid girl returned the ring and gave up her claims on Mr. Moreno, and the husband, after being told that he had a weak heart and should consequently not go to a great altitude, calmly went to his mines and ascended as high as he could, taking that method of committing suicide.

We found Miss Storey and Mr. Moreno together over the dead man's body, apparently with a nappy future in sight.

There was one good title in this that made the situation register with a kick, the title being, "As the lion dies—alone!" This came where we saw the husband deliberately climb to his death.

It is possible that this rather unusual study of unusual conditions may appeal to many people, but there are wavering sympathy streaks that make it rather uncertain as to how different people will accept this offering.

The production moves very slowly through many sequences and then at times we have rather jumpy continuity. It never reaches any truly big dramatic moments and is only saved by a few good bits of humor and several touches of pathos.

There were a few very good exteriors, and the scene of the mountains with the clouds hanging about the peaks, which registered the view so loved by the lonesome crippled husband who sat in front of his beautiful home alone, will strike a sympathetic chord in the hearts of many. As a whole, the atmosphere was not particularly artistic.

In the supporting cast were Lawrence Winston, William Duncan and Florence Dyer.

The Box Office Angle

Because of their vigorous, forceful personalities, Edith Storey and Tony Moreno are favorites with a large percentage of fans. The characters portrayed by them in this have a hard time getting the proper sympathy because of the peculiar situation, but I believe that those who like these two young people will appreciate this offering and think it good entertainment.

You can safely say that this is an interesting study of a condition worthy of considerable thought and you can even go so far as to use lines such as these in your billing:

"Is it right for a crippled husband to expect a healthy young wife to sacrifice her life in caring for him? What do you think? See 'Money Magic.'"

The unfortunate point is that many will feel that the young wife should devote her life to her husband, in as much as she has married him, and they will have a sort of hunch that it was her fault that this man heroically took his own life to make his wife happy, thus throwing the sympathy to the husband instead of to the hero and heroine.

There is a chance here for some unusual advertising, and I would try to stir up considerable discussion on this point of matrimonial ethics.

FAMOUS POEMS REGISTERED WITH HUMAN TOUCHES AND MELO

Wilfred Lucas in

JIM BLUDSO

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTORS	Tod Browning and Wilfred Lucas
SCENARIO BY	Tod Browning
POEM BY	John Hay
AS A WHOLE	Fine atmosphere, appealing moments, but too much melo.
STORY	Human characterizations, but ran a bit wild at end
DIRECTION	Generally good; some human touches very good
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good
LIGHTINGS	Quite ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Human, forceful personality
SUPPORT	Very good types
EXTERIORS	Good small-town atmosphere; not artistic, but looked real
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Rather uncertain at end
TIME	Fifty-six minutes

THIS picturization of the famous old recitation concerning the Mississippi engineer who "held her nozzle to the bank 'til the last galoot was ashore," carries the atmosphere of the time very nicely, and there is a bit more of action in this than there has been in some of the recent Wilfred Lucas productions. The scenario as prepared brings the character of Banty Tim into the action. He was the central figure in another of the "Pike County Ballads" by the same author.

The offering isn't big, nor it is artistic, but I would say that it will prove quite interesting to almost any audience, and although the action at the finish seems a bit confusing, still there is a human note running through the entire plot which makes it hold.

I believe that there has been a serious slip in the rushing action at the end, either in assembling or in the detail construction, because the scenes do not exactly match and something seems to missing.

It was particularly noticeable in this part of the story that the continuity was jumpy, and somehow it isn't clear in my mind what happened to a boat-load of furniture that was prepared to start across the river. Soon after I saw this boat carrying other cargo, not furniture.

The famous lines about "holding her nozzle against the bank," which applied to the big fire scene, were placed about fifty feet too soon in the story, to my mind, because the fire didn't have an opportunity to get under way before this title in a manner to give the title proper significance.

The basis of the plot up to the point where the steamboat caught fire and Jim Bludso played the hero, so that everyone was rescued, concerned Bludso's wife and her elopement with a gambler, while Bludso was fighting in the Civil War.

After his return from the War he found that his little boy was attracted to a pretty blonde in the town and in time he felt the same attraction.

There were several clashes between the gambler and Bludso, and finally the wife showed up in the town and Bludso agreed to take her back because of their child.

The gambler had been building a levee and had cheapened the structure with inferior materials, so that a flood swept through the town when the levee broke.

In the attempt to escape, the wife was drowned, which left the finish, after the fire on the steamboat, with Bludso and the blonde in a final clutch.

Mr. Lucas as Jim Bludso put a suggestion of brute strength into his characterization which contrasted oddly against the final touches of gentle discrimination which asserted themselves in reference to his consideration for his colored servant.

Olga Gray was the wife and handled her part very nicely.

Winifred Westover is the little blonde whose work I have mentioned in several recent Fine Arts productions. She appears to have decided possibilities because of her repose and beauty.

Sam DeGrasse was the "willun," and Georgie Stone the six-year-old kid, stole many scenes. James O'Shea was effective as "Banty Tim."

Monte Blue and Charles Lee had minor parts.

The Box Office Angle

I imagine that in certain sections the poem about Jim Bludso is very well known, and consequently the offering will have a particular appeal because of that. If you are quite sure that your patrons never heard of Jim Bludso, and if Wilfred Lucas has not pulled you much business because of some of his "thought studies," then this may not be a very good bet for the box office.

You can safely promise that this is a human melodrama, telling of the bravery of an engineer on the Mississippi and the suggestion that this is a story filled with action, dealing with the Mississippi steamboat days, may interest many people.

I feel rather sure that the production will satisfy almost anyone, although I am just as sure that they will never become wildly enthusiastic over it. In the final important scenes it falls just short of being big. The fire has been very well handled and the flood scenes have been particularly well done, but they are not well tied together. They actually burn up an old boat and they turn a flood of water loose on a village set, but the day has passed when such effects alone are sufficient to make a picture truly big. The tempo of the dramatic action must be smooth enough to register a genuine thrill rather than to rely upon spectacular stunts alone.

If you're going to play this, I would dwell particularly upon the fact that the hero was the bravest engineer of the Mississippi steamboat days. That sounds rather interesting.

DRAGGY ORDINARY MOVIE PRODUCTION THAT NEVER ARRIVES

Jean Sothern in

HER GOOD NAME

Van Dyke—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	George Terwilliger
AUTHOR	Horace Hazeltine
SCENARIO by	E. A. Bingham
CAMERAMAN	Lewis H. Dunmyre
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary production that never registers
STORY	Trusting, innocent girl thing with trial scene finish
DIRECTION	Decidedly old-school
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary
LIGHTINGS	"Almost" good several times; generally poor
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	Fails to register
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Quite ordinary
INTERIORS	Poor
DETAIL	Too much of it
TIME	Fifty-four minutes

THERE'S certainly nothing distinctive about this and the story lacks any real note of originality. With painful dragginess, it finally arrives at a situation showing the father under arrest for having killed a young man who had kept his daughter out all night.

To save him, he wanted her to testify that the dead man had ruined her. She finally did this, which meant that she would lose the love of her sweetheart, but father conveniently had a heart attack and died in the court room, stating that his girl was innocent, which cleared up the point at issue.

This might have made a good one-reel had it been produced with a little more class. As it stands, it drags pitifully for the first four reels and fails to reach any great height in the final court room scene.

Several times the cameraman "almost" got good lightings, but just missed, and the net result was rather poor.

The general handling of the situations, the sets, the groupings and atmospheer was about on a par with the "movie" releases of several years ago.

Miss Sothern was called upon to "emote" upon several occasions, but she never really managed to register so that it would truly convince. None of the other characters put anything over which could be called good, and we had an awful lot of footage that was certainly poor.

In the scenes where the young people stayed up all night, Miss Sothern was shown to be asleep inside a cabin, where she had taken refuge, and Arthur Housman was shown leaning against the door outside. A title registered that they passed the night this way. After the title, Housman was shown to wake up from his sleep, the inference being that he had gone to sleep standing up. Believe me, 'taint done!

Then, for some unexplained reason, after standing there all night to get this girl, he suddenly had a change of heart and calmly took her home without any further suggestion of insult, his reward being that the father shot him when they arrived at the house.

Others in the cast were Earl Metcalfe, Ethel Tully, Barbara Castleton, Wm. H. Turner and Mrs. Parker Spaulding.

The Box Office Angle

I surely wouldn't count this as an attraction worthy of special booking and if you are playing it in a program release I would go very easy about making any promises as to its merit. Even with an audience which accepts the cheaper productions I believe this will move with painful slowness through the first few reels. Of course, we have the old "sob stuff" of the innocent trusting female with an attempt to get sympathy because of an unpleasant step-mother, but the situations aren't registered sufficiently well to make them convincing or appealing.

Jean Sothern received considerable publicity because of "The Mysteries of Myra," and she appeared in the Fox production "The Two Orphans," with Theda Bara but her playing in this isn't what could be called distinctive or impressive.

If you want to give away the only situation in this plot, you might advertise this under some such line as the following:

"Would you ask your daughter to admit a shame of which she was not guilty to save your life.? See 'Her Good Name.'"

ANCIENT MELLER SITUATIONS ONLY FAIRLY WELL HANDLED

Wallace Reid and Anita King in

THE GOLDEN FETTER

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Edward J. Le Saint
AUTHOR	Charles T. Jackson
SCENARIO BY	Charles Maigne
CAMERAMAN	Allan N. Davey
AS A WHOLE	Convenient surface "meller," never registered
STORY	Old junk conveniently tied together
DIRECTION	Gave considerable action, but didn't convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; only fair at times
LIGHTINGS	Some fine; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	He, 'ansom 'ero; she, ordinary
SUPPORT	Ordinary routine "meller" characters
EXTERIORS	A few very good; many ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-five minutes

STARTING off with the hero knocking down a man who had insulted the heroine at their first meeting and finishing with the heroine rushing out to save the hero as roughnecks were about about to hang him, this hit most of the routine Western melodrama high spots in between, with the main incident concerning a hold-up in which the innocent hero was implicated because he had been rescued by the bandits and kept in their cabin for a few days in the mountains, while he recovered from a convenient sprained ankle.

The heroine was an innocent Eastern miss who bought a bum gold mine, came West to look at it and finished teaching school, which school contained a half-wit youth and the hero, thereby providing a forced attempt at comedy.

There were one or two human spots in this, but most of it was painfully poor, because it was just surface melodrama which didn't have a chance, the situations being so painfully ancient.

Wallace Reid, as the hero, was acceptable, but nothing remarkable. Miss King was rather ordinary.

Tully Marshall and the other "willuns" were quite "willunous," but no one cares much about characters in an ordinary, routine Western blood-and-thunder story.

I'd say that a community audience would figure this as decidedly weak and certainly not worth while, and it is a question in my mind if the audiences who like ripsnortin' "mellerdrammer" will feel that this is strong enough or new enough to satisfy them. Even the most rabid fans for roughneck action films will know most of these situations by heart and feel rather peeved over being forced to see them again. I'm sure that most any one will feel a bit faint, or else, they'll feel like fighting when they pull that heroine-rushing-to-the-rescue-to-stop-the-hanging situation.

There were a few rather pretty exteriors, but, as a whole, the atmosphere was rather ordinary and not distinctive enough to justify the production.

In the supporting cast were Larry Peyton, Walter Long, Mrs. Lewis McCord, C. H. Geldert, Lucien Littlefield and Guy Oliver.

The Box Office Angle

They probably picked the name of this from a situation which showed the hero and heroine going into the hills together because they were handcuffed. Unfortunately this situation is a very poor one, because about midnight they discovered that it was an easy matter to break this handcuff chain by shooting it. This could have been done, and should have been done, immediately, save that it would interfere with the story. Afterwards the hero permitted a portion of the handcuff to remain on his arm, thereby causing his arrest, when it would have been very easy for him to have covered it up with his sweater.

I would advise you to dodge this if you can, because Anita King has never shown anything to justify your boosting her, and, although Wally Reid and Cleo Ridgely have been rather a successful team, I don't believe that Mr. Reid is strong enough alone to carry over a poor melodrama.

You can't safely tell anything about the story, because, if you promise that it is good, they will have very little respect for your opinion in the future.

TERRIBLY MESSY CRAZY QUILT MELLER RIDICULOUS AT TIMES

Gail Kane in

THE RED WOMAN

World Film

DIRECTORS	Several of them
AUTHOR	H. R. Durant
CAMERAMEN	Several
AS A WHOLE	An awful mess
STORY	Wild-eyed "meller" mixture
DIRECTION	Nothing creditable; much that was bad
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally poor; a few good spots and many bad spots
LIGHTINGS	Generally poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied; never excellent
STAR	Unimpressive
SUPPORT	"Movie melo" types
EXTERIORS	A few fine; others not so good
INTERIORS	Some rather good; many very poor
DETAIL	Quite messy; almost impossible to follow
TIME	Sixty-five minutes

I LEARNED that this had been handled by several directors in the making with quite some re-editing, and certainly it looked it. The story was a wild-eyed melodrama that rambled and jumped until it was absolutely impossible to take it seriously or follow it intelligently. A few of the situations were truly awful.

As a sample of the sort of thing provided, I can tell you that an Indian girl, who had fallen in love with the spendthrift son sent West to reform, painted him up and stood him on a pedestal, where the "willun" and "willuness" looked him over carefully and thought that he was a god she had been worshipping. Inasmuch as the hero made a pretty poor cigar-store sign, because he moved and had to breathe, I can't conceive of any one accepting this situation as even probable. I've seen a lot of awful nightmares offered as dramatic situations, but I think this was about the limit.

Later on we found the Indian girl with a baby that had white skin and blonde hair, and yet the willun, who was a Mexican, came in and tried to convince her that she had come to him at his camp one night and that he was the father. In a title the mothers says, "But, how do you account for his white skin and blonde hair?" —which was, in a way, an admission of the visit to the willun's camp, although we'd never seen anything that would indicate that she had made such a visit. If this doesn't get a coarse ha! ha!, then I'm a bum guesser.

Afterwards the white hero loomed up again and was proclaimed father with a "clutch" on the finish.

I can't tell why the hero left the Indian girl to go East, unless it happens that this scene was made and they thought they'd have to use it, and so they agreed to write a story which would fit into it.

In any case, he came East after a title, which said that he realized that he should not marry this red woman and should return to the girl to whom he had given his promise. But he knew that he'd learned that the girl he had promised to marry only wanted his money, and when he came East he snubbed her unmercifully, returning almost immediately to the red woman.

Surely this is one that you can run as a puzzle picture and offer a red apple to the patron giving an intelligent account of the story.

It was noticeable that a number of exteriors were made on the Palisades, while a great many were made in some western country—I think it was Arizona.

Gail Kane, as "The Red Woman," had an impossible part and failed to impress at any time.

Mahlon Hamilton was a very camera-conscious hero, who "acted" in every scene.

June Elvidge, as the scheming female who wanted the hero's coin, gave a rather good account of herself, and Ed Roseman was the wicked "wicious willun" who wandered about wanting to shoot some one all the time.

The photography, as a whole, was quite poor, there being many places where the grain of the film showed very badly, this either being the result of "duped" negative or weather conditions which had affected the film while it was being made.

Others in the cast were Gladys Earlcott and Charlotte Granville.

The Box Office Angle.

I certainly would not play this. Even if you are catering to patrons who like wild-eyed melodrama, I fear they'd consider this rather insulting, because the story wanders "all over the place" and fails to hang together in anything resembling a consistent plot. It is a crazy-quilt patchwork production, and this fact registers on the screen.

I think that if Miss Kane has been of any value to you in her other productions it would be a serious error to play her in this, because many fans are unable to discriminate sufficiently to realize that it is the production and story which is at fault in such a case as this.

There was one pretty cloud effect at the end of this, but, generally, the photography was terrible.

The illustrated titles which the World has been using of late are very bad. Somebody should speak to them gently.

WILD-EYED ACTION MELLER WITH BAD ACTING HERO DODGE IT

Herbert Rawlinson, Betty Schade and Dorothy Davenport in

THE SCARLET CRYSTAL

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Charles Swickard
AUTHOR	J. Grubb Alexander
CAMERAMAN	Harry Maguire
AS A WHOLE	Wild surface-action "meller" that didn't register
STORY	Wandered, jumped and never convinced
DIRECTION	Some atmosphere good, but production misses fire badly
PHOTOGRAPHY	Sometimes very good, but often muddy and lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	A few effective; many just missed
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	He terrible; girls rather good
SUPPORT	Quite ordinary
EXTERIORS	Nothing unusual; big "20,000 Leagues" set used
INTERIORS	Acceptable; same big ballroom backing used
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes

IF your audiences like action "meller" that registers speed rather than sincerity they will probably accept this, although it seems to me that almost any picture fan would feel insulted by the work done in this by Herbert Rawlinson. His attempts to portray a "drunk" were pitifully poor and in a few places where he tried to "act," particularly one where he tore his hair, he was bad enough to be funny.

The story had much incident, dealing for the most part with a wild young man who turned down a chorus girl to marry a buxom beauty from the country, only to tire of her in time and be tempted by a coincidence which placed another innocent young thing in his apartment.

The scenes showing him attacking this girl and her return to her mother, who was found dead, with the following scene of her pleading with her betrayer who sat in a cafe with a chorus girl, were all turned into a dream, apparently by cutting, since the action was rather contradictory in spots and certainly jumpy.

After this wild session the young husband returned to his wife and baby, repentant, and was accepted.

Mr. Rawlinson certainly did not register a favorable impression at any time in this, because at the first of the offering his make-up showed so plainly that he looked almost like a woman dressed in man's clothes, and then when he started to "act" he worked like an amateur getting his first try-out before the camera.

Betty Schade, as the country girl, who became his wife, did rather well with a part which called for some unusual scenes.

Dorothy Davenport, as the chorus girl, fitted this character quite acceptably.

The scenario brought into the action rather prominently a crystal ball, in which the wife saw what was going to happen in the future, there being a suggestion that she had the gift of seeing into the coming years. It is possible also that they intended to suggest something about reincarnation, because in one scene, supposed to be a society garden party, she suddenly cut loose and did a wild dance when the gypsy orchestra started to play, this being so startling as to be rather funny. The title said that this was her "great triumph," but surely if such a dance as we saw could create a great triumph, it must have been SOME society.

Universal again made use of that big ballroom set backing which has appeared in so many of their productions, it being used this time in the cafe scene. They also made use of the "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" set which has been dragged into several productions. Surely this repeated use of the same sets tends to cheapen all of the productions in which these "landmarks" appear.

There was an artist character brought into this story —sort of dragged in by the heels—and this provided for considerable footage of a draped model. There was also one very short flash where a girl on a couch dissolved into a nude figure.

This offering started off with a few exteriors that had a decided suggestion of class, but it soon went wild, and surely the general impression will not be favorable.

In the supporting cast were Marie Hazelton, Gertrude Aster, Dick Ryan and Raymond Whitaker.

The Box Office Angle

I doubt very much if this has any box office value, and certainly I would not play it in a theatre where they know good films when they see them. If you are catering to audiences who like wild surface melodramas, this may register, because it surely is wild. It is hardly a fit offering for intelligent patrons.

Mr. Rawlinson's work is particularly poor and his overplaying, combined with the erratic nature of the scenario, makes this rather a poor production.

There is no unusual angle about the story worthy of any advertising comment, unless it would be the question of whether or not your patrons believe in crystal gazing, and since that thought has been used very often without any truly effective results, I doubt if it would be wise to center the attention upon that point.

KEYSTONE START AND FINISH MAKE MYSTERY ENTERTAINING

William Desmond in

THE ICED BULLET

Ince—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Reginald Barker
AUTHOR	C. Gardner Sullivan
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Robert Newhard
AS A WHOLE	Wild detective plot with Keystone Komedy alibi
STORY	Impossible detective stuff smoothed by comedy start and finish
DIRECTION	Comedy interesting at first; funny at finish; splendid atmosphere and action during detective scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; some fine exterior bits
LIGHTINGS	Many quite effective
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Looked like scenario-writing actor
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Studio scenes very interesting; some mountain stuff beautiful
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good; novel, to say the least
TIME	Sixty-seven minutes

I'M willing to bet that this was a case of making a wild detective mystery drama with the decision after it was completed that the story was impossible, which resulted in the turning of the entire thing into a Keystone Komedy by the addition of a new first reel and a new finish, which provided an alibi for the story.

The first reel showed Mr. Desmond as a very nervy scenario writer-actor-director, etc., arriving at the Ince plant to sell his story, "The Iced Bullet." After many Keystone adventures trying to get in to see the boss, which afforded an opportunity to show in a rather interesting way the Ince Studios, and at the same time call attention to the various Ince stars, with some scenes of Director Reginald Barker at work, we found the scenario "bug" going to sleep in the manager's office, and the drama was then shown as if he had dreamed it, finishing up with the awakening of the scenario gink in the wildest moment of the story, with the studio locked, which made it necessary for him to escape through a winodw, this bringing a regular Keystone chase through the grounds, finishing with Mr. Desmond speeding down the roadway and the cops firing from the rear, with the usual comedy business of being shot in the "retreat."

The three and one-half reels which had to do with the drama were very well handled as to atmosphere and action, but the story was an impossible detective fantasy having to do with a man who prepared a contraption which he placed in the wall of a cabin in such a manner that the freezing of some water in a wooden box would cause the box to expand, thereby operating a string which pulled the trigger of a revolver, thus killing the victim some distance across the room, in his bed. This reminded me very much of the sort of things "Rube" Goldberg draws when he's trying to give you an "easy way" to do something.

Far be it from me to insist that this has been doctored into its present form, but surely it looks like it. In any case, we can certainly say that the doctoring has saved it to a sufficient extent to make it register as an entertaining offering.

Mr. Desmond fitted the scenario-writing actor part very well, because in most of his work there has been a touch of the theatric. It seems rather hard for him to keep his scenes entirely human, although he is generally sufficiently pleasing to carry his part.

Robert McKim was a "wicious willun," as he always is, and J. Barney Sherry made a small part stand out because of the authority and poise which marked his characterization. Margaret Thompson was the necessary heroine.

Others in the cast were J. Frank Burke, J. J. Dowling, Louis Durham and Jerry Storm.

The Box Office Angle

I would hardly say that this is a good name for a feature and it is a question whether or not William Desmond has sufficient pulling power to justify your playing this from the box office value angle.

You can rest assured, however, that the offering would please generally as entertainment, principally because of the novelty of the introduction of a comedy start and finish to anticipate and offset any possible criticism of the drama itself.

The fact that this gives some very interesting views of the big Ince Studios, where many of the Triangle features have been made, should in itself be an advertising angle capable of pulling considerable business. I would depend particularly upon that and upon the statement that this is truly a novelty.

Don't promise specific things regarding the production and you will be safe. No one will be able to complain about the wildness of the detective story, because the production itself not only admits, but insists that it is wild.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES
THANHOUSER NEW ROCHELLE

HENRY OTTO
Directing
Harold Lockwood and May Allison

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY VEKROFF
Directing Anita Stewart
VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID'S IS READ NOT SKIMMED

BINDERS

Save

TIME — MONEY — TEMPER

At Cost Prepaid everywhere $1.50

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT

WID'S

A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 8, 1917. | NO. 6 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc. Pending Second Class Mailing Privilege.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
392	Metro	71.8	68.7	34
565	Fox	71.9	68.5	74
1480	Triangle	72.6	66.6	309
305	Vitagraph	70.7	68.1	56
1630	Paramount	72.2	66.4	282
369	World	67.2	60.3	31

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

1630 Paramount 72.2 66.4 282

Reports		% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
4	The Virginian	99	78	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
2	Girl of Golden West	95	85	1
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
4	David Harum	84	74	1
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	86	53	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	56	1
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	97	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
5	Secret Orchard	78	72
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
2	Majesty of the Law	40	45
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
9	Still Waters	85	80	1
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
7	Armstrong's Wife	80	63
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	1
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	1
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
15	The Cheat	94	78	1
7	The Reform Candidate	80	49
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	1
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
7	Temptation	76	70	1
7	The Foundling	76	76	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
4	Mice and Men	79	78	1
5	Golden Chance	77	66	1
1	My Lady Incog	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
5	The Spider	85	63	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	1
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	89	3
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	2
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
11	Poor Little Peppina	86	82	1
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	1
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	2
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
10	Audrey	75	75	3
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	51	1
8	The Race	71	65
6	Eternal Grind	68	81	1
6	Love Mask	61	54	2
7	Molly Make-Believe	90	88	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
10	Heart of Nora Flynn	69	56	4
6	Moment Before	50	63	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	46
13	Maria Rosa	82	88	4
11	Alien Souls	68	66	1
11	Fued Girl	61	54
15	Pasquale	78	52	3

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
13 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59	2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
21 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
19 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
15 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
18 American Beauty	62	62	3
21 The Dupe	65	63	1
20 The Smugglers	53	49	1
24 Selfish Woman	72	69	4
28 Davy Crockett	67	62
28 Dream Girl	69	61	3
27 Under Cover	79	75	5
27 International Marriage	55	51	1
27 Common Ground	64	64	1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95	23
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
22 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	8
21 The Stronger Love	52	51
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
19 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
18 Honorable Friend	70	62	1
17 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
17 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
18 Parson of Panamint	80	68	5
11 Big Sister	47	58
11 Reward of Patience	63	53
10 The House of Lies	74	63	1
10 Daughter of MacGregor	51	44
14 Ashes of Embers	87	85	5
12 Quest of Life	58	58
10 Anton the Terrible	48	49
12 The Lash	55	52
8 The Storm	72	58	1
12 The Intrigue	74	50
11 Her Father's Son	70	53	1
10 Witchcraft	48	48
8 The Kiss	71	67	1
9 Rainbow Princess	83	71	1
8 Seventeen	86	73
7 Miss George Washington	96	94	5
11 Heir to Hoorah	74	63	2
10 Soul of Kura San	80	72
7 Sons of Erin	81	70
8 Unprotected	54	56	1
7 Years of Locusts	49	51
7 Plow Girl	77	55
4 Yellow Pawn	58	55	1
5 Nanette of Wilds	36	47	2
3 Martyrdom of Philip strong	47	35
3 Coney Island Princess	53	57	1
4 Road to Love	80	45	1
5 Oliver Twist	86	58	3
3 Victoria Cross	50	53	1
4 Traveling Salesman	80	56	2
3 Right Direction	80	55	1
3 Snow White	100	93	2
2 Redeeming Love	60	45	1
3 Slave Market	97	86	2
2 Evil Eye	20	38	1
2 Great Expectations	80	23
2 Happiness of Three Women	80	38	1
2 Betty to the Rescue	82	38
2 Girl Like That	50	33

TRIANGLE

1480 Triangle	72.6	66.6	309
9 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
8 The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
12 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
5 Sable Lorcha	64	53
5 Golden Claw	65	74
6 Double Trouble	65	64	2
6 Aloha Oe	59	65	1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
6 Jordan Is a Hard Road	54	52
6 Winged Idol	53	52
3 Penitents	28	32
10 Edge of the Abyss	68	61
1 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
9 Between Men	72	69	1
12 Let Katy Do It	85	64	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
8 Last Act	80	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
17 Hell's Hinges	93	88	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
13 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	77	3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
14 The Raiders	79	71
12 Habit of Happiness	92	86	4
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
15 The Aryan	84	85	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	74	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
15 The Good Bad-Man	91	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Not My Sister	82	78	3
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
18 Primal Lure	82	77	4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
18 Market of Vain Desire	81	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
22 Bugle Call	95	80	7
21 Reggie Mixes In	92	81	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
15 The Dividend	68	65	1
19 Wild Girl of the Sierras	43	51
19 An Apostle of Vengeance	88	86	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
23 The Phantom	87	74	7
26 Flirting with Fate	88	85	10
27 The Deserter	83	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
24 Captive God	69	70	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77	2
18 The Payment	82	73	3
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
17 Honor Thy Name	88	71	4
18 Devil's Needle	63	63	1
20 Shell 433	92	67	5
23 Hell-to-Pay Austin	82	67	6
19 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55	1
17 Home	91	79	9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
15 The Patriot	76	79	5
18 Social Secretary	90	72	7
12 The Thoroughbred	78	68	1
10 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91	6
12 Dawnmaker	56	80	2
11 Diane of the Follies	70	72	1
17 Manhattan Madness	94	91	10
12 Plain Jane	89	81	3
10 Old Folks at Home	84	69	1
11 The Jungle Child	58	58	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
12 Return of Draw Egan	91	86	5
12 Vagabond Prince	73	66	3
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
9 Corner in Colleens	93	86	5
4 Sister of Six	71	54	1
10 Fifty-Fifty	90	83	4
3 War's Women	62	57
8 Atta Boy's Last Race	58	63
10 American Aristocracy	96	93	6
7 Microscope Mystery	59	44
9 Honorable Algy	82	73	3
10 Jim Grimsby's Boy	61	45	2
9 Devil's Double	91	92	5
9 Children Pay	72	62	3
6 Children of the Feud	58	58	1
6 Criminal	51	42
3 Gamble in Souls	83	75	2
4 Wharf Rat	25	34
4 Matimaniac	100	94	4
4 The Sin Ye Do	100	80	3
4 Heiress at Coffee Dan's	40	35	1
3 Three of Many	35	23
4 House Built Upon Sand	88	73	3
2 Female of the Species	90	85	2
4 Truthful Tulliver	100	100	4
3 The Weaker Sex	92	91	3
3 The Little Yank	22	47	1
3 The Bride of Hate	80	73	3

WORLD

369 World	67.2	60.3	31
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
1 Master of House	60	65
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
3 Trilby	83	58	1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	50	57	1
4 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	73	1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
1 The Ransom	55	45
4 The Labyrinth	66	65
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
5 Camille	83	77	1
3 The Rack	89	69
1 Fine Feathers	70	40
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85	2
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
2 Then I'll Come Back to You	85	77	1
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
3 Closed Road	87	81	1
6 Feast of Life	60	74
5 Her Maternal Right	56	72
5 Sudden Riches	77	72
1 Twin Triangles	80	30
5 Tangled Fates	55	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74	2
10 Perils of Divorce	61	63
12 La vie de Boheme	48	50

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
6 Weakness of Man	61	69
12 Sally in Our Alley	68	68
13 Paying the Price	69	70	1
11 Miss Petticoats	58	59
14 Woman's Way	75	74	4
13 The Summer Girl	56	57
12 Rail Rider	68	60
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
10 Dark Silence	77	78	2
4 The Revolt	66	63
3 The Gilded Cage	75	70
6 Hidden Scar	77	67
5 Scarlet Oath	71	59
7 Man Who Stood Still	71	63
6 Heart of a Hero	55	43
2 Without a Soul	80	90
7 Bought and Paid For	91	92	5
6 Madness of Helen	58	47
5 Men She Married	54	50
2 Deep Purple	80	75
5 All Man	49	53	1
3 Broken Chains	35	37
4 Rise of Susan	86	96	4
3 World Against Him	32	30
1 Woman Alone	40	40
1 The Man Who Forgot	40	20

METRO

392 Metro	71.8	68.7	34
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
1 Shooting of Dan McGrew	80	85
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	85
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
4 Yellow Streak	84	60
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
5 Man and His Soul	84	84	1
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
4 Her Great Price	78	66
7 Wall Between	75	81
4 Kiss of Hate	55	70
8 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
6 Playing With Fire	80	78
10 The Come-Back	75	73	1
7 The Snowbird	79	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Yonkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
9 Scarlet Woman	72	83	1
9 Dorian's Divorce	73	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
5 Flower of No Man's Land	53	74
7 Purple Lady	83	61
9 Eternal Question	74	82
11 The Quitter	69	73
13 River of Romance	88	74	6
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
11 God's Half Acre	74	60	1
11 Weakness of Strength	68	52
9 The Pretenders	83	74	1
6 The Upheaval	56	63
8 Light of Happiness	72	73	1
9 Mister 44	89	92	4
7 Wheel of the Law	77	65
8 Dawn of Love	67	59
5 Iron Woman	47	60
3 Life's Shadows	68	62
10 In the Diplomatic Service	67	84	4
5 Brand of Cowardice	64	51
8 Gates of Eden	69	50
9 Extravagance	72	84	3
4 The Wager	86	56
1 My Madonna	80	85
1 The Wager	90	70
5 The Sunbeam	45	38
7 Big Tremaine	68	82	2
6 Black Butterfly	63	78	3
3 Stolen Triumph	50	43
3 Awakening of Helena Richie	55	62
1 Pidgin Island	90	85
1 Vanity	60	40

FOX

565 Fox	71.9	68.5	74
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	6	25
2 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	80
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
8 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
9 Blue Blood and Red	82	68
5 Slander	80	72
9 Modern Thelma	57	47	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
8 Blazing Love	69	67
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
1 Sins of the Parents	80	50
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
9 Spider and the Fly	70	70	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
9 A Woman's Honor	71	73
18 East Lynne	88	87	5
15 Ambition	71	67
16 A Man From Bitter Roots	84	82	2
16 Caprice of the Mountains	68	66	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
18 The Beast	88	69	5
20 Under Two Flags	94	92	14
14 End of the Trail	75	77
15 Sporting Blood	60	56	1
14 Little Miss Happiness	77	70	3
18 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
13 Her Double Life	84	88	3
9 Where Love Leads	69	61
12 Fires of Conscience	65	69	1
9 Straight Way	68	73
7 Ragged Princess	76	68
10 War Bride's Secret	75	52	3
6 Romeo and Juliet	83	85	2
1 Love and Hate	60	60
2 Mischief Maker	70	70	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
2 The Mediator	70	60
1 Battle of Life	75	60
2 The Vixen	53	73
1 The Love Thief	90	90

MUTUAL

99 Mutual	72.0	69.3	12
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	25
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	83	84	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	60
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	50
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Liar	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	60
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
2 Highest Bid	77	67	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
4 Doorsteps	63	64	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
2 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	60	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
1 A Welsh Singer	40	40
1 Manager of the H & A	30	50

Re-ports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
1 Pearl of Paradise	50	75
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25
1 Pearl of Paradise	90	83	1
MUTUAL-CHAPLIN
1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
14 The Count	87	84	8
8 The Pawnshop	69	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
6 The Rink	99	99	5
PATHE
107 Pathe	66.0	68.4	9
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
3 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	80
7 Little Mary Sunshine	90	79
5 Shine Girl	69	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
1 The Test	60	55
2 Saint, Devil and Woman	46	55
1 Light That Failed	70	65
3 Shadows and Sunshine	98	80	1
1 Prudence the Pirate	70	75
1 Arms and the Woman	55	50
BLUEBIRD
180 Bluebird	62.8	62.7	17
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Mechan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
4 The Crippled Hand	61	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
4 The Eye of God	64	82	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79	1
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
13 Shoes	72	76	3
1 Broken Fetters	61	57	1
7 The Love Girl	64	66	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
6 Silent Battle	73	84
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
9 Saving the Family Name	79	53	1
6 Behind the Lines	58	62
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
2 Chalice of Sorrow	68	55
2 Social Buccaneers	65	47
2 Stranger From Somewhere	68	48
2 Gloriana	75	75
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
1 Honor of Mary Blake	60	50
1 Black Orchids	90	90	1
1 Bugler of Algiers	95	65
UNIVERSAL
1 Jewel	75	70
1 Scandal	80	72
1 Langdon's Legacy	80	60
1 Love's Pilgrimage	60	60
1 College Orphan	70	60
1 Colorado	90	100
1 The Campbells Are Coming	94	86	1
RED FEATHER
65 Red Feather	64.6	60.9	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
1 Beckoning Trail	85	60
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
GREATER VITAGRAPH
305 Vitagraph	70.7	68.1	56
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
5 Juggernaut	74	77	2
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81	4
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	69	2
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
5 The Great Divide	88	75	2
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80	1
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
2 Island of Surprise	95	97
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
8 Night Out	80	76	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
4 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
3 Hero of Submarine D-2	75	70
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
5 Salvation Joan	85	57
7 God's Country and Woman	88	86	3
1 Love's Toll	60	80
6 The Law Decides	81	66	3
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76	2
3 Lights of New York	70	78
6 The Destroyers	65	52	1
1 Redemption of Dave Darcey	100	100
3 Man Behind the Curtain	87	75
8 Shop Girl	78	79	1
3 The Conflict	67	47
6 Fathers of Men	68	64
9 The Tarantula	82	73	2
12 Daring of Diana	62	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
10 Light at Dusk	84	71	3
7 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
4 Footlights of Fate	68	80
11 The Combat	83	85	1
3 The Kid	59	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
3 His Wife's Good Name	54	75
8 Through the Wall	78	61	1
12 The Chattel	71	82	2
7 Prince in Pawnshop	59	62	1
3 Blue Envelope Mystery	53	57
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
6 Last Man	85	67
3 Devil's Prize	43	62
3 The Price of Fame	40	49
2 Dollars and the Law	48	75
4 Enemy to King	63	63	2
2 Rose of the South	80	65
4 Whom Gods Destroy	58	73	2
1 Indiscretion	35	65	1
1 Man of Mystery	40	50	1
5 My Official Wife	89	85	2
KEYS
84 K. E. S. E. Service	69.4	63.8	20
1 The Bank	90	90	1
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
1 The Alster Case	90	80
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
1 Little Shepherd of Bargain Row	90	70
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
2 That Sort	75	37	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
6 Return of Eve	71	70	2

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

FAIRLY INTERESTING SLUMS MELO HELPED BY DEVELOPMENT

Viola Dana in

ROSIE O'GRADY

Apollo-Art Dramas.

DIRECTOR ..... John H. Collins
AUTHOR ..... John H. Collins
CAMERAMAN ..... John Arnold
AS A WHOLE ..... Will register very well with average audience
STORY ..... Old elements with suspense twists and "dream" finish
DIRECTION ..... Some good scenes; many human little bits
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some very good; some faulty lighting
LIGHTINGS ..... Close-ups effective, but many long shots very faulty
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STAR ..... Decidedly pretty in many scenes; registered rather well
SUPPORT ..... Many fine types
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL ..... Acceptable
TIME ..... Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH this is a melo of the slums, dealing with a newsgirl hero, a roughneck brother and a prizefighter "willun," the suspense twists provided by jumping over the murder into the trial scene and finally bringing it up short with a finish which made it all a dream, gave this a certain amount of punch. I would say that the average audience would consider this rather interesting and quite acceptable, even though they surely would never rave over it. It is just a "good" program picture for those who aren't discriminating.

We had an exceptional amount of spotlighting throughout this offering and the close-ups where this technique was used were rather good.

Unfortunately an attempt was made to trick-light some interiors where a lamp was carried about the room, and this was done in several scenes, with the result that the shifting light, which certainly didn't follow the lines it should have if the light were coming from the lamp, took the attention away from the scene itself.

The general atmosphere of the picture was rather good, with a few interesting bits. The prizefight scene was rather well staged, and the courtroom bit was very good, although such things have lost their power to impress. There were a score or more of good little human comedy bits that registered splendidly.

Viola Dana was photographed to better advantage in some portions of this production than she has ever been in any film that I can remember of offhand. In some lightings she was truly beautiful, and surely she carried her emotional scenes in a most satisfactory manner throughout the offering.

There were some exceptionally well-chosen types in the supporting cast. In the cast were Thomas Blake and James Harris.

The Box Office Angle.

If you figure this as an average program production, I can guarantee you that it will register satisfactorily. It isn't a highbrow offering, but it should appeal to the average audience because of the many little human touches, the fairly well-sustained interest and the fact that there's considerable action.

You know just how much Viola Dana's name is worth in your own community. If she has made good in any specific productions, be sure to emphasize them in your advertising.

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
5 The Country God Forgot	75	65
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
1 Cossack Whip	90	13
1 Message to Garcia	90	85
1 Last Sentence	90	90

SPECIAL FEATURES

1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
5 The Christian	81	78	1
6 Birth of a Nation	100	100	5
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
10 The Common Law	89	96	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
4 The Libertine	86	91	4
1 My Country First	60	60
2 Foolish Virgin	25	50	1
3 Pride of the Clan	93	87	2
11 Less Than the Dust	67	84	4
7 War Brides	69	60	6
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
2 Civilization	40	60
2 Cabiria	45	45
1 Marvelous Maciste	70	50
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
5 The Iron Hand	65	46
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
6 The Whirl of Life	69	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	68	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
4 Little Girl Next Door	75	95	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
5 Where Are My Children?	88	92	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
10 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	82	60	2
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1

SERIALS

13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
9 Iron Claw	92	91
2 Diamond Runners	84	83
5 Shielding Shadow	90	89
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	30	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	45

DELIGHTFUL HUMAN CHARACTERIZATIONS SURELY ENTERTAINING

Bryant Washburn in

SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT

Essanay-K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR	Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR	Henry Irving Dodge, in S. E. P.
SCENARIO BY	Charles J. McQuirk
AS A WHOLE	Delightfully entertaining; very well done
STORY	Truly human touches; will go very big
DIRECTION	Made little points hit hard
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Uniform, but vignetting gave distinction
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Gave just proper shadings to character study
SUPPORT	Fine types; nicely balanced
EXTERIORS	Fitted Story
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Many fine little bits
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

HERE it is!

You fellows who've been yelling for clean entertainment that would get you away from the wild melodrama and the problem plays should grab this in a hurry.

I'm willing to gamble considerable that any audience, anywhere, will enjoy this thoroughly and enthuse over it sufficiently to send their friends to see it. It is simple, fairly elementary and after a time we know what is going to happen, but the beauty of it all is in the handling. The little touches have been registered perfectly and the result is a truly delightful hour.

Here is a case where the author has gotten down to human fundamentals and given you the intimate little touches of human life with the result that you feel that you know these characters so well that you pass over the possibly improbable events on the finish simply because you appreciate the human manner in which these incidents are registered.

The plot has to do with a young man who promised his wife to get a raise and when it was refused by the boss he lied to his wife and told her he had gotten it, taking the additional "ten" per week from his personal account to hand it in at home.

The faked "increase" caused friend wife and hubby to buy new clothes, which brought social success and afterwards a feeling of self-respect, although at the same time they made the employers quite suspicious of their cashier.

Uneasy because of this sudden showing of prosperity, the bosses sent the cashier to St. Paul to see a lost customer, while they checked up his books. Through the use of some strategy, working on the social aspirations of the customer's wife, the cashier landed the order, while the bosses learned that his books were O. K. When he returned he was made sales manager, and later a member of the firm.

This production wins you from the start. It is absolutely human in every respect without a single false note.

The battle in the cashier's mind leading up to his request was particularly well registered, and I have a hunch that it will hit home with thousands and thousands who have, at some time or another, gone in "to see the boss."

There was a bit of business with a portrait of George Washington, which was shown to wink when Skinner lied to his wife, which is sure-fire stuff, and I can guarantee you that the colored bellboys used in the hotel are going to get a real yell out of any audience. After seeing these little coons perform, it seems hard to dope out why other producers miss this opportunity for good comedy.

Bryant Washburn, as Skinner, gave a performance which will be remembered a long time, and his gradual development of the character from the meek office "worm" and boasting young husband to the self-reliant business man was truly delightful.

Hazel Daly, as his wife, was very pleasing, and James C. Carroll and U. K. Houpt, as the bosses, registered the little points with a nicety for detail which helped make the offering ring true.

Harry Dunkinson was a good type as the lost customer.

Others in the cast were Marion Skinner, Florence Oberle and Frances Raymond.

The sets were very good, and I want to comment particularly upon the intelligent handling of the atmosphere of the hotel, the office and the society scenes. There was no attempt for trick lighting, but the vignetting gave a nice distinction to many of the scenes and kept the offering from being tiresome as to the composition of the sets and exteriors.

Surely this is a demonstration of the power of a real story. Here was an idea that rang true because it was human. Happily, the director and players caught the spirit, and the result is one of the most entertaining features of recent months.

The titles were well written and fitted into the action beautifully.

The Box Office Angle

Get this if you have to book it special!

Now, don't get the wrong impression. This isn't the greatest film ever made, but, believe me, it is one of the most entertaining offerings we have had in many, many weeks. It is not pretentious—it is human. It is good entertainment because it is simple and deals with everyday facts with humorous twists.

The very thought of a dress suit making a society success possible and also making the boss suspicious, will surely strike a responsive chord in the hearts of most folks.

Be careful how you bill this, so that you don't get them to expect too much. Depend particularly upon the promise that it is delightful, clean, human entertainment. Start a week ahead and use a "teaser" campaign along this line: "Did you ever ask your boss for a raise?" Did you own a dress suit when you were married?" "Did you ever lie to your wife about your importance at the office?"

Use those three lines for several days and then add to them: "See 'Skinner's Dress Suit' at —— Theatre," and at the same time guarantee that they will enjoy this more than anything they've seen in many moons.

Make it plain that this is human, clean and entertaining.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ARTISTIC ATMOSPHERE HELPS ACTION WHICH DOESN'T RING TRUE

Vivian Martin in

THE WAX MODEL

Pallas-Paramount.

DIRECTOR	E. Mason Hopper
AUTHOR	G. Vere Tyler
CAMERAMAN	James C. Van Trees
AS A WHOLE	Classy atmosphere and interesting action; will please generally
STORY	Has one unusual situation; rather convenient melo as whole
DIRECTION	Made it classy and held interest
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Decidedly artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STAR	Appealing personality, but not exceptional opportunity in this
SUPPORT	Fitted characters right well
EXTERIORS	Many decidedly artistic
INTERIORS	Decidedly classy
DETAIL	Generally good
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

IT takes a little time for this to get under way and then we have a rather novel situation, but the finish brings us to melodramatic situations which are not only convenient but well-known, and consequently the offering slumps at the end.

Producer Hopper has surely given us an atmosphere of class and distinction, the settings being decidedly impressive, with lightings that were not only artistic but effective. This artistic lighting was noticeable in the exteriors as well as in the interiors, the composition of practically all of the scenes being splendid.

Miss Martin's appealing personality registered rather well, but there was no big opportunity for her to do exceptional dramatic work. She had a few good scenes which were handled with a nice shading of emotions, but, unfortunately, the dramatic moments were hardly human enough to make them ring true.

The plot told of a little French girl, born out of wedlock, who was warned by her mother to never trust men or fall in love. The youngster became a maid, but lost her position because of the attentions of her employer, and then, after posing for an artist, she suddenly acquired fame as a model.

A wax figure placed in the show window of a prominent modiste so attracted Thomas Holding, a student who knew more of books than of the world, that he fell madly in love with the original when he met her.

After a friendship had developed they gave us the old stuff of the model saving the hero's sister from running away with the wicked willun, with hero stepping in at the psychological moment and finding the girl he loved there instead of his sister—sister, of course, being behind the screen.

The model then quickly became destitute and the hero refused to read any of her letters asking him to come to her. Finally he learned from his sister of her sacrifice, and we had a clutch finish.

One of the weakest spots in this story was the sending of the letter, which finally brought the hero, on which was written, "In the name of your dead mother, I ask you to open this." I fear that this will not ring true with most audiences. It will probably get a laugh. It would have been decidedly more effective if she had written her appeal and had someone else address the envelope, so as to be sure that the hero would open it, instead of returning it unopened as he had her other letters. One title properly inserted could cover this point even as the action stands.

While Mr. Holding seems to fit the character as described, he, nevertheless, lacks a certain touch of personality to develop the proper sympathy.

Helen Jerome Eddy, as the sister, made her small part stand out, and George Fisher was a satisfactory "willun."

Others in the cast were Clarisse Selwyn, Kathryn Vaughn and Senor Buzzi.

The Box Office Angle.

You can safely promise that this is an exceptionally artistic offering, and with that angle to talk about and the fact that the story presents the unusual situation of a man falling in love with a girl because he saw a wax figure of her, this should be made to sound quite worth while.

If you've had particular success with any of Miss Martin's pictures in the past, I would pick out the ones which have gone best and mention them in every ad. used in connection with this offering.

This is not an exceptional production because the story misses fire in spots, but I believe it will please generally, since it registers an atmosphere that is decidedly above the average program offering.

MECHANICAL AND OLD SCHOOL, BUT THEME WILL PULL MONEY

James Morrison, Zena Keefe, Arthur Donaldson, Katherine Kaelred, Frank Sheridan and Marie Shotwell in

ENLIGHTEN THY DAUGHTER

Ivan-Enlightment Film Corp.-State Rights

DIRECTOR.....Ivan Abramson
AUTHOR.....Ivan Abramson
CAMERAMAN.....Marcel A. Le Picard
AS A WHOLE.....Old-school production of sex moral theme; has box office value
STORY.....Will attract because deals with subjects generally only whispered about DIRECTION.....Mechanical; old school methods
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good and fair; not artistic
LIGHTINGS.....Too uniform; often poor
CAMERA WORK.....Just acceptable
STARS.....Evenly balanced, with overplaying in spots; technique made them mechanical at times
SUPPORT.....Evenly balanced, but mechanical
INTERIORS.....A few good; many ordinary to best advantage; many ordinary
EXTERIORS.....A few good; many ordinary some bad
DETAIL.....Quite a lot of sex operation incidents
TIME.....One hour and forty minutes (7 parts)

DESPITE the fact that this production is certainly rather crude in spots because it has been produced from an old-school, mechanical technique which gave us nothing that was truly artistic and compelled all the players throughout the offering to turn to the camera to register their emotions instead of permitting them to play naturally by shifting the camera angle and using the cut-and-flash method, I believe that this can be considered a very good box office proposition, simply because it deals with a subject in which most everyone is decidedly interested, most people being much more interested in it than they will admit openly.

The story, as a story, is not truly tremendous drama, and surely the chief strength and interest comes from the fact that the author has taken up the question of illegal operations and the results of one girl not having been enlightened and another having been "told."

The points weren't registered with any exceptional finesse, and, as a matter of fact, the question of just how they enlightened the daughter was hurdled early in the production, with practically no attention to it at any time. I believe everyone admits that daughters should know, but the big problem is, and has been, how to tell them.

In this story we have presented at great length the situation of a wealthly, "fun-loving" young man, who, after a slow process of becoming acquainted with an unenlightened maiden, was caught in a storm, which compelled them to pass the night together at a road-house.

This was followed by his acquaintance and developing interest in the "enlightened" maiden, with the result that he asked her to marry him.

The mother of the unenlightened maid had been registered as a card-playing, cigarette-smoking female willing to transfer her affections to the unscrupulous doctor, whose business she was plugging in order to get commissions which might pay her card debts.

When it was about time for the wedding, the mother of the unenlightened girl learned that her daughter was in trouble. She decided to take her to the unscrupulous doctor, with the final result that, after many harrowing scenes, the unenlightened girl died, the girl who had promised to marry the young man who was the cause of the trouble refused to marry him, and every one was generally miserable.

On the finish we found the father of the dead girl forgiving the mother, who had been chiefly at fault all the time. I can't quite see the moral of this "forgiving" from any angle.

Jimmie Morrison, Zena Keefe and Arthur Donaldson did rather well with their characterizations and made them quite human. Katherine Kaelred, Marie Shotwell and Frank Sheridan over-reached in almost all of their emotional bits.

Ruby de Remer, who was the enlightened maiden, was rather pretty, but lacked poise and authority.

Violet Horner was rather good in the small part of another woman who considered the services of the unscrupulous doctor, this bit being literally dragged into the story.

The entire cast was seriously handicapped throughout the offering by the fact that the producer used the technique of shooting everything from one angle. He held his camera at one point and made every character turn around to it in order to register emotions, instead of playing naturally to a person opposite. Apparently, this director has no conception of the proper use of camera angles, and the cut-and-flash technique. Unfortunately, this mechanical arrangement made the entire offering appear stilted, where the other technique would have made the scenes decidedly impressive.

The "extras" presented in the bachelors' dinner scene were painfully young and amateurish. It was a pity to see Jimmie Morrison trying to carry a dramatic scene with such wofully weak support.

The lightings were not good at any time, and it was quite evident that no tests had been taken of the make-ups on any of the characters, particularly the women, and even the children, because in almost every close-up the make-up was very, very much in evidence.

Even with these crudities of technique, there were some moments of pathos that will undoubtedly register with the average audience, and the very fact that this subject deals with such big questions which are generally only whispered about will give the offering an atmosphere of impressive dignity with the masses. The intelligent, well-educated patrons will realize the crudities of the production and fail to be properly impressed.

While a few of the sets were quite acceptable, there was one which was particularly bad, because it was slathered full of gilt furniture. It was also rather noticeable that the interiors of this home didn't match with the exteriors which we saw.

The Box Office Angle

Undoubtedly this will get you money. It will depend almost entirely upon how you handle it as to how much it will get you. If you exploit it in a big way, it should be a business clean-up. I can see no essential reason why this should be censored, because there is really nothing shown or talked about in the production that is not generally known.

Certainly it isn't a good film for young children, because they will ask questions which it is probably not time for them to know about. But I believe that it would be rather a good thing for most every young girl and young man to see this production, if for no other reason than that it would make them think about things which should really be given serious thought.

Your more intelligent patrons will undoubtedly not enthuse particularly over this as a production, from the artistic or dramatic standpoints, but, since it is a propaganda film, they will excuse the artistic and dramatic failings. I have called attention to them above, specifically, because I believe that a production of this sort could be made four or five times more effective if properly produced, and I am anxious to bring the better technique into all of our feature films.

CONVENIENT SURFACE MELLER BASED ON OLD IDEAS

Nance O'Neil in

GREED

McClure—Seven Sins—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Theodore Marston
CAMERAMAN	Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE	Another poor "meller" plot; a bit better handled than first two "Sins"
STORY	Terribly convenient, ancient and obvious
DIRECTION	Gave fair atmosphere and action but plot too much of a handicap
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable, but rather varied
LIGHTINGS	Some good; others ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Dignified, but little to do
SUPPORT	Good and poor
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Rather good
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

WHILE the handling of this third in the "Seven Sins" series was a bit better, the story was just as wild as the others, and consequently I'd say that this is unfit for any theatre save one where they want blood-and-thunder mellerdrammer of the ancient school.

Early in the offering we have a terribly convenient coincidence which puts a blackmailer in a position of power over a wealthy widow, who is forced to introduce her society friends to this blackmailer so that he might "fleece" them in a brokerage office.

We had a title early in the offering where Miss O'Neil told the Adam and Eve kids—Shirley Mason and George LeGuere—that money wasn't everything and didn't always bring happiness, which is surely a "new" (?) thought. They then cut loose on the melodrama, working up through a lot of weird stuff to the tremendously original (?) situation of finding the hero over the body of the willun, holding a gun, with the only witness suffering from lost memory.

They gave us a trial scene with entirely too much tiresome detail—because trial scenes were done to death three years ago—and then they worked up to that wonderfully "new" climax where the witness with the lost memory "came to" just in time to get word to the governor and stop the execution. Oh, boy!

Whoever had the job of picking out these stories for McClure certainly must have had a rather poor opinion of the film fans of this country. I would have no kick whatever regarding this series if the McClure Syndicate hadn't promised that they intended to produce "master pictures"—productions which would "lead the way." If they had started out to make ordinary melodrama for the masses, as the serial people do, then they would have had everybody with them, because no one would have been disappointed.

This third "Sin" was directed by Mr. Marston, the first two having been handled by Richard Ridgely. Mr. Marston has given a little bit better atmosphere in most of this offering and has given a bit more dignity to some of the action, but it was impossible to keep this human or convincing because of the situations provided.

Miss O'Neil did her best to maintain her dignity in this offering, but she was so handicapped that her work doesn't register as it has in some more intelligently written offerings in which she has appeared.

Shirley Mason and George Le Guere were the fly-about, thoughtless kids that they have been planted as in the other releases. Neither has made such an impression as to mark them as true favorites, because the things they've been called upon to do didn't ring true.

Alfred Hickman, as the detective, gave an even performance, which stood out principally because he played with more authority than the other members of the cast. He had a part which permitted him to work easily and he kept it nicely within bounds.

Harry Northrup, as the willun, was rather effective at times, but seemed a bit too anxious to register the business of twirling his mustache to prove that he was a "willun" of the old school, which, however, did fit in with the general action of the offering.

The Box Office Angle

I would say that if you are catering to a melodramatic-loving community such as has turned out in real mobs to see the serials of the past year or so, this may prove a good bet for you at the box office. Because of the exploitation and the prominence of the stars in this series you may be able to have this register successfully, providing you don't make any false promises.

I'd make it very clear that this is a melodrama of action rather than a human drama pointing a moral. To play safe it would be advisable to avoid any specific promises as to the merits of the offering.

Get them in if you can and then use the alibis necessary for the particular patrons who may make a complaint. One set may have one viewpoint and another an entirely different angle.

LEO DELANEY
FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER
VITAGRAPH FILMS
Have Been Shown in Six Years Past
Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

Send Me Your Reports
I TABULATE AND AVERAGE THEM

FAIRLY INTERESTING MYSTERY FRAME UP FARCE LACKS REAL PUNCH

Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon in

THE MAN WHO TOOK A CHANCE

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	William Worthington
AUTHOR	Ben Cohn
CAMERAMAN	Friend F. Baker
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting, but never really "gets you"
STORY	Attempted mystery-farce not well developed
DIRECTION	Good atmosphere, but action values not evenly balanced
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some exteriors very fine; others ordinary; interiors varied
CAMERA WORK	Generally good
STARS	Rather pleasing; he misses at times
SUPPORT	Acceptable
EXTERIORS	Some very pretty; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient; questionable at times
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

WHILE an average audience may consider this interesting and fairly good entertainment, most of them will feel that it falls a bit short of registering as real mystery melo where this is attempted towards the end.

The plot has a "frame-up" idea something similar to the one used in "Manhattan Madness," but it hasn't been handled nearly so well as the Fairbanks mystery stuff, and the early scenes leading up to the "frame-up" mystery were decidedly draggy.

The situation which presented the young American, just returned from ten years in China, in the act of entering a friend's home as an English lord, under an assumed name, was decidedly far-fetched, and certainly Mr. Farnum isn't of the type to be readily accepted as an Englishman. His statement within an hour after his arrival that he'd never been in England, which might have been intended for comedy, was certainly a poor bit of title writing, because a man, if he were trying to play a part, would surely not forget himself so soon.

The convenient arrangement whereby there happened to be a crook posing as a nobleman in the very house picked out by the American to play the "title" thing, was certainly rather painful.

There were some very well-lighted exteriors in the early part of the offering and the atmosphere was rather classy, except for the ballroom scenes, which made it slump a bit.

I hardly believe that any audience will take the story seriously at any time. The action doesn't convince and seems to be just a convenient surface-melo arrangement of incidents.

Agnes Vernon, as the girl, registered in a rather pleasing manner, although she didn't have as good an opportunity in this as she had in "A Stranger from Somewhere."

Mr. Farnum did very well except in the scenes where he was supposed to be dreaming as he purchased some cards, and this point misses fire badly. His work hardly rang true when he was doing the "awkward" thing, but, as a two-fisted hero, he registered rather well. If Mr. Farnum would have his hair trimmed, he would appear decidedly more human and would undoubtedly register better.

In the supporting cast were Lloyd Whitlock, Countess Du Cello, Marc Fenton, Charles Perley and Arthur Hoyt.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can figure this a rather safe bet to play as an offering which is only expected to get by and register as rather interesting. Don't promise that it is exceptional or big, or anything of that sort, because it isn't. As an average program release no one has any real kick coming. It is rather slow at first and when they get into the melodramatic stuff at the end there is a bit of a suggestion of Keystone burlesque, because this "frame-up" rescue stuff has not been worked out as carefully as such things must be done to make them register.

I had a hunch that it was a "frame-up" from the start, and I have a hunch that many others will feel the same way. This wasn't true of "Manhattan Madness."

If Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon have pulled anything for you in their previous production—"A Stranger From Somewhere"—then I would mention that specifically in billing this one.

POLITICAL FRAME UP MELO WITH SOME GOOD SPOTS

Florence La Badie in

HER LIFE AND HIS

Thanhouser-Pathe

DIRECTOR	Frederic Sullivan
AUTHOR	Philip Lonergan
CAMERAMAN	Chas. W. Hoffman
AS A WHOLE	Old-school melo; well-played; well-done
STORY	"Reformer, frame up, girl detective" stuff
DIRECTION	Registered some very good individual scenes; kept production interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; a few ordinary spots
LIGHTINGS	Some splendid; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Made some scenes quite effective
SUPPORT	A fitting melo background
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some good; some only fair; several bad back drops
DETAIL	Generally good
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

FOR the average program release this holds rather well, but it will never impress as anything worth while, because the story is the old plot about the prison-reform-hero who is "framed up" by politicians and saved by the heroine, who makes the "willuness" jealous, so that she'd confess to the "frame-up." I believe this is Formula No. 103.

Director Sullivan has provided rather a good atmosphere for most of the scenes, and many of the individual bits were worthy of a much better cause.

Miss La Badie was quite pretty in many of the lightings, and, as a whole, she registered a very favorable impression. The other members of the cast were rather good types, but their scenes called for only the routine political melodramatic stuff and none of them did anything which stood out in a distinctive manner.

In one or two of the titles there was a suggestion that this was intended to take a shot at the New York situation, in which Thomas Mott Osborne figured, but, of course, the "frame-up" carried the plot away from any thing resembling the actual facts of the New York case.

The handling of the investigation in the district attorney's office was rather commendable, this being the best scene in the offering.

In the supporting cast were H. E. Herbert, Ethyle Cooke, Sam Niblack and Justus D. Barnes.

The Box Office Angle.

This is a safe bet as an ordinary program release, but is hardly worthy of any specific promises of merit. Because of the fact that it deals with prison reform, you may be able to center the attention upon that point and do fairly well with it.

If you have had any success with Miss La Badie in her various offerings, I would mention particularly those which have gone well, so as to remind your patrons of the fact that this is the same girl.

The audience of average intelligence—particularly one which accepts melodrama—will possibly be greatly impressed, because it isn't a roughhouse action melo of strenuous moments, but it is one of those clever-heroine-wronged-hero things, in which those who like to hate the 'willuness," can glory in the shero's triumph over her in the investigation scene. The more intelligent, discriminating patrons may protest against the obvious elements of this plot, but, as a whole, I believe you can feel fairly safe in playing this for an interesting, rather well-done political melo.

VERY ARTISTIC AND APPEALING PRODUCTION OF VERY OLD PLOT

Enid Bennett in

PRINCESS OF THE DARK

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Charles Miller
AUTHOR.....Lanier Bartlett
SCENARIO BY.....Monte M. Katterjohn
ART DIRECTOR.....Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN.....Clyde de Vinna
AS A WHOLE....Very old, well-known story artistically and humanly presented
STORY.....Blind-girl, crippled-boy plot of decidedly ancient vintage, with no new angles
DIRECTION....Provided wonderfully beautiful atmosphere and action which made situations decidedly appealing
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Exceptionally artistic; only a few
CAMERA WORK.....Splendid
STAR.....Beautiful, with appealing personality; has real possibilities
SUPPORT.....Crippled boy excellent; others very good
EXTERIORS.....Most of them decidedly artistic
INTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL.....Very good
TIME.....Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

IT seems unfortunate that this very, very ancient plot idea should have been used for Miss Bennett's first appearance. I presume that when they started they had no idea that Director Miller was going to make this as elaborate and artistic a production as it is, and they also were not possibly as greatly impressed with Miss Bennett as they are now. This may have been started as a routine program picture, under the impression that the old stuff was always good.

I complain about the use of a plot such as this principally because it is such a distinctive story that any one who has ever seen it—and most fans have seen it at least once or twice—will remember it perfectly.

I believe, without the least exaggeration, that this plot has been done in th films at least forty times. The old Biograph, Universal and other short-subject concerns made use of it every so often, and within the past few weeks there was another Triangle release—"Nina, the Flower Girl," with Bessie Love—which was the same plot.

Director Miller proves conclusively by his handling of this subject that he can secure truly artistic results, and the action has been made very impressive despite the fact that most of us knew what was going to happen all the way. It seems a pity that ability was so lavished on such a plot.

In this instance, after about three reels of developing the fanciful fairy world in which the blind girl lived, we got down to the plot thread again and had an operation performed which restored her sight and disclosed the deformities of the boy she had called "her prince."

The customary situation of the cripple trying to halt the operation was registered, and then, on the finish we found him committing suicide in order to leave the path open for the love of the heroine and the man who had arranged for the operation upon her eyes.

Miss Bennett is certainly a beautiful young lady, with an expressive, appealing face. She registers her emotions without exaggeration and her repose makes her work decidedly effective. Her character was, of course, one which brought much sympathy with it, and yet the character of the hunch-back boy dominated a large part of the action.

Jack Gilbert, in the part of the crippled boy, gave a truly impressive characterization. He remained in his character every second and registered a number of big moments.

The other members of the cast were very good, although they were only a frame for the two central figures.

The supporting cast included Alfred Vosburgh, Walt Whitman and J. Frank Burke.

The Box Office Angle

It will depend somewhat upon your local conditions as to just how this should be handled. If this plot idea is pretty well-known in your community, it would be advisable to admit that it is a well-known story, but emphasize the fact that they will see in this the best production and presentation of this old film classic ever given to the screen, with a new Triangle star as the blind girl and an exceptionally artistic atmosphere as a background.

It might even be to your advantage to take that tack in advertising by saying something like this:

"You have probably seen 'The Two Orphans' several times. You have possibly seen 'East Lynne' a number of times. This beautiful little story has been done before, but never has it been presented in such an artistic manner, with such an appealing development of pathos." Then tell them about Enid Bennett, the beautiful new star of the Triangle program, who has just come to this country from Australia, and I have a hunch that you can do more with this picture from that angle than if you simply talked about it as "The Princess of the Dark"—which doesn't mean anything in particular—and surely you are anticipating and effectively stopping any criticism of the story being an old one. Handled in that manner, I believe this will prove a very good bet as a program release.

FAST SNAPPY MYSTERY ACTION WITH STAR IN FINE ROLE

Robert Warwick in

THE ARGYLE CASE

Harry Rapf—Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR ..... Ralph W. Ince
AUTHORS ..... Harriet Ford, Harvey J. O'Higgins and William J. Burns
SCENARIO BY ..... Frederick Chapin and Ralph W. Ince
CAMERAMAN ..... Andre Barlatier
AS A WHOLE ..... Fast-moving mystery melo
STORY ..... Smoothly developed; moves so fast that it holds all the way; nice suspense
DIRECTION ..... Registered snappy action; made central figure dominant
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good; a few bits uncertain, lacking definition
LIGHTINGS ..... Some splendid spotlight stuff, but some lightings ordinary CAMERA WORK ..... Generally very good, with some uncertain spots
STAR ..... Decidedly impressive, virile personality; dominated action
SUPPORT ..... Filled in nicely as background
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable; mostly studio sets
INTERIORS ..... Office sets very good; home acceptable
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Seventy-five minutes (7 parts)

DETECTIVE stories, particularly when they contain a nice element of mystery-suspense, with plenty of action that verges on the melodramatic occasionally, are sure-fire audience productions, essentially so when we have a central figure that dominates the story so that the other characters can work as a background.

In this we get a fast-moving mystery-suspense plot which develops smoothly reel after reel, with the audience kept in uncertainty up to the finish as to the actual guilt of those concerned.

As now constructed, the trapping of the guilty ones is centered about the planting of a newspaper personal, which is answered by a woman after she has been warned by her friends that the ad was a "plant." This seems to be a bit shaky as to plausibility, but the story moves so swiftly that few will ever stop to analyze that one point.

The plot tells of a murder which baffled the police, the son, the adopted daughter and the servants of the dead millionaire being suspected.

A famous detective was brought into the case, and he uncovered fingerprints of a woman in the room where the crime was committed, which prints did not match with any of those suspected. He also found a counterfeit one-hundred-dollar bill in the desk drawer.

Working on the clew of the counterfeit bill, he finally uncovered, through the newspaper personal, the mother of the adopted girl, who was now a member of the band of counterfeiters.

Having located the counterfeiters, he made use of detectaphones to obtain further evidence, and finally raided the place, making a daring entrance into the counterfeiters' den, single-handed.

At this point, Mr. Warwick stood in a small room with three men and a woman against him, but he put out the lamp, and in the fight which followed in the dark, after the flashing of many guns, we found, upon the arrival of the rescuing reinforcements, that the detective had handcuffed two of the men, while the other had slipped into the cupboard, where he had killed himself. The woman had taken no part in the affray, she being held by fear of harm to her daughter, who was with the detective.

This cleared up the counterfeiter proposition, but left the murder mystery still unsolved, except that the lawyer of the dead man had been heard talking to the counterfeiters in their room. By trapping the mother of the girl into registering some fingerprints by handing her an ink-daubed pen, the detective learned that she was the woman who witnessed the crime, and he then accused the lawyer, with the result that the latter accused the woman. This resulted in the woman turning and confessing that the lawyer had committed the murder, which was the opinion of the detective all the time, it being borne out by further evidence.

Of course, we had found a love interest developing all the way between the adopted daughter of the dead man and the detective, and this finished with a shadow clutch at the end.

Mr. Warwick came into the picture in the second reel, and from that time on all of the action centered about him. His work was forceful, and his aggressive, yet dignified, manner gave a suggestion of tremendous mental power back of everything he did.

Elaine Hammerstein, as the girl, was acceptable, but didn't create any wonderful impression. She isn't beautiful, having features which fall short of what is necessary for the screen, because of a rather weak mouth and eyes that seldom registered effectively. She had little to do in the way of real emotional scenes, however, and was surely satisfactory as support in what was essentially a man's picture.

Mary Alden, in the part of the mother, gave this the necessary sympathy to make it hold. It was a very difficult character to handle, and Miss Alden is entitled to considerable credit for giving her scenes the proper weight.

Frank Evans, as Hurley, and H. Cooper Cliffe, as Kreisler, the counterfeiter, were good types, but their characterizations were not exceptional.

The supporting cast was quite satisfactory, although none of the small bits really stood out because of unusual characterizations.

In the cast were Frank McGlynn, Gazelle Marche, John Fleming, Charles Hines, Arthur Albertson and Robert Vivian.

Some of the animated titles used, in which the light changed, would have been decidedly better if the light had not been brought on full in such a manner as to make it plain that the effect was registered artificially. While the light was kept dark these titles were very effective. However, the illusion was gone just as soon as the light came on full.

Most of the exteriors were played in studio sets, and while these were splendid for studio sets, still most any ordinary fan will realize that he is looking at a set, and not at the real thing. This was particularly true of the house-top set, which had a bad cloud backing with a moon in it. This set was entirely too well lighted, because it seemed almost daylight in these scenes, and they were used in cutting and flashing with action where spotlighting registered the blackness of night in what was supposed to be exteriors only thirty or fifty feet away.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that this should be a real money-getter. "The Argyle Case" was a success on the speaking stage that will undoubtedly be remembered pretty well all over the country, because it was a peculiar name. The authors are comparatively well known, and when you can promise a fast-moving mystery-suspense-detective story with a popular star as the dominant figure, it seems to me that it is pretty safe as a box office proposition.

I believe that almost any class of audience will be entertained by this and held by the speed of the mystery melodrama. There is hardly time given them to stop and analyze any of the nice points of the possibilities, because the action swings along at a tempo that makes the seven reels seem truly snappy.

You can surely say that this is the best production in which Robert Warwick has ever starred before the camera, and I believe that your fans will agree with you when they see it. It is an ideal character for Mr. Warwick and should do much to increase his present popularity.

OLD THEME LACKS CONVINCING ACTION OR REAL CLASS

Sessue Hayakawa in

EACH TO HIS KIND

Lasky-Paramount.

DIRECTOR ..... Edward J. Le Saint
AUTHOR ..... Paul West
SCENARIO BY ..... George D. Proctor
CAMERAMAN ..... Allan N. Davey
AS A WHOLE ..... Very weak plot only fairly well done
STORY ..... Lacked incident, was convenient and quite melo
DIRECTION ..... Failed to give distinction or make action impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... A few good spots; most of it ordinary LIGHTINGS ..... A few very good; generally very ordinary
CAMERA WORK ..... Fair
STAR ..... Hard for Jap to appear convincing as Hindoo
SUPPORT ..... Didn't impress
EXTERIORS ..... Nothing unusual
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable; not remarkable
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I CERTAINLY do not consider this a production that anyone will deem worth recommending. The story is decidedly convenient and obvious, it being a melodrama painfully lacking in incident, dealing with the old, old situation of the inability of an East Indian to mix socially with the English.

We find the clever Jap artist, Sessue Hayakawa, presented as a Hindoo, which isn't a good idea to my mind, because no one could ever consider Hayakawa as anything but a Jap. He has done so many excellent things in his Japanese character that an attempt to show him in an Indian character fails to ring true.

The story brings him to England, where a foolish girl flirts with him and wagers (oh, boy!) that she could make him give her an amulet, which he highly prized because it was from his sweetheart. The Indian succumbed rather easily to the English maid, and then the crowd walked in and he got "sore." He left without his treasured amulet, which was surely an impossible bit, but the amulet was needed in the plot later.

Returning to India, he started a revolution against the English, but this was forgotten after the English girl, her father and her sweetheart had been conveniently moved to India, with the result that the Indian prince made the sweetheart a prisoner and "bawled out" the girl when she came to save her lover, this resulting in his own sweetheart realizing that he had been faithful to her, and consequently she forgave him.

The general atmosphere of this was certainly not distinctive or artistic, because the lightings in many of the scenes were quite ordinary and the composition was frequently decidedly faulty.

None of the supporting cast registered anything that could be called distinctive. It was just an ordinary melo without anything unusual, original or truly convincing.

In the supporting cast were Tsuru Aoki, Vola Vale, Ernest Joy, Guy Oliver, Eugene Pallette, Walter Long, Paul Weigel and Cecil Holland.

The Box Office Angle.

It is possible that you can do a little business with this by announcing Sessue Hayakawa with special reference to some of his better productions, such as "The Cheat." However, I fear that most of your regulars will be sadly disappointed. There is not enough good action to make it a ripsnortin' melodrama and it certainly lacks the distinctive class and dramatic strength to have it regis-as worth while with your intelligent, discriminating patrons.

Personally, I consider this one of the weakest releases of recent months from the Lasky Studios. It surely lacks the essentials necessary to have it qualify as really worth while. It may sneak by, but certainly it isn't worthy of any recommendation.

Joseph M. Attie

FRENCH TRAGEDIENNE

Care of WID'S

ORDINARY MOVIE PRODUCTION ENTIRELY TOO ENGLISH

Edna Flugrath and Gerald Ames in

ME AN' ME PAL

English Production—Red Feather.

DIRECTOR	Harold Shaw
AUTHOR	Richard Ganthony
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary "movie" decidedly too "English"
STORY	Obvious, painfully convenient
DIRECTION	Rather old-school
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally flat, a few good bits
LIGHTINGS	Rather poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Didn't register
SUPPORT	One or two fine old types
EXTERIORS	London streets
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Too much of it
TIME	Fifty-one minutes (5 parts)

HILE this is one of those sympathetic little things in which we had a lot of junk about an old English coster character and his donkey, I do not believe that it will prove entertaining with the average American audience.

The atmosphere is essentially English and the story lacks sufficient real incident to hold the attention, the developments being painfully obvious and decidedly reminiscent of the early "movie" productions of short-reel length, where things happened when needed just because it was time to provide certain conditions.

The plot of this concerns a young artist who was disinherited when he refused to enter trade with his uncle, with the result that he took to the streets and afterwards became assistant to the coster pedler.

His manner, of course, won the housemaids, which scenes were certainly not well handled, and then what we had expected for several reels happened—he painted the old man and his donkey, labeling it "Me an' Me Pal."

Of course, the painting was immediately hung in the Academy and won much fame, with everybody happy on the finish.

In the supporting cast were S. Fairbrother, Lewis Gilbert, Douglas Munro, Hubert Willis and Gwynne Herbert.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't see where you have an opportunity to make much noise about this, because the stars and the members of the supporting cast aren't well enough known to pull you any business if you plug them, and the plot lacks any real essentials that would serve to center your advertising upon.

If you have to play this in your regular service, I would either say nothing about the offering or make it quite plain that it is an English production, registering a perfect character study of one of the most unusual types in the world—the London coster.

LITTLE TRAVELOGUE MAKES OLD PLOT ARTIFICIAL

Alice Joyce and Harry T. Morey in

THE COURAGE OF SILENCE

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	William P. S. Earle
AUTHOR	Milton Nobles
CAMERAMAN	Clark R. Nickerson
AS A WHOLE	Jumpy sex-triangle travelogue that didn't grip
STORY	Old, with uncertain sympathies
DIRECTION	Some good action; some poor; ordinary atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally muddy
LIGHTINGS	Didn't help players or atmosphere
CAMERA WORK	Fair
STARS	Personalities saved difficult characters
SUPPORT	Some very good; some ordinary
EXTERIORS	Didn't fit titles
INTERIORS	Acceptable; not remarkable
DETAIL	Lacking at times
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

ORKING with the old situation of the woman who separated husband and wife, becoming a martyr by nursing wife and children back to health and eventually bringing husband home again, they attempted to give this a touch of "newness" by making it a title travelogue.

They started out with the man and his wife in America and the woman in England, as the unhappy wife of a Spanish ambassador. The husband "fell" for the unhappy wife, these parts being played by Harry Morey and Alice Joyce, and they decided to elope. In France she learned that he was married, and left him flat.

These trips to England and France had been made by the sub-title route, with one scene on the deck of a boat and one scene at a French station, which we knew was French because they had some French writing on a blackboard.

The next little journey, however, was a "bird." Mr. Morey made a trip to Africa, they proving that it was an African hotel by showing one palm in the lobby of what otherwise might be any cheap "dump" in Brooklyn. He then went to the wild, unknown regions of central Africa, by means of one title and one scene showing him seated by a campfire inside of a tent.

About this point they thought they ought to get the characters together again, and so the wife was told she looked pale, and that consequently she should go to Europe. As a result, the wife and kiddies landed in a French town, where we of course found the former wife of the Spanish ambassador, as a nurse, waiting for them to become ill.

While the "illness" was still at work, it was found advisable to make an effort to uncover Mr. Morey, who had been last heard of beside his campfire in Africa. The wife's father was told about this, and, after a scene or two, he calmly walked in and said: "I have succeeded in locating Bradley." This obliging title preceded Mr. Morey's reappearance. I'll say that father was SOME locator.

Anyway, they finished up with Miss Joyce in a convent and hubby forgiven by his wife, with the kiddies bringing hubby to see the nurse, whose face he had not seen up to this time. Of course, he was quite some "sapprised," but nevertheless went home, a good boy.

While this is rather an ancient theme, I believe the production could have been made fairly human, because of the personalities of Mr. Morey and Miss Joyce, if the action had been kept in a certain locality without doing this title travelogue thing. Surely there was no necessity for all of these wild trips, and the wanderings give the entire production an atmosphere of artificiality which kills off the possible effectiveness of the dramatic action.

Mr. Morey had a very hard part to handle, because he naturally lost sympathy when he walked out on his wife, and, even when he returned to her, he was only half-way back in the good graces of the audience. Miss Joyce had, of course, the martyr sympathy role, but for her there was only the sacrifice ending.

Cleo Ayres registered particularly well as the wife; and the kiddies managed to get over a few good moments, principally because of several rather good kid titles. Anders Randolf was quite effective in his few scenes as the Spanish ambassador, and Robert Gaillard was more than satisfactory as the wife's father.

Others in the cast were Walter McGrail, Willie Johnson, Mildred May and Dorothy Conroy.

There were a number of very bad titles in this, and certainly a couple of titles which were used at the finish, between Miss Joyce and Mr. Morey, were particularly bad. One of them was: "I don't know how I can ever thank you." Surely, no title was needed there. Another bad one was where Miss Joyce said she would have to leave, to go to another case. The wording was bad, because it left a suggestion that she might be starting out to hunt another husband to play with.

The Box Office Angle.

The failure to make this convincing and human keeps it from registering as a production which you could safely recommend. As a program release it will probably prove interesting enough to get by for you, but I would not promise too much, because it surely doesn't grip. The names of Miss Joyce and Mr. Morey should pull you business at the box office, all right, and if your patrons aren't real "kickers" you might safely bill this as a story telling of the supreme sacrifice of a woman who refused to separate husband and wife, even though she truly loved the husband.

If they will stand for this sort of advertising, you might use such lines as these: "If you had left your husband, whom you hated, and had run away with a man you had learned to love, what would you do if you found out that he had a wife and two children?" See 'The Courage of Silence.'"

STAR'S BEAUTY HELPS ORDINARY PLOT AND SUPPORT

Mme. Olga Petrova in

BRIDGES BURNED

Pop. P. & P.—Metro

DIRECTOR	Perry N. Vekroff
AUTHOR	Mme. Petrova
SCENARIO BY	Wallace C. Clifton
CAMERAMAN	Neil Bergman
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting; star lifts it
STORY	Convenient, obvious; never grips as real drama
DIRECTION	Had some very good touches; many ordinary spots, but splendid close-ups of star
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good occasionally off
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; many a bit off
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Dignified and beautiful
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not much to do
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Good, fair and poor
DETAIL	Very obliging
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

WHILE this is better, on the whole, than most of the Petrova-Metro productions, it still falls considerably short of what it should be. The story is convenient, obvious and is never truly convincing, with several jumpy spots that were a bit convincing.

The worst of these was the situation where Mahlon Hamilton had refused to marry Petrova, and then the father started to force him to it. She then refused to be a party to a compulsory marriage, when the young man suddenly, for no apparent reason, changed his mind. He came back willing at about the same time that Petrova decided that, for the good of her heir that might be, who the nurse decided was going to be a boy—oddly enough—she should change her mind. The reason for the man's change of heart was not registered.

Following this point, Petrova ran away, supporting her son, meanwhile refusing the love of a mill owner, with whom she was employed, because, as she said, she loved her husband.

Hubby was trying to find her, and, although he had detectives on the job, they seemed to have been rather bum ones, because he got the final "dope" through an article in "The London Times," telling about Petrova's work for the Welfare League in the mills in Belfast.

In need of further complications, they brought on the war, and both the mill owner and the husband joined the colors. The mill owner lost an arm and hubby was reported dead, but afterwards came home blinded.

Hubby recovered in time, while the one-armed mill owner went back to the battlefields. The final clutch was extended to unnecessary length, making the offering seem to drag more than it had before this.

Throughout the offering there were many, many close-ups of the beautiful star that will save the offering. I certainly don't consider this a convincing or pleasing dramatic offering, but I do know that, with such a popular star as Petrova has proven, the fans will be happy and almost contented after having seen so much footage devoted to well-lighted close-ups of their favorite. In a very few of these close-ups, the star's make-up was in evidence, but certainly she had more truly beautiful bits in this than in any offering in which she has appeared in many months. Her character was a sympathy one throughout, and I believe it can be considered a very safe bet where she is liked.

Mahlon Hamilton, as the husband, was rather camera-conscious at all times and failed to make any real impression.

Arthur Hoops was very good as the mill owner, giving

(Continued on following page)

at a switchboard answering inquiries over the phone regarding the productions which are to be shown. One prominent exhibitor of the West, who has a house as beautiful as the Strand or Rialto, has three girls on a private switchboard answering calls that are something like this:

"Hello. What's on to-night? Oh, yes. Who's the star? Yes. Who is in the cast with them? Yes. Give me a short synopsis of the feature, please. Oh, yes—what time does it start? Yes. What time is it out? Yes, thank you."

The men responsible for the production of films must immediately recognize the important fact that the public, who must be pleased, are now shopping for their films. They must quit the mad rush to turn out quantity. They must throw away or reconstruct pictures which are not up to the standard (and every single program company has many of these) and release fewer and better pictures.

It has been a long cry that the exhibitor should have longer runs. I can tell you definitely that most of the exhibitors are firmly convinced of this fact, but they're up against the proposition of being unable to determine whether or not they could get enough good film to begin the "long run" proposition.

About two and a half years ago, in the first issue of "Wid's" department in the New York Evening Mail, I wrote an appeal for a system which would give fewer pictures, better pictures and longer runs. The conditions demanding that constructive change have been growing more and more imperative every week, and still we find the program manufacturer getting away with murder—and why? Because he can!

The only reason we have the program system of release is that it provides an opportunity for the manufacturer to shove in junk and pictures that are just mediocre and force theatres to book them with the threat to stop their supply unless they do.

To-day the producers MUST take heed to the fact that they've got the golden goose gasping for life, and they MUST let go their strangle hold. The public is sick, sore and disgusted with present conditions in the film production field. They are turning away from the film theatres, except when they can see some favorite personality that they know will provide an evening's entertainment.

We have had rumors, and more rumors, of possible consolidations, and there have been whispered suggestions that the intention was to reduce the output and make better films.

Most of the men in charge of the destinies of the various companies have been forced to a realization of the fact that they are releasing too many films, and too many bad films. The reason nothing has been done, however, is that every gink wants to be the main gazabo.

We lack big men! We lack men big enough to see the dangers and take heed for their own good! Each feller is trying to out-figure the other on a stock deal of some proposition which will place him in personal control. If they don't "come to" soon, there'll be a real wreck!

Summer is coming! There are more automobiles in this country than ever before, and the people are turning to the great outdoors with a realization of its possibilities that was unthought of in the years gone by. There is every chance for the film industry to get an awful kick in the ear this summer unless something is done which will be sincere constructive work to remedy the recognized existing evils.

Understand, I insist that pictures have advanced, and are advancing more rapidly than ever before, from the viewpoint of the number of worth-while productions. However, our public has advanced faster than the producers because of the few splendid productions which they have seen, and they now refuse to be made "suckers" of by having junk handed to them when they are expecting the real thing.

Any one who thinks it is impossible to kill off the film fan has another think coming. It's been done in other amusement lines, and I can tell you that it has been done in the film industry in the past two years. A great many new patrons have come to the films, but a terrifying number of the old regulars have ceased to be regulars. That is truly important and deserving of real consideration!

On one hand, in the industry to-day we have too many theatres, with an appalling majority of them losing money. The boys who are fighting each other in certain sections had better get together. Why shoot all the money in the air with nobody showing a profit, when a little co-operation will make money for every one concerned?

On the other hand, the producer must make up his mind that the day for getting rid of the worthless stuff by the program method has passed. If he continues forcing it, he's going to bankrupt the business.

I have a suggestion to make which I presume most of my producer friends will say is a wild-eyed thought, but surely it is worth thinking over very seriously, in view of the condition of the industry.

I want to suggest that every producing company agree to stop releasing new films for three months, allowing the exhibitors to book open market from the old productions of the past few years in that time.

I'm willing to bet that every exhibitor who had the opportunity could make more money than he could by playing new stuff, and surely the producer would benefit sufficiently by the additional revenue on prodctions already made to justify his throwing into the ash-can some of the junk he had hoped to get rid of in what they call the "off months" of the summertime.

The producer could continue to make films, but could make GOOD ones.

There are, undoubtedly, various angles to this suggestion, but I think it is big enough to justify any producing company or big theatre man going into very thoroughly.

Surely, conditions are rotten. Certainly this would be one way to get started towards straightening them out.

Think it over!

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

HERE'S SOMETHING THAT WILL SURELY INTEREST

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same percentage, we have placed the one with the higher percentage of repeats first.

Reports	Feature	Company	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeats
6	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith Special	100	100	5
6	The Rink	Mutual-Chaplin	99	99	5
5	The Floorwalker	Mutual-Chaplin	97	100	2
5	The Goosegirl	Paramount	95	95	4
7	Miss George Washington.	Paramount	96	94	5
34	Hulda From Holland	Paramount	95	95	23
10	American Aristocracy	Triangle	96	93	6
8	The Ne'er Do Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
5	Behind the Scenes	Mutual-Chaplin	94	93	4
20	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	92	14
22	Peggy	Triangle	95	91	15
10	The Common Law	L. J. Selznick	89	96	4
5	The Eternal City	Para. Spec.	90	95	3
17	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	94	91	10
6	The Serpent	Fox	92	93	1
7	Rags	Paramount	90	95	4
7	Bought and Paid For	World	91	92	5
9	The Devil's Double	Triangle	91	92	5
9	Iron Claw	Serial	92	91
17	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	93	88	11
9	Mister 44	Metro	89	92	4
10	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	89	91	6
5	Where Are My Children?	Uni. Spec.	88	92	2
5	Destruction	Fox	86	94	1
9	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	93	86	5
5	Shielding Shadow	Serial	90	89
8	Graustark	K-E-S-E Serv.	88	90	4
7	Molly Make-Believe	Paramount	90	88	5
12	Habit of Happiness	Triangle	92	86	4
12	Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	91	86	5
7	Prince and the Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
8	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	89	88	2
18	East Lynne	Fox	88	87	9
5	Green Stockings	Vitagraph	87	88	2
12	Battle Cry of Peace	Vitagraph	95	80	4
22	Little Lady Eilleen	Paramount	86	89	8
22	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	80	7
21	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	16
7	God's Country & Woman	Vitagraph	88	86	3
5	My Offical Wife	Vitagraph	89	85	2
19	An Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	88	86	3
21	Reggie Mixes In	Triangle	92	81	10
26	Flirting With Fate	Triangle	88	85	10
10	Fifty-Fifty	Triangle	90	83	4
5	The Great Divide	Vitagraph	88	75	2
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
15	The Cheat	Paramount	94	78	9
14	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	87	85	5
15	The Good Bad Man	Triangle	91	81	4
13	Her Double Life	Fox	84	88	3
8	The Old Homestead	Paramount	88	83	6
14	The Count	Mutual-Chaplin	87	84	8
11	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	84	87	4
17	Home	Triangle	91	79	9
8	Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	3
12	Plain Jane	Triangle	89	81	3
16	The Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	81	8
15	The Aryan	Triangle	84	85	6
7	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	79
6	Bella Donna	Paramount	91	77	3
11	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	86	82	5
6	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	83	85	2
5	A Man and His Soul	Metro	84	84	1
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	1
11	The Combat	Vitagraph	83	85	1
7	Undine	Bluebird	80	87	3
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	Paramount	82	85	1
7	Island of Regeneration	Vitagraph	85	81	4
16	A Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	84	82	9
9	Still Waters	Paramount	85	80	6
17	His Picture in the Papers	Triangle	89	76	5
11	Carmen	Paramount	82	83	3
7	Wild Flower	Paramount	88	76	4
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	Paramount	88	76	2
5	What Will People Say?	Metro	80	84
6	Excuse Me	Pathe	90	73	2
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	Paramount	74	89	4
15	Stepping Stones	Triangle	87	76	2
7	Helene of the North	Paramount	85	78	1
6	Madame X	Pathe	71	91	3
13	The River of Romance	Metro	88	74	6
18	The Social Secretary	Triangle	90	72	7
13	Maria Rosa	Paramount	82	80	4
13	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	85	77	3
5	Alice in Wonderland	S. R. Spec.	76	86	1
5	Kindling	Paramount	80	82
5	The Soul Market	Metro	84	77	2
23	The Phantom	Triangle	87	74	7
5	The Soul of Broadway	Fox	83	78	1
7	Gentleman From Indiana	Paramount	85	76
5	Chimmie Fadden	Paramount	90	71
5	Man From Mexico	Paramount	90	70	2
5	Camille	World	83	77	1
16	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	78	3
13	Martha's Vindication	Triangle	83	77	2

No. of Features With 5 Reports	Company	Honor Features
127	Paramount	27
1	Paramount Spec.	1
1	Artcraft	0
112	Triangle	26
39	Metro	6
30	World	2
46	Fox	10
2	Mutual	0
6	Mutual-Chaplin	4
9	Pathe	3
10	Bluebird	1
25	Vitagraph	4
3	K. E. S. E. Serv.	1
4	Serials	2
1	Griffith Spec.	1
2	Universal Spec.	1
2	L. J. Selznick	1
1	Alice In Wonderland	1

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

DELIGHTFULLY HUMAN SMALL TOWN STUFF THAT REGISTERS

Robert Harroun in

THE BAD BOY

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Chester Withey
AUTHORS	Frank E. Woods and Chester Withey
CAMERAMAN	David Ables
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally human small-town characterization with speedy melo at finish
STORY	Simple, but unusually effective because of truths
DIRECTION	Registered splendid atmosphere and human, convincing action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very artistic; generally very good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Human, appealing characterization
SUPPORT	Some splendid types; well handled
EXTERIORS	Very well chosen
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WE get here an appealing, human study of conditions which tend to develop some of our criminals even though all concerned are attempting to do what they think best. The story shows many of the very human escapades of a small-town boy, in school and out, with the customary anger of the narrow villagers exercising an influence on this youngster to the point that it really only made his worse.

The father who figured force as a necessary means for discipline finally drove his son out into the world, and the next word received at the home was of the boy's imprisonment.

For the finish, we found the boy coming back to his home town in the company of several yeggmen, determined upon robbing the village bank. When he faced the well-remembered scenes of his youth there was a subconscious struggle to reform, but a misunderstood situation between the girl he had loved and a friend caused him to proceed with the plans for the robbery.

Later, when reassured of the girl's faith in him, he went to his home, where his mother welcomed him. Suddenly realizing that it was time for the robbery, in which he had promised to take part, he hurried to the meetnig place, but found that his companions would not listen to him, and it was only after an exciting escape from being placed in a freight car bound hand and foot that he reached the bank to find the yeggs at work. His father and other men had also discovered the yeggs, and they now came in to capture them, finding the boy with them.

He was, of course, held under suspicion until, finally by twists of circumtsance, which brought one of th escaped yeggs back in search of the buried booty, h was cleared. The girl, of course, was his faithful frien throughout.

It all finished with a happy clutch, and the scen which registered the changed attitude of the fathe towards the boy who had been sent to a career o crime because of a failure to realize the necessity making the growing boy's environment such that would not pervert his mind.

Producer Chester Withey and Author Frank E. Wood are deserving of a lot of credit for properly catchin the small-town atmosphere for this little story, an surely they have carefully registered effective little bit of business in scores of scenes.

The types were very well chosen, and, on the whole the acting was decidedly well-balanced.

There were a few very artistic exteriors, although the artistic desire was never permitted to go to th extent of spoiling the atmosphere.

Bobby Harroun was the central figure throughout and he gave one of those characterizations which mad him famous while working with Mr. Griffith. He i one of the fe wyoung men who can keep a weak youth character in the proper bounds to hold the sympathy o any audience without sacrificing any of the point necessary to portray the weakness.

In the supporting cast were Richard Cummings, Josephine Crowell, Mildred Harris, William H. Brown James Harrison, Colleen Moore, Elmo Lincoln and Harry Fischer.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that this will appeal particularly to a community audience or one where the human elements o small-town life are well understood. Most any audience should think this very good entertainment, but a community audience should think it exceptionally pleasing.

I question the box office value of Bobby Harroun's name, unless you specifically plug this with considerable emphatic advertising, aimed to register the human elements of the story.

In billing this you might use such lines as: "Who is at fault when "bad boys" become criminals? "Have you a boy in your home who seems bad at times? Whose fault is it?"

I would use such lines as the above in a "teaser" campaign for several days or a week before announcing this production.

This should be a particularly good system where the same elements as those incorporated in the story are to be found.

Of course, most of our city folk have been small-town people at one time, and so you must not think that this will not appeal to them simply because you are in the city. It has been well enough done that it should register effectively most anywhere.

CHARACTERIZATIONS AND HEART INTEREST MOMENTS MAKE THIS TRULY BIG. IT HITS HOME AND RINGS TRUE.

THE BARRIER

Rex Beach Special Production

DIRECTOR	Edgar Lewis
PRODUCED UNDER SUPERVISION OF	Rex Beach and Benj. B. Hampton
AUTHOR	Rex Beach
SCENARIO BY	Adrian Gil-Spear
CAMERA MAN	Edward Earle
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally human character study with dramatic moments that hit hard
STORY	Held very nicely, providing wonderful character studies
DIRECTION	Kept characters human; made big moments register; lacked finesse
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Uniform; no attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK	Good straight stuff
STAR	Mitchell Lewis stands out
SUPPORT	Many splendid characterizations; no bad spots
EXTERIORS	Fitted Alaska in summer, but lacked artistic touch
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere nicely; no attempt for light effects
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Two hours and ten min. (9 parts)

"THE BARRIER" has created a sensation in the film world, because it has emphasized the possibilities of making a truly big production without a muchly-advertised star or the use of spectacular sets and mobs.

At this critical time in the film industry, every one has stopped short to wonder over this conclusive proof of the supremacy of a real story. When "The Spoilers" was produced it caused an upheaval, but at that time the star system was not as strong as it is to-day. "The Ne'er-Do-Well," because of the handling, was rather unwieldy.

This, third of the special productions of Rex Beach stories, has demonstrated conclusively that real actors, even though they are not listed as "stars" before the picture begins, in a truly big story, under the direction of one capable of bringing out the human power of the situations, results in a film worthy of a place among our big special productions, such as have been booked through the country for a full evening's entertainment.

Of course, this offering has a box office value almost equal to that of an advertised star's name, in the knowledge that the production is based upon one of our most successful author's big novels.

In this instance, it is conclusive proof that the story and the players have made the offering big, because, while the director managed to register most of his points with true appeal, he surely didn't cloak his production in photographic art, such as we have found in many of our feature films produced in the past year.

While this would have undoubtedly been even a greater picture had it been artistic, it serves as an interesting study, inasmuch as it isn't particularly artistic, to realize that only the story and human appeal in the characterizations can be held responsible for the inevitable success of this production.

Opening with a prologue which is a bit unwieldy, as all prologues are, this gets going at a steadily increasing tempo, until we are hitting high spots that register with gripping power along about the sixth, seventh and eighth reels.

At the finish we have a touch of pathos due to the sacrifice made by a very lovable character that has seldom been equalled on the screen.

The story of this concerns the love of an army officer for a half-breed girl, whom he meets at an Alaskan frontier town. There is a real internal conflict because of this young man's realization of his love for this halfbreed and his inability to marry the girl because it would ruin his career in the army and antagonize his Kentucky family.

In the prologue we had learned that the girl was really white and had been taken away by a man, who now appeared as her father, just after her real father had murdered her mother, for which crime the man who took her away and now posed as her father had been held responsible.

After very many interesting developments, we found the army officer willing to marry the girl despite his belief that she was a halfbreed, and then the man who had appeared as her father confessed to the officer that the girl was white and that he was wanted for a murder of which he was innocent.

The real father of the girl had come into the Alaskan territory, and he now kidnapped his daughter and sent her down the river with a villainous henchman, just before the girl's guardian killed him in retribution for having murdered the child's mother in the days gone by.

As the story developed we had been introduced slowly and intimately to a lovable French-Canadian trapper known as "'Poleon." This brown giant loved the girl, who was in love with the army officer, and it was he who rescued her from the villain who had taken her down the river, after a terrific battle. There is a wonderful scene where he brings the girl back to her army officer and then sails away to seek his "Far Countree."

Every one of the many thousands who have read the book remember the character of 'Poleon. It is really the big heart-interest part, and surely Mitchell Lewis, who was a wonderful type, has given us an exceptional bit of work in bringing 'Poleon to the screen. He "stole the picture" sure enough. He will be remembered as "the star."

Russell Simpson, as the sweetheart who ran away with the child and afterwards posed as her father, gave a remarkable characterization with an exceptionally well done make-up.

Howard Hall, as the villainous father, had authority and power and made this character very forceful.

Ed F. Roseman, as "Runnion," gave a truly distinctive characterization, because he made this villainous henchman part live, partly because he seemed a perfect type and partly because he handled his big moments effectively.

Mabel Julienne Scott, as Necia, the daughter, who also appeared as the mother in the prologue, was quite appealing, and she gave an exceptional performance, considering the fact that she was never heralded as a star. She photographed pleasingly and played intelligently at all times, keeping her character human.

W. J. Gross, as "No Creek" Lee, was another character that stood out because of his being a wonderful type handled naturally.

Victor Sutherland, as the army officer hero, was quite acceptable, although, oddly enough, in this production the hero is secondary in strength to the other characters.

Mary Kennevan Carr was quite acceptable as Alluna, the squaw wife of the Alaskan trader.

To those who know the book thoroughly, there will be one or two points which will seem to have been missed in the visualization, but the production holds so well and builds so nicely that it will be generally considered an exceptionally capable adaptation of a big novel.

Director Edgar Lewis is surely to be commended for having made all of his characters very human and keeping his action truly convincing. It is the human element which makes this big. There have been many more artistic productions, but surely this is the most human film of such length ever placed upon the screen.

In the novel, the story is told without a prologue, and undoubtedly the adaptation would have been more effective had it been pictured in that way. Yet you will find that the present development holds perfectly, with a very nice element of suspense and a truly powerful series of climaxes towards the finish.

When first shown to the trade there was an anti-climax at the very finish because of there being a little too much footage following 'Poleon's return with the girl. This has been readjusted, however, so that when the production is presented in finished form it will hold every minute.

A number of new titles have been written by Mr. Beach to strengthen the development of some of the situations, since the first showing, which also makes the production even better than it was at that time.

The Box Office Angle

I understand that this offering is to be presented on the basis of a road show attraction, playing as a full evening's entertainment. I can tell you definitely that it will be a tremendous winner both from the viewpoint of possible business and "repeat" business. I would be willing to bank upon the success of "The Barrier" everywhere, principally because it has such a tremendous audience appeal. It will stir any community and cause those who see it to recommend it enthusiastically to their friends.

This production is distinctive in one way, in that it is surely the best nine reel dramatic story produced in the films, with the possible exception of "The Spoilers," also by Mr. Beach, and I think that for heart interest the character of 'Poleon has a much bigger appeal than any single element in "The Spoilers." Understand, I don't class this as the greatest dramatic story ever produced, but surely it is the greatest human drama without spectacle ever presented in fitting length for an evening's entertainment, and with the prestige of the author and the reputation already earned by the novel, it should have a thoroughly established box office value in every community.

INTELLIGENTLY PADDED ONE REEL WITH QUESTIONABLE CLIMAX

Frances Nelson in

ONE OF MANY

Arthur James-Metro

DIRECTOR	W. Christy Cabanne
AUTHOR	W. Christy Cabanne
CAMERAMAN	William E. Fildew
AS A WHOLE	Quite slow, causing it to drag; theme a bit questionable
STORY	Worth one reel; climax possibly distasteful to some
DIRECTION	By slow tempo and many close-ups managed to pad action intelligently
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some splendid; some only fair
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Fine and fair
STAR	Will please because of many fine close-ups
SUPPORT	Good; not enough to do
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Nothing unusual
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERING the amount of actual incident in this plot, it was good for about one reel. By the intelligent use of very slow action and many close-ups, the director has padded it out to five reels so that the average patron will not notice the padding, but will simply feel that the production is entirely too draggy and slow. Patrons who like action films will particularly notice this, because very little happens in the course of the five reels.

The plot deals with matters which are not new, but an attempt has been made to make them seem so by philosophical titles all through. The climax was something which has been done before in pictures and also in twisted form, but it is a question in my mind whether the average patron will take just the proper angle concerning it. I am afraid that most of them will feel that it is an unpleasant thought.

The story tells of the girl who willingly gave herself to an old roue because her mother needed to go to a better climate for her health, with the roue conveniently walking out on her soon after.

The girl became a cabaret singer and met a young man who eventually married her, with the climax coming when the young man's father proved to be the man who had originally lived with the girl.

After quite some mental battle the young man decided to stick it out, anyway, and we found them apparently happy as the story ended. We were introduced to this young man as a "derelict," and, so far as we could see, he didn't do anything in the picture but drink whiskey and pay attention to this girl. I'd like to know what his regular business was, and where he got the coin to buy the booze and support the lady.

The production had all the ear-marks of one which had been made hurriedly and at little expense, because there were no elaborate sets and almost all of the interiors were used for many shots, most of them from the same angle. This was also true of the exteriors, which would indicate that speed was an object.

The story seemed to be a "thinking" plot, from the fact that we had so many close-ups and scenes in which various characters stood around and "thought" about things.

In a few places the cutting was bad, since close-ups and long shots didn't match. In one place, shooting from one side of the door, Miss Nelson had it pretty well open, while the shot from the other side showed it tightly shut.

The willun and the hero at one time fought for about ten minutes in the hallway in front of the hero's room without anyone seeming to pay any attention. But after the hero made a getaway the occupants of the house seemed to be aroused very suddenly.

Despite all of these points, however, I believe that the director has so carefully covered up the lack of incident in his plot and has presented Miss Nelson in so many attractive close-ups that the average audience will consider this worth while as a production, providing they don't kick about the final situation in which the boy's wife proves to be his father's mistress.

Miss Nelson displayed some very pretty gowns and quite some of her "figger" in the cabaret scenes in a singer's outfit. Very nice!

In one scene the willun came into Miss Nelson's boudoir and looked her over, which insulted her very much. Of course, she can't fuss with the audience who will sit out in front and look—and, believe me, they'll get to see a lot more'n the willun did.

In most of her scenes Miss Nelson played quietly and registered very well, but there was one moment when she learned that her keeper was going "awoiy," where she "emoted" a bit too frantically.

Niles Welch, as the young derelict hero, carried his scenes quite satisfactorily, although it was really rather a hardship to have to appear in so much footage with so little to do.

The other members of the cast were acceptable. They were Mary Mersch, Caroline Harris, Harold Entwhistle, Richard Dix, Walter Worden and Adella Barker.

They used a long foreword and a long title at the end of this, apparently aimed to ease the minds of those who might kick about the story and also to smooth things with the censors. Most of the titles in the film were held on the screen entirely too long. Possibly this was also a point to add to the footage. If unintentional, it should be remedied immediately.

The Box Office Angle.

After analyzing this story and determining whether or not it may cause any objections, if you decide that it is all right to play this, I can tell you that I believe it will get by nicely with most audiences, because they will not recognize the tricks of the trade which have padded this out into five-reel length.

Miss Nelson is rather good to look at and the director has given us plenty footage of her, so that I believe you can consider this better than the average Metro for "audience register," except where you are catering to patrons who like action or patrons who object to stories that have such decidedly unconventional climaxes.

WORST I EVER SAW AS FEATURE; BECOMES ALMOST INSULT

All-Chinese Cast in

THE WAR OF THE TONGS

Red Feather

Produced under Supervision of Gen'l Director H. O. Davis

AS A WHOLE	So bad that it's funny
STORY	Very ordinary one-reel if intelligently played
DIRECTION	Little or nothing
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Poor
CAMERA WORK	Just acceptable
ACTING	Awful; became very tiresome
EXTERIORS	Very ordinary
INTERIORS	Cheap
DETAIL	Too much in spots
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

IN the course of this wild career I am following—looking at about fifteen features a week, it becomes necessary for me to see some weird productions. Of all the poor, impossible offerings I've ever seen, however, presented seriously as entertainment, I believe this is the worst.

If Universal had presented this in one or two reels as a novelty, because it was played entirely by Chinese, then it might have been accepted and the novelty might have provided a good box office proposition. In the present form you may be able to attract some business on the novelty advertising angle, but, oh, boy! After they see it they'll certainly say things!

In the offering as it stands there is probably thirty-five or thirty-six hundred feet of film which is plainly amateurish, tiresome and uninteresting. The balance of the five reels is made up of many titles, most of which are unnecessary, with the added insult of having the greater part of these titles given in Chinese before they are printed in English. For two or three titles this was good for a laugh, but why in the name of common sense any supposedly intelligent executive would permit a production to go out with such a quantity of Chinese titles is beyond me. If they expect to cater to the Chinatown of 'Frisco and New York and to the two or three Chink laundrymen in each small town, then this is all right. Personally, I don't believe that very many of your regulars will be able to read the Chinese titles, and I fear that they will not be particularly enthusiastic about them after they have had three or four thrown at them.

The burden of the plot was the new (?) idea of the willun who wanted to marry the daughter whose father told the hero that he couldn't have her unless he made a thousand dollars a week. The hero went out and tried different Chinese gambling games after failing to win at a lottery, and then we had a battle on the finish, with the Chinks trying to shoot one another up.

The willun was truly funny. His gestures were absolutely typical of the Winter Garden chorus boy. When he tried to be real rough, he would throw both hands up in the air, and, honestly, if it doesn't get a yell, I'm a bum prophet.

In the first of the battle scenes we found the hero struggling with a man who attempted to kill him with a knife, and the hero caught the assailant's upraised arm at the wrist and placed his right hand on the other's shoulder, holding him at arm's length while the two danced about the alleyway, to all intents and purposes as if they were trying to do a one-step. This was held on the screen long enough and taken from such an angle that it certainly does look like a couple of Keystone Komedians burlesquing a melodrama to the extent of changing from a struggle to a one-step.

The Box Office Angle.

The only possible chance of doing anything with this, so far as I can see, is to openly say that you think it is the worst picture that you've ever seen, but that it is all-Chinese, and consequently some may be interested in seeing such a production.

I surely would not try to drag them in because it is a novelty and lead them to believe that it is going to be entertainment, because, believe me, it gets terribly tiresome after the first reel, with the titles adding insult to injury.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

UNDERWORLD MELO WITH FINE TYPES HOLDS FAIRLY WELL

Jack Mulhall in

THE TERROR

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Raymond Wells
AUTHOR	Raymond Wells
SCENARIO BY	Fred Myton
CAMERAMAN	R. E. Irish
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, but unconvincing gangster stuff
STORY	Had convenient angles and didn't really grip
DIRECTION	Gave splendid atmosphere in spots, but slumped in many scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY	Fine, fair and poor
LIGHTINGS	Varied from fine to poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Splendid at first; missed high spots at end
SUPPORT	Some great types; one or two amateurs
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some fine; some ordinary
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

STARTING off with the presentation of some exceptional types of the underworld, presented in scenes which registered character studies for the most part, this gave promise of being very much worth while. It soon began to slip into conventional melodrama, however, and finished with the conversion of a gunman by a Salvation Army lassie, which bit missed fire, with the result that the ending didn't really ring true.

The gangster, played by Jack Mulhall, proved to be a truly desperate guy through the main part of the story, he being shown to shoot up three men who were laying for him in one scene.

The political ward-heelers then began to make use of him in order to get rid of their enemies, and finally picked him to "get" the newly-elected district attorney.

Meanwhile, "The Terror's" sister had become the mistress of the boss, so that she could conveniently overhear a "frame-up" plot to "get" "The Terror" when he refused to "get" the district attorney. She told him about the plot, the Salvation Army girl reformed him and he went to the district atorney's house in time to save him and shoot up the attacking gunmen, being killed himself in the battle-royal.

There is no great element of sympathy or heart-interest in this, and after the first reel or two of underworld atmosphere and characterization, the story slumps and fails to convince.

We found playing the part of the district attorney an ex-trade-paper writer, Hugh Hoffman, and Hugh seemed rather conscious of the fact that the camera was out front all the time. He "acted" awful hard, but, by heck! he couldn't seem to get his mind off the fact that the camera was there.

There was quite a lot of footage used up in this with scenes that had no real bearing upon the development of the plot, and consequently the interest sags badly in spots.

It may be that the Salvation Army in the missions frequently held sessions without any audience, but it looks unreasonable when shown on the screen. In one scene we saw five girls and two men holding services with an audience composed of one "coke" and a sleeper. "The Terror" came in and, instead of sitting down in one of the hundred or more chairs which were empty, he made the "coke" get up and move over so that he could sit down on the aisle seat.

In the supporting cast were Grace MacLean, Virginia Lee, Malcolm Blevins, Noble Johnson, Jean Herscholt and Evelyn Selbie.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't see any particular drawing power in either the name or the star of this. If you are catering to patrons who like melodrama, and particularly the underworld gangster stuff, they may think this a splendid offering. Certainly there are several bits of characterization and atmosphere which are quite commendable and the film is interesting even if it isn't gripping as drama or convincing.

If you have to take this in your program service and you are catering to audiences that are quite particular, I believe I would refer to this as a carefully produced study of underworld life and let it go at that.

If you're catering to "mellerdrammer" fans, you might enlarge a bit upon the prowess of "The Terror" with his guns, using lines something like this: "Supposing you walked into a cafe, where you found three men whom you knew were waiting to shoot you up. How would you handle the situation until you got your two guns into action? See "The Terror.'"

VERY ORDINARY AS TO PRODUCTION, MISSES POSSIBILITIES

Charlotte Walker in

SLOTH

McClure—Seven Sins—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Theodore Marston
SCENARIO BY	McClure Staff
CAMERAMAN	Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE	Very cheap melo
STORY	Three costume singles tied to modern series
DIRECTION	Old-school calibre; registered melo rather crudely
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
STAR	Camera-conscious
SUPPORT	Very ordinary
EXTERIORS	Just acceptable
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Some bad spots
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (five parts)

THEY made three single reels of costume stuff telling about three American heroines of the good old days, the action having no particular interest, principally because it was quite crudely done in the old-time melodramatic fashion, and then tied these up to the characters of Adam and Eve running in the McClure series, by having the stories of these three heroines read to the moderns.

As a finish they gave us a lot of poorly-done battle stuff in which the heroine was supposed to fly into the thick of the fight in an aeroplane so that she might serve as a Red Cross nurse.

Personally, it seems to me that if you have an intelligent class of patrons, they'll feel rather insulted if you hand them this sort of junk and expect them to consider it worthy of their time and money.

The idea back of this "Sin" was certainly decidedly better than the ideas which have figured in the others of the series, but it has been produced so crudely that the whole thing becomes rather a joke.

By way of seeming to glory in the crudeness of it all, we found elementary titles that were painfully poor, and these only make the production seem cheaper than it is. As a few samples of the sort of titles they used in this I'll quote the following: "I wouldn't dull my blade on the throat of a pig!" "I'll give you a chance for your miserable life." "John has broken his leg; you must go for help." "I wanted to go to war and they would not let me, so I just 'flew in.'" "No, our place is out there with the boys!"

In one of the costume episodes, they pulled a stunt where the hero had a chance to kill the willun but decided that he wouldn't, and they arranged that old duel stuff. This was the highly original idea of blindfolding each man and letting them start after one another with knives. SOME dime-novel junk!

In one place an "extra" playing an Indian came bouncing into a scene and put his hand up to his eyes in a manner which will get a yell from any wise audience.

In the Revolutionary War scenes we found a modern wall-tent.

In the supporting cast were Jack Meredith, D. J. Flannigan, Jack Crosby, Grace Williams, Charles De Mussett, A. Barrett, Curtis Cooksey, Emil Hach, Peter Pann, Hattie Delaro, Harry McFayden, George Le Guere, Shirley Mason and Helen Strickland.

The Box Office Angle

If you've been able to play serials that were pretty rotten and get by without being murdered, it is possible that you can play this series and get some money, because of the stars' names, and escape with your life.

Personally, I think it's all wrong to play this sort of thing when you are taking peoples' money for entertainment. Of course, if you live in a neighborhood where they don't know the fine points or possibilities of pictures, then this sort of thing may get by, but I have too much respect for the average intelligence of Americans to figure that this is going to impress any goodly number of them.

It is announced that this has been released at this time in order to stir up a feeling of patriotism. I believe that the idea of presenting the historical characters is a good one, but certainly it hasn't been done in such a manner, in this case, as to stir any considerable amount of enthusiasm. The fault with this is that many will laugh where they might be expected to cheer.

CONVENIENT UNCONVINCING

Lou Tellegen in

THE BLACK WOLF

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Frank Reicher
AUTHOR	Jean Barrymore
SCENARIO BY	Margaret Turnbull
CAMERAMAN	Dent Gilbert
AS A WHOLE	Mechanical, unconvincing, obvious melo; rather poor
STORY	Old ideas obligingly tied together never register
DIRECTION	Theatric groupings; unconvincing action; too much "people in and out"
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor
LIGHTINGS	Some good; many poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Very "actory"; too much hand-on-hip
SUPPORT	Good and bad
EXTERIORS	A few rather good; many very ordinary
INTERIORS	One or two fine; others just acceptable; atmosphere doesn't register
DETAIL	Many bad spots
TIME	Fifty-two minutes (five parts)

WITH the scene of this laid in Spain and the characters wearing uniforms and costumes, the director failed to register an atmosphere that convinces. The grouping of the characters was so mechanical, with most of the cast doing too much "acting," that the production never had a chance to convince even had the story been worth while.

The plot was old stuff poorly tied together. Audiences that are easy-going may accept this, but I have a hunch that most of your patrons will feel that it is pretty poor junk.

Lou Tellegen was painfully "actory" in most of his scenes and persisted in doing the hand-on-hip stuff, with a stride which suggested the Winter Garden chorus boy.

Most of the supporting cast were inclined to overact and some of those playing minor parts were painfully bad.

Nell Shipman, as the heroine, had a few good scenes, but the situations and general handling of the production were so mechanical as to make it impossible for any one to register effectively.

PLOT WITH AN ACTING HERO

H. J. Herbert, as the duke, was particularly theatric.

Mr. Tellegen was presented as a Robin Hood character who fell in love with Miss Shipman, daughter of a nobleman. Of course, our Robin Hood was a foundling and when he was captured we learned that he was the real duke.

The other very new (?) situations included the girl agreeing to marry the willun to save the hero's life and the hero offering to fight a duel with the willun after the "fiendish cur" had attempted to stick a knife in him. Why they persist in pulling this junk of "giving the willun an even chance" in a duel is beyond me. Never in my recollection has the hero been worsted in one of these bum duels and no one in real life would pull such a stunt, so why insist on presenting such situations.

Almost all the way in this we find the characters grouped in a line in front of the camera, playing directly to the lens. At times there were as many as ten on the foreground line all trying to act at once. The day of doing that sort of thing was over several years ago.

Many of the titles in this were decidedly bad, inasmuch as this was supposed to be a story of Spain. One of them said: "Keep the gang quiet. I will go to the chancellor." What d'ye mean "gang"?

In the supporting cast were James Neill and Paul Weigel.

The Box Office Angle

If the fact that Lou-Tellegen is the husband of Geraldine Farrar has pulled you any business in the past, you may be able to play up that one point again and sneak by with this, but I doubt it. The story is so painfully unconvincing and theatric, with the treatment mechanical and overburdened with too much "people in and out" that I fear that even those who are not inclined to analyze will feel that this is poor entertainment.

Of course, there are a number of scenes of Mr. Tellegen making love in his own peculiar "matinee-favorite" manner, but these are made to miss fire by the artificiality of the other situations, even if they didn't offend because of their sweet-scented sentimentality.

If you figure that this is a safe bet to try to sneak by with, I surely would not make any definite promises concerning its merit.

INTERESTING AND ARTISTIC WITH REAL PERSONALITY DOMINANT

Lenore Ulrich in

HER OWN PEOPLE

Pallas-Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... Scott Sidney
AUTHOR ..... Julia Crawford Ivers
SCENARIO BY ..... Gardner Hunting
CAMERAMAN ..... James C. Van Trees
AS A WHOLE ..... Interesting, well done, good entertainment
STORY ..... Has good twists and holds nicely
DIRECTION ..... Registered snappy action that generally rang true; gave some fine atmosphere and some only fair
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very fine; sometimes only fair
LIGHTINGS ..... Fine and fair
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STAR ..... Beautiful; made characterization ring true
SUPPORT ..... Some good types; generally acceptable
EXTERIORS ..... Some very beautiful; others just acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Excellent; classy and impressive
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Fifty-four minutes (five parts)

ALMOST any audience, anywhere, should consider this very pleasing entertainment. It is not an unusually big production and it doesn't always get away from the fact that it is just pictures, principally because of many jumps in the development covered by titles. Nevertheless, there are scores of good bits of action, many human touches and a number of twists which will register with the average patron.

Miss Ulrich is ideal as an Indian girl, she having made one of her greatest successes in the Belasco production of "The Heart of Wetona." The development of this story makes her the central figure throughout, with the sympathy nicely developed to the point where you feel that anyone should be glad to marry this Indian despite the fact that several characters seem to think it would be a calamity. Miss Ulrich is particularly effective in close-ups, because her beauty is real and will stand the searching scrutiny of the camera lens. The director has given her quite a number of close-ups in this, and her personality does much towards making this entertaining.

The plot registers a wealthy man's disappointment in learning that his fiancee was trying to marry him for his money, with the result that he went to the Far West, forsaking "civilization," and finally married an Indian girl.

Miss Ulrich, his daughter, when grown to womanhood was brought back East by her father, who felt that she should have the advantage of an education.

After being insulted by girls at a fashionable school and refused by a young man whose parents wanted him to marry her because of her wealth, she returned alone to the Indian country, her father having died suddenly.

There she met again a young miner whose life she had saved early in the story. Fearing that this boy might not want her if he were wealthy and able to marry a white girl, she made him wealthy by secretly purchasing his mine. The boy was a "reg'lar guy," however, and came through with a proposal, winning over his family, with the final twist showing their great surprise over this Indian girl's education and wealth.

There was a decided variance in the composition of the exteriors in this. Some were very beautiful and some were rather ordinary. It was also noticeable that there was a variance in the grouping of the characters for action. At times it was a bit mechanical and theatric. Considered as a whole, however, the production moves very smoothly, holds the interest remarkably well and certainly is entertaining.

The supporting cast filled in very acceptably, although none of the characters stood out particularly.

Colin Chase, as the hero, was pleasing, but didn't have a great deal to do.

Others in the cast were Howard Davies, Adelaide Woods, Jack Stark, Gail Brooks, Joy Lewis and William Winter Jefferson.

The Box Office Angle

I believe you can consider this a very good bet if you will boost Miss Ulrich, particularly, and call attention to her productions of the past.

Personally, I think Miss Ulrich is a distinctive type that should register as a very big favorite with the greater majority of your patrons. I would particularly emphasize in this that she does an Indian character, mentioning the fact that she played an Indian girl in her big Belasco success, "The Heart of Wetona."

You might stir up some interest by a "teaser" campaign, a week in advance, along this line: "Would you marry an Indian?" "Would you want your son or brother to marry an Indian?" Afterwards you would, of course, tie this up with the name of the picture, the name of Miss Ulrich and the name of the theatre.

You can safely talk about some very artistic scenes in this and you can surely definitely promise that it is entertaining and interesting.

FAIRY FANCIES AND CHEAP MELO DON'T MIX VERY WELL

Francine Larrimore

THE ROYAL PAUPER

Edison—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR ..... Ben Turbett
AUTHOR ..... Henry Albert Phillips
SCENARIO BY ..... Paul H. Sloane
CAMERAMAN ..... Fred S. Brace
AS A WHOLE ..... Started as human fairy story and finished as cheap melo
STORY ..... Characterizations at first; then became wild melo
DIRECTION ..... Registered fair action; some fine atmopshere; some ordinary PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some splendid; some ordinary
LIGHTINGS ..... Some fine exteriors; some good interiors; many ordinary CAMERA WORK ..... Varied between fine and fair
STAR ..... Screened very well, had confidence, but a bit soubrettish
SUPPORT ..... Some very good types, but no exceptional acting
EXTERIORS ..... A few very beautiful; some quite ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Good and fair
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

WE get a rather odd mixture of extremes in this, but the offering starts off too slow, with quite a lot of characterization scenes registering types in a poorhouse, with a ragged princess who believed in fairies making a king of an old bum and a prince of a ragged orphan.

This promised rather well for characterization despite this slowness, but when they got into the story it soon developed into cheap melodrama, and the finish was the good old stuff of the arm-waving strikers who ran up and down the roads, were fired upon by the scabs and finished by breaking into the boss' home, where the little girl stopped them calmly and informed them that they could have anything they wanted, to which the old man agreed.

Early in the film we were told that the ragged orphan was "some" inventor, and, of course, he perfected a loom which revolutionized the business in which the old man was engaged, thus making the "poipers" containing the secret of his invention the object of attack by the dainty-mustached willun, who coveted the hand of the fair princess.

The willun stole the "poipers" rather easily, and, for some reason, buried them, while the hero conveniently stood by and watched him do it. Then the old bum, who had been "The King," came to the rescue with a dog, who dug up the "poipers," and about that time the willun, for some reason, returned to get them and was accused by the hero of having stolen them.

The assembling was rather messy about here, because we saw the shero in a carriage noticing the willun going back to dig up the "poipers," and then, when the bum-king was sitting on the roadside examining them after his dog had dug them up, the shero suddenly appeared in riding togs to take the documents to her foster-father, the mill owner.

Of course, this arranged things so that when the arm-waving mob broke into the home, the "poipers" were spread out on a table so that the hero could use up quite a lot of footage walking about the room before he "accidentally" allowed his eyes to fall upon them. That stunt always makes good with me, because the hero is compelled to look at everything else in the room before discovering the precious documents.

There is quite a lot of fairy stuff in this, and there was a germ of a very good story possibility here in the early characterizations. It went all to pieces when the melodrama was dragged in, and unfortunately the two types of entertainment appeal to distinctly different classes, so that I fear the mixture will not register very satisfactorily with either.

There were a few good human bits, but the production never grips and is hardly interesting most of the time.

Francine Larrimore, as "The Princess," registered as a real possibility. She has authority and poise and screens very well. At times there was a bit of a suggestion of the old melodrama soubrette in her methods, but, considered as a whole, I would say that her work in this offering marks her as a girl who could be developed for work before the camera.

William Wadsworth kept "The King" in character all the time, and he registered several human bits that helped the offering quite a little.

There was a tendency on the part of several of the characters, particularly Herbert Patti, to over-reach their points and use too many emphatic gestures.

None of the other members of the cast registered anything that could be called unusual. In the cast were Richard Tucker, Walter Bauer, Nellie Grant, Helen Strickland and Charles Sutton.

The Box Office Angle.

As a program release, this can be considered an acceptable offering and it will possibly get by. If your patrons are particular and don't like melodrama, I would dodge this. Even if your patrons like melodrama, but have tired of the old arm-waving mob stuff, it may be advisable to side-step this.

Providing you don't promise too much, however, I believe there is enough of the human element injected into this by the talk of fairies, which is worked into the offering from start to finish, to offset the more severe criticism.

This fails to register as a truly human offering, and consequently I wouldn't be misled into billing it as such. You might gain something by centering the attention upon the girl who believed in fairies, particularly for your matinee performances.

You can say that this is a story about a girl who believed in fairies, and because of her belief managed to bring happiness to many who had never given such fanciful beings serious thought.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

DELIGHTFUL ENTERTAINING HUMAN STUFF ALMOST SAVES STORY

Lionel Barrymore in

THE END OF THE TOUR

Rolfe-Metro

DIRECTOR	George D. Baker
AUTHOR	Earle Mitchell
SCENARIO BY	George D. Baker
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Martinelli
AS A WHOLE	Very human and entertaining at first, but "flopped" on finish
STORY	Great until hit "lost son" incident on finish
DIRECTION	Gave great atmosphere and delightful human touches; almost saved awful convenient melodramatic finish
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; generally very good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Good; but had competition
SUPPORT	Very good; some great types
EXTERIORS	Excellent atmosphere
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Some delightful bits
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY, if any one needs a proof of the fact that we should forget the old, convenient, melodramatic bromide junk, then this production furnishes the proper evidence.

For the first three reels we get some delightfully human stuff concerning the road show that got stranded in a small town with the result that the leading man happened to be able to come to the rescue with sufficient coin to send the ladies into Chicago, which necessitated his remaining behind with fat-faced "props." He and "props" then began rehearsing the village hose company and their friends in the thrilling melodrama, "The Fireman's Bride," which was to be "the best show Mayville ever saw."

So far, fine. There were scores of delightful little human touches and plenty of good comedy. Then they pulled the old stuff about the wealthy grouch of the town, father of the beautiful belle of the village, having lost a son in the days gone by when his wife ran away with the leading man of the "rep" company. I saw this picture in a New York theatre, and three people of the six near me, in two boxes, turned at almost the same time to their companions and said: "Oh! Mr. Barrymore is that old man's son!" Now, what's the use of dishing out this old junk year after year when the wise film fan "nails you" before you get started?

Well, they went on with Mr. Barrymore rescuing the shero from the clutches of the willunous drummer, who took her out buggy ridin', only to have father misunderstand the situation when he brought home the girl he had rescued, with the result that father shot Barrymore.

Now, these same fans about me decided immediately that "of course he wouldn't die," and, sure enough, he didn't—but what d'ye s'pose they pulled as a life-saver? Well, you'd hardly think they had the noive! It was our good old friend, the watch that had a picture of mother, and, of course, when father saw it—oh, boy! He said: "My God, my son!"

Now, here was a perfectly good picture all shot to pieces for lack of some sort of intelligent or original finish. I must give credit to Producer George Baker for having held off the awful moments as long as he possibly could, but he had to let them come some time, because they were in the story, and as a result most fans will forget the delightful moments of the early part of the production to kick about the company's using the old junk such as finished this one off.

Lionel Barrymore handled his part very nicely all through this picture, but he was up against competition which absolutely discounted his work. Walter Hiers stole the picture. You will undoubtedly remember this boy from having seen him in "The Conquest of Canaan," and you can undoubtedly get a little business on this if you will call particular attention to his presence in this in a really "fat" part. Mr. Hiers is blessed—if you would put it that way—with rather runny features and physique, because he has a superabundance of flesh. He knows comedy values and really gets a majority of the laughs in this.

Ethel Dayton, as the village belle, was rather pretty at times and entirely satisfactory.

Frank Currier, as the grouchy father, handled his part with an authority that carried his scenes beautifully.

William Harvey, as the boob sweetheart of the village belle's friend, made his bit stand out, because he handled it nicely without overplaying.

J. Herbert, Frank, as the willunous he-wampire drummer, was a splendid type. The other types were very well chosen, it being worthy of mention that the leading lady of the road show, who played the leading role in the performance of "Camille," displayed a "figger" which even Camille herself might have envied.

In the cast were Mary Taylor, Hugh Jeffrey, Charlie Eldridge, Louis Wolheim, Richard Thornton and Kate Blancke.

The Box Office Angle.

If you have had any success with some of Lionel Barrymore's comedy dramas, such as "Dorian's Divorce" and "The Yellow Streak," I'd call attention to this particularly in the billing, and I believe you can figure that it will get over satisfactorily if you would make special comment about the fact that it has some delightful bits of small-town life as seen from the comedy viewpoint of two stranded actors who earned enough to get to Chicago by coaching the local amateurs in "The Fireman's Bride."

You might say: "Have you ever seen an amateur performance in your small town? Then don't miss the performance of 'The Fireman's Bride' as shown in 'The End of the Tour.'"

If you are in the habit of being quite frank with your patrons, it might be advisable to offset criticism by saying to them that they may think the ending of this story rather familiar, but surely they will enjoy the human touches registered by the producer in the greater part of the offering.

LEO DELANEY
FAVORABLY KNOWN WHEREVER
VITAGRAPH FILMS
Have Been Shown in Six Years Past
Address SCREEN CLUB, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City

Send Me Your Reports
I TABULATE AND AVERAGE THEM

INTERESTING RATHER WELL DONE REFORMED DRUNKARD MELO

William Desmond in

THE LAST OF THE INGRAMS

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Walter Edwards
AUTHOR	John Lynch
SCENARIO BY	J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN	Chester Lyons
AS A WHOLE	Interesting and holds, but doesn't always convince
STORY	"Aristocrat drunkard who reforms, protecting girl Magdalene" idea
DIRECTION	Gave fine swing to some action, with effective moments; but sometimes missed fire
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some effective; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied; sometimes very fine
STAR	Had chance to act; registered in part
SUPPORT	McKim and Wilson very good; other good types
EXTERIORS	Some very fine; generally quite artistic
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

OPENING with some rather artistic scenes planting the atmosphere of a New England fishing village with "a house on the hill," we had considerable footage developing the character of the mad aristocrat who had lost all of his possessions because of his drinking. William Desmond, in this part, gave us some theatrical ravings which fitted the character rather well.

Robert McKim, as the scheming banker responsible for the ruin of Margery Wilson, the village Magdalene, was shown taking possession of the house on the hill, and then, through association with Miss Wilson, who gave him shelter when others denied it, we found the aristocrat reformed and willing to work.

About the time the hero recovered his manhood, the willun was facing bankruptcy, these very radical changes being put over by two titles.

The villagers were incited to mob the hero and heroine because they were so bold as to enter church, and while the hero was defying the mob, the bank examiners, who had arrived at the psychological moment, discovered that the willun had fraudulently tried to secure some valuable oil properties belonging to the hero. So, when Miss Wilson denounced Mr. McKim, the banker, as "the man," the mob turned upon him and started to present him with a coat of tar and feathers, which had been prepared for Mr. Desmond. Their intentions were good, but "the strong arm of the law" interceded and placed handcuffs upon the willun's wily wrists as the picture faded out.

There were some good atmosphere touches in this, and it was quite interesting, even though the melodrama did miss fire in spots and fail to convince. On the whole it can be considered an offering which will register as satisfactory, although no one will rave over it.

Robert McKim, as the banker, gave his usual excellent performance as a willun, and Margery Wilson was just the sort of "sweet, young thing" to fit in as the heroine of this offering.

Others in the cast were Thelma Salter, Walt Whitman and Mary Armlyn.

The Box Office Angle

I fear that this isn't going to set them wild to the extent of being impatient to get in to see it, because Mr. Desmond has not as yet established himself firmly enough to stand alone as a drawing card. If you will mention the presence of Mr. McKim and Miss Wilson, you may help the possibilities on this, and, if you can get them in, I'd say that they'll accept this as a very satisfactory program release.

You might attract a bit of attention to this by suggesting the story something after this fashion: "Did you ever live in a town where there was a 'house on the hill' whose owner was trying to drink all the booze in the country, with the result that, eventually, he was sold out? See 'The Last of the Ingrams.'"

YOUTHFUL MISCAST PLAYERS LACKED AUTHORITY TO CARRY SCENES

Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Muriel Ostriche and Henry Hull in

A SQUARE DEAL

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Harley Knoles
AUTHOR	L. V. Jefferson
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, but players lacked authority needed to impress
STORY	Had possibilities, but seemed mis-cast
DIRECTION	Added interesting touches and developed situations logically, but handicapped by players
PHOTOGRAPHY	Fine and fair
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; others ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	Failed to register in really important situations
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Rather good; not unusual
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THIS offering failed to impress principally because the players lacked the necessary authority to make the important scenes register.

Henry Hull, who had the most work to do, is certainly not what I'd call a picture possibility, because he failed to impress at any time, with many of his actions decidedly mechanical and unnatural. Muriel Ostriche, who had a sort of "baby-vampire" part, gave what is to my recollection the poorest performance she has ever recorded. She doesn't belong in such parts. June Elvidge gave a very good account of herself, and Carlyle Blackwell handled his scenes quite satisfactorily, but the quartette having these prominent parts all seemed to lack weight. They couldn't make the dramatic moments grip.

The production was good but lacked unusual distinction as to settings and lightings, and while it started off with the first two reels rather interesting and quite well handled, it seemed to go to pieces when the players were given real dramatic situations to handle.

The story presented Miss Elvidge, Mr. Hull and Mr. Blackwell with an old artist, played by Charles Charles, as a quartette who were all painfully poor. Mr. Hull, as the author, landed a big check one day and promptly proceeded to secretly buy the paintings of Mr. Blackwell and secure work for Miss Elvidge without allowing them to know that he was helping.

Miss Ostriche, guided by her mercenary mother, made a play for the author and finally landed him, whereupon she proceeded to spend more money than he made. Feeling that she was unfaithful, Mr. Blackwell decided to prove it, and did, by getting her to agree to run away with him, she thinking that he had come into a fortune.

Stung by the discovery, the author returned to Miss Elvidge, who really loved him, and then he learned that Mr. Blackwell had only played the traitor in order to save him from the "willunous" wiles of his wicked wife.

The director added somewhat to the gayety of nations by giving us a look at a flock of mermaids in bathing suits, very much a la the underwear ads, and there was quite some considerable footage of this. We had a look at Miss Ostriche doing a few fancy dives in such garb, and she arranged to appear to drown so that the author might jump in to save her, thereby wetting some perfectly good clothes. Of course, having rescued fair Muriel under such circumstances, his "fall" was not hard to understand.

As a sample of a few little things which were wrong with the offering there was a situtaion where Wife Muriel discovered a letter written by Miss Elvidge to husband-author, and we found Miss Ostriche calmly sorting over a bunch of mail to pick out this particular letter addressed to hubby and open it. It didn't ring true. As a matter of fact, none of the big emtional possibilities were reached in the latter part of the offering.

The Box Office Angle.

As a program release, you can probably figure that it will get by acceptably. The youthfulness of the players may be passed over by some, and the situations are fairly interesting, although they don't really get under your shirt.

I must leave it to you as to the box office value of the names of the players. I'd say that Henry Hull has none, even though he has appeared in Mr. Brady's play, "The Man Who Came Back," in rather a prominent part.

IMPRESSIVE ATMOSPHERE BUT LACKS HUMAN SYMPATHY TOUCH

Theda Bara in

THE DARLING OF PARIS

Fox Special

DIRECTOR	J. Gordon Edwards
AUTHOR	Victor Hugo
SCENARIO BY	Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN	Philip E. Rosen
AS A WHOLE	Elaborate, rather artistic, but failed to register, lacking sympathy and intimacy
STORY	Adaptation of "Hunchback of Notre Dame;" failed to really grip as human drama
DIRECTION	Registered effective atmosphere, but failed to create proper sympathy for characters
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent and artistic as a whole
LIGHTINGS	Many were very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent; helped atmosphere decidedly
STAR	Registered as artificial; failed to win sympathy
SUPPORT	All "acted" a lot, but didn't register
EXTERIORS	Impressive
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere; generally very good
DETAIL	Quite impressive
TIME	Seventy-two minutes (6 parts)

CERTAINLY this is elaborate and it can be called impressive from the viewpoint of atmosphere and detail, but I fear that the average audience will not consider this truly entertaining, because the production as it stands fails to "get under your shirt" to the extent of making you feel that the players are real humans. It all registers as artificial "play actin'," and somehow the characters who should win your sympathy seem to be mere moving puppets. Every one emotes and emotes until it becomes oppressive, and still you don't seem to care very much—because it doesn't hit home. This may be due to the fact that an effort has been made to get too much incident into the story instead of giving more attention to a development of the finer points of characterization which might have created a proper bond of sympathy between the audience and the players.

As the central figure in this, Theda Bara appears as a dancing girl who is the favorite of hundreds and the desired one of several. Unfortunately, her make-up registers rather clearly most of the time, and I believe that this adds to the air of artificiality which pervades the offering and is partly responsible for the lack of sympathy extended to her. It is also a handicap for her in such a part as this for the audiences seem to have such a firm impression that she is always a "vampire."

There are scores of "big" scenes in which hundreds of extras are used, and many of the sets are rather impressive as to size and detail. Surely it isn't a cheap offering and isn't one which will be called "bad," but I feel just as sure that it will not be a popular film, because it lacks real audience appeal.

The story is a rather complicated one, dealing with the love affairs of the dancer, attempts to kidnap her, her false arrest and finally her rescue from hanging by the gypsies, led by the hunchback, who, on the finish, throws the villain from the balcony of Notre Dame.

Walter Law and Glenn White had lot of heavy dramatic scenes; and Herbert Heyes had a dozen or more scenes with Miss Bara, with a number of good types in the supporting cast. But no one registered a performance in this which really got under the skin. It was just a "big film," exceptionally well photographed as to camera technique, but lacking in the other more important essentials.

In the supporting cast were John Webb Dillon, Carey Lee and Alice Gale.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of Miss Bara's presence and the fact that you can safely say that this is a very big, impressive adaptation or visualization of the famous drama "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," you can probably get some money with this.

I would be very careful, however, if you must make good with your people every time, not to take chances on increasing your admission or billing this too heavily as a supreme offering or any of that sort of bunk, because, really, I fear that your patrons will leave the theatre after seeing this with a rather blank sort of impression except as to the knowledge that they have seen an expensive, elaborate, theatric production.

From my point of view, I believe it is better to be sure that you have something which will get to the hearts of your patrons before you make a lot of noise. One picture that will make them feel and talk afterwards is worth a dozen that simply impresses, but fails to leave a mark that gets under the surface.

Miss Bara is a sort of wild gypsy in this, but not a vampire. It is a sympathy part, but, unfortunately, because of her "rep" as a "vamp" and her rather artificial appearance and action at times, she misses fire in many of her scenes.

CRUDE SURFACE ACTION MELLER MISSED POSSIBILITIES

Derwent Hall Caine in

CRIME AND PUNISHMENT

Arrow-Pathe

DIRECTOR	Lawrence McGill
AUTHOR	Fyodor Dostoevsky
SCENARIO BY	Charles Taylor
CAMERAMAN	Henry Cronjager
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing, convenient surface melo, crude in spots
STORY	Psychology all missed; only surface melo poorly done
DIRECTION	Quite crude in spots; failed to realize possibilities
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; many very ordinary; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Never impressed because "acted" too much
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

FAILING to register the psychology of this book, which was the reason for its being rather extensively read in this country, we find only the surface melodramatic action presented in this visualization with the action failing to convince because of many crude spots in the direction and a tendency on the part of Mr. Caine to "act" all the time. With the failure to impress properly the undercurrent of psychology, the producers have lost the only valuable possibility in this, because as melodrama we find the action painfully convenient in spots and never truly convincing.

The story tells of a young Russian forced to flee to America because of his writings, where he finally stole to help the poor. He, at the same time, killed a pawn broker, for which crime another was held.

Finally meeting a girl of the streets, he was brought to a realization of his wrongful attitude towards life by her, with the result that he confessed. On the finish we find him walking down to the Tombs and knocking on the "front door"—that is, one of the big gates out on the street.

Marguerite Courtot, who has been starred in a few things, is in this cast, but she doesn't show up until towards the latter part of the offering, and finally she appears in about a dozen scenes. None of the other members of the cast registered anything worthy of comment, most of them being rather ordinary.

There was a real opportunity in visualizing this work to register a tremendous character study. The producers have missed it sadly. The offering has a touch of cheapness about it, with an awful back drop looming up through the detective's window in a number of scenes.

In several places where an attempt was made to register the thoughts of Mr. Caine, we found an allegorical character following him around who greatly resembled Harry Watson when he is made up as "Musty Suffer." The production is so far short of convincing that I am afraid that this character will bring a laugh after several appearances.

I have a feeling that most of your regulars will want to groan when the murderer conveniently walks out into a park and sits down on a bench alongside of the detective who was searching for information regarding the murder. That was "some" convenient!

We did have a number of very good light effects introduced in this at different times, but the general caliber of the production was so poor that these did not, by any means, save it.

In the supporting cast were Cherrie Coleman, Lydia Knott, Sidney Bracy, Carl Gerard and Robert Cummings.

The Box Office Angle.

I doubt very much if this has any real box office value for you except in whatever you may be able to get with the fact that the lead is played by the son of Hall Caine.

I surely wouldn't recommend this as entertainment, because it is neither good action melodrama nor impressive characterization. Unless you have it booked, I'd forget it.

If you do have it booked, I would be very careful about making any rash promises as to the production itself. Center all your advertising upon the fact that Derwent Hall Caine is the son of the famous author, and then it isn't your fault if they don't like him.

Why In ---- Don't you Send me those Subscriptions we talked about

MAIL OUT YOUR CHAIN LETTERS TO-NIGHT

(See Inside Front Cover of Vol. III, No. I, Jan. 4, 1917.)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

ANTHONY KELLY

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY VEKROFF
Directing Anita Stewart
VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

BINDERS

Save

TIME MONEY TEMPER

At Cost

Prepaid everywhere $1.50

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday

VOL. III. NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 22, 1917. NO. 8

25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1506	Triangle	73.4	66.5	312
410	Metro	71.7	68.2	36
570	Fox	71.8	68.7	75
1668	Paramount	72.0	66.2	292
315	Greater Vitagraph	70.7	67.4	58
386	World	66.9	61.1	34

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

1668 Paramount 72.0 66.2 292

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
3	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
4	David Harum	84	74	1
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
5	Captain Courtesy	84	61	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	86	53	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	56	2
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
5	Secret Orchard	78	72
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
2	Majesty of the Law	40	45
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
7	Armstrong's Wife	80	63
8	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	2
6	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
15	The Cheat	94	78	9
7	The Reform Candidate	80	49
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	6
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
7	Temptation	76	70	1
8	The Foundling	76	76	2
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
4	Mice and Men	79	78	1
5	Golden Chance	77	66	1
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
5	The Spider	85	60	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	89	5
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	86	2
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
11	Poor Little Peppina	86	82	5
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	3
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	1
6	Saleslady	75	60	1
10	Audrey	75	75	3
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	57	1
8	The Race	71	65
6	Eternal Grind	68	61	2
6	Love Mask	61	54	2
7	Molly Make-Believe	90	68	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
10	Heart of Nora Flynn	69	70	4
6	Moment Before	50	45	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	45
13	Maria Rosa	82	56	4
11	Alien Souls	68	66	1
11	Fued Girl	61	54
15	Pasquale	78	52	2

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
13 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59	2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
21 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
19 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
15 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
18 American Beauty	62	62	3
21 The Dupe	65	63	1
20 The Smugglers	53	49	1
24 Selfish Woman	72	69	4
Davy Crockett	67	62
28 Dream Girl	69	64	3
Under Cover	79	75	5
27 International Marriage	55	51	1
27 Common Ground	64	64	1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95	23
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
23 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	9
22 The Stronger Love	53	52
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
19 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
18 Honorable Friend	70	62	1
17 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
17 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
Parson of Panamint	80	68	5
11 Big Sister	47	58
11 Reward of Patience	63	53
10 The House of Lies	73	61	1
10 Daughter of MacGregor	51	44
14 Ashes of Embers	87	85	5
12 Quest of Life	58	58
10 Anton the Terrible	48	49
12 The Lash	55	52
9 The Storm	75	61	1
13 The Intrigue	81	53	1
12 Her Father's Son	73	57	2
10 Witchcraft	51	51
9 The Kiss	73	69	1
10 Rainbow Princess	84	74	2
9 Seventeen	90	76	1
8 Miss George Washington	97	93	6
12 Heir to the Hoorah	78	68	3
11 Soul of Kura San	82	74	1
7 Son of Erin	81	70
8 Unprotected	54	56	1
7 Years of Locusts	49	51
7 Plow Girl	77	55
5 The Yellow Pawn	61	60	1
5 Nanette of Wilds	36	47	2
5 Martyrdom of Philip strong	47	35
4 Coney Island Princess	58	63	1
6 Road to Love	79	55	1
7 Oliver Twist	86	63	3
4 Victoria Cross	58	55	1
7 Traveling Salesman	79	58	2
6 Right Direction	81	61	1
5 Snow White	99	96	4
4 Redeeming Love	64	61	1
5 Slave Market	78	70	2
4 The Evil Eye	25	36	1
3 Great Expectations	80	35
Happiness of Three Women	80	33	1
2 Betty to the Rescue	38	38
Girl Like That	50	33

TRIANGLE

1506 Triangle	73.4	66.5	312
9 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
13 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
5 Sable Lorcha	64	53
The Golden Claw	61	72
Double Trouble	65	64	2
Aloha Oe	63	65	1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
7 Jordan is a Hard Road	58	54
6 Winged Idol	53	52
Penitents	28	32
11 The Edge of the Abyss	67	61
2 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
10 Between Men	72	69	1
14 Let Katy Do It	87	66	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
8 Last Act	80	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
17 Hell's Hinges	93	88	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
14 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	75	3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
14 The Raiders	79	71
12 Habit of Happiness	92	86	4
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
14 The Aryan	85	86	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilization's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
15 The Good Bad-Man	91	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Not My Sister	82	78	3
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
18 Primal Lure	82	77	4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
18 Market of Vain Desire	81	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
22 Bugle Call	95	80	7
21 Reggie Mixes In	92	81	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
15 The Dividend	68	65	1
19 Wild Girl of the Sierras	43	51
19 An Apostle of Vengeance	88	86	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
23 The Phantom	87	74	7
26 Flirting with Fate	88	85	10
27 The Deserter	83	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
24 Captive God	69	70	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77	2
18 The Payment	82	73	3
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
17 Honor Thy Name	88	71	4
18 Devil's Needle	63	63	1
21 Shell 433	90	66	3
23 Hell-to-Pay Austin	82	67	6
19 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55	1
17 Home	91	79	9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
15 The Patriot	76	79	5
18 Social Secretary	90	72	7
12 The Thoroughbred	78	68	1
10 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91	6
12 Dawnmaker	56	80	2
11 Diane of the Follies	70	72	1
18 Manhattan Madness	94	91	11
12 Plain Jane	89	81	3
10 Old Folks at Home	84	69	1
12 The Jungle Child	58	59	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
12 Return of Draw Egan	91	86	5
12 Vagabond Prince	73	66	3
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
9 Corner in Colleens	93	86	5
4 Sister of Six	71	54	1
10 Fifty-Fifty	90	83	4
3 War's Women	62	57
8 Atta Boy's Last Race	58	63
10 American Aristocracy	96	93	6
7 Microscope Mystery	59	44
10 Honorable Algy	80	69	3
10 Jim Grimsby's Boy	61	45	2
10 The Devil's Double	90	91	5
10 The Children Pay	74	62	3
7 Children of the Feud	58	58	1
6 Criminal	51	42
4 Gamble in Souls	82	76	2
5 The Wharf Rat	32	39
6 Matrimaniac	100	96	4
6 Sins Ye Do	100	84	4
6 Heiress at Coffee Dans	50	48	1
3 Three of Many	35	23
4 House Built Upon Sand	88	73	3
1 Nina, the Flower Girl	35	35
2 Female of the Species	90	85	2
4 Truthful Tulliver	100	100	4
3 The Weaker Sex	92	91	3
3 The Little Yank	22	47	1
4 Bride of Hate	80	70	3

WORLD

386 World	66.9	61.1	34
1 Daughter of the Sea	40	50
2 The Warning	88	40
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
1 Master of House	40	45
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	40	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	60	60
1 Trilby	83	58
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	78
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
2 Family Cupboard	50	57
4 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	73
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
2 The Ransom	63	43
4 The Labyrinth	66	65
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
5 Camille	83	77
3 The Rack	89	69
1 Fine Feathers	70	40
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
2 Then I'll Come Back to You	85	77
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
3 Closed Road	87	81
6 Feast of Life	60	74
5 Her Maternal Right	56	72
5 Sudden Riches	77	72
1 Twin Triangles	80	30
Tangled Fates	55	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74
10 Perils of Divorce	61	63

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
12 La vie de Boheme	48	50
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
8 Weakness of Man	61	59
12 Sally in Our Alley	68	68
13 Paying the Price	69	70	1
12 Miss Petticoats	59	61
14 Woman's Way	75	74	4
13 The Summer Girl	56	57
12 Rail Rider	68	60
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
11 Dark Silence	77	79	2
4 The Revolt	66	63
7 The Gilded Cage	75	70
6 Hidden Scar	77	67
6 The Scarlet Oath	60	62
7 Man Who Stood Still	71	63
7 The Heart of a Hero	58	48
8 Without a Soul	80	90
10 Bought and Paid For	94	94	7
8 The Madness of Helen	51	50
5 Men She Married	54	50
2 Deep Purple	80	75
5 All Man	49	53	1
4 Broken Chains	36	35
4 Rise of Susan	86	96	4
3 World Against Him	32	30
3 Woman Alone	53	53
1 The Man Who Forgot	40	20
1 On Dangerous Ground	60	60
2 Marriage a la Carte	70	68	1
1 The Unpardonable Sin	40	55

METRO

410 Metro	71.7	68.2	36
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
2 Shooting of Dan McGrew	80	85
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	45
1 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	60	80
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	57
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	75
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	55
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
4 Yellow Streak	84	60
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
3 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
6 A Man and His Soul	83	83	2
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
4 Her Great Price	78	66
7 Wall Between	75	81
4 Kiss of Hate	55	70
5 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
6 Playing With Fire	80	78
10 The Come-Back	75	73	1
7 The Snowbird	79	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Yonkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
9 Scarlet Woman	72	83	1
9 Dorian's Divorce	73	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
5 Flower of No Man's Land	53	74

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
7 Purple Lady	83	61
9 Eternal Question	74	82
11 The Quitter	69	73
13 River of Romance	88	74	6
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
11 God's Half Acre	74	60	1
11 Weakness of Strength	65	52
9 The Pretenders	83	74	1
6 The Upheaval	56	63
8 Light of Happiness	72	73	1
9 Mister 44	89	92	4
7 Wheel of the Law	77	65
9 Dawn of Love	65	59
6 Iron Woman	41	56
3 Life's Shadows	68	62
11 In the Diplomatic Service	66	85	4
6 Brand of Cowardice	63	50
8 Gates of Eden	69	50
9 Extravagance	72	84	3
4 The Wager	86	56
1 My Madonna	80	85
1 The Wager	90	70
5 The Sunbeam	45	38
7 Big Tremaine	68	82	2
6 Black Butterfly	63	78	3
4 Stolen Triumph	48	40
4 Awakening of Helena Richie	61	61
2 Pidgin Island	85	73
4 Vanity	71	56
3 White Raven	98	98	1
3 Wife by Proxy	52	43
1 Threads of Fate	60	60

FOX

570 Fox	71.8	68.7	75
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	82	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	80
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	85
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
8 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
9 Blue Blood and Red	82	68

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
5 Slander	80	72
9 Modern Thelma	57	47	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
8 Blazing Love	69	67
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
1 Sins of the Parents	80	50
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
10 The Spider and the Fly	67	72	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
9 A Woman's Honor	71	73
18 East Lynne	88	87	9
15 Ambition	71	67
16 A Man From Bitter Roots	84	82	3
16 Caprice of the Mountains	68	66	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
19 The Beast	87	70	5
21 Under Two Flags	94	92	12
15 End of the Trail	71	78
16 Sporting Blood	62	58	1
14 Little Miss Happiness	77	70	3
18 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
13 Her Double Life	84	88	3
9 Where Love Leads	60	61
12 Fires of Conscience	65	69	1
9 Straight Way	68	73
7 Ragged Princess	76	68
10 War Bride's Secret	75	52	3
6 Romeo and Juliet	83	85	2
1 Love and Hate	60	60
2 Mischief Maker	70	70	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
2 The Mediator	70	60
1 Battle of Life	75	60
2 The Vixen	53	73
1 The Love Thief	90	90

MUTUAL

106 Mutual	73.6	70.9	12
1 Buzzard's Shadow	95	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	45
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	25
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
1 Miracle of Life	83	83	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
1 Bird of Prey	95	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
1 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	78
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
1 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
5 Doorsteps	65	60	1

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
9 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
2 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	60	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
1 A Welsh Singer	40	40
2 Manager of the B. & A.	58	63
3 Pearl of Paradise	67	68	1
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25
1 Innocence of Lizette	100	90

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
14 The Count	87	84	8
9 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
6 The Rink	99	99	5

PATHE

114 Pathe	67.6	69.5	9
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
8 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
8 King's Game	56	62
8 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	62
7 Little Mary Sunshine	90	79
5 Shine Girl	69	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
1 The Test	60	53
2 Saint, Devil and Woman	46	55
2 Light That Failed	66	72
3 Shadows and Sunshine	98	80	1
1 Prudence the Pirate	70	75
1 Arms and the Woman	55	50
1 The Challenge	70	60
8 Joy and the Dragon	85	78
1 Her New York	80	75
1 Kick In	80	83

BLUEBIRD

182 Bluebird	62.8	62.5	17
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	55	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
4 The Crippled Hand	61	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
4 The Eye of God	64	82	1
8 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
8 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
13 Shoes	72	76	3
9 Broken Fetters	63	55	1
7 The Love Girl	64	66	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
6 Silent Battle	73	84
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
10 Saving the Family Name	78	52	1
6 Behind the Lines	58	62
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
2 Chalice of Sorrow	68	55
2 Social Buccaneers	65	47
2 Stranger From Somewhere	68	48
2 Gloriana	75	75
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
1 Honor of Mary Blake	60	50
1 Black Orchids	90	90	1
1 Bugler of Algiers	95	65

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Jewel	83	65
1 Scandal	80	72
2 Langdon's Legacy	80	71
2 Love's Pilgrimage	75	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83	1

RED FEATHER

68 Red Feather	65.1	61.0	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
1 Beckoning Trail	85	60
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
1 Polly, Put the Kettle On	65	70
1 Fighting For Love	85	75
1 Heart Strings	65	40

GREATER VITAGRAPH

315 Greater Vitagraph	70.7	67.4	58
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
5 Juggernaut	74	77	2
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81	4
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	69	1
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	1
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95
5 The Great Divide	88	75
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
3 Island of Surprise	87	85
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
8 Night Out	80	76
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
4 Kennedy Square	88	66
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54
3 Hero of Submarine D-2	75	70
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
6 Salvation Joan	81	56
8 God's Country and Woman	89	88
1 Love's Toll	60	80
6 The Law Decides	81	66
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76
3 Lights of New York	70	78
6 The Destroyers	65	52
2 Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
3 Man Behind the Curtain	87	75
9 The Shop Girl	78	79
3 The Conflict	67	47
6 Fathers of Men	68	64
9 The Tarantula	82	73
12 Daring of Diana	62	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
10 Light at Dusk	84	71
7 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
4 Footlights of Fate	68	80
11 The Combat	83	85
3 The Kid	59	60
8 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
3 His Wife's Good Name	54	75
8 Through the Wall	78	61
12 The Chattel	71	82
8 Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67
4 Blue Envelope Mystery	59	57
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
8 The Last Man	85	69
3 Devil's Prize	43	62
3 The Price of Fame	40	49
2 Dollars and the Law	48	75
4 Enemy to King	63	63
2 Rose of the South	80	65
5 Whom Gods Destroy	58	74
1 Indiscretion	35	65
1 Man of Mystery	40	50
6 My Official Wife	91	84

KEYS

89 K. E. S. E. Service	69.2	63.8
1 The Bank	90	90
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90

Re-ports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
1 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	1
1 Little Shepherd of Bargain Row	90	70
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
2 That Sort	75	37	1
1 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
3 Return of Eve	71	70	1
5 The Country God Forgot	75	65
1 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
2 The Cossack Whip	85	27
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
1 Last Sentence	90	90
2 Truant Soul	98	73	1

SPECIAL FEATURES

Re-ports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
5 The Christian	81	78	1
6 Birth of a Nation	100	100	5
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
10 The Common Law	89	96	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
4 The Libertine	86	91	4
1 My Country First	60	60
4 Foolish Virgin	21	49	1
4 Pride of the Clan	93	88	2
11 Less Than the Dust	67	84	4
7 War Brides	69	60	6
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
2 Civilization	40	60
2 Cabiria	45	45
1 Marvelous Maciste	70	50
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
5 The Iron Hand	65	46
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
6 The Whirl of Life	68	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
3 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	66	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
4 Little Girl Next Door	75	95	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
6 Where Are My Children?	86	91	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
11 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	78	58	2
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1

SERIALS

Re-ports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	57	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	73
9 Iron Claw	92	91
2 Diamond Runners	84	83
5 Shielding Shadow	90	89
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	41

AWFUL WILD EYED MELO, ANCIENT IDEA POORLY DONE

Dorothy Davenport in

THE GIRL AND THE CRISIS

Red Feather

DIRECTOR ..... William V. Mong
AUTHOR ..... William V. Mong
CAMERAMAN ..... Gus Petersen
AS A WHOLE ..... Ancient idea very poorly done
STORY ..... Unconvincing, wild-eyed melo of ancient theme
DIRECTION ..... Quite crude
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair and bad
LIGHTINGS ..... Not good; particularly bad in close-ups
CAMERA WORK ..... Poor
CAST ..... Failed to impress
SUPPORT ..... Very poor
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Just acceptable
DETAIL ..... Bad in spots
TIME ..... Fifty-six minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY this proves that if you don't need stars you certainly do need actors.

In this case we have no story, crude direction and a very poor gang of artists, according to the work registered. The cast was seen to decided disadvantage in the close-ups, and it may be that the cameraman, director or some one else was to lame, but certainly I can't help but feel that the casting of Charles Perley for the part of the lieutenant governor, afterwards to become governor, was certainly an awful error. He surely didn't look the part.

The plot of this was the old stuff about the governor who was called upon to pardon a condemned prisoner feeling that he couldn't do so, until he had a dream in which his father killed an old friend, and then he realized that if it were his father he would pardon him. Therefore he pardoned the real murderer. Since the condemned man died the moment after his pardon was granted, there might be a question as to the moral in this case.

This started off with a "hurrah," and we had a lot of wild arm-waving mob stuff in the very first reel. The extras chased up and down with rocks flying, and then we had a murder per reel for three or four reels, with a dream suicide thrown in, until, finally, we came to the big decision by the governor which left him praised on the one side and cursed on the other, according to the feelings of the two factions in his community. We were given to understand that it was only the politicians who favored the execution, while all the intelligent members of the community opposed it. This is possibly true generally, but it was crudely registered in this offering.

There was quite a lot of action and for audiences who like wild-eyed mellerdrammer, this may seem rather interesting, if they are able to stand the players who have been cast for the prominent roles.

In the supporting cast were Harry Holden, Alfred Hollingsworth, William V. Mong and Forest Seabury.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd suggest that you forget this.

If you have to play it, I would certainly go easy and try to sneak it by, because it isn't there. Even your most rabid lovers of the old wild-eyed stuff will undoubtedly feel that they're being imposed upon because of the age of the idea and the crude manner in which it has been handled—not to mention the fact that the players failed to register personalities that might impress.

GRIPPING DRAMA, ARTISTICALLY DONE, ATTACKING MORMON POLYGAMY

Mae Murray in

A MORMON MAID

Hiller & Wilk-Friedman-State Rights

DIRECTOR ..... Robert Leonard
AUTHOR ..... Paul West
SCENARIO BY ..... Charles Sarver
CAMERAMAN ..... Charles Rosher
AS A WHOLE ..... Very artistic, gripping melo, attacking Mormonism
STORY ..... Fast, gripping melo, with big dramatic moments; has one or two questionable situations
DIRECTION ..... Gave exceptionally artistic atmosphere, impressive action and perfect tempo
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Exceptionally artistic
LIGHTINGS ..... Very effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Excellent
STAR ..... Appealing personality; played with convincing sincerity
SUPPORT ..... Splendid types; impressive and convincing
EXTERIORS ..... Very artistic composition; certainly well chosen
INTERIORS ..... Excellent
DETAIL ..... Held atmosphere all the way
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY this is a stirring melodrama that convinces and holds perfectly all the way, produced in an atmosphere that is distinctive and decidedly artistic.

This is one of the best five-reel offerings of many months, considered purely from the viewpoint of dramatic development, atmosphere and stirring, convincing action, and it has a great additional advantage in that it is a bold statement of alleged conditions in the Mormon church in years gone by.

Surely there is a lot of interest everywhere in Mormonism, for the very good and sufficient reason that it is a subject which has rarely been discussed.

Producer Leonard has worked the thread of the Mormon attack theme into a story of melodramatic action, so intelligently that this never impresses as preachment, but rather holds all the better because of the strength of the underlying thought standing back of the melodramatic action. Rarely, if ever, have I seen a better combination of beautiful exteriors, artistic as to composition and delightful as to lighting, and thrilling daredevil riding such as we used to get in the very best Westerns.

Miss Murray is presented as the daughter of settlers who are rescued by Mormons when attacked by Indians. After living in the Mormon city for two years, her father was brought before the council and told that he would have to take another wife.

Threatened with having his daughter married to a Mormon unless he consented, the father finally yielded, with Miss Murray at the same time agreeing to become a Mormon's wife in order to save her father.

When the father arrived at his home with the second wife, Miss Murray's mother killed herself. We then found one of the Mormon leaders, who had been planning to marry Miss Murray, forcing her to the altar with him, where she, by a lie, compelled her release on the plea that she was unfit. This was one of the "danger spots" of the offering, because the titles were a bit too literal in stating the conditions. You may have trouble with your censors on this point, since a portion of the marriage laws of the Mormons, providing specifically that if the second wife were not a virgin the marriage was not justified, were shown on the screen.

Following Miss Murray's escape from the ceremony, the father, Miss Murray and her lover—a young cowboy—attempted to escape, but were captured by the Mormon guards, who were dressed in a garb similar to that afterwards used by the Ku Klux Klan, best remembered to film fans from its presence in "The Birth of a Nation." The father was shot down, but he eventually recovered, and in the garb of one of the Mormon guards, he helped his daughter and her sweetheart to escape.

Miss Murray handles all her big scenes in a truly effective manner.

Hobart Bosworth, as Miss Murray's father, gives sincere dignity to this part, and still makes it forceful and impressive.

Frank Borzage, who is undoubtedly one of the best juveniles of the screen in Western characters which call for any riding, appears as Miss Murray's sweetheart and his exceptional ability as a rider, together with a personality which seems to bristle with action, helped the offering decidedly.

The entire cast was exceptionally well chosen as to type, and every part was handled in a manner to make it truly impressive and altogether convincing.

In the cast were Edythe Chapman and Noah Berry.

The Box Office Angle

This is a production which should get money anywhere. It has exceptional advertising possibilities because of the attack against the Mormon religion, in which most every one is interested. Since their knowledge of this great force is limited and the fact that the production shows the Mormon guards in the white-robed costume of the clans in "The Birth of a Nation" gives this an added interest.

You can safely promise that this is one of the greatest five-reel melodramas ever produced, and you are entirely safe in stating specifically that it is exceptionally artistic and yet filled with dramatic situations that compel interest and thrills which stir.

If your patrons like action, they should love this. If they like tense drama, they should heartily approve, and certainly the artistic atmosphere will impress any audience.

Since this is being presented as a state rights special, it must be considered as a special. Surely, it is very much better than the average programme release and, to my mind, the fact that it is in five reels is no reason why it should not take a place along with many of the seven-reel specials which are now offered. Of course, this production isn't in a class with spectacles such as "The Birth of a Nation," "Joan the Woman," "A Daughter of the Gods," etc., but surely you can figure that it is sufficiently superior to the average five reel programme release of any of the companies to justify your heralding it as a special offering.

By intelligent use of the Mormon garb of the Mormon guards' costume and properly playing up the curiosity of most folk as to the Mormon faith, you should be able to do a lot of business with this. It will please generally.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

VERY ARTISTIC BUT THEATRIC UNCONVINCING COSTUME MELO

Fannie Ward in

THE WINNING OF SALLY TEMPLE

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR.....George Melford
AUTHOR.....Rupert Sargent Holland
SCENARIO BY.....Harvey F. Thew
CAMERAMAN.....Percy Hilburn
AS A WHOLE.....Very artistic costume atmosphere, but action theatric and unconvincing
STORY.....Never convinces, but fairly interesting
DIRECTION.....Gave exceptionally beautiful atmosphere, but failed to make action convince PHOTOGRAPHY.....Exceptionally beautiful generally
LIGHTINGS.....Many very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK.....Excellent
STAR.....Charming in period frocks but theatric
SUPPORT.....Theatric and unconvincing
EXTERIORS.....Some exceptionally beautiful; good studio exteriors
INTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere; quite artistic
DETAIL.....Good
TIME.....Fifty-three minutes (5 parts)

IN view of the fact that film fans as a rule have shown a preference for productions which were not costume plays, this starts with the odds against it.

The story is one of those romantic things of the actress who took the place of a grouchy hero's ward, with the result that the hero eventually fell in love with her, which makes it even more difficult for the action to register as convincing.

Certainly this is a beautiful piece of work as to the atmosphere provided, the detail of the costuming, and the sets and the lightings. Unfortunately, however, such beauty can't offset the disadvantages of a costume production which has an unconvincing story.

It is quite possible that after the average audience has looked at the first reel or two and gotten thoroughly into the atmosphere of artificiality that pervades, they will be quite interested in the action and accept it as good entertainment. Certainly, however, the average American audience prefers stories of people who figure true-to-life in a human manner.

Miss Ward, as Sally Temple, the actress favorite of the slum district of Pump Lane, in old London, has a chance to wear many gowns that will undoubtedly delight the ladies, and the feminine contingent may be pleased by the artistic atmosphere of the entire offering.

Jack Dean was the fire-eating bachelor guardian who fell in love with his rebellious temporary ward, and Mr. Dean did rather well in this part, because it permitted of plenty of theatrics.

In several scenes where Mr. Dean and some of Miss Ward's suitors clashed, with each starting to draw a sword and then changing his mind about every other minute, I fear that the average audience will consider it rather funny.

The kidnaping of Miss Ward from Pump Lane by the willunous landlord, who had been conveniently kept in the offing for that purpose alone, was a poor bit, because the hero promptly showed up at the landlord's home to do the "rescue" thing, although there was apparently no possible clew by which he might trace the kidnaped lady to this particular house. It was simply one of those things which "they do in the movies." Intelligent patrons are beginning to resent "movie" technique when it gets into the plots of companies who are supposed to turn out worth-while features.

In another place they pulled the very convenient bit of having the star uncover a rope ladder in the room where she had been placed as prisoner. Possibly they had such fire escapes in those days, but it will seem painfully convenient to most folk.

The titles were particularly poor and jarred at times. As a sample of these I'll quote one or two: "She can play with me no longer. We will use other methods." "Sally Temple and her Pump Lane scum shall pay for this!" That sounds like ten-twent'-thirt' rip an' tear stuff rather than an artistic costume production of a period romance.

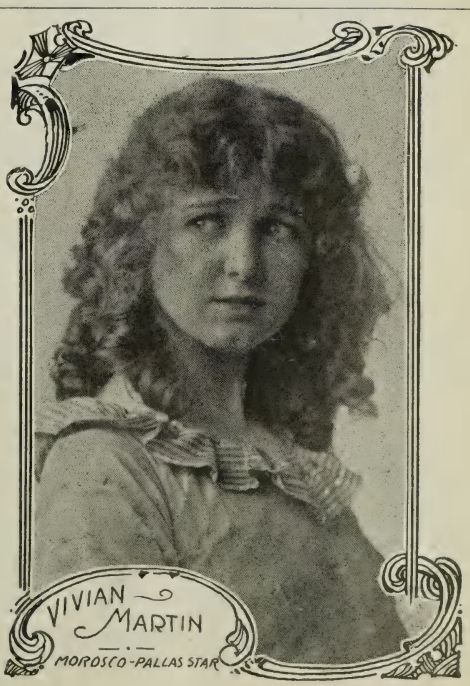
In the supporting cast were Walter Long, Billy Elmer, H. Woodward, Eugene Pallette, Paul Weigel, Harry J. Smith, John K. McKinnon, Horace B. Carpenter, Vola Vale and Florence Smythe.

The Box Office Angle

Undoubtedly the best part of this offering is the fact that it is artistic and carefully portrays the atmosphere of the period with which the story is concerned. I am afraid, however, that the average patron will not be particularly thrilled over the prospect of seeing such a costume production, and consequently that angle may not register as a big box office value.

In playing this I would dwell particularly upon the fact that it is an exceptionally artistic offering and take a chance on it getting by on the strength of its beauty.

As average program releases go, this will be accepted even though the story is convenient and theatric.



DISTINCTIVE ARTISTIC WELL DONE CLASSIC HOLDS ALL WAY

Stuart Holmes in

THE SCARLET LETTER

Fox Film

DIRECTOR ..... Carl Harbaugh
AUTHOR ..... Nathaniel Hawthorne
SCENARIO BY ..... Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN ..... George Benoit
AS A WHOLE ..... Exceptionally artistic and distinctive; very well done
STORY ..... Holds all the way; has tense dramatic moments
DIRECTION ..... Gave distinctive, artistic atmosphere and forceful dramatic development
LIGHTINGS ..... Artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Truly distinctive; helped production very decidedly STAR ..... Forceful characterization kept human SUPPORT ..... Splendid types; made characterizations stand out
EXTERIORS ..... Distinctive; some almost like paintings
INTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL ..... Very good
TIME ..... Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I HAVE raved a lot, at different times, about the possibilities of making films truly artistic. I cannot remember of a single production made in the East which has been more beautifully done than this offering, from the viewpoint of truly artistic exteriors photographed from angles to secure the best light values. Some of them were truly like paintings in the beauty of their composition and the delicate shadings of the light.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's classic has been transferred to the screen with some changes as to the actual telling of the story, but with the thought registered from the picture viewpoint probably more effectively than if the novel had been followed to the letter.

The star gives us one of the most forceful characterizations of his career, and he has done many striking things in the past few years. Despite the power of some of the big dramatic situations, he has kept his characterization human and has made his scenes ring true.

Mary Martin fulfills the promise she has given in the past, when she has made small parts stand out by her playing, and in this she registers as a truly capable leading woman.

The supporting cast was decidedly well chosen as to type and there were many bits which were truly well handled.

Edward N. Hoyt, as Miss Martin's husband, handled this difficult characterization in a manner truly commendable.

Little Kittens Reichert, as the child, was given a number of opportunities, and in many places her human little bits of childish enthusiasm helped materially in lifting the offering from the rather sombre tone of the main thread of the drama.

Others in the cast were Robert Vivian, Florence Ashbrooke and Dan Mason.

The Box Office Angle.

I certainly consider this an offering about which you can make a lot of fuss. It is a classic that has been intelligently picturized from the view point of dramatic construction, and surely it is one of the most artistic films of many months. At the very first, by a clever trick, we see what is apparently an etching of an old New England village. Suddenly all of the figures of this old etching come to life, and we find the first scene of our film to be an actual reproduction of that etching.

I would lay particular stress upon the fact that this is such a beautiful production, because many will appreciate the artistic exteriors as much as they will the dramatic development.

I believe you will be surprised at the pulling power of Stuart Holmes' name as a star. He has stood out in so many Fox productions that I believe he is as well known as many of our muchly-advertised stars. This chance to see him as the minister in Nathaniel Hawthorne's famous classic should bring out all those who remember him as the he-vampire of many Fox offerings, and, since you can rest assured that the production is decidedly worth-while, I would advertise quite heavily.

ORDINARY CONVENIENT MELO WILL REGISTER AS ACCEPTABLE

Marian Swayne in

THE ADVENTURER

U. S. Amuse. Corp.-Art Dramas

DIRECTOR ..... Mme. Alice Blache
AUTHOR ..... Upton Sinclair
SCENARIO BY ..... Lawrence McCloskey and Harry Chandlee
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly interesting, convenient surface melodrama
STORY ..... Mystery melo that was painfully convenient and very obvious at times DIRECTION ..... Acceptable; not distinctive PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Rather muddy
LIGHTINGS ..... Lacked definition; poor at times
CAMERA WORK ..... Fair
STAR ..... Just acceptable; not a star
SUPPORT ..... Ordinary
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Good and fair
DETAIL ..... Acceptable
TIME ..... Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

FIGURING on the basis of the average program release, this will probably prove acceptable because it is fairly interesting.

The plot was painfully convenient and decidedly obvious at times, despite the fact that it was presented rather as a mystery, with the action centering about a young man who appeared to be dead in order to catch a willun, who was mis-using his position as executor of the boy's father's estate. The willun was manipulating the charities provided by the estate so as to graft very freely, and after getting the goods on him the son closed in.

Twice during the film, Friend Hero calmly walked into the house through a window, about three feet from the safe, this window apparently being left open at all times. Once the house was supposed to be under police protection, and yet the hero calmly entered by this window without interference. That gives you an idea of some of the situations.

The hero's sister returned from Europe and became a nurse in the mission, so that she might find her brother's cigarette case in her sweetheart's room and consequently cause the sweetheart's arrest, which was supposed to provide suspense, although, of course, we knew that they were going to come to a clutch sooner or later.

Sister conveniently overheard the willuns confessing their crimes, and she was tied and placed in an automobile by the "wicked wuns." Hero-brother, however, had just finished robbing the safe for the second time, and calmly took possession of the automobile to escape, afterwards finding sister therein.

Miss Swayne didn't register anything which would justify her being placed as the star, and the supporting cast, while acceptable, was not what could be called good.

Kirk Brown, as the willun who was grafting from the charities, overplayed his pious attitude at times, thereby killing the possibility of this registering as good comedy.

The part of the landlady was badly overdone in some scenes, although in other scenes it probably will register a laugh.

The general atmosphere of the offering was just acceptable, with the photography throughout rather muddy. The lightings were not too uniform, but they were not good.

In the supporting cast were Pell Trenton, Martin Hayden, Charles Halton and Yolande Doquette.

The Box Office Angle.

If you are figuring this for a program "filler," it may get by as an average offering considered fairly interisting because of the fact that there's considerable action. The plot is quite convenient and certainly not worthy of any real praise, and so I wouldn't try to make capital of the fact that it was written by Upton Sinclair. It may have been a good book, but certainly it doesn't make a good film story.

There is no personality worthy of advertising for box office results, and I'd say that the only reason for playing this is that you want something that you can use to fill in with when nothing truly big is expected. It's hardly a production which a discriminating audience would consider worth-while.

PROMISING BEAUTY IN STORY THAT BECAME POOR MELO

Enid Bennett in

THE LITTLE BROTHER

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Charles Miller
AUTHOR.....Lois Zellner
SCENARIO BY.....Lambert Hillyer
CAMERAMAN.....Clyde de Vinna
ART DIRECTOR.....Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE....Clever star in convenient surface melo
STORY.....Never convinced or gripped; fairly obvious
DIRECTION.....Good individual scenes; plot a bad handicap
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Some very effective
CAMERA WORK.....Generally fine
STAR.....Beautiful, appealing; will be big favorite if given chance
SUPPORT.....Good and poor
EXTERIORS.....Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS.....Some very good; some ordinary
DETAIL.....Acceptable
TIME.....Fifty-six minutes (5 parts)

ENID BENNETT has a personality that will win if given a chance. This is the second bad story the Ince Studios have "wished" on her.

Starting off with the situation of the girl who decided to become a "boy" so that she might have a chance, we found the action soon developing into one of those very convenient, obvious melodramas where things worked out just as they should in order to provide the proper situations. Most audiences will be about ten minutes ahead of the story all the way—which is very bad construction.

Miss Bennett is a little beauty and wore her boy's clothes reasonably well, but I can't be convinced that any sane human would take her for a boy.

The plot, following her adoption by the wealthy bachelor, revolved about his trying to find a chemical solution to free opals from the hard rock in which they were found and her saving him from robbers who tried to open the safe.

Hero went to Mexico while shero went to school, from which she was graduated as a beautiful young lady. Then she went to Mexico and discovered the precious solution and was attacked by a convenient willun, so that the hero could save her and marry her. SOME plot!

Director Miller has given us a few artistic spots, but the general atmosphere of this was not nearly so distinctive as the other releases produced under his direction. The situations were so obvious and mechanical that they have very little chance of really convincing anybody.

William Garwood, as the young bachelor, gave an excellent performance, the work of the star and Mr. Garwood being chiefly responsible for this being the least bit interesting. The other members of the cast were quite ordinary.

In the supporting cast were Josephine Headley, Dorcas Matthews and Carl Ullman.

The Box Office Angle.

You can safely talk quite a bit about Miss Bennett's beauty, because, in some of her close-ups in this, she is surely a sight to do any gink's eyes good. You can herald her as "The New Ince Star"—and, believe me, if they'll give her some stories that are right she should be able to "land" big in less than a year.

You can't safely promise that this is an exceptional offering, because it is honestly only ordinary melodrama. The situation of the "girl who played boy is certainly not new, and so I'd suggest that you forget to talk about the story or the merits of the production, but rather center your attention upon the fact that Miss Bennett and Mr. Garwood appear in this.

If you want to start some discussion on this, you might say: "Did you ever see a girl who could really fight? Have a look at Enid Bennett in 'The Little Brother.' She's 'some' scrapper!" "If you were a girl and were masquerading as a boy, what would you do if they put a young feller with you as room-mate when you were sent to boys' school? See what Enid Bennett did in 'The Little Brother.'"

The fact that Miss Bennett is an Australian girl might give you a chance to talk about her being one of the most beautiful young ladies of that far-distant continent. You will hardly find anybody intelligently able to dispute this assertion.

VERY JUMPY UNCONVINCING MELO HAS ONE BUNCH OF LAUGHS

George Fawcett, Bessie Eyton, Tom Mix and Frank Campeau in

THE HEART OF TEXAS RYAN

Selig-K-E-S-E.

DIRECTOR.....E. A. Martin
AUTHOR.....Gilson Willets
AS A WHOLE.....Western melo with interesting spots and much that misses fire; rather badly tied together
STORY.....Very jumpy; rather unconvincing and convenient; fails to grip
DIRECTION.....A bit mechanical in groupings; but registered some flashes of real stuff
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Just good
LIGHTINGS.....Ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable
STARS.....Good, but not unusual
SUPPORT.....Some good types
EXTERIORS.....A number of excellent shots; many poor ones
INTERIORS.....Ordinary
DETAIL.....Very bad continuity; titles too wordy
TIME.....Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

IT looked as if something had happened to this after it was made, because the story certainly had a lot of loopholes in it, with continuity that did some wild jumps. It was more or less of a collection of incidents tied together, with some of the scenes not matching perfectly and many twists in the development which surely seemed unreasonable for story construction.

The best spot in the entire production was a lot of fool stuff about a cowboy being turned loose with both arms full of fireworks, in a small Western town, with Indians, bad men and others dodging the sky-rockets and roman candles. That was a good thought, and they got quite a number of hearty laughs out of it.

The melodrama relating to an attempt to kidnap the beautiful shero and various other escapades of the wicked greaser willun and his band of cattle rustlers was quite ordinary, and the stunt of having the hero go after these men single-handed sort of railed to register as convincing.

In one spot the hero was supposed to go out and chase a band of about twenty of these Mexicans, alone, because the boss of the ranch was entertaining some company and he didn't think the other boys should leave, for fear the company would understand that there was trouble on the ranch.

There was a wild fight in the hills in which many a willun "bit the dust," but new ones seemed to spring up from every corner and finally they kicked the hero in the ear and took him as a captive, so that the shero had to drive madly to his rescue in an automobile. This finale was sort of patched together, with titles explaining that she was going to buy the hero's release.

However, the man who made this lost his 'script, if he ever had a good continuity, or else some one has juggled it a lot in assembling. The titles were very poor, as a whole, and surely they didn't fit the general tone of the production. They were entirely too wordy. For instance, we had one place where the Mexican bandit turned to the roughnecks in his gang and said: "That's our enemy and this time we will not spare him." Believe me, he didn't look like he was saying that, and I'm betting that he didn't. In another place they had a rancher saying, "That old Mexican renegade is still hanging around, but I shall not tolerate his presence."

At odd intervals they handed us a few bits of Western "stunts," such as roping and branding cattle, and the offering sagged quite a little in these spots.

The cast gave a performance on about a par with the old "Western" stuff, so far as acting is concerned, there being none of the intimacy of characterization such as we have come to expect where a production is made to hit home because of the human force of the situations.

In a great many places the director had his characters walk to the foreground to register, decidedly as in the old days.

In the supporting cast were William Rhino, Goldie Coldwell and Charles Gerrard.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't feel that you can safely promise too much on this, but if your patrons like melodrama this will get by as an acceptable "Western," because there's considerable action. Don't tell them that it is "great," because it is entirely too rambling in construction without the necessary characterization development which would make it truly effective.

If you have to play it on program booking and figure to sneak by with it safely, I would center my attention on the one point. I would talk about that wild-eyed cowboy loaded down with fireworks having a good time in a Western town. That situation in itself is truly funny, and it has been rather well handled. Most any one will get a few good laughs out of it, and, in a way, it justifies the picture. The action melodrama which follows registers a few splendid long shots showing riders in the distance, such as we used to find in the good old days of Western chases, but, on the whole, it isn't a feature that you can safely recommend.

The names of those in the cast, to my mind, have a limited box office value, but you might mention particularly the fact that George Fawcett was in "The Country God Forgot," and you might speak of Frank Campeau having starred in "Jordan Is a Hard Road," providing you played that Triangle release. Of course, Bessie Eyton and Tom Mix are old-time Selig players.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director of
THE LINCOLN CYCLE PHOTOPLAYS
Studios and Executive Offices:
RIDGEFIELD PARK, N. J.

Alfred De Gaetano
Film Cutter
Fox
The Darling of Paris — The Tiger Woman

INTELLIGENT PADDING, STAR AND ATMOSPHERE CARRY THIS

Lillian Walker in

KITTY MACKAY

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... Wilfrid North
AUTHOR ..... Catherine Chisholm Cushing
SCENARIO BY ..... A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN ..... Thomas Molloy
AS A WHOLE ..... Slow, lacking in incident, but fairly entertaining
STORY ..... Scant material; not very new; comparatively obvious
DIRECTION ..... Did well with material, giving excellent atmosphere, registering entertaining close-ups to secure footage
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
CAMERA WORK ..... Good close-ups
STAR ..... Personality helped make footage entertaining
SUPPORT ..... Some very good types; a few bits overplayed
EXTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere nicely
INTERIORS ..... Very good
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

I DOUBT very much if the fact that this was a play will get you much in the smaller cities, because the title, being simply that of a Scotch girl's name, was hardly one to stay in the minds of the masses.

The chief fault with this is the lack of interesting incident to the story. By intelligent padding, such as the use of many close-ups of Miss Walker and Jewell Hunt, a dark-haired lady who played with Miss Walker, the producer has held the interest fairly well despite the lack of actual happenings. The Scotch atmosphere was registered nicely and a good many Scotch titles helped to hold the proper touch.

The story was of the Cinderella type, with the orphan ward of peasants being taken to London by an uncle, who claimed her, with the result that she fell in love with the uncle's son.

When the son was forced to give up the girl she returned to Scotland. The "uncle" had told the son that the girl was his sister, but subsequent developments proved that she was not the real daughter, she having been substituted when the other child died by the peasants, who wanted the allowance, and consequently she was able to marry the hero after all.

For actual plot material, there was hardly more than one reel and this general theme has been used many times before. It is decidedly to the credit of Director North that he has made a production which will seem acceptable and interesting to most audiences, it having an excellent chance of being considered entertaining by many.

Miss Walker was the center of most of the action and she carried her scenes very well. She didn't appear to as great advantage as she has in some of her other offerings as to the beauty of some of the close-ups, but the general impression was decidedly pleasing. Jewell Hunt as her friend will be remembered by most fans for her work in this. The supporting cast was very good, with the exception of a bit of occasional overplaying on the part of W. J. Ferguson as the old Scotch peasant.

Don Cameron and Tom Mills, as the young Englishmen, were quite pleasing. Others in the cast were Mrs. Nellie Anderson, Beatrice Anderson, Charles Kent and Mrs. West.

The Box Office Angle.

Figuring this from the viewpoint of the average program release, I would say that this will be generally accepted as quite satisfactory. It isn't a production worthy of any special recommendation, but it is rather entertaining because of the manner in which it has been handled. The problem angle of the plot is dealt with very lightly, it being a film for the most part of pretty girls, romance, and Scotch atmosphere.

If you will appeal particularly to the Scotch element —if there is any in your community—this should register with them.

I would make special reference to the fact that this has been adapted from the successful Broadway production of the same name, because that will undoubtedly impress many of your possible patrons.

Of course, take advantage of the box office appeal of Lillian Walker's name.

OLD IDEA WITH INCONSISTENT TWIST ACCEPTABLY DONE

Dorothy Bernard with Jack Sherrill in

THE ACCOMPLICE

Sherrill-Art Dramas

DIRECTOR ..... Ralph Dean
AUTHOR ..... Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN ..... William A. Reinhart
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly interesting, but never grips
STORY ..... Old unable-to-prove-alibi situation with twist that doesn't register; interesting, but unconvincing
DIRECTION ..... Provided acceptable atmosphere, but action a bit mechanical and theatric
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Acceptable; not unusual
LIGHTINGS ..... A few good; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK ..... Acceptable
STAR ..... Worked hard; helped offering somewhat
SUPPORT ..... Some good types; quite acceptable
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Too many shots from same angle
DETAIL ..... Some inconsistent
TIME ..... Sixty minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERED from the average program feature standpoint, this will be acceptable because it is fairly interesting even though the story is centered around the well-known situation which has a twist that seems rather inconsistent. The atmosphere is rather ordinary and suffers at times because of a tendency to use the same set from the same angle too frequently.

The story builds to the point where the willun's sweetheart is murdered by the husband she had deserted, with the willun at the time "entertaining" the heroine at a hotel.

When the willun was accused of the murder, he could only prove an alibi through proving that he was at the hotel with the shero, which meant disgrace for the girl, who was foolish but innocent.

The heroine's brother had fallen in love with his father's stenographer, and father had told him to "forget it." The "stenog" now came to the rescue by offering to swear that she was the woman who had been at the hotel with the willun. This was a very-far fetched inconsistency, because the clerk at the hotel could have sworn that the willun was not at his home at the time that the crime was committed, and if it was a disgrace for the heroine to have been at the hotel, surely it was as much of a disgrace for the brother to eventually marry the stenographer who had been publicly proclaimed, in headlines relating to the murder case, as the willun's mistress. The story ended with that prospect, so that I can't see that anything much had been gained in twisting the situations. Hospital attendants knew that the girl was in a hospital all night, which was another bad spot for this alibi.

For the average audience, however, this will be accepted as a fairly interesting ordinary program production. It is certainly a blot upon the picture business to come to a realization of the fact that the ordinary program feature is of such a low calibre that we are forced to say after looking at just an ordinary production that it will be acceptable because it is surely as good as the "average offering."

Dorothy Bernard screened to splendid advantage in some of the close-ups and the entire offering was helped by the fact that there were many close-ups. Unfortunately, the assembling was rather bad, it being particularly noticeable in many places that the close-ups were not cut in to match with the long shots. There was a decided lot of footage that was unnecessary, and at times the offering was quite slow. The atmosphere lacked distinction and class and a few of the sets were hardly more than ordinary.

Jack Sherrill, as the heroine's brother, who was madly in love with the stenographer, fitted the part quite satisfactorily.

The other members of the cast were very good for the types presented and will be acceptable. In the cast were Florence Hamilton, Jean Stuart, Tom Ward, W. J. Brady and Joseph Granby.

Some of the titles in this were very badly worded, as for instance, one place where the detective said to a maid: "Then, who, in your opinion, is the perpetrator of this crime?" Believe me, Bo!—detectives don't talk like that to maids! What d'ye mean, "perpetrator?"

The Box Office Angle

Figuring this as an average production to use without any promises of unusual merit, I would say that this will be acceptable.

It is an unfortunate condition that we have entirely too many productions of this calibre on the market today, because film fans are getting to the point where they are willing to pay real money to see real films and are inclined to be a bit peevish when they see so many of the "just acceptable" offerings.

The name of Dorothy Bernard may be worth something at the box office, and those who care for melodrama which works out smoothly and in a comparatively obvious manner may think that this is fairly good entertainment.

As a "Class B" feature this will get by, although it never "gets under the skin."

WILD EYED MELLER THAT GOES THE LIMIT AND THEN SOME

Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall in

THE SAINTLY SINNER

Bluebird

DIRECTOR ..... Raymond Wells
AUTHOR ..... L. H. Hutton
SCENARIO BY ..... Eugene B. Lewis
CAMERAMAN ..... R. E. Irish
AS A WHOLE ..... Wild-eyed action "meller" misses fire badly
STORY ..... Crowded with ancient incidents; painfully convenient and ridiculous as to suspense twists
DIRECTION ..... Failed to make action convince, although registered occasional flash of class
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Come fine; some poor
LIGHTINGS ..... A few excellent; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied from fine to fair
STARS ..... Had impossible parts
SUPPORT ..... Mostly wicked; some very camera-conscious
EXTERIORS ..... Fine and poor
INTERIORS ..... Some fine; some ordinary
DETAIL ..... Painfully convenient
TIME ..... Fifty-five minutes (five parts)

THEY do run wild at times, but, oh, boy! we seldom find them with as much speed and unreasoning madness as this. They had barrels of incident in the story with none of it convincing for a moment and most of it bordering very dangerously on the ridiculous.

Starting off with a stenographer trapped in the office of her employer, we soon found that they intended to trap one about every reel, with the well-known finish of hero rushing to the governor to stop the electrocution of the girl falsely accused of murder. The funniest part of this situation was that the only witness to the crime had been mysteriously missing ever since the murder and all through the trial. Yet the hero, who had by a wild-eyed drive across the hills caught a train to reach the governor, arrived at the governor's office with this missing witness. Where he got her no one but the scenario writer knows, and he wouldn't tell.

They started, then, to manufacture suspense, and so the governor was shown to send a wire to stop the execution. A flash of a bum fire burning down a telegraph pole proved that the wires were out of order. Then they got on the telephone and sent word to stop the death shock, and the gink who got the message ran like mad through the prison to the little deathhouse, where he stood yelling through the iron grating to the man at the switch. This man refused to listen and shoved down the lever, which is supposed to give everybody a thrill, and then we learned that the fuse had burned out, so that the girl wasn't electrocuted.

If they don't laugh at this, then something's wrong with their "laughers."

They pulled some very wild titles in this, one starting off with some such combination as this: "Sensual, selfish, and sinful," etc., etc. That was a description of the willun which went on for about twenty-five words as the introduction. The other characters were introduced with similar titles, and then, every once in a while, we had something like this: "With devilish cunning, the human spider begins to spin his web."

All the way through they just simply pulled incident after incident when they needed it, and never stopped to worry about such a little thing as it being too convenient. The scenarioist must have been in a hurry when they tied this one together.

Miss Stonehouse and Mr. Mulhall did their "durndest" to be serious, but I fear that the audience will be unable to control themselves. Even those who like wild-eyed melodrama will think that most of this is too far over the line, I'm afraid.

In the supporting cast were Alida Hayman, Dorothy

Drake, Raymond Whitaker, Frederick Montague and Henry Devries.

The Box Office Angle

If you are catering to a transient trade which seems to be very much in love with the wildest of the wild melodramatic stuff, then you can probably play this and have them think it is great. If your patrons are at all discriminating or even just reasonable in their requests that their productions be convincing, I would stay away from this. The plot is surely ancient and impossible, because of the manner in which it has been presented.

With Bluebird having presented a couple of very good productions recently, it seems a pity to ask the regular program buyers to shoot something like this over. It will counteract the good effects of several worth-while Bluebirds if you play it.

DETECTIVE MYSTERY HOLDS BY TWISTS WILL PROVE ENTERTAINING

Earle Williams in

ARSENE LUPIN

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Paul Scardon
AUTHOR	Paul Potter
SCENARIO BY	Garfield Thompson
CAMERAMAN	Robert A. Stuart
AS A WHOLE	Interesting mystery-detective melo
STORY	Holds because of twists and interest in possible developments
DIRECTION	Gave plenty of mystery to atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not distinctive
STAR	Straight hero characterization; did little but look wise
SUPPORT	Some very good types
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Not exceptional; hardly Frenchy
DETAIL	Good; one or two spots overstepped
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH most every fan will know immediately that Mr. Williams is the mysterious criminal in this, from his actions in the very first scenes, still there is an excellent element of mystery pervading the entire offering, centered about the manner in which the criminal and detective will outwit one another.

Mystery-detective stories are always popular, particularly when there are sufficient twists to the story to hold the interest all the way. In this offering we get a battle of wits between the famous detective and the famous criminal from start to finish, with the criminal finally triumphing as he rides away in the detective's private car, after having returned everything he had stolen.

There were a few spots in this which overstepped the bounds of consistency, and because of that the action registers as interesting, but unconvincing. Nevertheless, the average patron will be very much pleased with the offering as it stands.

Probably the worst spot in the development of the story was the title which recorded the fact that the detective suspected Mr. Williams because a ragpicker had gathered up a cigarette butt dropped by a man in a machine, who had left the looted home early in the morning. It is certainly "going the limit" to expect any one to believe that a ragpicker might pick up a cigarette butt found on the street and remember just where and when he found it so that the detectives might later search the city and locate this particular butt, which had been dropped at a certain time in front of a certain house, when there was no reason to attach significance to the cigarette at the time it was found.

Earle Williams had little to do with this except stand around and smile at the detective as much as to say that he was a poor boob. He did the nonchalant hero criminal rather well.

The supporting cast was not distinctive, but fitted in very nicely.

Brinsley Shaw as the detective handled his part with just the proper shade of aggressiveness to give the sympathy to Mr. Williams, as was intended.

In the supporting cast were Billie Billings, Mr. Leone, Bernard Siegel, Ethel Gray Terry, Gordon Gray and Julia Swayne Gordon.

The Box Office Angle

The production could have been so developed as to have provided a greater amount of suspense, but as it stands, I believe almost any audience will be very much interested and generally pleased with the production as entertainment.

I would play up this name very strongly before the arrival of the picture, promising that the greatest criminal France has ever known is still at liberty.

Earle Williams should be worth some money at the box office, and, since he has not had many productions of late, I would bill him rather heavily in this.

If you played "The Scarlet Runner" with any success, I would call attention to the fact that Mr. Williams was the hero of that series.

It has been announced by the Vitagraph Co. that Mr. Williams and Miss Stewart are to be co-starred in the future, and you might, in order to stir the memory of some of your fans, mention the fact that Mr. Williams is that handsome young man who has starred in so many pictures with Anita Stewart.

Arsene Lupin was a very successful play, and that fact may help you materially in your billing.

Address
Van Dyke
Studio,
939
8th Ave.
Columbus
9630

ANCIENT THEMES MADE INTERESTING BY CAST WILL GET BY

James Morrison in

TWO MEN AND A WOMAN

Ivan Film-State Rights

DIRECTOR....William J. Humphrey
AUTHOR....Willard Mack
SCENARIO BY....William J. Humphrey and Don Dundas
CAMERAMAN....Marcel A. Le Picard
AS A WHOLE....Old melodramatic situations rather well handled STORY....Concerned the "poipers" and misunderstood love situation, very ancient DIRECTION....Helps story by close-ups and handling
PHOTOGRAPHY....Good; not particularly artistic LIGHTINGS....Some excellent; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK....Good; not distinctive
STAR....Registered sincerity
SUPPORT....Girls very good; others quite acceptable
EXTERIORS....Ordinary
INTERIORS....Lacked distinctive class; some sets a bit crude
DETAIL....Acceptable
TIME....Fifty-four minutes (5 parts)

HANDICAPPED with another of those Willard Mack 'scripts, this production becomes rather interesting because of the personalities of James Morrison, Rubye de Remer, Miss Arnold, Miss Mayo and Guy Coombs. John Reinhard and Countess Yaki Yamikura as the "spy-ess" were not so good. They were just ordinary "spy" types in search of the "poipers."

The plot was centered about those two very new (?) and original (?) situations—one, the attempt of Japanese spies to secure the "poipers" concerning a diving bell invention, and the other, a misunderstood situation where the hero guardian, Mr. Coombs, in an attempt to save the juvenile hero, Mr. Morrison, from a blackmailing scheme on the part of Miss Mayo, found himself discovered in a room with Miss Mayo by Miss de Remer, who loved him, with the result that we had a misunderstood situation, which was of course eventually cleared, with the result that Mr. Coombs and Miss de Remer were happy ever after and Mr. Morrison found joy with his true love, Miss Arnold, who had been lurking in the offing through much footage.

I presume that it has been Mr. Mack's name which has made possible the sale of these 'scripts. Certainly the stories aren't what could be called good screen material.

There was never a chance of these situations registering as anything save surface melodrama, and audiences will know what the development is to be long before the film gets to any certain point.

Mr. Morrison and Mr. Coombs gave their parts considerable strength by sincere playing, and Miss de Remer and Miss Arnold were both decidedly pleasing, being pretty girls who photographed to decided advantage in their close-ups.

Miss Mayo, as the scheming vampire, who wanted coin for letters of the past, was very good in the part, but the days of using "vamps" as means of stirring an audience have gone.

The incidents having to do with the attempts to get the "poipers" registered as very ordinary "meller." The incidents concerning the misunderstood situations of the love affairs of the various characters were rather well handled.

The general atmosphere of the offering was not distinctive nor classy. Some of the sets were pretty crude, principally because of the use of cheap furniture, and a few of the "extras" failed utterly to give the impression of society folk. One young man, who must weigh quite considerable, shown as a professional dancer in a cafe scene, will be good for a laugh most anywhere. He didn't look like a dancer who might appear in such capacity.

The Box Office Angle

This will probably get by as an acceptable release figuring on the straight melodramatic basis, principally because of the presence of Jimmie Morrison, Mr. Coombs and the Misses Mayo, de Remer and Arnold. The personalities of these players make the action sufficiently interesting to have it hold the attention of the average audience very nicely.

I'd center my advertising upon these personalities, in case you play this, and forget to talk about the story, because the situations are all painfully time-honored.

Don't figure on this as an offering worthy of exceptional advertising or something that will stand out as distinctive, because it lacks class as to atmosphere and merit as to story. It's just a "good" filler that will probably prove more interesting than many of the bad offerings that we are getting now from the program releasing companies.

LIGHT COMEDY BITS MAKE SLENDER PLOT ENTERTAINING

Dorothy Gish in

STAGE STRUCK

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR....Edward Morrissey
AUTHOR....Roy Somerville
CAMERAMAN....Carl Brown
AS A WHOLE....Human, entertaining; a good many laughs
STORY....Simple, but provided characterizations
PHOTOGRAPHY....Acceptable
LIGHTINGS....Ordinary
CAMERA WORK....Acceptable
STAR....Registered stage-struck kid right well
SUPPORT....Some very good types
EXTERIORS....Quite satisfactory
INTERIORS....Acceptable; fitted atmosphere
DETAIL....A few good touches
TIME....Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

SURELY this isn't big or startling, and just as surely it is a rather pleasing bit of entertainment without any objectionable angles. We have a willun, but he isn't a wicked-wamp-willun. He's just a petty crook who collects the coin from the poor "simps" who want to go on the stage.

Since the desire to become a star and see the name in electric lights has touched more high spots than many will admit, this idea for a film story will undoubtedly have a general appeal. Even those who have never felt the call of the footlights will understand the misguided "suckers" who contributed to the "professor" who conducted the dramatic school shown in this offering.

No attempt has been made to register this as an exceptionally artistic production, but it has been kept quite realistic and decidedly human with many excellent types who keep their work very well within bounds in practically every scene.

The plot is fairly obvious, but, nevertheless, it holds, principally because it has an element of comedy running throughout which makes it entertaining, even though we know what is going to happen.

The titles, which have been very cleverly written, after the style of George Ade's Fables in Slang, help decidedly to keep the comedy element dominant throughout the offering. There is a touch of sarcasm introduced in the attitude of the hero's mother towards her charities, with her sudden "flop" on the finish after she has demanded a wedding between the missing husband and the girl bride when she learns that the missing husband is her son.

Most of the plot has to do with Miss Gish coming to the city to become a star after taking a correspondence course in acting with her love affair culminating in a marriage with the son of the charity-absorbed mother.

The hand of the law grabbed the dramatic school faker about the time you expected it to, and the lovers did a "clutch."

Miss Gish was pleasing as the misguided boob from the country, and Frank Bennett, as the son who became hubby, was decidedly satisfactory because he played humanly.

Spottiswoode Aitken, as the old ex-justice of peace, gave a characterization which will provide many laughs. There were a number of other good types and no really bad spots in the cast.

Among those in the cast were Kate Toncray, Jennie Lee, Fred A. Warren and Mazie Radford.

The Box Office Angle.

This isn't what could be called an exceptional offering and it isn't strong from a dramatic viewpoint. It is rather a pleasing bit of light entertainment, however, with a number of good comedy bits and a lot of laughs provided by the titles.

If you are catering to a discriminating community audience, I believe this will appeal a bit better than the average program release, which tends too much towards the melodramatic.

Personally, I enjoyed this quite a lot, and believe that an audience which is a bit weary of the wild-eyed action thing will think this quite worth-while.

You know to what extent you can depend upon Miss Gish's name in your community, and after deciding that, I would center the attention upon the fact that this is a human comedy of stage-struck folk rather than an exciting or compelling melodrama.

Use a few queries of this sort: "Were you ever stage struck? Have you ever been envious of those who have won fame and fortune before the footlights? Do you think acting can be taught by mail? See 'Stage Struck.'"

PAINFULLY OBVIOUS, CONVENIENT MELO NEVER DOES LAND

Theodore Roberts in

THE AMERICAN CONSUL

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Rollin S. Sturgeon
AUTHOR	Paul West
SCENARIO BY	Harvey Thew and Thomas Geraghty
CAMERAMAN	Harold Rosson
AS A WHOLE	Cheap, crude melo action kills characterization and atmosphere possibilities
STORY	Painfully convenient, ordinary melo as screened; characterizations lost in shuffle
DIRECTION	Registered melo high spots, loses possibility of finer touches
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Characterization spoiled by melo action
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Good; not remarkable
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	So true it became funny at times
TIME	Fifty minutes (5 parts)

WITH Theodore Roberts presented as the star, we naturally expected a bit of human characterization.

It started rather well, but when the story began to unfold we found that it was a painfully convenient plot, obvious and ordinary. Any audience will be twenty minutes ahead of this story development all the time, and it is impossible to make melodrama register under such conditions.

It appeared that Mr. Roberts in his characterizations had been affected by the general atmosphere of bing-bing melo, because, in a number of scenes, his touches failed to register and his work seemed to take on the artificial touch of the main incidents of the plot.

Mr. Roberts was presented as a small-town lawyer who, in return for having made a speech, was promised a reward after election.

Growing impatient after long waiting, the old man journeyed to Washington and finally managed to land a position as American consul to a South American republic where a revolution was under way.

The audience knew long before Mr. Roberts did, just what was going to happen to him, and they also saw the hero conveniently planted in the same town, with a wireless apparatus which was to be used later in calling aid from an American cruiser, which somehow seemed to be on the spot at the necessary moment. Of course, Mr. Roberts' daughter, the shero, came with him and the hero had to do his bit in saving them when the revolution started.

This revolution was a proposition of ten or twelve men on one side and about fifteen on the other, fighting in a public square surrounded by studio houses. Of course, we know that the typical South American one-horse republic has a standing "army" about like what we saw in this offering, but, nevertheless, it is hardly a good method of developing a melodramatic situation to present these comedy soldiers as the dangerous element.

I fear that most any intelligent, discriminating audience will think that this is pretty poor stuff. They

(Continued on following page)

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

ANTHONY KELLY

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

ROY H. KLAFFKI
CINEMATOGRAPHER
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY VEKROFF
Directing Anita Stewart
VITAGRAPH PRODUCTIONS

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from preceding page)

will undoubtedly be disappointed by this 'script, and certainly they'll not rave over Maude Fealy, because, unfortunately, her eyes don't photograph very clearly and she fails to register a personality on the screen which will win sympathy quickly. She is quite acceptable in this offering, because it will not be her fault that the film is bad. She just doesn't lift it perceptibly.

Tom Forman, as the juvenile hero, fitted in—and that's about all.

Raymond Hatton was funny as the weak-kneed South American president, but this suggestion of comic opera soldiery certainly didn't add any strength to the dramatic merit of the offering.

Others in the cast were Charles West and Ernest Joy.

The Box Office Angle

I'd be pretty careful of this, because, to my mind, it will certainly not impress those who are accustomed to the best. It starts out to give a characterization and finishes as a very crude, cheap melo with a convenient, obvious development.

Don't be misled into thinking that there is anything in this offering which would inspire patriotism, because most Americans are under the impression that one "real guy" could whip an entire army of any such republic as represented herein.

The handling of the scenes which register the jackies

(Continued on following page)

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. NEW YORK, MARCH 1, 1917. NO. 9 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 5, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

PUTTING IT UP TO THE PRODUCERS

Many of the most prominent exhibitors in the business have written to me regarding my suggestion that the program releasing companies lay off for three months this summer from giving us junk such as has been passed out in summers gone by, and provide instead that the best of their old subjects be re-issued, while they take their time about manufacturing program releases that will be worth while for release in the fall.

Practically every big executive in the film business reads WID'S regularly, most of them being subscribers personally, so that WID'S goes to their own desk.

However, in order that there be no question regarding any executive of a program releasing company having seen this suggestion of mine, I have written a letter to each of these big men, enclosing a marked copy of the editorial, and I sincerely hope we may get some results which will tend to alleviate the very serious condition of the exhibitors in the country to-day.

If you think that this is a feasible, practical plan for bettering conditions, write to these executives and tell them so. That's the way to get action! You can't better conditions by sitting home and loudly proclaiming how busy you are and wishing for them. The old "wishing" game don't work any more.

The following are the executives to whom I have written:

William Fox, Fox Film Corporation; W. W. Hodkinson, Triangle; Hiram Abrams, Paramount Pictures Corp.; Jesse L. Lasky, Lasky Co.; Richard Rowland, Metro Pictures Corp.; John R. Freuler, Mutual Film Corp.; George K. Spoor, Essanay Film Mfg. Co.; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph; William A. Brady, World Film Corp.; J. A. Berst, General Manager, Pathe; George Kleine, K-E-S-E Service; William A. Selig, Selig Polyscope Co.; M. H. Hoffman, General Manager, Bluebird Photoplays; General Manager Thomas A. Edison Studios; Carl Laemmle, Universal Film Mfg. Co.

The letter which went out to these men reads as follows:

Dear Friend:

I am enclosing herewith marked copy of an editorial suggestion which I made two weeks ago.

I have found that some of the most prominent exhibitors of the country have welcomed this most enthusiastically. Several producers who have mentioned it to me were enthusiastic about the possibilities of such a plan, but seemed afraid that it would be hard to get the producers together, and it would be almost impossible to carry this out without a unanimous agreement.

If I can facilitate the matter in any way I am very anxious to, and it occurred to me that possibly if I were to agree with each producer that he could notify me confidentially that he would be willing to enter into such an agreement providing the other program producers did, I would guarantee to him that his statement would be held in complete confidence until all of the producers had so agreed.

I would simply be able to say to those who did not agree immediately that so many had, without mentioning names.

My idea in suggesting this is purely one of attempting to do something for the good of the business, since I will be benefited in no way.

I sincerely think that conditions are decidedly more serious than most of you executives realize. Every few days some prominent exhibitor from a far-distant state stops in at my office, and their stories are almost alike. They have no reason for telling me anything except the truth.

If my suggested plan needs changes I would be glad to hear them, but surely I believe that something radical should be done this summer to relieve the situation.

The proposition of having each producing company furnish new prints of twelve of their best subjects of the past two or three years or allow open booking of any of their older subjects, certainly would provide a velvet income to the producer and give opportunity to the exhibitor to run favorites who would pull real business.

It would also give the producer a chance to make some real pictures in the three months, so that when he began releasing again in the fall, his productions could be maintained at an even standard.

I am writing this letter to every prominent program producer. I will be very much pleased to have your views on this suggestion of mine.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) WID GUNNING.

February 23, 1917.

THEY HAVE THE NERVE TO ASK FOR SYMPATHY

The "Exhibitors Trade Review" is now putting up a "sympathy" howl, claiming that advertisers have withdrawn their support because they said some films were poor.

I have said all along and still contend that it isn't humanly possible for anybody to expect a man to pay the freight on your proposition and then let you say his goods are poor.

I must say that I wouldn't care to testify as to the ability of the "Trade Review" reviewers, but I want to impress firmly right now one very important point.

A man who is reviewing films for a small salary per week for any publication cannot be expected to take his work any too seriously. Incidentally, he cannot be exactly fitted to do any bigger thing, or else he would be doing it.

Reviewing is important work and a man needs more than a small salary interest to make sure his work is as nearly accurate as possible.

Either the "Exhibitors Trade Review" bankroll guys are entirely ignorant as to the publishing business, or they're putting up a very funny "sympathy" howl now that their one big, grand bluff failed to get over.

I cannot believe that any person who has had experience in the film business would seriously think that it would be possible to run an independent film magazine and get the manufacturers to pay the freight through advertising.

Some dreamer may have had the impression that it would be possible to force the manufacturer in line with a big "splash" and a suggestion of great strength, such as exhibitor support, with the thought being that it would be easy to line up a few thousand exhibitors at a dollar a piece, when they could "compel" the manufacturer to advertise.

Here again the serious error in calculation would be that it isn't necessary for the manufacturer to advertise if he doesn't want to, and certainly the manufacturer to-day has enough sense that he isn't going to pay the freight on a publication which says things he doesn't like.

That's why I've been getting $10 a year for WID'S, and that's why the managers of over three thousand of the very best theatres in this country read WID'S every week. They pay the freight, and consequently they know that WID'S is written for them.

No publication which costs twenty times as much to print and issue as the reader pays for it can ever be independent when the advertising revenue must come from those about whom the editors would write unpleasant things.

The howl from the sanctum-sanctorum of the "OCHS STUFFED CLUB" is surely one of the funniest yelps in recent months.

The exhibitors to-day know too much about the cost of printing and "war-time" salaries of men who are grabbed from one publication because of the prestige attached to their previous job, rather than because of their ability, to be fooled by any howls such as this sympathy yelp from what was announced as the greatest power in the industry.

When the biter gets bitten he gets no sympathy.

WID'S MARKED 100 PER CENT. PURE BY EDITOR.

A LOT OF NICE THINGS HAVE BEEN SAID ABOUT WID'S, BUT I DON'T KNOW WHEN ANYTHING HAS BEEN SAID WHICH WAS MORE APPRECIATED THAN THE FOLLOWING BY TOM HAMLIN, EDITOR OF "AMUSEMENTS," OF MINNEAPOLIS, WHO WROTE THIS ACCOUNT OF HIS VISIT TO THE VARIOUS TRADE PAPERS IN NEW YORK. MR. HAMLIN IS IN A POSITION TO SAY WHAT HE PLEASES EDITORIALLY—AND HE DOES.

THE TRADE JOURNALS.

Then I visited with Mr. Vandervert of the Motion Picture News and he introduced me to Mr. William A. Johnston, the publisher.

Although I formerly thought I was almost as good an editor as Johnston. I was most favorably impressed with him and I like him as well as I like his editorials, which means a whole lot.

Then I visited with Mr. Chalmers and Mr. Wylie of the old established Moving Picture World. They have a real publication there also, and are so firmly established with a decent policy that they can and do consistently refuse advertising of pictures that would harm the industry.

OCHS and BUSH, et al.

A young feller and an old feller started a paper here some time ago and called it the "Exhibitors' Trade Review."

Ochs and Bush. They are two pretty nice fellers, I guess, and treated me as often as I treat—which is seldom.

They registered keen rage and then reluctant forgiveness about an article I wrote about the escapades of various officials of the Exhibitors' League in a previous issue of AMUSEMENTS.

It's an awful rut to get in, boys. I mean the ideas that some person gather, viz.: that the sun, moon and stars revolve about them so that all exhibitors might not perish.

They declare that there is a mint of money "behind" them. I wonder if it will ever catch up to them? If it does it may enfold them and strangle them.

Then what becomes of their frantic protestations that they can lose a few thousand dollars every week and still be "independent"?

Expensive wall-paper is not always the most artistic. It is temporarily attractive, but its wearing qualities may be nil.

When a few men are elected to formulate plans to benefit ALL the exhibitors and then use their offices instead to promote a private publishing enterprise they are going outside their jurisdiction.

They may be good exhibitors, but, as publishers, they are (in labor parlance) "scabbing on the job."

BEWARE OF THE VEILED CLAW.

And by the way, when any representative of this "Exhibitors' Trade Review" is sent up into the Northwest under the guise of helping the industry his primary object is to try and secure subscriptions to a new publication which he personally is vitally and financially interested in.

And regardless of what one or two misguided officers of the Exhibitors' League may think, I believe that I know whereof I speak and I will not knowingly let the rank and file of the exhibitors be buncoed.

After careful investigation I can cheerfully recommend the Moving Picture World and the Motion Picture News. Between them they manage to reach about SEVENTY per cent. of all the exhibitors in the country.

AMUSEMENTS reaches ONE HUNDRED PER CENT of the exhibitors in twelve states exclusively.

Wid Gunning, publisher of "Wid's," is a real live wire. He showed me a lot of courtesy, which is a code of ethics unwritten but firmly established among actual newspaper men.

I always admired his publication for the evident truth it contained and for the valuable advice it gave the exhibitors. He is actually running an "independent" publication for the exhibitors.

The subscription price is ten dollars a year, but, it is a "service" as well as a publication.

And no film manufacturer is allowed to advertise in "Wid's."

He is under obligations to no one.

In comparing the cost of publications, etc., nowadays I can declare with truth that the approximate percentage of independence among motion picture trade journals is about as follows:

BOUQUETS AND STONES.

WID'S—100 per cent pure.
AMUSEMENTS—75 per cent pure.
MOTION PICTURE NEWS—55 per cent pure.
MOVING PICTURE WORLD—50 per cent pure.
EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW—15 per cent pure.

All the above is considering the gross cost of the publications and comparing their overhead and subscription price in relation with the amount of advertising they must carry to offset.

Now what is the use trying to beat around the bush?

If I have been fair enough to a large family of more than five thousand real exhibitors for several years to hold their respect and confidence I would not jeopardize that at this stage by exposing the so-called "Exhibitors' Trade Review" unless I was firmly and sincerely convinced of its being born of personal ambition augmented by swollen temporary authority.

"AMUSEMENTS" IS SUPREME.

AMUSEMENTS is supreme in its own twelve chosen states and therefore is not in even indirect competition with any trade journal with a prospective national circulation.

Therefore, no venom or malice can be claimed.

I, however, return firmly the American privilege of writing what I know to be the truth according to all reports.

And I have left no stone unturned to get at the absolute truth of how a few officers of the League are apparently manipulating things.

Is it for the general good of ALL the exhibitors everywhere?

Answer this, Mr Ochs.

If so, then we will boost your proposition.

Our columns are open for you.

CLASSY INTERESTING ACTION CENTERED ABOUT STAR; BEST C. K. Y. YET

Clara Kimball Young in

THE PRICE SHE PAID

Clara Kimball Young Corp.—Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR ..... Charles Giblyn
AUTHOR ..... David Graham Phillips
SCENARIO BY ..... Charles Giblyn
CAMERAMAN ..... Hal Young
AS A WHOLE ..... Classy production that holds perfectly
STORY ..... Centered about star, with nice twists for suspense
DIRECTION ..... Provided distinctive atmosphere and characterizations that made action convincing
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally excellent, particularly close-ups
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good, without apparent attempts to trick them
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
STAR ..... Appeared to splendid advantage; had wonderful close-ups
SUPPORT ..... Exceptionally well cast; some splendid characterizations
EXTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere nicely; a few quite distinctive INTERIORS ..... Some very classy; all fitted atmosphere
DETAIL ..... Very good
TIME ..... One hour and forty minutes (7 parts)

CERTAINLY this is the best production Clara Kimball Young has ever had.

The entire story has been centered about the star with a fast, interesting development which holds perfectly, and still, because of nicely dove-tailed twists, keeps the proper element of suspense right up to the finish.

There is a touch of psychology in the telling of the story, and yet this is never permitted to interfere with the dramatic development, but is held as an undercurrent which gave added depth and sincerity to the dramatic incidents.

Producer Giblyn has given us more beautiful close-ups of Miss Young than she ever received in any other production. He has lighted her to the best advantage, and the exquisite beauty of her features in some of the bits is enough to win her millions of new admirers.

The story by David Graham Phillips, which has been very widely read, was a difficult one to transfer to the screen, because it was more or less of an episodical biography. In making his adaptation, Mr. Giblyn has carefully and intelligently developed the more important incidents so that, without changing the book he has brought out the psychological intent of the author and still maintained an exceptional amount of suspense due to the introduction of three men who figure prominently in the life of the star.

Every character has been very intellieghtly cast, and the offering is exceptional in that there are so many individual parts which stand out because of their intelligent playing.

The story tells of a young woman left with a small inheritance, entirely unfitted for her battle with the world, forced to accept a wealthy husband after her mother's marriage to a miserly broker who refused to support the daughter.

Finally, after a short honeymoon with her husband, she found he was willing to provide credit at all the shops—jewelry, clothes, etc., but no actual cash money, and the wife realized that she was little more than an ornament or a plaything, and then came a revolt which sent her back to her home determined to starve rather than carry through such a bargain.

With circumstances throwing her in with a young man who had at one time been a close friend and was now separated from his wife, she finally agreed to allow him to finance her career as a singer, she making it plain that it was to be considered as an investment, with he hoping for more.

Pursued by her husband, she was forced to go into hiding, and then another man came into her life—a man who told her the truth coldly and bluntly. This man's insults aroused her better self and she determined in earnest to become a singer.

On the verge of success, the man who had financed her career asked her to marry him, but she refused and promised to pay her debt in time.

Her new friend then proposed, but was also refused, and then came her triumph as a singer.

Returning from her successful trial, we found the star and her teacher radiant, with the new friend downcast. At her home, she turned to the man whose insults had stirred her to action and told him that since she could now pay her debt honorably to the other man she could accept his true love.

It was not until the very last scene that the audience knows that she has only battled for this career in order to gain her self-respect so that she could be independent to accept the man she loved.

Alan Hale, in the part of Stanley Baird, whom Miss Young tried to marry in the early scenes, unsuccessfully, and who afterward financed her training as a singer, has the best opportunity of his career on the screen. He was a splendid type to appear opposite Miss Young, and although the character is made an unsympathetic one by a short scene where he nervously bows himself out when Miss Young appeals to him for help after leaving her husband, still in the later scenes the character is given just the right touches to take the sting out and yet leave the audience satisfied when the star turns to her new friend.

David Powell, as Donald Keith, who comes into Miss Young's life very late in the story, as the sincere friend, has a limited number of scenes, but it is all the more to his credit that he has made his characterization so strong and distinctive as to swing all the sympathy to him and make the audience more than pleased with the star's acceptance of his love at the end.

Seldom has the screen seen a better characterization of a role than that of Snitz Edwards as the repulsive little multimillionaire who becomes Miss Young's husband. This character was a very difficult one, since it demanded a man of diminutive stature who could seem ridiculous at times and yet suggest tremendous power in dramatic moments. For those who have read the book, I am sure that Mr. Edwards will appear almost as if he had stepped from the pages. He certainly typifies General Siddall as pictured by David Graham Phillips, without any suggestion of overplaying.

Cesare Gravini, as Moldini, the Italian teacher who developed Miss Young's voice and brought her success, made his part stand out. It was a difficult character to register without overplaying, but certainly this has been done most successfully, and I am sure that any audience will remember Cesare Gravini's work and undoubtedly speak of it in going over the picture.

Louise Beaudet, as Miss Young's mother, and Charles Bowser, as her stepfather, were excellent types, and, in fact, every member of the cast was exceptionally well chosen as to type.

It isn't often that we see a seven-reel production of a straight dramatic story that holds as this one does from start to finish, with the construction so arranged that every incident advances the story and develops the underlying psychological intent of the author. There have been very few adaptations of popular novels which have followed the text of the author as carefully as this with such splendid results.

The Box Office Angle

Considered from the audience angle, one of the most important points about this production is the fact that the entire story is centered about the star, with her figuring in every important dramatic incident. The people want to see Miss Young, and surely in this she has wonderful close-ups which show her to the very best advantage. She is truly beautiful.

The development of the story, which is fast, with the suspense maintained to the finish, is a decided advantage over the ordinary dramatic development, and since the entire production is classy and distinctive as to atmosphere, you can go to this strong in promising that it is the greatest Clara Kimball Young film ever produced.

That statement alone should be enough to bring you real money, but you should of course take advantage of the fact that this is an adaptation of a very popular novel, and you can safely promise that the screen version follows the book very closely, with one of the best selections of types to fit the author's characterizations ever presented in a screen story.

I would mention specifically that Alan Hale and David Powell appear in support of Miss Young, and you might, in your advertising, show pictures of these two men and also a picture of Mr. Edwards, saying: "This man is her husband, but which of the other two do you think she really loves?" Since the book doesn't give a definite decision on this point, you should be able to stir up considerable interest along that line.

Whatever you do, don't tell the story in your advertising. Never kill possible suspense by publishing a synopsis.

The fact that Alan Hale has always played hero parts and has been starred in many productions with the Biograph, Famous Players, Lasky and Fox companies, and that David Powell played opposite Mary Pickford in "Less Than the Dust," gives you an opportunity to mention these two heroes, which leaves the question of her real love open.

You can speak of Snitz Edwards as one of the most famous of Broadway's character men, stating that he was selected particularly for this part because he was decidedly the type of the character as drawn by the author.

Inasmuch as you can make real promises on this, with the knowledge that the production will make good, I will say that it should be a financial "clean-up" anywhere!

MUCHLY INVOLVED UNCONVINCING MELO WITH MANY EXTRAS

Claire McDowell in

THE GATES OF DOOM

Red Feather

DIRECTOR	Charles Swickard
AUTHOR	J. Grubb Alexander
CAMERAMAN	Harry Macguire
AS A WHOLE	Oodles of action laid in India, but never impresses
STORY	Muchly involved British-Hindoo mix-up; doesn't convince
DIRECTION	Provided action and atmosphere, but lacked depth
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied, but generally good
LIGHTINGS	A few very effective; some only ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Generally good
STAR	Had to work hard
SUPPORT	Oodles of types and mobs
EXTERIORS	Good desert locations; big "20,000 Leagues" sets used
INTERIORS	Quite satisfactory
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

IF you are catering to audiences who seem to like the wild, rushing melodrama, it is quite possible that they'll think this is all right, even though it is in the atmosphere of India.

There are many mob scenes and oodles of action, none of which really convinces or registers as anything that might sure-enough happen, but nevertheless, it will be interesting to the patron who drops in without figuring to analyze carefully the plot of your offerings.

The plot of this is decidedly involved and has one very bad element, in that mother and daughter are played by Miss McDowell, with the story providing that the mother shall be taken for the daughter. I'll admit that it sometimes does happen that mother and daughter resemble each other strikingly, but believe me, bo!—I never heard of an instance where they looked so "exactly alike" that it was impossible to tell them apart. Truly, "They do it only in the movies."

They made use of the big exterior sets of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" again, and while these sets helped to properly register the East Indian atmosphere, I fear that many of your regulars will feel as if they are on their own main street when they see this set, rather than in some far-distant point in India. Landmarks register readily.

The titles were quite melodramatic, some of them being a bit extravagant. In one place a quotation was used, and since the scene had to do with a preparation to burn a woman alive, the title is probably going to pull a laugh. It read: "Little flames and lean; red as slaughter and blue as steel."

Claire McDowell had a lot to do, but she really never, at any time, made a decided impression, because the work of individuals was lost in the mad rush of "extras" hither and thither.

In one part of the story they pulled an incident exactly similar to one in Lenore Ulrich's film "The Road to Love," it being the dancing girl bit, with Miss McDowell pulling a dance which was followed by her being recognized.

In the supporting cast were Jack Connelly, Marc Fenton, L. C. Shumway, Lena Baskette, Tommy Dale, Alfred Allen and Frances MacDonald.

The Box Office Angle

As an avowed melodrama, you may get this by if you promise them lots of action and many mob scenes.

I don't believe that Claire McDowell's name is big enough to pull you much at the box office, and "The Gates of Doom" means nothing in particular. They have spent more money on this in hiring "extras" than the production justifies, or else they've taken a lot of scenes from other films and patched them together.

If you are in the habit of offering pure, unadulterated melodrama on frequent occasions with success, I imagine that you'll find that this goes very acceptably. It will hardly appeal to audiences that care for convincing characterizations or stories filled with human touches.

HUMAN BITS AND LITTLE TOUCHES MAKE THIS ENTERTAINING

Ella Hall in

POLLY REDHEAD

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Jack Conway
AUTHOR	Edgar Jepson
SCENARIO BY	Elliott J. Clawson
CAMERAMAN	Ed Kull
AS A WHOLE	Kid stuff and human bits make this very entertaining despite story
STORY	Provided delightful characterizations, but terribly convenient "likeness" situation
DIRECTION	Gave very artistic atmosphere and scores of delightful human touches
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent; very artistic
LIGHTINGS	Generally very fine; some beautiful exteriors
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STAR	Winning personality that makes impossible situation entertaining
SUPPORT	Kid great; some splendid types; generally satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Very artistic composition in some
INTERIORS	Generally very good
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH the story of this fell with a sickening thud for me when they pulled the stuff about two little girls who "looked exactly alike," nevertheless, this seemed to be one of the most entertaining Bluebird productions I've ever seen. This is true principally because the story gives us several delightful characterizations with plenty of little human bits of business centered about a kid and the little red-headed girl who took care of this youngster.

I consider Ella Hall one of our cleverest ingenues and think that she can do a certain type of work as well, if not better than, any girl on the screen. She has endeared herself to millions by characterizations such as she gave in "Jewel," and this part followed directly in line with the "Jewel" characterization.

The story was quite elementary as to plot and painfully convenient. It told of an orphan girl acting as housekeeper for an attorney, who just "happened" to look exactly like the daughter of the estranged couple. Consequently the housekeeper was substituted for the other child, while an attempt was made to get the child out of the country with its mother.

The attempt failed, but the couple was brought together again, and all ended happily, with the young attorney finding a bride for himself and the little housekeeper, Polly Redhead, finding a young prince of her own.

William Worthington, Jr., the young son of the Universal director, figured in quite a lot of scenes, and this kid certainly won the Rialto audience. Most of his scenes came early in the offering, and then Miss Hall, with some human touches, carried the burden of the offering till well towards the end, when there were several delightful bits introduced in which a beautiful dog figured.

Gertrude Aster, who appeared as the attorney's sweetheart, certainly screened beautifully and gave promise of real work to come in the future. I would certainly say that she is a decided possibility for stellar honors.

George Webb, as the attorney, was very pleasing when he forgot to "act." Some of his early scenes were spoiled by his failure to "forget."

Others in the cast were Richard La Reno, Raymond Whittaker and Charles Mailes.

The Box Office Angle

While I have found some people who didn't like this after I had suggested that they go see it, I still believe that it is splendid entertainment and decidedly better than the average program release.

The story will not stand analysis, but the day has come, to my mind, when audiences want entertaining human bits and characterization more than just action, and surely there are places in this that will win the most hardened.

It is quite artistic and more than satisfactory as to the distinctive class of the atmosphere, and I believe that I am quite safe in suggesting that you make a special effort to get this and then make it very plain in your advertising that the story is a convenient plot that may not convince, but that the production is a delightfully human little story of a red-headed girl with a kid brother who is about as cute as anything seen on the screen in a long time.

By openly telling them that the story is convenient, you are disarming any criticism from that source and centering the attention upon the real merit of the offering.

Certainly, by billing Ella Hall with special mention of some of her successes, such as "Jewel," "The Love Girl" and others, you will be assured of a worth-while business.

HUMAN TYPES AND MYSTERY SUSPENSE MAKE THIS ENTERTAINING

Constance Talmadge in

BETSY'S BURGLAR

Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Paul Powell
AUTHOR.....Frank E. Woods
AS A WHOLE....Entertaining because holds nicely, with fine types, good action and a few laughs
STORY.....Mystery-suspense-comedy melo; slipped a bit at very end
DIRECTION.....Landed many human touches, gave excellent atmosphere and developed mystery with good comedy relief
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good; not unusual
LIGHTINGS.....Acceptable; not distinctive or artistic
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable
STAR.....Pleasing
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Very good
DETAIL.....Some human little bits
TIME.....Fifty minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED from the viewpoint of entertainment, I believe this will register right well with most audiences. It is a mystery-suspense story that holds the attention nicely as the story develops, with the scenes laid in a funny little boarding house, where an aggregation of types provides human comedy that will please.

The story has been so constructed as to make the audience suspicious, and the pretentions of several of the characters holds the suspense particularly well, even for those who like to guess the plot, because the wise ones will probably guess that the hero was a crook, just as the correspondence school sleuth did.

There were two bad spots in the story, both of which were entirely unnecessary. One of these was the statement by the soda-water clerk that he had heard the hero and Miss Talmadge plotting the murder, because if he had, he would have been guilty along with them as an accomplice for not informing on them, and the other was the finish which made Miss Talmadge the heiress of the man who had adopted the hero. This was such an uncanny coincidence that it kicked a hole in things, and certainly wasn't needed. If they wanted a final twist they could have had a codicil in the will providing that the young man would not get his money unless he married.

The plot had to do with a mysterious couple who moved into a boarding-house, where Miss Talmadge was maid-of-all-work for her mother. The soda fountain clerk and the grocer's boy were her two chief admirers until the young stranger came to take rooms there.

Mystery began to surround the aged couple from the first, and we soon found that the young hero was very anxious to secure an entrance into their rooms, where they had a box in which they kept some jewels, in an old trunk.

The grocery boy was studying to become a detective, through a correspondence school course. When Miss Talmadge told him about the young feller arranging with her to steal the mysterious box from the room of the old couple, he was sure that the young feller was a crook and planned with her that she should get the box for him, deliver it to him and allow the grocery boy to make the arrest outside the house.

Then followed a reel of fast melodrama, wherein the girl stepped out of the house, was kidnaped by thugs, who were followed by the hero, with the police arriving at the boarding house, where the man of the old couple was found dead and the grocery boy unconscious.

After Miss Talmadge and the hero had been arrested and given a severe "third degree," the grocery boy finally recovered and explained that the thugs had killed the old man, and then we learned that the boy's story about the will was true and the mystery was cleared up.

The willunous attorney, who appeared only in a few scenes, had been directing the action of the thugs, trying to secure the will from the old couple, who were holding it up for a price.

As you can see, this is a story which moves fairly rapidly, and has enough twists to surely sustain the interest.

The funny types in the boarding house, the soda water clerk's jealousy and the correspondence-school sleuth, will provide a number of laughs, and even though the detective seemed terribly overdrawn, it is possible that there have been just such ginks.

The production wasn't distinctive or artistic, but the atmosphere was rather true to life.

Miss Talmadge was quite satisfactory, although not wonderful, as the heroine, and all of the other types were rather good.

In the cast were Hal Wilson, Monte Blue, Joseph Singleton, Kenneth Harlan, Josephine Crowell and Kate Bruce.

The Box Office Angle

I doubt if Miss Talmadge has enough of a following to justify starring her alone, but since this will prove fairly good entertainment despite its rather impossible angles at times, I believe you can safely play it and plug her as the star of "Intolerance."

I would refer particularly to the correspondence-school detective by some such advertising as this: "Have you ever seen the ads, 'How to become a detective by mail?' See one of the results in 'Betsy's Burglar.'"

Promise them that this is a mystery-suspense story with some good touches of comedy and action melodrama, and I believe that your average audience will be right well pleased.

Address
Van Dyke
Studio,
939
8th Ave.
Columbus
9630

UNCONVINCING MELO SHOWING DETAILS OF VAMP AT WORK

Theda Bara in

THE TIGER WOMAN

Fox Special

DIRECTOR	J. Gordon Edwards
AUTHOR	James W. Adams
SCENARIO BY	Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN	Philip E. Rosen
AS A WHOLE	Wild vampire melo—never registers; funny at times
STORY	Impossible series of murders, suicides and other violence never convinces; episodical and jumpy
DIRECTION	Failed to register psychology getting only action melo
PHOTOGRAPHY	Sometimes good; sometimes lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	A few effective; some too contrasty; others lacked definition
CAMERA WORK	Good, except too many extreme long shots of dramatic action
STAR	Fails to impress; gets a laugh toward the finish
SUPPORT	Varied assortment of victims; failed to stand out
EXTERIORS	Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS	A few very good; some had too much furniture
DETAIL	Sort of lost in shuffle
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (6 parts)

PROPERLY classified, this would come under the head of "vampire running wild."

Here is a certain indication of the fact that the vampire thought has lost its grip, or more truly the registering of the fact that you can't take an indiscriminate bunch of vampire incidents, mixing a few murders, a suicide or two, with a few victims sent to Siberia and other imprisonments, and shake the whole thing up into an acceptable cocktail that will make good entertainment for present-day film fans.

The vampire proposition to-day, if intelligently presented as a study in psychology, with the story thread held in such form as to keep the interest centered upon one set of characters, is still as good as it ever was. But the idea of showing how wicked a woman can be by presenting her in the detailed business of putting men on the blink, fails not only to convince, but to register as either entertaining or interesting.

There was an air of artificiality about all of this which will keep any one from regarding it seriously. Miss Bara was shown in a lot of clothes—something she never attempted to do to any extent before—and I can't say that her various costumes have added materially to her entertaining qualities. She "vamped" and "vamped" all through the offering, and really, I'm afraid that this will do a lot toward making people decide that they don't care about seeing her any more, because her efforts never land at any time. Somehow, after seeing this, I couldn't help but think of Valeska Suratt—which is surely not to the credit of Miss Bara.

Toward the end of the offering, after she had killed about the fifth or sixth victim, we found the star trying to get down on the floor, on her back, in order to appear to have been injured in a struggle with the man she had just killed. This scene certainly should have been made over, because I can guarantee you that it's going to get a laugh anywhere. Miss Bara has taken on quite a little avoirdupois in recent months, and her attempt to get down on the floor was ungraceful to say the least. It got a real "ha-ha" the night I saw it.

Then when we got to the finish, the star was left in a dying condition upon the floor, with the pearls she loved at some distance from her. We had a fine illustration here of that famous poem, "Wiggle, wiggle, vampy star," and finally, when she reached the precious pearls, she "flopped" over on her back and lifted them above her as if she intended to indulge in a spaghetti luncheon of pearl necklaces.

I'm afraid that most any audience will see the ridiculous side of this finish, and if they do—good night!

The supporting cast worked hard trying to be melodramatic enough to fit the story.

In the cast were John Webb Dillon, Ed F. Roseman, Mary Martin, Louis Dean, Kittens Reichert, Herbert Heyes, Emil De Verney, Florence Martin, Edward Holt, Kate Blancke, Glenn White and George Clarke.

The Box Office Angle

If Bara's name has been getting you the money and your people are still open to the "vamp" proposition, you can probably play this and get away with it, even though they don't like it. They'll hardly have any kick coming, because this is simply an extreme melo of "vamp" possibilities, but you may accomplish this great good in your community by playing it: You may finally convince many of the doubtful that they don't want to see any more vampire pictures that are based only upon the vamp's rep.

Figured as entertainment or good drama, this isn't. It's wild meller with vampire frills.

If you are, as a rule, truthful with your patrons, I would be very careful how I worded my ads. I would say something of this sort: "Theda Bara has a chance to do all the vampire tricks that ever were, in 'The Tiger Woman.'" Then they can't fuss with you when they come out.

The vamp's score in this offering, as I remember it, was: Four violent deaths; two sent to Siberia and two to prison, with her own death for the finish. If you want to start an argument, you might tell them that she has a good score in this picture, quoting the above results as the net accomplished in this one offering. Surely if you pull something like that no one can have the nerve to come out and argue with you after they see it—and the chances are that most of those who like the wicked vampire stuff will come just the same even though you tell them how wicked this particular "wamp" is.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director of
THE LINCOLN CYCLE PHOTOPLAYS
Studios and Executive Offices:
RIDGEFIELD PARK, N. J.

ALL the big executives Read WID'S

BAD MORAL AND TELLS SECRETS, BUT WILL GET MONEY

Robert Warwick and Doris Kenyon in

A GIRL'S FOLLY

Paragon—Brady—World

DIRECTOR.....Maurice Tourneur
AUTHORS.....Frances Marion and Maurice Tourneur
CAMERAMAN.....John Vanderbroeck
AS A WHOLE.....Very interesting, but tells studio secrets—which is dangerous stuff
STORY....Slender plot, with one possible situation, all subordinated to studio action
DIRECTION.....Gave some artistic bits and some good little back stage scenes, but poorly tied together
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally very good; a few excellent bits
LIGHTINGS.....Some exceptionally good; generally pleasing
CAMERA WORK.....Generally good
STARS.....Good, but had few real scenes
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types, but mother mis-cast
EXTERIORS.....A few artistic bits; some just ordinary
INTERIORS....Back stage scenes very interesting; some fine sets; generally well done
DETAIL.....Good, but too many secrets told
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE you exhibitors should register a very sincere and emphatic protest against this sort of offering for the reason that it tells too many back-stage secrets. For the same reason that I believe appearances in public have a bad effect in the long run, I sincerely think it is a serious error to show the fans what makes the "wheels go 'round" in a film studio.

Certainly every exhibitor should insist immediately that one scene in particular be taken out of this offering. It shows a colored valet signing "personally autographed" photographs to be sent by a star to admirers. Admitting that such things happen and are done in a majority of cases, even then I certainly believe that it's all wrong to let the fans know it, or even think it.

Considered purely from the viewpoint of whether you can get money with it and whether it will interest and please your possible patrons, this certainly will deliver both ways.

The thread of the story is quite slender and has a very questionable suggestion of a moral, as presented, but the introduction of the scenes showing clearly, activity about a film studio is sure to prove exceptionally interesting to any film fan. In fact, I enjoyed it very much myself — and I know quite a lot about film studios.

The story suggested, however, that film companies who were making pictures in the country seemed to encourage the luring of young girls to the city on the promise of making them stars. I will admit again, that this thing may have been done many times, but certainly it isn't anything to brag about or to put on the screen as a bit of real life by the film people themselves.

After the girl had arrived at the studio, we found that she lacked talent and was refused a position, with the result that she accepted the proposition of the star to become his "friend."

At a party arranged in honor of her acceptance of the fine clothes, apartment, etc., her mother arrived, and the star, realizing that it was all wrong, sent the girl back home with her mother.

This final scene could have been a very effective one had the part of the mother been played by a type more in keeping with the unsophisticated little mothers of most small villages. Jane Adair was entirely too wise-looking to have permitted her daughter to go away with the film company, in the first place, and certainly she would have understood things immediately upon her arrival. The mis-casting of this one character spoiled the possibilities of the one situation.

It will readily be seen that there was not a great deal of action or incident to this, and the offering was made into five reels principally by the variety of studio atmosphere provided and by the introduction of considerable animal stuff.

There was one little series of scenes in which several girls had a strenuous time with a mouse, which will prove to be good audience stuff, but it certainly had nothing to do with the story. Fortunately, the average audience doesn't stop to analyze such things, and it is the little touches such as the mouse stuff which will make this register.

Mr. Warwick, as the film star, had very little to do, but he did it with the necessary dignity and nonchalant authority to keep the part well in character.

Doris Kenyon, as the wild-eyed country maid, looked in semi-startled manner at most everything, although at times her manner hardly registered, because we somehow felt that she knew more than she pretended to.

June Elvidge, as a worldly-wise friend of Mr. Warwick, photographed to splendid advantage in many of her scenes and played with a quiet dignity.

Johnny Hines had a number of small bits, but didn't have a chance to register many laughs.

Chester Barnett was quite satisfactory as the village swain who awaited the return of the would-be film star.

The Box Office Angle

Since the producer has gone and "done it," I presume you might as well go ahead and get the money with this, because it would be impossible to eliminate the back-stage scenes and have a picture left.

We have had some pictures in the past showing studio secrets, and while this gives away entirely too much of the mechanics that go to make up our productions, still very little specific information is given with the exception of the one bit, regarding the autographed photographs, which certainly ought to come out.

I believe that by billing this as a story of a girl who wanted to become a film star, showing studio life as it really is, you should be able to jam them in. There's enough good stuff about it to please despite the fact that it places the film folk in rather an unpleasant light in certain situations.

Since it is explained in the title, at one place, that film artists seldom know the nature of the story on which they are at work, this may help to serve as an alibi to keep any admirers of Mr. Warwick from blaming him for appearing in an offering with such a theme.

With Mr. Warwick's name, the names of Miss Kenyon and Miss Elvidge, and the possibility of definitely saying that there are many scenes showing pictures in the process of making at the Brady-World Studios at Fort Lee, you should be able to get some money with this.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

GREAT CHARACTERIZATIONS AT FIRST; BLOWS UP AT END

Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray in

BACK OF THE MAN

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Reginald Barker
AUTHOR	Monte M. Katterjohn
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Robert Newhard
AS A WHOLE	Develops beautifully, but blows up on finish
STORY	Early human situation beautifully handled, but "flopped" at end
DIRECTION	Gave nice characterizations in early scenes; ran wild on finish
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Effective; distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Splendid; many good close-ups
STARS	Very human characterizations, which carried production
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty
INTERIORS	Classy; distinctive
DETAIL	Very good until end
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

DOROTHY DALTON and Charlie Ray made the first four reels of this exceptionally entertaining because of their characterizations in the well-known situation of the woman who, by her encouragement and help, made possible the success of the awkward country boy, who grew to the position of secretary to the president of a large company.

Seeing then the opportunity for the man she loved to become president of the concern by marrying the daughter of his employer, the girl again sacrificed herself and announced a fictitious engagement to a boy back home. So far, fine!

Then they gave us the melodrama of the blackmailer who forced the millionaire's daughter to steal from the safe, with the result that he followed her there to be sure she got the bonds and murdered her in a struggle.

Both the daughter and the blackmailer seemed to have exceptional courage, because they went into this office when Mr. Ray and Miss Dalton were both in their respective offices with the lights turned on.

Anyway, the blackmailer got away by a fire escape, while the police found Mr. Ray with a revolver in his hand over the dead girl, and he was held, with Miss Dalton as a witness.

They then uncovered a statute which provided that even should a witness become the wife of the defendant after the trial had started, she could not testify against him. We saw no wedding, and yet the attorney announced to the surprised court that Miss Dalton had married Charlie Ray—and I would like to know how the marriage was perpetrated without those holding the accused in prison being aware of the fact. This point should surely have been registered.

The next bad spot was a title stating that the blackmailer had been "irresistibly drawn" to the court room. We were also told that it had been discovered that he was guilty of some forgeries and that men were trailing him. When he started to leave the court room detectives held him and he, thinking that they were arresting him for the murder, denied his guilt and finally stated that the girl had accidentally shot herself, thereby proving his knowledge of the crime, which led to his full confession.

Following this we saw Charlie Ray speeding in an auto, with a title telling us that he was going to his wife, who had left him after the trial, stating that she had married him in order to save him and would annoy him no longer.

Arriving at her country home, he did a few "Doug" Fairbanks high hurdles over a half dozen fences, while we saw Miss Dalton sitting beside a pond in a beautiful exterior. Then came the crowning blow.

Mr. Ray was on one side of the pond and Miss Dalton on the other, when, instead of walking around, he calmly stretched out his arms and started to wade slowly through the water. I'm sure this'll get a yell from any audience—but they'll have a second one coming, because when he gets halfway over, Miss Dalton calmly gets up and walks out to meet him. Believe me, if you're agoin' to run this you certainly have every reason for registering a real kick about this finish, and if they don't cut it, I think it'll be one occasion where you will be justified in taking the law into your own hands and eliminating that "wading" clutch.

In the supporting cast were J. Barney Sherry, Margaret Thompson and Jack Livingston.

The Box Office Angle

I believe you can figure this as a production which will register very satisfactorily because of the intelligent manner in which the first four reels has been handled. The work of Charlie Ray and Dorothy Dalton in these scenes will register with any audience. The melodramatic finish takes the edge off the production, and sure you should positively see to it that the "wading" clutch is eliminated.

I believe that Miss Dalton, who is starred alone in this, according to the press sheets—for what reason I can't figure—and Mr. Ray, are both excellent box office propositions, and if you find that your paper reads only Miss Dalton, I would particularly emphasize in all of my advertising the presence of Mr. Ray.

You might tell them that it is a story of Miss Dalton as a stenographer making possible the rise of Charlie Ray from the position of a poor country boob filing clerk to president of the company.

You might stir up some interest in this by asking how they stand on this question: "Who is responsible for a man's success in a majority of cases? Is it the woman 'Back of the Man?'" You might also use a line like this: "What makes a man fight for success? See Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray in 'Back of the Man.'"

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

FARCE MELO WITH CRUDE SPOTS, BUT FAIRLY ENTERTAINING

Kolb & Dill in

GLORY

M. L. B. Film-Unity Sales-State Rights

DIRECTOR	Maude Lillian Barry
AUTHOR	Aaron Hoffman
AS A WHOLE	Farce melo that will be accepted as pleasing
STORY	Never convinces and jumps badly at times, but interesting, with a few laughs
DIRECTION	Had some good spots, although many incidents rather crudely handled
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Just good generally; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Will gather some laughs and are never really bad
SUPPORT	Acceptable; a couple of pretty blondes
EXTERIORS	A few good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Several very good sets, but many ordinary ones
DETAIL	Overdrawn at times, but interesting
TIME	Sixty-seven minutes (7 parts)

ANYONE who knows anything about Kolb & Dill will naturally expect this to be a farce comedy. When they find that there is a thread of a story, they will accept the rather wild jumps that occur occasionally and think nothing of it, where if stars who were supposed to work straight were doing the characters, they would feel that the story was all wrong.

The plot had to do with a poor girl who was deserted by the city chap, with the result that her daughter was left on the hotel desk, while she went out to lose her memory and become the housekeeper of the financier, who afterwards stole oil lands from the town.

The unusual angle of the story was the adoption by the entire town of the little baby, there being a regular monthly meeting to look after the welfare of the youngster. At the first gathering of the townsfolk there was quite a time trying to decide upon the name, until they finally agreed upon "Glory," which was the name of the town.

It was the child who discovered the oil, and in later years, when the trust was profiting by the usurped lands, the old Germans conspired by means of a tunnel to tap the pipe from the wells, and consequently secure quite a lot of oil. They were caught in the act, however, and forced from their homes by the trust head, who held a mortgage on all of their property. He was eventually forced to give up the land by his own son, who had fallen in love with Glory, and a crooked judge who was brought to a realization of the wrongs that had been done.

We then found Kolb & Dill as the multi-millionaire heads of the Glory Oil Co., wallowing in luxury, which gave a good comedy contrast touch. The offering finished with a battle as to who could sell oil the cheapest, with the price going down a cent at a time, until finally the Glory Co. gave it away, thus forcing the trust to give in.

This final stuff, which came after the clutch between the young people, seemed very much like unnecessary padding, and while it will undoubtedly gather a few laughs, it is unnecessarily drawn out.

Kolb & Dill were seen in their well-known German characterizations, and Juanita Hansen appeared as Glory grown up.

In the supporting cast were May Cloy, Wellington Playter, Alan Forest, William Lampe and Doris Baker.

The Box Office Angle

At least this is different. It is sort of a farce-melodrama that never really convinces, but fortunately keeps the audience in a state of mind of not caring much as to whether it does convince or not, there being an occasional snicker and a few good laughs.

Certainly it isn't worthy of the footage given to it, and I wouldn't bill it as a special attraction or anything worthy of being considered an out-of-the-ordinary feature, figured from the viewpoint of being particularly worth while. It is a production which will register as well with the average audience, if not a little better than, most of the cheap melodramas which are now going out as regular program releases. However, I would figure it as no more than program caliber, worthy of being played because of a few of the decidedly overdrawn situations which become rather funny.

Since Kolb & Dill pictures haven't been particularly successful, I doubt if these names will be worth much at the box office if you have played any of their other offerings. If you haven't shown any of their stuff, you can possibly do a little business with this by billing them as the famous stars of musical comedy and vaudeville fame.

ANOTHER SIN MELO WITH FASHION SHOW DIVING GIRLS, ETC.

Shirley Mason in

PASSION

McClure—Seven Sins—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
SCENARIO BY	McClure scenario staff
CAMERAMAN	George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE	Cheap melo with a few interesting spots
STORY	Jumpy; unconvincing
DIRECTION	Crude in spots; provided plenty of action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable; sometimes poor
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Has good little "figger"
EXTERIORS	A few park scenes interesting
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Jumpy
TIME	Fifty minutes (5 parts)

THIS latest McClure "Sin" is another ordinary melodrama of very jumpy construction and unvincing action, but they have tied in some cabaret scenes, a fashion show and a lot of stuff at an amusement park, including the swimming pool stuff, showing bathing girls, so that, on the whole, it will register as good if not better than some of those that have gone before, despite there being no big-name star.

Clifford Bruce, who appears opposite Shirley Mason, as a sort of willunous hero, has the physical strength to fit the part and carries some of the incidents nicely despite the shallow nature of the story.

The production is very much like the other "Sins," in that we get a lot of action which never really convinces and sometimes doesn't even interest, but it'll probably be accepted by the unthinking, because of the presence of the fashion show and the amusement park scenes.

In this, Miss Mason has her fortune cut on because she got her name in the papers as having attended a wrestling match, and then she took a job as a one-piece bathing suit diving girl in an amusement park.

After the customary scene where she was made prisoner in a room by the willun, who attacked her with the also-to-be-expected rescue, the episode finishes with George Le Guere and Miss Mason together again.

If there's a moral to these McClure "Sins," the producer had better send the diagram along with them. Because surely it's hard to find. There seems to be no legible connection between the various features, and most of them tend decidedly toward action rather than characterization.

In the supporting cast were Mabel Strickland, Edith Wright, Harry Gripp, Bigelow Cooper, Edmund Dalby and Ruby Hoffman.

The Box Office Angle

You ought to know by now what these "Sins" are worth at the box office. I've heard from various sections that they get the money because of the tremendous advertising campaign, and some exhibitors tell me that they have been able to sneak them by without a terrific amount of criticism because the advertising in the McClure magazines has brought out a clientele which isn't too well posted on film possibilities.

It seems to me, however, that it is rather an error to present crude melodramas like these as exceptional features, even though you can get money with them, because, while those who can may not say much in criticism, they may be sufficiently dissatisfied to stay away from your theatre when you have a really worth-while feature that is advertised just as prominently as these "Sins."

Booking these muchly-advertised "Sins" is more or less of a problem of futures. Undoubtedly, the advertising campaign will make it possible for you to do some business on them, just as advertising will sell most anything once. The question is, can the exhibitors of the country afford to continue to mislead the public?

This particular "Sin" isn't as bad as some of the others but it is still a long way from being what could be called a worth-while feature. I must say that in this case it is up to you to use your own judgment according to your local conditions.

VERY ANCIENT PLOT HANDICAPS STAR; FAIRLY DONE

Ethel Clayton in

THE WEB OF DESIRE

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Emile Chautard
AUTHOR	E. Lloyd Sheldon
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE	Had good start, but finished as ordinary melo
STORY	Busy-man-neglected-wife-misunderstanding; melo finish
DIRECTION	Failed to lift offering; action didn't convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Badly handicapped by story, support and atmosphere
SUPPORT	Ordinary; lacked personality
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable; some rather poor
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY this is not a new theme, the story of the young couple who were happy in the country but became estranged when they acquired wealth and moved to the city because the husband was occupied with business to such an extent as to be compelled to neglect his wife.

But if this plot were handled with every thought devoted to characterization, it might still be made good entertainment. When they take this as a basis and then make it a melodrama by devoting the footage to surface action which never convinces, the case is hopeless.

This should have been a good picture. The World company has done this story enough times that they should be able by this time to do it right. But they never seem to get beyond the surface melodrama limit.

In this particular variation of the plot we find the wife possessed of stock which carries control in the husband's property. She almost slips, from listening to the voice of the tempter, and gives away a proxy on the stock, but, of course, we knew all the time that she was going to "blow in" at the directors' meeting and put hubby back into control again.

They did give us a surprise finish. Oh, boy!—it was SOME finish!

The guy what had been pulling all the "doity woik" was told to go out and shoot himself, and he sneaked into a private office while all the other extras stood transfixed with every suggestion of tense emotion—one or two of 'em being quite funny in this pose—and then we saw this gink write a note and raise the automatic to his temple!! The extras who were standing with nerves all on edge (?) were shown to start as they heard a shot, and, of course, Miss Kenyon was called upon to pull a faint, and then when they rushed in—by heck! there was no dead man there! The note he left said that he was going to Europe and wouldn't bother them any more.

Well, I suppose they wanted to do something that would be a little different from the actual formula that had been used so often in the past.

Miss Clayton tried hard to make this character register, but it was plain that she hardly felt equal to the task. In one situation she was calmly seen to go to a notorious roadhouse with the tempter for what was alleged to be a "business interview," according to a title. 'Tain't done.

Miss Clayton was called upon to be rather a "devil"—smoke cigarettes and get "stewed" at what was supposed to be a gathering of society, which, to my mind, is certainly not the sort of part that she should be asked to play. This "society" gathering, by the way, was rather funny, because Miss Clayton was supposed to be the one who would feel out of place because of the superiority of the other guests. As a matter of fact, she stood out among the assembled gang of extras like a lone diamond in a sawdust box. Such is art as they pull it in the "movies," which have to be made at so much per and released one a week.

Rockliffe Fellowes, as the husband, doesn't photograph particularly well, and although he has sort of a bulldog strength to his features, he lacks the personality needed to gain the proper sympathy in screen portrayals. I have been quite disappointed in Mr. Fellowes, because, after seeing him in "Under Cover," I had expected that he would be one of our popular screen stars. He never quite gets away from the fact that he is facing the camera.

Little Madge Evans had a few scenes in the early part of the story which were pleasing, but of little consequence.

The other members of the cast were very ordinary. They were Doris Field, Ed M. Kimball, Richard Turner and William Williams.

The Box Office Angle

If you are playing program releases, I suppose you can put this one on and get it by because of Miss Clayton's reputation, just as you have many other productions which would be an insult if any one would ask you to consider booking them on the open market.

This story is so old and obvious that your regulars will be two reels ahead of you most of the time, and I surely don't consider it a good vehicle for Miss Clayton.

Unless this charming little star is given some opportunity to present intelligent characterizations pretty soon, her popularity is going to suffer. Any one who has ever seen "Dollars and the Woman" and a few other of Miss Clayton's better films knows that she can act. Unfortunately, however, all of the fans have not seen the better films she has appeared in, and consequently they are compelled to judge by what they have seen.

If you feel that you can afford to run this old story again, produced in a manner that is ordinary, then I would certainly call attention only to Miss Clayton's presence, and not make any specific promises regarding the merit of the offering.

DIRECTOR AND STAR MAKE ONE THOUGHT STORY REGISTER

Mae Murray in

ON RECORD

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Robert Leonard
AUTHORS	Paul West and John B. Clymer
SCENARIO BY	George D. Proctor
ART DIRECTOR	Wilfred Buckland
CAMERAMAN	Charles Rosher
AS A WHOLE	Director and star make this quite worth while
STORY	Painfully convenient incidents tied around one good thought
DIRECTION	Gave very classy, distinctive lightings and atmosphere, bringing star out beautifully and making poor situations effective
PHOTOGRAPHY	Decidedly effective and artistic
LIGHTINGS	Excellent; many fine spotlight close-ups
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STAR	Truly beautiful; lifted situations by sincerity
SUPPORT	Acceptable
EXTERIORS	Some fine night stuff; generally good
INTERIORS	Distinctive; well lighted
DETAIL	Very good
TIME	Fifty-four minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY the Lasky Company and Mae Murray can be glad that Robert Leonard is making Paramount pictures. If Lasky will keep Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard together, we should get some real stuff in the future, particularly if they will provide a few good stories.

The story of this offering was decidedly poor, since it was made up of a lot of painfully convenient and unconvincing incidents which all led up to one good thought—that being the fact that an innocent girl might be taken into a city night court, where the busy judge dispenses judgment too hurriedly in most cases, with the result that, although she be freed on a suspended sentence, she would be placed "on record" in the books, with her measurements and fingerprints taken just as if she were a murderess.

In this story, Miss Murray as a country girl who wanted to win her way in the city, conveniently found an advertisement in the newspaper for a secretary, with the result that she was immediately engaged, despite the presence of several other girls, only to find that the son of the lady was an aviator who had fallen near her home in the country, some time before. When she helped rescue this aviator, he had been stunned by the fall and rather badly hurt, and yet, although this was some time before, he recognized Miss Murray immediately when he saw her in his home.

There were many other similarly convenient twists to the plot which led up to the situation where the willun, in order to get the "poipers" concerning an aeroplane invention, threatened Miss Murray with exposure as having been placed "on record" for innocently accosting him on the street one night.

Of course, Miss Murray refused to help the willun, and so he exposed her while the assembled characters were conveniently visiting the aforementioned night court. Then we had the very same cop who had made the "arrest" obligingly present, so that he could testify that the willun was the man who had been accosted, and the judge decided to obliterate the record against Miss Murray.

Director Leonard is deserving of unusual credit for having made this a very entertaining production which will hold the interest and please generally. He has given us the same effective close-ups which made "The Plow-Girl" good entertainment despite the poor story, and he has given Miss Murray's scenes a touch of sincerity which made them hold despite the fact that the construction was very artificial.

The offering was artistic and distinctive, and the handling of the night court scenes gave it a somewhat different touch. Surely many of Miss Murray's close-ups were truly beautiful.

The supporting cast were really only a frame for the star, there being little registered to make any of them stand out.

In the cast were Henry Borrows, Louis Morrison, Tom Forman, Charlie Ogle, Gertrude Maitland and Bliss Chevalier.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can figure this as an offering which will please generally despite the weak spots of the story. It moves rapidly, has a number of situations which are good because of the handling, and Miss Murray is a little star who is going to grow in popularity at a surprising rate if you will but give her half a chance.

I would go to this and plug Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard strong, figuring on the cumulative value of advertising this director and star together, for the benefit to be secured not only on this, but on future productions.

In order to arouse interest, I would centre advertising upon the one point of the story by a line of this sort: "Do you know that YOU might be placed 'on record' at Police Headquarters although you were innocent? Is the system wrong? See Mae Murray in 'On Record.'"

You might centre the attention on this situation by a line something like this: "Are the night courts of the city bad because they work too speedily? This is a big question! See Mae Murray in 'On Record.'"

In talking about this I would be careful about promising that the story is big, and it would be well to centre the attention by your recommendations upon the distinctive artistic lightings provided by the director and the sincere characterization and beauty of the little star.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from preceding page.)

Claire Whitney had a small part as the wife, and although there was little for Miss Whitney to do, she did the little well.

In the supporting cast were Eric Mayne, Alice Gale, W. W. Black, John Mackin and Frank Goldsmith.

The Box Office Angle

Because of the fact that Valeska Suratt has had some pretty bad productions on the Fox program, there is a question as to whether this will pull you anything.

The one possible box office angle is the name, which suggests weird clothes, and you can guarantee that sh wears them. You can safely say that this is the bes Suratt production since "The Soul of Broadway," an they will be unable to dispute your word. The safes thing to do, however, would be to plainly say that it i a vampire story with "The New York Peacock" showin all of her glorious wardrobe during the course of the si reels.

Harry Hilliard may pull you a little, and Claire Whi ney has many friends.

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 1917. NO. 10 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1525	Triangle	74.1	67.0	317
587	Fox	72.0	69.0	81
435	Metro	71.5	67.8	42
326	Vitagraph	71.1	67.7	63
1683	Paramount	71.9	66.1	293
395	World	67.0	61.1	36

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1683	Paramount	71.9	66.1	293
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
11	The Lost Paradise	50	85
14	The Virginian	90	78	1
12	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
2	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
14	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
3	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
4	David Harum	84	74	1
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
2	The Woman	88	53	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	80	56	2
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
5	Secret Orchard	78	72
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
2	Majesty of the Law	40	45
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
7	Armstrong's Wife	80	63
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	3
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	66
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
15	The Cheat	94	78	9
7	The Reform Candidate	80	40
8	The Immigrant	72	50
9	Old Homestead	88	83	3
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
7	Temptation	76	70	1
8	The Foundling	76	76	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
4	Mice and Men	79	78	1
5	Golden Chance	77	66	1
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
5	The Spider	85	62	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	53	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	89	3
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	55	2
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
11	Poor Little Peppina	86	82	5
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	3
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	31	1
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	1
6	Saleslady	75	60	1
10	Audrey	75	75	1
6	Sowers	64	58
7	Heart of Paula	68	51	1
8	The Race	71	65
6	Eternal Grind	68	51	3
6	Love Mask	61	54	2
7	Molly Make-Believe	90	88	1
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
10	Heart of Nora Flynn	69	56	4
6	Moment Before	50	63	1
8	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	41
13	Maria Rosa	82	88	4
11	Alien Souls	68	66	1
11	Fued Girl	61	51
15	Pasquale	78	52	1

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
5 Doorsteps	65	60	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
1 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	67	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
1 A Welsh Singer	40	40
3 Manager of the B. & A	63	70
3 Pearl of Paradise	67	68	1
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	75	25
2 Innocence of Lizette	100	85

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
14 The Count	87	84	1
9 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
7 The Rink	96	99	6
1 Easy Street	80	100	1

PATHE

123 Pathe	68.2	68.9	13
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	80	80
1 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	1
3 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
1 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
1 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	63
1 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78	1
5 Shine Girl	69	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
2 The Test	60	48
3 Saint, Devil and Woman	44	57
3 Light That Failed	69	69	1
3 Shadows and Sunshine	96	84	2
2 Prudence, the Pirate	58	73
2 Arms and the Woman	78	50	1
1 The Challenge	70	60
2 Joy and the Dragon	85	78
1 Romantic Journey	80	60
2 Her New York	80	68
1 Kick In	80	83

BLUEBIRD

193 Bluebird	62.8	63.2	17
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	85
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
1 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
5 Crippled Hand	58	69	1
1 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
5 Eye of God	64	80	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
1 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
14 Shoes	72	77	3
10 Broken Fetters	63	54	1
8 The Love Girl	63	64	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
7 Silent Battle	74	83
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
1 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
11 Saving the Family Name	80	55	1
7 Behind the Lines	59	62
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
3 The Chalice of Sorrow	72	65
3 Social Buccaneers	72	60
2 Stranger From Somewhere	68	48
2 Gloriana	75	75
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
2 Honor of Mary Blake	61	62
1 Black Orchids	90	90	1
1 Bugler of Algiers	95	65

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Jewel	83	65
1 Scandal	80	72
2 Langdon's Legacy	80	71
2 Love's Pilgrimage	73	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83	1

RED FEATHER

67 Red Feather	65.2	61.1	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
2 Beckoning Trail	88	71
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	68
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
1 Polly, Put the Kettle On	65	70
1 Fighting For Love	85	75
1 Heart Strings	65	40

GREATER VITAGRAPH

326 Vitagraph	71.1	67.7
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80
5 Juggernaut	74	77
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87
3 Crooky	70	69
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
2 The Caveman	75	57
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95
5 The Great Divide	88	75
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
3 Island of Surprise	87	85
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
8 Night Out	80	76
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
1 Writing on Wall	90	30
4 Kennedy Square	88	66
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54
3 Hero of Submarine D-2	75	70
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
6 Salvation Joan	81	56
8 God's Country and Woman	89	88
1 Love's Toll	60	80
7 Law Decides	79	68
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76
3 Lights of New York	70	78
7 The Destroyers	68	57
2 Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
4 Man Behind the Curtain	85	76
9 The Shop Girl	78	79
3 The Conflict	67	47
6 Fathers of Men	68	64
9 The Tarantula	82	73
12 Daring of Diana	62	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
10 Light at Dusk	84	71
7 The Alibi	70	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
4 Footlights of Fate	68	80
11 The Combat	83	85
4 The Kid	61	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
3 His Wife's Good Name	54	75
8 Through the Wall	78	61
12 The Chalice	73	82
8 Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67
5 Blue Envelope Mystery	59	62
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
9 Last Man	85	71
4 Devil's Prize	40	54
4 The Price of Fame	40	41
2 Dollars and the Law	48	75
4 Enemy to King	63	63
2 Rose of the South	80	65
6 Whom the Gods Destroy	62	75
1 Indiscretion	35	65
1 Man of Mystery	40	50
6 My Official Wife	91	84
1 Ninety and Nine	80	80
1 Glory of Yolanda	90	80

KEYS

94 K. E. S. E	68.5	63.5	21
1 The Bank	90	90
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
2 Thou Shalt Not Covet	78	52
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	40	40

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	3
2 Shepherd of Bargain Row	65	55
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
2 That Sort	75	37	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
6 Return of Eve	71	70	2
5 The Country God Forgot	75	65
4 Chaplin Revue	80	79
1 The Innocence of Ruth	60	81
1 At Piney Ridge	60	60
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
2 The Cossack Whip	85	27
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
1 Last Sentence	90	90
2 Truant Soul	98	73	1

SPECIAL FEATURES

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Heart of Maryland	0	40
1 The Immortal Flame	80	72
1 Her Surrender	85	70
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
5 The Christian	81	78	1
6 Birth of a Nation	100	100	5
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
11 The Common Law	89	95	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
4 The Libertine	86	91	4
1 My Country First	60	60
4 Foolish Virgin	21	49	1
6 Pride of the Clan	87	84	3
11 Less Than the Dust	67	84	4
9 War Brides	73	66	7
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
3 Civilization	60	67	1
2 Cabiria	45	45
2 Marvelous Maciste	85	55
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
5 The Iron Hand	65	46
3 Police	63	81
2 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	90	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
6 The Whirl of Life	69	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	68	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
4 Little Girl Next Door	75	95	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
6 Where Are My Children?	86	91	4
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
11 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	78	58	2
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1
1 Whoso Taketh A Wife	90	90
1 Lash of Destiny	80	50

SERIALS

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Patria	90	95
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	85
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	75	75
9 Iron Claw	92	91
3 Diamond Runners	84	82
5 Shielding Shadow	90	89
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
5 Scarlet Runner	67	64
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	45

Wid's is the only real service in film world, and it

Wants you, every one to send the result of

Your own theatre on all features, to make the Reports for all the exhibitors in the country.

DELIGHTFULLY HUMAN AUDIENCE BITS. BEST PICKFORD EVER

Mary Pickford in

THE POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL

Pickford—Artcraft

DIRECTOR	Maurice Tourneur
AUTHOR	Eleanor Gates
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMEN	John v. d. Broek and Lucien Andriot
SCENIC SETS BY	Ben Carre
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally human; plenty of great kid stuff
STORY	Excellent fundamental idea; many fine little bits added
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere and registered human note throughout; kept action centered about star
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some decidedly effective; generally excellent
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STAR	Delightful
SUPPORT	Very good types; some great kids
EXTERIORS	Not many, but fitted
INTERIORS	Distinctive; classy
DETAIL	Excellent; dream stuff very well handled
TIME	Seventy-five minutes (6 parts)

CERTAINLY this is better than either of Miss Pickford's previous Artcraft productions, and I am inclined to believe that it will be generally considered the best thing she has ever done.

The story is centered entirely about the little star, and it has a splendid fundamental idea for popular appeal, since it will register with both the highbrow and lowbrow, the rich and the poor. The main thread of the story has been adapted from the play, with a number of cute incidents added in order to give more of the kid stuff to the production. Every added incident seems to help the offering on the screen, because they all register perfectly.

Miss Pickford appears as a child of eleven, who must stay in her big home guarded by many servants and teachers, forsaken by her mother, who is busy with society, and by a father absorbed in his business. The pathetic contrast between this poor little rich girl and the happy poor children of the neighborhood provides the theme of the story.

The drama develops from a maid giving the little girl an overdose of a drug in order to be able to go to the theatre, with the result that she has a dream in which she sees all of those about her as they really are. In her dream she sees the governess as a serpent, the maid as a two-faced thing, her father as a man chained to a money-making machine, the mother as having a "social bee in her bonnet," etc., etc. The left out one important group, however, that being the gossips, "They say."

The parents, when they found the child dangerously ill, gave up everything, in the fight for her life, and the father, who was facing a financial crisis in Wall Street, decided that he'd let the crash come instead of borrowing more money to hold it off, since there would still be enough left for them all to go to the old home in the country and enjoy the really worth-while things in life.

The greater part of this production is given up to Miss Pickford, first, in planting her position in the big household, and afterward showing several adventures with kids who lived in the neighborhood. There is a lot of excellent audience stuff in these kid incidents, and I believe that all of these bits will register anywhere.

There is ample opportunity for Little Mary to do her own individual bits of cute business, and certainly those who love her will be delighted with the scenario, which provides her with so many good moments.

The supporting cast was very well chosen as to type, and while none of the characters stand out particularly, they all fit in to make a perfect frame for the charming star.

Maxine Hicks, the kiddie who did the added part of Susie May Squoggs, was exceptionally good. This youngster will stand out.

The general atmosphere was decidedly distinctive, with all the sets carefully constructed and artistically furnished. The sets used in the dream scenes were particularly good.

While there was not an exceptional amount of vignetting or unusual camera effects, the photography throughout was very pleasing, it having a quality that was a delight to the eye, because of the depth and clearness of almost every scene. The scenes where tricklightings were used were handled very effectively.

Considering the fact that this was a decidedly difficult play to transfer to the screen, because of the unusual amount of dream stuff used in the play, I believe that considerable credit is due for the scenario construction, particularly for the incidents which have been added, because of the nice manner in which they have been blended into the other action. To any one who saw the play, this will register as a perfect adaptation, since it carries the main thought, with additional bits which are delightfully human but still do not conflict with the main thought.

In the cast were Charles Wellesley, Emile La Croix, Madeline Traverse, Marcia Harris, Frank Andrews, Herbert Prior and Gladys Fairbanks.

The Box Office Angle

You certainly can go strong on this one!

A Pickford production is generally good for money even though the offering itself isn't "all there." But in this case you can safely promise that it is a delightful production of a famous play, which has a real underlying thought, with scores of exceptionally human comedy bits to make it entertaining.

I believe that you will be entirely safe in calling this "The Best Pickford Production Ever Made." She has never had as pretentious an effort as this which has carried as big an underlying thought and as much opportunity for her to register her delightful audience tricks with a lot of cute and funny kids to help out the situations.

In advertising this, I would make a particular play upon the name, "The Poor Little Rich Girl"—possibly calling for a vote as to which they would rather be—a poor little rich girl, or a rich little poor girl. You might offer a prize for the best two-hundred-word argument on this subject taken from either viewpoint, the prize to be awarded by your superintendent of schools or some other such worthy.

The title itself, particularly if you tied it up with the "rich little poor girl" thought, gives an excellent suggestion as to what the play is about, and most people have heard of this play and will be more than anxious to see Miss Pickford in the part.

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

WEAZENED GRAYBEARD PLOT VERY ARTISTICALY DONE

Blanche Sweet in

THOSE WITHOUT SIN

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHOR	Harvey Thew
SCENARIO BY	George D. Proctor and Thos. Geraghty
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Distinctive atmosphere fails to save very ancient plot
STORY	Ye Olde Civil War junk
DIRECTION	Distinctive, artistic atmosphere and good action, but situations so old are decrepit
PHOTOGRAPHY	Exceptionally good
LIGHTINGS	Distinctive; artistic; light effects all the way
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Quite pleasing; not her fault it misses
SUPPORT	Good types
EXTERIORS	Some exceptionally artistic, with splendid composition
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

MERCY me! Fort Sumter has been fired on again! Our old sure-fire title that marks all of the Civil War junk looms up once more.

I had an idea that they'd forgotten this junk and learned to steer clear of the good old stand-by where the girl carries the dispatches and is trapped in her room by the Northern colonel, so that the Southern hero might rescue her.

To prove that they could use all the old stuff, they started this off with father in need of money taking help from the willun, who then tried to force his attentions upon daughter, with the result that friends of the family tarred and feathered the gentleman and sent him on his way.

Of course, this particular Northern gentleman who had been tarred and feathered by the young lady's friends had to be the officer who would arrive on the scene at the psychological moment to take possession of her home and hold her family prisoners until she agreed to remain with him.

They've got considerable action in the last reel of this, but it will have died a horrible death in the minds of the fans long before that last reel comes.

Certainly it isn't the fault of Director Neilan or Miss Sweet that this misses fire, and the blame must rest solidly upon the shoulders of the scenario department. Despite all of the wonderful light effects which Mr. Neilan has given us, and all the rather intelligent action of the supporting cast gathered about Miss Sweet, who has some good individual scenes, this threadbare plot can't register.

Most every one had agreed that this had been buried with respect in a burglar-proof vault some years ago. It has been done to death with every conceivable angle used and in a varied assortment of lengths. I don't mean to say that no Civil War plot would be acceptable, but every fan knows this one backwards, and it is time to call a halt on it.

The fact that this comes from salaried members of the scenario department of the Lasky organization, seems to prove that there's a screw loose somewhere. The market must be awfully bad if they're willing to spend good money producing this sort of a story, or else proper effort isn't being made to secure real material. It is inconceivable to me that real stories can't be found. I'm satisfied that they can be had if an intelligent effort is made to secure them. Of course, to buy a good story one must first know a story when they see it, and from recent productions O. K.'d by the Lasky department, it would seem that they are quite wobbly on this point.

Director Neilan has proven his ability to get effective action from artistic atmosphere, and I sincerely hope that he will be given some stories to work with.

In the supporting cast were Dot Abril, Tom Forman, C. H. Goldert, James Neill, Little Billy Jacobs, Edna Wilson, Charles Ogle, Mabel Van Buren, George Beranger and Guy Oliver.

The Box Office Angle

You can safely say that this is an exceptionally artistic production of a Civil War romance.

If you are running Paramount regularly, I'd say that this has a fair chance of getting by and being considered acceptable by the non-critical fan because of the artistic lightings. I wouldn't run it for a week, by any means.

Of course, if your fans are "sharks" on stories—and I guess most fans are,—then they'll undoubtedly put up a howl on this one. In some sections, Miss Sweet is a very good drawing card, and in others she fails to stir a ripple. You know your own conditions on that score.

The fact that Marshall Neilan directed "The Prince Chap" for Selig is a good thing to refer to in case you have played it. I wouldn't say much about the story, because it'll sound familiar.

IMPOSSIBLE SITUATIONS HELPED BY STAR AND BIG SCENE

Alice Brady in

THE DANCER'S PERIL

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Travers Vale
AUTHOR	Harriet Morris
CAMERAMAN	Max Schneider
AS A WHOLE	Surface "meller" with impossible central thought; never convinces
STORY	Melo, with star playing mother and daughter unnoticed
DIRECTION	Spent money, but didn't get results; "doubles" well timed, but situations impossible
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; others ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Excellent "doubles," and generally good
STAR	Not enough distinction between characters, but appeared beautiful in some close-ups
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not distinctive
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Some quite elaborate, others just good
DETAIL	Generally unconvincing
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I CANNOT conceive of a prominent producer presenting a story in which a star appears in the two characters of mother and daughter, with practically no make-up to suggest a difference in age and with the very unfortunate situation of having the unmistakable likeness between the characters go unnoticed through many situations, even up to the point where the mother kills a man to save the daughter, whereupon the daughter turns and says: "Why did you do this?" with the answer: "Because I am your mother." Truly, it's time to call for help!

Certainly the timing of the double exposure was good, and the cutting in of scenes where "doubles" figured was carefully handled, but such mechanics are all to no avail if the situations are apparently impossible and unconvincing. Surely there was not enough difference in Miss Brady's appearance in the two characters to justify anyone glancing at the two persons without immediately noticing the similarity of features.

Aside from this terrible error in judgment, this offering is just a surface melodrama laid in Russia, and moves along with the usual number of attempts to ruin the girl, with a kidnapping thrown in, and a murder to keep the willun from carrying out his wicked wiles.

They had a theatre set which was fairly impressive and showed what was supposed to be the Russian Imperial Ballet, with Miss Brady as the premier danseuse. This was all right but was hardly worth the money spent on it.

In order to do something truly wild-eyed, they pulled a kidnapping during this theatrical performance, two lone thugs putting the electrician out of commission and carrying away the star of the performance while the lights were out. Nick Carter in his palmiest days could have thought of no more daring deed than this.

Alice Brady is given a number of close-ups where she is lighted to splendid advantage, and she wears some very good gowns. The whole thing is interesting, if considered purely from the viewpoint of watching the wheels go 'round, but certainly it never registers as drama, nor does it seem human or convincing.

Montagu Love plays most of the picture as a roue who is about worn out, and consequently lacks the power he is accustomed to give to his emotional scenes.

Harry Benham, as the young hero, who proved to be the daughter's "tried-and-true," registered what he had to do very satisfactorily, although he had very little to do. Harry is a good-looking chap and helps some of the scenes by his presence.

In the supporting cast were Philip Hahn, Auguste Burmeister, Louis Grisel, Jack Drumier, Alexis Kosloff, Sidney D'Albrook and Johnny Hines.

The Box Office Angle

If you want to play this and take a chance on dodging those who will criticize the double-characterization flaws, there is an opportunity to make a noise about the offering because of the fact that Miss Brady does the Russian dance stuff. I believe that her name will pull some business at the box office.

The name of Alexis Kosloff, well-known Russian dancer, gives you an opportunity to register some interesting press stuff concerning this offering.

I'd be very careful, however, if you are in the habit of being truthful with your patrons, in not promising very much regarding the specific merits of the offering. Dwell rather upon the Russian Ballet thought and slide easily over the strength of the story.

MODERATELY INTERESTING AVERAGE PROGRAM RELEASE

Walter Hitchcock and Anna Q. Nilsson in

THE MORAL CODE

Erbograph—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Ashley Miller
AUTHOR	Ashley Miller
CAMERAMAN	Mr. Robinson
AS A WHOLE	Good program drama
STORY	Had human thought; got "melo" toward end
DIRECTION	Gave even development; held interest
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good, but varied at times
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; some just fair
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	Personalities helped dramatic moments
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some very good; some ordinary
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERED as an average program release, this offering measures up very well.

The story is based on the strength of the personal code of morality of a man who married a girl who had been living with his no-account nephew when the nephew stole money and ran away.

After the loveless marriage, which was a union in name only, the husband fell in love with his secretary, and while they both came to a realization of their love, they held themselves in check because of the conventions.

Finally the no-account nephew returned, and the husband found him preparing to run away with his wife. They eventually registered the fact that she would be divorced, so that the husband and the secretary could finally be re-united.

Walter Hitchcock, in the part of the man with the personal code of morality, and Anna Q. Nilsson, as the secretary, had a number of dramatic scenes which they handled rather well.

Florence Hamilton, as the girl who married Mr. Hitchcock after having tried to secure money from him because his brother had taken advantage of her innocence (?), was very good until she hit some dramatic moments. In these she sort of "flivvered."

Richard Barthelmess, as the young nephew, was a good type, but failed to meet requirements in one or two tense moments.

The other members of the cast were satisfactory.

The Box Office Angle

Figuring this on the basis of average program productions, I would say that you can get this over without any serious worry as to whether or not it will be accepted. It isn't a great picture, but is quite satisfactory and will undoubedly be accepted generally as a satisfactory story that holds the interest right well.

The offering has no exceptional advertising angles, because the one situation where the man marries his nephew's sweetheart to sustain the family honor, is injured a bit by the later development wherein he takes the girl he loves, forcing the nephew to go away with his wife.

Miss Nilsson has appeared in a number of features and is rather favorably known, and Mr. Hitchcock has had prominent parts in at least a half-dozen big productions recently. By mentioning those in which the two have appeared at your theatre you should be able to pull some business.

PAINFULLY ANCIENT MISTRESS AS MAID PLOT FAIRLY DONE

Marie Doro in

CASTLES FOR TWO

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Frank Reicher
AUTHORS	Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun
CAMERAMAN	Dent Gilbert
AS A WHOLE	Very ancient idea just fairly well done
STORY	Old "mistress become maid to win hero" junk
DIRECTION	Failed to lift offering; some characters badly overdrawn
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Pretty; cute at times
SUPPORT	Acceptable; several awful Irish make-ups
EXTERIORS	Some very good
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good and poor
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

HEAVEN help Paramount if they keep on handing out these old plots!

Any film fan will groan before the first reel of this is over, because they'll immediately recognize the time-honored situation of the hero and heroine who pretended to be what they weren't, and consequently fell in love, while their friends plotted that they should marry in their proper relationship.

Of course, the mistress, posing as a maid, hated the landlord, whom she was supposed to wed, and the landlord, meeting the maid under an assumed name, told how he hated the American heiress.

Most school kids will be able to diagram this before it's very well started.

Marie Doro, as the American heiress who changed places with her companion and served as a maid, helped the action somewhat because of her rather appealing personality, and Elliott Dexter was quite satisfactory as the Irish landlord hero, but the offering simply dragged along without anything to justify its being presented as a five-reel feature.

We had some double-exposure stuff showing fairies that were visible to Miss Doro, but that was not presented in a sufficiently distinctive manner to make it exceptional.

The scenes were laid in Ireland of to-day, but they showed a number of Irish peasants in costumes such as might have been worn in Robert Emmett's day, but not now. This point alone will cause many to marvel at the failure of film producers to secure correct atmosphere.

In the supporting cast were Mayme Kelso, Jane Wolff, Harriet Sorenson, Lillian Leighton, Julia Jackson, Horace B. Carpenter, Billy Elmer and Marie Mills.

Some of the titles were so bad that they were funny, as, for instance, this: "I'm going for a walk, mother—I think I have a touch of indigestion." It was all right for him to take a walk, since the scenarioist wanted him to go out and meet the shero, but why wish the indigestion thought on us?

In another place Miss Doro, as the maid, asked Mr. Dexter to call on her in the servants' quarters, and lo and behold—the big boob showed up in evening dress! Can you beat it?

They named this "Castles For Two," and so I presume they thought it necessary to show at least one castle. Well, they did—and it was a bird! It was a miniature that was truly funny.

The Box Office Angle

If Marie Doro gets money for you, this is a passable, inconsequential program offering that might get by if you're playing Paramount for one night. I certainly would not use it for a week if there is any way to dodge it, because, to my mind, intelligent patrons feel a bit antagonistic when this old, old story is presented and padded out into five-reel length.

There are a few scenes in this that are rather good, and some of the exteriors are what might be called artistic, but I believe I'd dodge it if possible.

Maybe if you fellers would all get together and make it plain to the Paramount people, by an avalanche of letters, that the stories they're using are impossible and a crime, you might get some action. The only real weak spot in the organization seems to be in the scenario department.

Address
Van Dyke
Studio,
939
8th Ave.
Columbus
9630

JUMBLED MELO OF IMPOSSIBLE PLOT POORLY ACTED

Louise Lovely in

THE GIFT GIRL

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Rupert Julian
AUTHOR	H. R. Durant
SCENARIO BY	Elliott J. Clawson
CAMERAMAN	Stephen Rounds
AS A WHOLE	Impossible story overacted; bad enough to be funny at times
STORY	Unconvincing; impossible situations
DIRECTION	Permitted overplaying and missed fire repeatedly
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Attempts to be cute pitiful
SUPPORT	Bady overplayed; quite actory
EXTERIORS	Generally very good
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Many bad spots
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THIS is a bad baby, because it's an impossible story, poorly played by a cast entirely lackin personalities.

The plot deals with a situation where the daughter of an African chief escaped to France, because her father planned that she marry a fat friend. Her purse was immediately stolen, and then the young hero's father conveniently ran her down in an automobile and was quite struck with her personality—why, I can't figure.

We then had the very "Frenchy" situation of father sending this African innocent to his son, a wild young thing at college, as a "companion," the avowed purpose being to "keep him from the mistakes of his father." If this had been carried through as intended, the censors would have stopped it—and carried through as it is on the screen it becomes a joke, because it isn't real.

The African lover, who had assisted the shero to escape, now loomed up as the willun trying to take her away from the young hero, and we had a grand battle between the beturbaned followers of the willunous lover, who kidnapped the shero and the student friends of the young hero.

The finish was a clutch between the young hero and the "goil."

Everyone "acted all over the place" in this, particularly those who were trying to be "French."

Miss Lovely was given many close-ups, and her attempts to pout and be cute were painfully forced.

The photography was excellent. That about let's it out.

In the supporting cast were Wadsworth Harris, Rupert Julian, Frederick Montague, Winter Hall and Rex Roselli.

The Box Office Angle

Since the standard of program releases is so poor at the present moment, this can be considered one that might possibly be acceptable where audiences have become hardened to the repeated viewing of junk.

If you are trying to give your patrons offerings which will register as human, worth-while productions, I'd surely dodge this! If you have an idea that your fans are willing to make allowances for impossible stuff in order to see a certain amount of surface action, then you may be able to sneak this one by, although it'll certainly register as funny in many places with any of your regulars who know what real pictures ought to be.

Miss Lovely lacks the essential personality to make her a favorite, and I can't figure her as a drawing card. I wouldn't consider this a good box office value unless you're willing to let your patrons howl after they see it.

You might take a chance on something like this: "What would you do if you were in college and your father sent you a young African beauty to be your companion? See 'The Gift Girl.'"

With the present prospects of censor trouble, however, I'd advise you to stay away from such advertising, because the story doesn't carry out the apparent original intentions.

AUTHORITY AND POISE OF STAR HELPS THIS, BUT ENDS WILD

H. B. Warner in

WRATH

McClure—Seven Sins—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Theodore Marston
SCENARIO BY	McClure scenario staff
CAMERAMAN	Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE	Holds fairly well till finish, then becomes cheap melo
STORY	Jumped badly, with titles which didn't coincide with action
DIRECTION	Very good in spots, and very bad at times
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally acceptable; not artistic
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary; only a few good
CAMERA WORK	Some excellent "doubles," but generally just acceptable
STAR	Impressive; had poise and authority
SUPPORT	Just good
EXTERIORS	Many ordinary; one or two rather good
INTERIORS	Just acceptable
DETAIL	Very poor in spots
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH this story did seem rather jumpy, with a lot of titles which certainly didn't match the situations as screened, still there is certainly less action and more acting in the first four reels of this than in any of the previous McClure "Sins." The last reel went wild, with a lot of cheap "meller" that missed fire.

H. B. Warner played two characters—father and son—and had quite a number of double exposures which were carefully timed and quite well worked out.

The setting of this offering was in Russia, with Mr. Warner as the son of a Russian nobleman in love with an American girl, which affair was frowned upon by the father, also played by Mr. Warner.

After many years, we found Mr. Warner, as the son, meeting his daughter in America, thinking his wife dead, the wife having been told that her husband had died.

On the finish the daughter (played by Shirley Mason) and mother arrived in Russia, daughter making good with her grandfather, while mother was re-united with her hubby.

There was a wild-eyed attack on the castle, with "extras" riding back and forth and rushing into the building, but it failed utterly to impress. In one scene the "extras" stood in a small room and shot at the floor in a manner which was truly funny.

All of this was fairly interesting, but it was just surface action. It never convinced or seemed human.

In the supporting cast were George LeGuere, Edith Halley, Charles Wellesley, Theodore Talbott, George Arvine and John Nicholson.

The Box Office Angle

You undoubtedly know by now what you can do with the McClure stuff. I think Mr. Warner is the best star they've had in their list, and while this is not what could be called an exceptional feature by any manner of means, it is still a little more intelligently done than the others, despite the fact that there are still some very serious jumps and inconsistent titles in the offering as it stands.

If you have been able to play the other McClure "Sins" and get by with them, you can, of course use this one.

While I think of it, announcement has been made that the seventh of the "Sins" is to be in seven reels, with all of the stars who have appeared in the series acting in this one feature.

OLD SCHOOL DIRECTION MAKES THIS SLOW AND THEATRIC

Frederick Warde in

THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD

Thanhouser—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Ernest Warde
AUTHOR	Oliver Goldsmith
SCENARIO BY	Emmett Mixx
CAMERAMAN	William Zollinger
AS A WHOLE	Mechanical, theatric, old-school production
STORY	May register with those who know it
DIRECTION	Quite crude technically
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Very bad; entirely too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Poor angles and not enough of them
STAR	May please those who don't know picture possibilities
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Some well-chosen, but not photographed to advantage
INTERIORS	Camera angles made them ordinary
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

IT is probably a safe bet to use this for one night because of the fact that the title is so very very well known. You can undoubtedly pull some school business for your matinee, but certainly I wouldn't promise that it is an excellent production, nor would I make any specific statements as to the work of Mr. Warde as the Vicar.

The direction is decidedly theatric and very poor technically, as considered by standards of to-day. Four years ago it would have been a good production. The groupings are very bad, with entirely too much foreground in almost every scene, and the characters are always coming down to a ten or fifteen foot line to stand in a row before the camera. Either the director didn't know how to make use of camera angles, or he had a very lazy cameraman, because he repeatedly played long scenes straight through, at from ten to twenty feet foreground without shifting the camera a foot. The players were rather mechanical, and the entire action had a theatric touch.

You must figure this offering however, as one which may seem very good to the special clientele which will probably turn out for this sort of a subject. Those who will care particularly about seeing "The Vicar" in films may not know that this is not technically good. They may feel that it is a bit tiresome in spots and rather slow, but they won't know why. Those who profess to the "highbrow" stuff will probably feel that they should like this whether they really do or not, and so you may not have any complaint from them. Your regulars will probably think it is pretty poor.

The story, as developed on the screen, is rather obvious, since every one knows from the very first that the mysterious friend of the Vicar is the uncle of the man at present in charge of the estate, so it is only a question of time until the villainous nephew is exposed. There is a suggestion of the thought that parents should not guard and confine their children so closely as to cause them to rebel, but, really, considered from the plot basis for a picture, there's nothing much to "The Vicar."

In accordance with the other old-school things done, we have one scene where the Vicar's house burns down, and they give us quite a bit of footage showing the final burning of the home, for no apparent reason other than to prove that they actually do burn up this set. The scene is held on the screen until the walls topple over. In the "old days" this was considered a "thrill," or a "punch," but such things are decidedly unwelcome to-day.

Gladys Leslie, the youngest of the Vicar's daughters, was quite a pretty youngster, and she screened particularly well. Kathryn Adams was a good type as the older sister, and the other members of the cast fitted acceptably, although their playing had a little too much of the theatric touch.

In the cast were Boyd Marshall, Carey Hastings, Thomas C. Curran, Robert Vaughn and William Burke, Jr.

The Box Office Angle

Figuring this as a production to play on a bad night when you can possibly pull in people who are not regulars, with the additional chance of a good matinee from the school kids, I'd say that it is a safe booking. I surely would not consider this an offering worthy of presenting where you must please an audience of mixed ideas regarding stories, who have a real insight into present-day possibilities of screen direction. They would think this slow, theatric and rather tiresome.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

OLD PLOT IDEA HELPED BY PERSONALITY OF STAR

Mabel Taliaferro in

THE BARRICADE

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	Edwin Carewe
AUTHOR	Hamilton Smith
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	John Arnold
AS A WHOLE	Ancient, obvious story fairly well done
STORY	Ruined-father, avenging-daughter situation
DIRECTION	Gave star's appealing personality every chance
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable; too contrasty at times
LIGHTINGS	Some good; never too uniform, but too contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Appealing; pleasing personality
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Very few
INTERIORS	Some good; some fair
DETAIL	Unconvincing at times
TIME	Seventy minutes (5 parts)

WHILE this will be accepted as comparatively interesting, it lacks real depth and and sincereity, because any audience will be twenty minutes ahead of the story all the way, with some of the wise ones picking the answer soon after it starts.

The story is that well-known situation of the ruined father, with daughter who swears vengeance and marries the man she thinks responsible for her father's ruination, in order to protect her father.

Hubby gave her a fine home and a half million in cash for a wedding present, and then she proceeded to "break" him in the market, with the usual bunch of scenes showing tickers, excited clerks and a few flashes of the Stock Exchange.

Of course, after he was "broke" she discovered that he was the man who'd really befriended father, and father's confession that he had lied brought her to hubby to ask for forgiveness, with which scene they faded out. Since wifey had been fighting her husband in Wall Street, it was presumed that while he was "broke," she had made enough for them to live on.

Clifford Bruce, as the husband, and Frank Currier, as the father, were splendid types and made excellent contrasts for the frail, appealing personality of Miss Taliaferro. Despite the fact that this never really becomes anything except fairly interesting surface action, I believe that most audiences will accept it as passable entertainment.

At times the photography was too contrasty, but, as a whole, the atmosphere was quite acceptable.

In the supporting cast were Lorna Valare, Robert Rendell, Emil Collins and Mary Doyle.

The Box Office Angle

While this is slow and unconvincing, it is fairly interesting, and I believe that it will be acceptable as a passable program release. If your fans like Miss Taliaferro, they may think this worth while, because she has considerable opportunity to do those things which she registers best. Don't make any promises, however, that this is an exceptional offering. It surely isn't. It is just an ordinary program release with a story that you never really believe .

ACCEPTABLE PROGRAM MELO WITH MESSY PLOT

Leo Delaney and Alma Hanlon in

PRIDE AND THE DEVIL

Apollo—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR	Lawrence McCloskey
CAMERAMAN	M. W. Hall
AS A WHOLE	Never grips; just surface action
STORY	Ordinary divorce melo
DIRECTION	Lacked human note; failed to make action convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Occasionally good; generally muddy; lacked definition
LIGHTINGS	Not too uniform, but often seemed too weak; close-ups well lighted
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	Helped routine situations
SUPPORT	Several good personalities, but situations didn't register
EXTERIORS	High Bridge scenes good
INTERIORS	Acceptable; all shaded in lighting
DETAIL	Several jumps and a few slips
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THE chief fault with this offering is that it is all surface stuff. It moves at a fair rate of speed and uncovers the old story of the little butterfly who felt that she was missing the good things in life because hubby would not take her to the Bohemian cabarets, with the result that she finally landed there, met a he-wampire, divorced hubby, married the "wamp" and learned that life was all wrong after she found herself in the midst of that which she had desired.

Her first hubby was a lawyer, and he proceeded to succeed, while Hubby No. 2, who was a no-account son of a wealthy man, proceeded to go into the discard.

Another he-wampire, with designs upon the wife, trapped Hubby No. 2 into a theft, which, of course, brought wifey to his rooms to return the coin. We then had wifey trapped by the willun, with Hubby No. 2 rushing in to attempt to blackmail the willun, this resulting in a fight in which hubby killed the second he-wamp, whereupon the first husband was called in to defend Hubby No. 2, and he "bawled out" the wife most beautifully at the trial.

After acquitting Hubby No. 2 by making the jury believe that the wife was at fault, Lawyer Hubby discovered that Hubby No. 2 was playing with a she-vampire. He then proceeded to chase around trying to find his poor, abused wife that had been, and, of course, she was located just as she was getting ready to jump from High Bridge. Despite the fact that there was quite a lot of snow on the ground, she had taken her coat off before considering the jump, this possibly being done so that the man who was coming up to "save" her would have plenty of time to reach her. I'd like to know why directors persist in making persons who intend committing suicide by drowning take off their coats before going to it. Of course, it is sometimes needed to make it possible for some one to find the clothes, but it's hardly consistent business.

They finished up in a hurry with the statement that the second hubby was getting a divorce, which left the way wide open for Hubby No. 1 to forgive and re-marry his one-time wife. Quite messy, thank you!

There were a lot of bad jumps in the continuity of this, with titles to cover some of the points and others not covered. Some of the titles were rather good, since an attempt was being made to suggest the psychology responsible for the actions of the characters. Unfortunately, the production was played in such a manner as to keep it all on the surface. The scenes lacked depth and sincerity, and never really convinced.

As a sample of the little things which were permitted to be wrong, we had a telegram that was printed on a blank piece of paper and pasted over a telegraph blank, and we also had a letter, supposed to be typewritten, which was very noticeably printed in such type as is only found in a print shop.

Leo Delaney, as Hubby No. 1, and Alma Hanlon, as the wife, registered rather well in some close-ups, as did Bigelow Cooper and Charles Hutchinson.

Pamela Vale, as a vampire, had looks in her favor, and she pulled all of the sinewy-vampire-stride stuff, with several lo-an'-behold gowns. In one place she nonchalantly walked over to a card game and handed her friend an ace of spades—and, while I think of it, I'd like to know how in the world they ever provide, in such situations, to keep another player from having a second ace of spades when some outsider nonchalantly slips an extra ace into the game. The attempt to give Miss Vale a foreign personality (supposed to be Spanish, I believe) by the introduction of some dialect titles, will probably bring a laugh rather than any other result. The first one of these jarred particularly.

The Box Office Angle

Considered as an ordinary program release, this will probably be acceptable where audiences ask only for action that is fairly interesting without expecting to be truly stirred by the human incidents.

I'd certainly not guarantee anything regarding the offering itself. If you feel that you can safely play this, I'd simply say that it is a story based on the divorce problem, registering the pitfalls that confront the young wife who feels that she should see life.

They've called Miss Hanlon in this, "Doris Kenyon"—which looks like a barefaced attempt to take advantage of another star's advertising value. Certainly this is all wrong, and it is something which should be curbed before it gets started.

VERY ANCIENT PLOT IDEAS HELPED BY AUDIENCE BITS

Gladys Hulette in

POTS-AND-PANS PEGGY

Thanhouser—Pathe

DIRECTOR	W. Eugene Moore
AUTHOR	Agnes C. Johnston
CAMERAMAN	George Webber
AS A WHOLE	Some audience bits help very ancient plot ideas
STORY	Maid as "countess" and "the poipers"; very ancient junk
DIRECTION	Helped somewhat by kid stuff and audience-appeal bits, but doesn't save it
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Rather pleasing youngster
SUPPORT	Some cute kids; generally acceptable
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Unconvincing
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

OH, Agnes—how could you!

Just when we were commencing to think that any time Agnes Johnston wrote a scenario it would be right good, here you come along and hand us a combination of the old junk about the maid being brought in to play the countess in an emergency, padding it out with a lot of ordinary melodrama about "the poipers." This must have been written on an off-evening, and it's going to hurt your batting average quite some.

Of course, there is a lot of cute stuff in this, here and there, with some kiddies brought into the story, and Miss Hulette working hard to register little audience-appeal bits, but the minute the situation about the Irish "countess" landed, the story went "cold." While I think of it, the "Irish countess" idea jars a bit. An Irish queen (such as Maggie Cline) maybe—but there ain't no such animal as an Irish countess in Ireland. Possibly, this is only the fault of a twelve-dollar-a-week title writer—but, then, if reputations are to be sacrificed by such, it's time for somebody to start something.

There is a thought in this regarding the maid entertaining the young man of the house in the kitchen, which was not bad, because she proved to the boy's mother that he was better off in the kitchen drinking milk than he'd be in a cabaret sipping bubble water, but it was rather slurred over and lost in the shuffle of the other action.

When the complications about "the poipers" began, the story slipped—and slipped hard. It finished with Miss Hulette reaching the precious documents with a vacuum cleaner, while the willuns sat in an adjoining room and figured bids for them, running into the millions.

They then gave us an automobile chase (which is a highly original (?) thought) for a finish.

In the supporting cast were Arthur Bauer, Wayne Arey, George Marlo and Kathryn Adams.

The Box Office Angle

It is rather a question in my mind as to what you should do with this. Gladys Hulette and Agnes Johnston have been a good combination recently, and it seems to me that you are taking rather an unfair advantage of your patrons if you bill this too strong along those lines. If you are in the habit of taking your patrons into your confidence, I'd say that this is a case where Miss Johnston has taken two rather well-known situations and placed enough human bits about them to make the offering fairly good entertainment. It is that, even though the story is bad.

If you are fearful lest your patrons might kick seriously over the plot idea, dodge this one and wait for another Hulette-Johnston 'script which may register to better advantage. You, of course, remember that Miss Hulette has appeared in "The Shine Girl," "Prudence the Pirate" and "Her New York," all by Miss Johnston.

You can't safely tell anything about the plot, unless you openly confess that it is quite well known, and I would depend rather upon emphasizing the presence of many little human bits if you intend to play this and hope to get them in.

ANCIENT STORY MADE FAIRLY INTERESTING BY HANDLING

Harold Lockwood and May Allison in

THE PROMISE

Yorke—Metro

DIRECTOR	Fred J. Balshofer
AUTHOR	James B. Hendryx
SCENARIO BY	Richard V. Spencer
CAMERAMAN	Tony Gaudio
AS A WHOLE	Interesting action makes old stuff acceptable
STORY	Ancient, obvious disowned-son-lumber-camp-hero plot
DIRECTION	Made offering acceptable
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; a few beautiful bits
LIGHTINGS	Some fine; some fair
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STARS	Personalities helped
SUPPORT	Quite acceptable; nothing unusual
EXTERIORS	Some fine snow bits
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient, but good in spots
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERING the fact that this is the old-time thought of the wild youth disowned by father who goes West and makes good in the lumber camp, where his sweetheart comes in the last reel in time to see him whipping the camp bully, I must say that they have done right well to make it as interesting as it is.

For additional "suspense" they've introduced an Indian girl who saved the hero's life when the willun tried to kill him in a log jam, with the result that she fell in love, so that she could rush in when the shero arrived and cause a misunderstanding in order to keep the final reel from coming to a clutch too soon.

Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison are favorites in many communities, and, even thugh the plot is one that they all know backwards, I've a hunch that the fans who like this couple will accept the ancient situations in order to see their romantic hero and shero in action in a lumber camp.

The railroad wreck was very well handled, the first crash being one of the few miniatures which gets over right well on the screen, and the scenes in the lumber camp were particularly interesting—especially those which showed the logs in the river.

For an additional "twist" they had the hero take a package which he thought contained his sweetheart's letters, when he left home, with father accusing him of having stolen bonds. Of course, on the finish we found that he had never opened this package, which he then learned contained the missing bonds, instead of shero's letters.

The action never really convinces, but it moves along at a fairly good rate of speed and is sufficiently interesting to register satisfactorily as a routine program release.

In the supporting cast were Lester Cuneo, Paul Willis, Lillian Hayward, W. H. Bainbridge, George Fisher, Leota Lorraine, John Steppling and T. H. Gibson-Gowland.

The Box Office Angle.

If you are playing Metro stuff regularly, you can get this one by as an average hero-shero romance of the lumber camp type, and I'd let it slide through without promising much one way or another, save to refer particularly to the fact that there are many interesting scenes in a Northern logging camp. I surely would not tell them the story, because—oh, boy—most any fan knows it by heart!

Of course, if you aren't playing Metro films regularly there's absolutely no reason for you to consider searching this out for a booking. It's far from being what any fan would label a very much worth-while offering.

BEAUTIFUL STAR AS TOM BOY IN TERRIBLE MELLER

Violet Mersereau in

THE BOY-GIRL

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Edwin Stevens
AUTHOR	John C. Brownell
CAMERAMAN	Lewis Ostland
AS A WHOLE	Terrible story helped a bit by star
STORY	Painfully convenient; combination of old "meller" incidents
DIRECTION	Failed to make awful plot convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just acceptable
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Distinctive type; personality helps offering at times
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not unusual
EXTERIORS	Ordinary; not distinctive
INTERIORS	Acceptable; some bad back drops
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

TO my mind, this sort of painfully convenient surface melodrama is almost an insult to the intelligence of film patrons of to-day.

This offering started off beautifully despite the presence of the boy-girl situation, because they kept the boy-girl thing well within bounds by making it apparent that the casual observer would know that Miss Mersereau was a girl even though she was dressed in boy's clothes. Unfortunately, however, as soon as they started the story proper they commenced to pull, at a rapid rate, a lot of the old-time melodrama that surely was awful.

With the heroine nonchalantly established as stenographer in the office of the hero's father by one of those "trick of fate" things, they immediately registered the office of the concern's enemies as being directly across an areaway, this having been provided so that the heroine, with the assistance of a deaf mute who was a star at lip-reading, might, by the use of field glasses, take down a conversation in the enemies' private office.

Then the heroine went on a wild chase to secure some oil lands in Oklahoma, she riding horseback to beat the willun in an automobile, with the willun having engine trouble and finally a puncture.

They made Miss Mersereau get off her horse and slyly steal some spark plugs from the mud-guard of the automobile—for what reason I can't figure, because the chauffeur promptly furnished some new spark plugs from his tool box.

After finishing this old-time junk, which, of course, resulted in the heroine arriving first and securing the coveted lands, we found the old-time misunderstood situation, with hero's sister in love with a he-vampire. The he-vampire wrote sister a note asking her to meet him at his studio. The note was conveniently tossed by sister into the arms of brother, who stood hiding (?) behind the studio palms, about three feet in the rear, and as the note was tossed, shero arrived to talk to hero's sister, so that, of course, hero thought that shero had tossed the note.

Hero then, conveniently, left the fatal note on a table so that friend shero could find it, with the result that she hastened to the studio to get sister out of the way, when, of course, hero arrived and found her with the artist, while sister was shoved into another room.

This situation hasn't been used since last week, when it was pulled in a Paramount, the most recent use beyond that being in another Paramount of a week or two before.

Of course, sister confessed in due time and everything was all right.

Miss Mersereau has features which register exceptionally well on the screen, and she is given many close-ups in this. I believe that her distinctive beauty and her enthusiastic "pep" will do much to make this seem acceptable with those who aren't inclined to see red when the old melodramatic junk looms up in the plot.

Sidney Mason, as the hero, was acceptable, but little more. The other members of the cast were satisfactory, but not particularly good. They were Floria Kingsley, Caroline Harris, Maud Cooling, Tina Marshall, Charles Mason, James O'Neil, Dean Raymond, Byron Dean and Warner P. Richmond.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd be afraid of this in any community where my patrons were particular about plots, because it is painfully convenient and ancient.

Miss Mersereau's personality may get this by with an audience which is willing to accept melodrama as it comes without worrying about whether it is convincing or original, but I wouldn't bank too much upon this because the story is a "bad boy."

The production gets away to a good start, but Director Stevens, in his direction, didn't hold the balance at an even enough level to let this register as distinctive, and in many places it seems a bit crude.

I fear that it is rather a poor title, because we've had so many boy-girl parts. That thought in itself will not strike your regulars as being particularly original.

VERY POOR MELO; NO CONNECTION WITH TITLE; BADLY EDITED

Mme. Olga Petrova in

THE SECRET OF EVE

Pop. P. & P.—Metro

DIRECTOR	Perry N. Vekroff
AUTHOR	Aaron Hoffman
SCENARIO BY	Wallace C. Clifton
CAMERAMAN	Neil Bergman
AS A WHOLE	Surface action that never convinces; ordinarily presented
STORY	Convenient; unconvincing routine situations
DIRECTION	Failed to strike human note; assembled efforts lacked construction
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; at times very contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; some very poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Dignified beauty who seemed apart from other characters
SUPPORT	Good and poor
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty; many quite ordinary
INTERIORS	Some good; some poor
DETAIL	Assembling not good
TIME	Sixty minutes (5 parts)

TO begin with, I'd like to know what Eve had to do with this? So far as I could see, there was no connection other than the fact that they wanted to show a studio Garden of Eden. Since Mme. Petrova was planted behind such a big clump of bushes that nothing was visible except her head, shoulders and ankles, in the first shot, and since she calmly walked out with a tiger skin covering her body in the second shot, I can't say that there's anything about this introductory scene that is worth while. Of course, the title gives a suggestion that the famous star might be going to appear bedecked in a fig leaf, particularly when we see one or two "stills" of her hiding behind a bush, but you mustn't go wrong on this angle. The Garden of Eden scenes are very poor.

According to my recollection as they have it "writ," Eve never wore a tiger skin—but, then, maybe the man who wrote this didn't know the real story.

These two or three Garden of Eden scenes preceded the plot as a sort of suggestion to hang the title on, and the other scenes were nothing but ordinary routine unconvincing "drammer," without any central connecting thread to tie the construction together and no real thought behind it all. The action lacked depth and sincerity and just sort of wandered along through five rather tiresome reels.

Mme. Petrova was presented as the child of a gypsy woman left with Quakers, who rebelled against the quiet life due to the heritage of unrest from her mother. She married a mill owner, who promised to show her the gay life, but she soon tired of this and walked out on him, promptly becoming "poor' in one title.

Then she started to commit suicide, but saw a blind child about to walk off a cliff just as she was getting ready to do the plunge, with the result that she saved the child and decided to devote her life to blind children.

Of course, the young hero who had been introduced as a reformer investigating her husband's mill, loomed up again on the finish, in time for a suggestion of a clutch.

The hero, played by William Hinckley, was entirely too youthful to play opposite Petrova, and he lacked the necessary suggestion of strength, poise and authority.

Arthur Hoops was again cast as the wicked mill owner, and appeared to advantage, as he always did in such parts.

In the early part of this offering we had a scene of the Quakers going to church down a roadway, and after a title saying eighteen years later, we had the Quakers coming home from the church along the very same roadway, with the shot taken from exactly the same angle. It must've been SOME long service! Of course, this would have been permissible if taken from another angle, but with the same angle used, most any one will be struck by the fact that they had been listening to the preacher for quite a long time. This and a number of other errors in the construction seemed to have been the fault of whoever assembled the offering.

Some of the women who worked alongside of Petrova had make-ups which certainly didn't register with that of the star, this detracting quite a bit from the scene.

(Continued on following page.)

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from preceding page.)

In the supporting cast were Ed. F. Roseman, Laurie Mackin, Florence Moore and George Morrell.

The Box Office Angle

This is certainly not a good picture. It is a tiresome, ordinary unconvincing surface-action "drammer" that never really gets anywhere. Nevertheless, it has been demonstrated on several occasions that Mme. Petrova's name will pull a little business, and the name of this film suggests scenes which may attract many.

I must leave it to you entirely as to how far you are willing to go in leading your patrons on when you know that they can't be pleased. Personally, I'd dodge this sort of an offering, because Petrova may have an opportunity to do some better things with Lasky, and I can't see the percentage in killing her off with ordinary films. On the other hand, she has already had enough bad ones that it may not hurt to shove one more over providing your fans aren't thoroughly convinced that her films are generally ordinary, and as a result you may not be able any longer to do business with her stuff.

Whatever you do, don't play up "The Secret of Eve" thing too strong, because, believe me—the Garden of Eden scenes are a joke!

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent | Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1917. | NO. 11 | 25 Cents a Copy | $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same percentage, we have placed the one with the higher percentage of repeats first.

Reports	Feature	Company	% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeats
6	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith Spec.	100	100	5
5	The Floorwalker	Chap.-Mut.	97	100	2
7	The Rink	Chap.-Mut.	96	99	6
7	Snow White	Paramount	99	96	4
7	The Matrimaniac	Triangle	96	95	4
5	The Goose Girl	Paramount	95	95	4
34	Hulda From Holland	Paramount	95	95	23
8	Miss George Washington	Paramount	97	93	6
10	American Aristocracy	Triangle	96	93	6
8	The Ne'er-Do-Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
11	Bought and Paid For	World	94	94	8
5	Behind the Scenes	Chap.-Mut.	94	93	4
22	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	92	16
8	The Sin Ye Do	Triangle	99	87	6
22	Peggy	Triangle	95	91	15
10	Still Waters	Paramount	95	91	6
18	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	94	91	11
5	The Eternal City	Par. Spec.	90	95	3
7	Rags	Paramount	90	95	4
6	The Serpent	Fox	92	93	1
11	The Common Law	Selznick	89	95	4
9	The Iron Claw	Serial	92	91
17	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	93	88
10	The Devil's Double	Triangle	90	91	5
9	Mister Forty-Four	Metro	89	92	4
5	The Rise of Susan	World	87	93	5
16	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	89	91	6
5	Destruction	Fox	86	94	1
9	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	93	86	5
5	Shielding Shadow	Serial	90	89
5	Graustark	K-E-S-E	88	90	4
7	Molly Make-Believe	Paramount	90	88	5
12	The Habit of Happiness	Triangle	92	86	4
8	God's Country and Woman	Vitagraph	89	88	4
13	Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	91	86	6
6	Where Are My Children?	Univ. Spec.	86	91	2
7	Prince and the Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
8	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	89	88	2
6	My Official Wife	Vitagraph	91	86	3
19	East Lynne	Fox	88	87	9
23	Little Lady Eileen	Paramount	86	89	9
5	Green Stockings	Vitagraph	87	88	2
12	Battle Cry of Peace	Vitagraph	95	80	4
22	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	80	7
21	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	16
21	Reggie Mixes In	Triangle	92	81	10
10	Fifty-Fifty	Triangle	90	83	4
26	Flirting With Fate	Triangle	88	85	10
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
15	The Cheat	Paramount	94	78	9
9	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	86	86	4
14	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	87	85	5
15	The Good Bad-Man	Triangle	91	84	4
13	Her Double Life	Fox	84	88	3
14	The Count	Chap.-Mut.	87	84	8
18	Home	Triangle	91	80	9
6	The Pride of the Clan	Artcraft	87	84	3
9	The Old Homestead	Paramount	88	83	6
11	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	84	87	4
16	The Aryan	Triangle	85	86	6
8	The Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	3
12	Plain Jane	Triangle	89	81	3
20	Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	83	87	3
16	The Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	81	8
11	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	86	82	5
6	Bella Donna	Paramount	91	77	3
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	1
8	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	78	1
11	The Combat	Vitagraph	83	85	1
7	Undine	Bluebird	80	87	3
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	Paramount	82	85	1
7	Island of Regeneration	Vitagraph	85	81	4
6	Man and His Soul	Metro	83	83	2
16	Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	84	82	2
11	Carmen	Paramount	82	83	3
9	Seventeen	Paramount	90	76	1
17	His Picture in the Papers	Triangle	89	76	5
7	Wild Flower	Paramount	88	76	4
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	Paramount	88	76	2
5	What'll People Say?	Metro	80	84
5	The Great Divide	Vitagraph	88	75	2
6	Excuse Me!	Pathe	90	73	2
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	Paramount	74	89	3
13	Martha's Vindication	Triangle	86	77	2
7	Helene of the North	Paramount	85	78	1
15	Stepping Stones	Triangle	87	76	2
14	The River of Romance	Metro	88	74	7
6	Madame X	Pathe	74	91	3
13	Maria Rosa	Paramount	82	80	4
18	The Social Secretary	Triangle	90	72	7
5	Alice in Wonderland	State Rts.	76	86	1
5	Kindling	Paramount	80	82
5	Soul Market	Metro	81	77	2
5	The Soul of Broadway	Fox	83	78	1
5	Chimmie Fadden	Paramount	90	71
7	Gentleman from Indiana	Paramount	85	76
5	The Gamble in Souls	Triangle	83	77	2
5	The Man From Mexico	Paramount	90	70	2
14	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	85	75	3
5	Camille	World	83	77	1
16	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	78	3
8	The Wall Between	Metro	78	82	1

No. of Features With 5 Reports	Company	Honor Features
32	World	3
44	Metro	7
118	Triangle	28
46	Fox	10
6	Chaplin-Mutual	4
9	Pathe	3
18	Bluebird	1
134	Paramount	29
29	Vitagraph	8
3	K. E. S. E.	1
2	Universal Special	1
1	Paramount Special	1
2	Artcraft	1
2	Selznick	1
1	Griffith	1
4	Serials	2

This Is Your Fight---Get Busy!

I have had a lot of letters from big men on the suggestion which I made in reference to the program releasing companies re-issuing the best of their old films instead of a lot of junk during three months this summer.

Big exhibitors think it's great. Men who have tried out the re-issue thing have found that they have made more money on good "repeats" than they did on poor new stuff.

Now, the important thing is that you live wires must fight this battle to a finish by sending in your viewpoint on the subject to the producers.

These men who sit in the executive chairs in New York have a very hazy notion as to just what the public and the exhibitors want. They depend almost entirely upon the advice given them by their crew of "Yes sir" assistants, who as a rule, are no better posted as to the real conditions than the big bosses themselves.

In a few isolated cases the executives do know what the exhibitors and the public want, but they don't intend to give it to them as long as they can get by with the present system of unloading cheap junk.

I am glad to say, however, that, with the more prominent companies, the executives are quite sincere in wanting to do what is best for the future of the industry. The trouble is they have been misguided as to their advice on what is desired.

Now, it doesn't do any good for me to raise an argument unless you fellers who are really paying out money for film rental and who actually come in contact with the public, are willing to take the time to sit down and tell the producers what they ought to be doing.

A number of prominent exhibitors have taken the trouble to do this, and have done it in emphatic terms.

I have been shown several such letters which have been received by producers, and I am reproducing on the next page a letter sent out by one of our best small-town exhibitors—a man whom I know personally to be a wealthy, conservative business man, who is trying to conduct a real theatre as it should be.

Mr. Seng took the trouble to dictate this letter and give instructions that it be forwarded to each of the executive heads of the various program releasing companies. If you want some such reform as has been suggested it is up to you to tell the men who can give it to you.

Don't think about this! Do it!

I have received several letters from producers on this reform question, and have had three of the prominent program companies express their willingness to enter into such an agreement. Two others have said that they didn't think it would be possible for them to do so, because of contracts which they held with producers, stars and directors.

I don't consider this a real excuse, and since these companies did not say that they considered the plan one which wasn't practical, I am satisfied that if sufficient pressure is brought to bear upon them in the form of letters from real exhibitors, that they can be made to see the light and understand that the business is in a critical condition and needs some such radical remedy in order to forestall the wholesale desertion of present-day film fans.

Read over Mr. Seng's letter carefully and turn back to my editorial in the issue of February 15 (Vol. III, No. 7) and then either tell me why you think the plan is wrong, or sit down and write to the producers and tell them why you think it is right.

Something should be done. It's up to you fellers to do it!

VILLAGE THEATRE COMPANY OPERATING THE VILLAGE THEATRE
1150 WILMETTE AVENUE
WILMETTE, ILL.

March 5, 1917.

Mr. William Fox,
Fox Film Corporation,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I have read with very great interest the editorial appearing in Wid's for February fifteenth. The more I think of it, the more I feel that my friend Wid has stolen my thoughts and ideas and has written them out better than I would have been able to. I subscribe, therefore, to all that he has written.

First off, I am heartily in favor of fewer and better pictures - and longer runs. Nothing would please us, and our patrons, better than to show the best of your old productions - repeats - thus enabling you, the producer, to make the better pictures which our critical patrons demand. We have been wonderfully successful with all repeats run in the past - and we have shown many of them - so would be willing to risk three months of repeats, providing we could be assured of better pictures in the future and an open market. Our manager recently called on the exchange managers of the program companies with which we have contracts, with a view of making deals whereby we would be permitted to pick our pictures, with two day runs instead of one, at an advanced price, and you know what the answer was.

We are located in a residential suburb of Chicago, conduct a high-class picture house, equal to any in the large cities, and our audience is far more critical than the average in the big towns. They know the good pictures, seem to sense them intuitively, and the result is just as Wid states - we haven't made a dollar in the three years our house has been open. The good pictures, most of which we try to contract to run two days, make money for us, but the many poor ones cut down the receipts to such an extent that we are able to just about break even. We are willing to pay a fair price, nay, a good price, for better pictures and give them longer runs, but we should be permitted to select them. The time is surely coming when this view of the exhibitor must be met, so why not heed the call before it is too late.

I sincerely regret my inability to more forcibly place my views before you, but Wid Gunning has spoken for me and for the great mass of intelligent exhibitors.

Very sincerely yours,

Frank Haug

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

IMPRESSIVE, ARTISTIC, YET TENSE AND HUMAN DRAMA

William Farnum in

A TALE OF TWO CITIES

Fox Special

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Lloyd
AUTHOR ..... Charles Dickens
SCENARIO BY ..... Frank Lloyd
CAMERAMAN ..... Billy Foster
AS A WHOLE ..... Truly impressive atmosphere and gripping drama; excellent offering STORY ..... Dramatic classic well told DIRECTION ..... Made tense moments grip despite ponderous atmosphere; kept action human PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent; truly exceptional at times
LIGHTINGS ..... Many very effective and artistic CAMERA WORK ..... Exceptionally fine; wonderful "doubles"
STAR ..... Gave forceful characterizations, although hardly type for Carton
SUPPORT ..... Many great types; all very satisfactory
EXTERIORS ..... Impressive sets that seemed real; good woodland shots
INTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere nicely
DETAIL ..... Very good, but some letter inserts too small
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes (6 parts)

CONSIDERED technically, this is certainly the best production William Farnum has ever appeared in. He has been surrounded with truly impressive atmosphere, and yet the dramatic moments hold beautifully, with any number of truly tense scenes which convince and grip.

It is a very difficult thing for a producer to present a classic in such an atmosphere as this and keep the action human. Director Lloyd has succeeded.

Because of the fact that Mr. Farnum plays two characters, it was necessary to register a good many double exposures. Some of them were taken in lightings and sets that were a true test of the cameraman's ability, and I do not remember of ever having seen a film with as many perfectly timed and photographed "doubles" as there were in this.

The production starts off with a bang, since the storming of the Bastile is the first important action. A few of the shots of the rushing mobs in this scene would have been more impressive, probably, had they been taken from a great height, as some of them were, but the effect has been very well registered, and the handling of the crowds as a whole was quite commendable.

After this stirring swing of melodramatic action, we got into the human elements of the story, and these were developed nicely. There were a few points bearing upon the relations between the various characters which could have been made more clear, for the benefit of those who are not familiar with the story, but I believe the offering has been sufficiently well done that any one can follow it without too much effort, even though they may miss one or two of the finer points—as, for instance, the relationship between the innkeeper and his sister, the girl who was the victim of [illegible] Farnum's uncle early in the story.

The scenes depicting the violence of the French Revolution should be of particular interest at this time since many thinkers feel that some such uprising may result from the present horrible conflict in Europe.

Mr. Farnum's work will delight those who consider him one of our best film heroes, and although the type for the part of Sidney Carton might have been more of the mental power rather than a man of physical dominance, still Mr. Farnum has been able to give the characterization a sufficient shading to make it register in a perfectly satisfactory manner with all, except a possible few who are close students of Dickens' work and have their own ideas as to what the type should be.

Charles Clary and Herschel Mayall made their individual parts stand out—Mr. Clary as Mr. Farnum's uncle, and Mr. Mayall as the innkeeper, who afterwards became a leader of the revolutionists.

Ralph Lewis, as the treacherous manager of Mr. Farnum's estate, who also turned to the revolutionists, handled his part effectively, and, in fact, the entire cast seemed intelligently chosen.

Jewel Carmen, as the heroine, has an appealing personality that will register with any audience.

Others in the cast were Josef Swickard, Rosita Marstini, William Clifford, Marc Robbins; Olive White, Hazel De Vere and Willard Louis.

The Box Office Angle.

I would certainly figure that this should be a big winner, because every one knows the name even if they aren't familiar with the story, and since you can safely guarantee that the production is big, impressive and tensely dramatic, it would seem to me that you should certainly do a real business with it.

William Farnum is undoubtedly a box office possibility when presented in the right sort of offering, and I can truthfully say that this is one of his biggest opportunities.

I'd make considerable fuss about the big sets and the thousands of people employed in the taking of the Bastile scenes, and I would tie up all of my advertising around the central thought—that many business men fear the possibility of some such uprising as the French Revolution if the present war doesn't terminate very soon.

You should be able to do a big matinee business by hammering on the fact that it is a classic, and you can safely appeal to both the schools and your literary societies with this offering, because you will not have to be ashamed of the production, nor will you have to make apologies for it.

VERY INTERESTING AND ENTERTAINING, BUT SO OBVIOUS WAS FUNNY

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in

ALADDIN FROM BROADWAY

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	William Wolbert
AUTHOR	Frederick Isham
SCENARIO BY	Helmer W. Bergman
CAMERAMAN	Reginald Lyons
AS A WHOLE	Interesting Oriental adventure stuff, but so convenient was funny
STORY	Very obvious; everything happened just when needed
DIRECTION	Gave rather good atmosphere and oodles of action, but didn't convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Rather ordinary; seldom distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Just good
STARS	Personalities helped carry offering
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Rather good atmosphere
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Quite acceptable, although some titles bad
TIME	Seventy-six minutes (5 parts)

AFTER this got under way, it being one of those "bet" stories with the hero wagering that he could reach the sacred city of Mecca, where the man on the other end of the wager had lost his family in years gone by, we found the action swinging into adventure melodrama with things happening at a furious rate in a most unconvincing manner, because of the painful convenience with which the various characters wandered in at the psychological moment.

The plot was quite obvious, because we all knew that this gink was going to find the long-lost daughter, before he started, and it was only a question of how many reels the willun would chase him around before we got to the final situation.

The chase in some places had twists which almost put it in a class with Keystone Komedy, but for the average man who takes his film as it comes, without worrying too much, the adventures will register as interesting and fairly good entertainment.

Miss Storey, as the daughter of the American woman who had killed herself when about to be sold into slavery, she also being the daughter of the man who made the pact with Tony Moreno, had one of the best parts of her film career. There was plenty of opportunity for her to get temperamental, fight with an old man who wanted to marry her and be loveable for the benefit of the young hero who rescued her.

Mr. Moreno was a perfect choice for the character of the modern Aladdin, and the work of the stars would have made this an offering that would have registered perfectly had the story not slipped into so many convenient plot twists.

When we found the lovers taking refuge in a tent of a passing caravan after having traveled days through the desert, and then saw the pursuing husband only half a mile behind, it looked like it was "all over." The pursuers didn't look in the tent, however, but started away, and then a gink who had a little private quarrel with friend Tony, stuck his head through the tent only to be promptly murdered by our hero.

The willunous husband then went to search for the missing victim, and we thought sure that our hero was to be captured, but lo and behold! out of the blue sky came the girl's father in an auto. The hero put the girl in the car, but refused personal assistance, since his wager had said that he should not accept help from a Christian. He then did a wild Western leap to the back of a camel and sped away into the desert, with a sandstorm covering his tracks.

Not being satisfied with this, they showed us the willunous husband helpless in the storm because of a crippled camel, with the hero handing over his camel and dividing his water to send the willun back, while he started on foot. Oh, boy!

Of course, a wandering gink on horseback found hero just as he was about to "cash in," and somehow he landed on the doorstep of the house where they were all assembled, just at the right moment, so that he could come in on the finish and say, "Ah, my sweetheart!"

The man that wrote this undoubtedly had a good idea of adventure stuff, but certainly he has no knowledge whatever of the wisdom of film fans, or he would not want to see this on the screen. Most fans will begin to laugh when everything happens so obligingly.

In the supporting cast were William Duncan, Laura Winston, George Holt and Otto Lederer.

The Box Office Angle

While this is undoubtedly a story that will not convince and it is surely open to criticism because of the convenience of the plot development, still I believe that it will register as being rather interesting and good entertainment with most fans. The atmosphere is rather good and there is enough comedy worked into the story to lighten it sufficiently that it will not be taken too seriously.

Edith Story and Antonio Moreno are a popular team, Mr. Moreno being a particular favorite when presented in such parts as this.

You might use lines like this in connection with your advertising: "Did you know that a Mohammedan can divorce his wife by saying three times, 'I divorce you,' and that he cannot remarry her unless she marries another man and is divorced by him? See 'Aladdin From Broadway.'"

You might also say: "What would you do if a Mohammedan chief feasted you and promised you much money if you would marry his divorced wife and then divorce her, so that he could marry her again, according to his religious beliefs? See what Antonio Moreno did in 'Aladdin From Broadway.'"

I would bill this as a comedy drama depicting the startling adventures of a New York fortune spender in the great Mohammedan desert. Call it an adventure story rather than a stirring bit of drama. You might even say: "Maybe you won't believe all this, but at least it will be entertaining."

Address
Van Dyke
Studio,
939
8th Ave.
Columbus
9630

ANOTHER SURE FIRE HART FILM. BILL AS SQUARE GAMBLER

William S. Hart in

THE SQUARE-DEAL MAN

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	William S. Hart
AUTHOR	J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN	Joe August
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE	Another sure-fire Hart subject
STORY	Typical Western, with Bill as "square" gambler
DIRECTION	Gave proper atmosphere and some splendid action, although had one or two slow spots
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	A few effective; generally acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Same old Bill
SUPPORT	Good kid and several fine types
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

WE get the tried-and-true Hart situations in this, with Bill started off as a "square" gambler who found that the parson wouldn't take his money because he, theoretically, was robbing women and children, with the result that from then on he refused to play with a man if he were married.

Then came the wealthy rancher who called Bill a "Tin Horn," which almost started a gun discussion and resulted in Bill playing with him until the old gink even lost his $100,000 ranch.

After winning the deed to the ranch, Bill offered it back, but the rancher called him a crook, this resulting in a few shots. The greaser willun outside the window killed the rancher in the dark, and Bill thought his aim for the gun hand had been bad and that he had done it.

Bill took it upon himself to go to the dead man's ranch and put things in shape for the daughter, who came on from Virginia. She bossed him around quite some and he stood for it, and then the greaser told her that Bill killed her father, with the result that she ordered Bill away.

The greaser started to steal all the cattle and the girl, and Bill came back to the rescue. Up to this point it had moved beautifully, but the "clutch" was prolonged through quite a bit too much film. It would have been decidedly better if the last hundred feet were cut much closer.

Mary Jane Irving, the little kiddie who was adopted by Bill, registered a lot of cute bits which helped the offering in many of the slow spots.

Mary MacIvor, as the daughter of the rancher, seemed to lack emotional strength, and failed to make much of an impression. She had very little to do, however, and will be acceptable.

The other types surrounding the star were very good. Milton Ross was presented as the preacher who wasn't afraid to say what he thought. Bill called him "Dan Gunning." We thank you, Bill.

Others in the cast were J. Frank Burke, Joseph J. Dowling, Darrell Ross, Thomas Kurihara and Charles O. Rush.

The Box Office Angle

It is generally agreed that there are only three or four men in the films today who are big drawing cards. Bill Hart is always mentioned as one of them.

This offering has enough human stuff developed in the early part of the story, with good titles and nice human bits of characterization, to make it register, and then when the action starts it is sure-fire stuff that everyone loves.

You can safely promise that they'll all like this muchly, and I think you know how good a Bill Hart production is—something which appeals to everybody. Go to it!

You might make capital of the point that, after the preacher refused to take Bill's money to help a widow and orphan, because as a gambler he was in the business of robbing widows and orphans, Bill made it a rule not to play cards with any married men.

CLASSIC PRESTIGE SAVES CONVENIENT PLOT. STAR SHINES MUCHLY

Pauline Frederick in

SAPHO

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Hugh Ford
AUTHOR	Alphonse Daudet
SCENARIO BY	Hugh Ford
CAMERAMAN	Ted Van Buren
AS A WHOLE	Interesting as display of star
STORY	Painfully convenient, with unconvincing central situation
DIRECTION	Gave star many close-ups, but all other action crude
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good straight stuff
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good; not exceptional
STAR	Looked most inviting
SUPPORT	Very actory
EXTERIORS	Some rather pleasing; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Plainly scenic sets; lacked distinctive class
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Seventy-four minutes (5 parts)

THE fact that this is a classic is a life-saver. When you talk about convenient plots, think this reaches about the limit on the angle. There is only one dramatic situation and that is entirely dependent upon the painfully convenient arrival at the secret country home of the lovers of two of Sapho's former keepers.

This production will go over most anywhere and probably cause considerable comment, for the good and sufficient reason that it presents Pauline Frederick in many near-costumes, particularly one which begins at the waist and works down without an awful lot anywhere. At least, what there is doesn't conceal the lines of the figure.

It is unfortunate that the supporting cast was allowed to "act," because they are painfully camera-conscious, giving the offering a rather serious handicap of artificiality. Pedro de Cordoba was the worst offender on this score, some of his scenes being almost funny because of his evident knowledge of the presence of camera and director.

The story as screened is based upon one situation showing us at some length Sapho's free-and-easy method of transferring her affections from one to another of three willing "wictims," we found her at a fancy dress ball in this aforementioned costume which began at the waist and started down. Here Thomas Meighan, as the poor boob from the country, met her, and she being in need of a keeper, he was led to the slaughter.

We saw this young man "fall" for the charms of the star and then take her to his apartment, where he carried her up the stairs and planted her as "his." We then had a lapse of time, and a few months later the country boob and the star were shown living in what was supposed to be a quiet, secret country home. Then two of the former keepers conveniently strolled in and they told the present keeper that his beloved one had a past. Now, this was the funny part: Friend Hero seemed terribly hurt and surprised to learn that Sapho had a past —and I want to know how he figured that this female who had been found bedecked in the lo-and-behold costume, at a fancy dress ball, willing to accompany him home for keeps without more than an hour's acquaintance, was to be considered an innocent young thing without a past? That ball costume worn by Miss Frederick sort of makes this final drama rather burlesquey.

Of course, your alibi in this instance is that "Sapho" is a classic. Unfortunately, film fans have only scant respect for some of the classics, and many may kick about this situation without making allowance for it being "Sapho."

Frank Losee, as the sculptor who was the star's first keeper, gave probably the best characterization in the supporting cast.

John Sainpolis was acceptable, but a bit inclined to "act."

Thomas Meighan certainly didn't look or act like a Frenchman, and Pedro de Cordoba was so aware of the knowledge of the guiding hand that he "mussed up" all of his scenes.

The Box Office Angle

Of course, this is a vampire story and quite filled with free-and-easy sex stuff. I imagine however, that you may get by with this without serious objection on that score because of the very useful alibi—"It is a classic."

Certainly those who like Miss Frederick will have much opportunity to see her in many close-ups, and all of the action is designed to center the attention upon her.

Most every one knows the name "Sapho,' although I am willing to gamble that a tremendous percentage of film fans know nothing about the plot itself. If anything, that is an advantage—because they'll be afraid to argue about the story, figuring that it isn't up to them to criticize such a famous book and play.

You should be able to get a lot of money with this offering, and while it is far from being a great production as to general atmosphere, it is saved by the views of the star to an extent which makes it safe to play.

Don't make any promises, however, on anything except that Miss Frederick is a beautiful and interesting Sapho.

WILD MELO SPOTS MIXED IN WITH ARTISTIC WATER STUFF

Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and George Hernandez in

MUTINY

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Lynn F. Reynolds
AUTHOR	Lynn F. Reynolds
CAMERAMAN	Clyde R. Cook
AS A WHOLE	Wild melo, with some artistic and effective lightings
STORY	"Shoot-'em-up-Dick" stuff
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere and lots of action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; some very effective bits
LIGHTINGS	Some very artistic; excellent night stuff
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STARS	Good, but action dominated
SUPPORT	Some rough types
EXTERIORS	Some fine water stuff
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Fitted atmosphere
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I CANNOT quite figure this as a good choice for the Rialto, but possibly "Roxie" wanted to shoot in a little wild melo for a change.

This starts off with seacoast characters and some good atmosphere, George Hernandez being presented in the rather human character of an old pirate who had reformed and turned to knitting as an occupation.

The offering got moving along about the third reel, however, with some wild-eyed action, and oh, boy!—it was some wild! They had fights galore on shipboard, with big roughnecks figuring as mutinous sailors, and there was a lot of effective night stuff presented as a background for the melo, the storm which was raging apparently being figured as essential to give the proper tempo to the murders which were being committed.

To show that they were willing to live up to detail, they had one scene in which a cook who had befriended the imprisoned heroine, caught the willun in her cabin, and he proceeded to carve him with a meat axe. If that wild swing of the big meat cleaver doesn't start something with an ordinary audience, then that audience is all wrong. The chances are that some women will squeal while the rest of the house laughs.

The players are all cast into the shadows by the rapid-fire action, and while their work is acceptable, it doesn't stand out.

In the supporting cast were Jack Curtis, Fred Harrington and E. J. Brady.

The Box Office Angle.

If your audiences care for wild-eyed melo with lots of action, plenty of killin's, etc., then they should like to see this story with the storm effects and the frequent physical struggles. There is considerable that is quite artistic, particularly some of the exteriors, showing shots along the coast line, and taken altogether it is an offering which ranks as a very good program release, providing it isn't too wild for your community.

In addition to the wild action, we have the story centered about the situation where the heroine has been married secretly, against her father's will, with the result that he misunderstands her statement that a baby is on the way, and consequently takes her aboard his vessel and sails about the world to avoid facing his neighbors in the old home. Led by the willun, the crew finally mutinies because they want to return home, and they get back with the willuns out of commission and the hero awaiting his wife and child.

If you want to bill this as "a story of the days when square-riggers ruled the waves," you may find that it will register quite satisfactorily, since it is at least a little bit different.

REVERSE CONSTRUCTION AND HANDLING MAKE THIS INTERESTING

Kathlyn Williams in

OUT OF THE WRECK

Morosco-Paramount

DIRECTOR	William D. Taylor
AUTHOR	Maud E. Corsan
SCENARIO BY	L. V. Jefferson
CAMERAMAN	Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE	Interesting action in artistic atmosphere makes this worth while
STORY	Made interesting by reverse construction
DIRECTION	Registered full value from material
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very distinctive and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Helped offering decidedly
STAR	Forceful personality
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Good; a few beautiful
INTERIORS	Excellent; some quite distinctive
DETAIL	Good; one little slip
TIME	Seventy-three minutes (5 parts)

BY reversing the development of this plot the author has held the interest nicely right up to the finish. The atmosphere is quite distinctive, there being some very fine sets and many artistic bits of lighting.

Miss Williams, the central figure throughout, has a personality which registers both appeal and power. She carries the situations by the sincerity of her characterization, and manages to make most of the action decidedly convincing.

The production opens with some classy scenes showing Miss Williams as the wife of a candidate for senator. Political enemies tried to "get something" on the candidate, and learned that his wife had been tried for murder in a sensational case in 'Frisco eight years before.

Confronting her in her home with this fact, they were forced to listen to her story, wherein she related in detail the circumstances attending the death of her parents, her struggle for existence and her having been trapped into a mock marriage by a drunkard, who afterwards forced her on the streets. In self-defense she had killed him when he attacked her in a drunken rage, and although tried for murder, she had been acquitted.

After the dramatic recital of her story, the political enemies agreed to keep her secret, and the picture ended with prospects of continued happiness.

In the scenes showing the brutality of the man murdered by Miss Williams, we found William Clifford, as the man, wearing a beard which didn't altogether convince, but, taken as a whole, the entire offering was very well registered, and certainly the action will be considered very interesting.

There was one little error in detail, that being the dating of a check for insurance "1906," with the bank book supposed to be ten or fifteen years later, also dated "1906." This is a little thing, but will probably be caught by some, and it should be corrected.

William Conklin, as the candidate husband, had the necessary poise and authority, and Stella Razeto, as the newspaper woman with the unkind face, carried her part very nicely except for the few moments when she overplayed a bit.

Others in the cast were William Winter Jefferson and Don Bailey.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can safely consider this a worthwhile offering. The artistic, distinctive atmosphere gives a certain "class" to the offering, and the action and story development holds the interest sufficiently well to make the offering register satisfactorily. It isn't a great film, but surely it is quite a bit better than the Paramount average has been in recent weeks.

In advertising this, I would refer particularly to the artistic lightings and classy sets, and then evolve a query based on the "unwritten law," since that figures in the action. You might ask: "Do you believe in acquittals under the 'unwritten law'?" There is also another splendid angle, such as this: "If a woman has been acquitted of murder, has she a right to happiness and the respect of her neighbors?"

I would center my advertising thought on that particular query, using it for several days before announcing the name of the film.

TWO ORDINARY SHORT PROGRAM FILMS TIED TOGETHER

featuring Cleo Madison

THE GIRL WHO LOST

and

BORDER WOLVES

Red Feather Combination

DIRECTORS	George Cochrane and George Marshall, respectively
AUTHORS	Calder Johnstone and George Marshall
SCENARIOS BY	Bess Meredyth and Carl Coolidge
AS A WHOLE	Neither offering particularly impressive
STORIES	Rather ordinary
DIRECTION	Just acceptable
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Failed to impress
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Not unusual
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty minutes (3 reels and 2 reels)

UNDOUBTEDLY this was an experiment or an expedient on the part of the producers. It was either a case of not having an available five-reel or an experiment to see if the two short subjects would be accepted.

It would seem to me that when Universal intended to try out the idea of offering two short subjects as a feature, that they would have chosen something better than the two herewith presented.

The first of these is a rather ordinary sex play, with Cleo Madison presented as the sister who trapped a young man into worshipping at her shrine in order that she might compel his father to marry her sister, who had been wronged by him.

"The Border Wolves" two-reeler was a routine "Western" with the usual amount of riding, shooting up the skyline, etc. Neither one was of sufficient depth to register very forcibly with the average audience.

In Miss Madison's story she didn't appear to particular advantage, in some scenes her make-up being painfully noticeable.

The Box Office Angle

I doubt very much if this is a good offering to present

as a feature unless you are playing short stuff regularly, and in that case I believe I would offer these as just short program releases rather than as a special feature.

It certainly seems to me to be an error to make any particular fuss about this being a special double attraction. It is nothing more than an ordinary three-reel program release and an ordinary two-reel program release put out on the same date.

IMAGINARY KINGDOM STUFF THAT MISSES FIRE

Marc MacDermott and Peggy Hyland in

INTRIGUE

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	John Robertson
AUTHOR	Maibelle Heikes Justice
SCENARIO BY	Joseph Poland
CAMERAMAN	Jules Cronjager
AS A WHOLE	Crude; theatric; unconvincing; lacked feature qualities
STORY	Painfully ordinary imaginary-kingdom stuff
DIRECTION	Rather old-school; permitted overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor; varied
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not distinctive
STARS	Ordinary; kid outshone them
SUPPORT	Very ordinary, except kid
EXTERIORS	Poorly chosen; some very "setty"
INTERIORS	Just acceptable; not well dressed
DETAIL	Some bad slips
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

POSSIBLY, good-natured audiences will accept this imaginary kingdom bromide "melleredrammer," but it seems to me that most any community will feel that it is hardly worthy of their serious consideration.

The plot is painfully unconvincing and simply consists of the old junk about the attempt to kidnap the youthful grand duke, with the usual finish where the hero and willun struggle for the possession of a sword, and then comes the duel with troops riding to the rescue. I think this stuff's all "cold."

In this particular instance Bobby Connelly was presented as the grand duke. Now, Little Bobby is a cute kid when properly handled, and he registered several little bits in this that will bring laughs, and certainly he was the only bright spot in the offering. Nevertheless, Bobby slipped very badly in many, many places, because he "acted" somethin' scan'lous. I don't know of anything more painful than a kid actor who is allowed to "act."

This started off with a little mystery about the grand duke, and Little Bobby was shipped into his kingdom in disguise, with Miss Hyland in charge of him, unconscious that he was the duke. There was one very beautiful close-up, taken in the railway coach, where Miss Hyland had Bobby snuggled up in her arms.

The arrival at the kingdom was very badly handled, because there seemed to be no one near the railway train, and yet just around the corner there was a wonderful mob of arm-waving "extras."

In one of the scenes, which was supposed to register a society event at court, Miss Hyland walked over to a fireplace where an "extra" girl was standing with two boys, all dressed up, and seldom have I seen anything funnier than these three "extras" trying to appear at ease.

The titles were very poor, as, for instance, one which followed the presentation. It said: "After the presentation—Back home." This title was merely to break a lapse of time, but it was so typical of the explanatory titles, such as "This is a chair," that I couldn't help but smile a bit.

At the very end they pulled a comic opera finish, which went perfectly with the other atmosphere and action. The willun stood at a window and held Bobby with one hand while he proclaimed to the hero and his friends that if they came one step nearer (and all the rest of the old junk) he would "hurl the boy to his death." He let go of Bobby for a second and the camera shifted to the outside, where we saw the youngster calmly standing on a ledge ready to jump to the ground, which he did without even as much as turning an ankle. Whoever thought out that idea should certainly be given a leather medal.

There were several points in detail which were quite poorly handled, with considerable footage that was surely unnecessary and quite tiresome. It was rather funny to note that a letter presumably written by a very prominent dignitary of the kingdom was signed "Yours, etc." I suppose the 'script writer wrote it that way, expecting somebody else to finish it, and the poor boob that made out the titles figured that it was correct in this particluar kingdom.

In another place we had a rather long note written very neatly by a young lady who was shown to be in a terrible hurry, and she signed the note "Frantically yours." In the first place, if she were as "frantic" as pictured she would not have written such a long, neat letter, and in the second place, if she were really frantic she would not have stopped to sign herself so.

In the supporting cast were Brinsley Shaw, Templar Saxe, Miss Curley and Mrs. Remley.

The Box Office Angle.

This might be accepted as a fair bit of entertainment by patrons who aren't finicky about what is offered, but I would suggest that you dodge it if you can. It is the old stuff, rather poorly done, and has very little to lift it out of the rut.

If you have to play it for any reason, you should see to it that Bobby Connelly is given as much prominence in the billing as Marc MacDermott or Peggy Hyland. Some of Bobby's bits are the brightest spots in the offering.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

UNCONVINCING SURFACE "MELLER," MUCH ACTION BUT MISSES FIRE

Jean Sothern in

THE CLOUD

Van Dyke—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR.....Will S. Davis
AUTHOR.....Joseph Poland
CAMERAMAN.....William Black
AS A WHOLE.....Ordinary surface melo
STORY.....Unconvincing; lacked depth
DIRECTION.....Registered surface action
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied
LIGHTINGS.....A few good, many ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable
STAR.....Lacked personality
SUPPORT.....Rather theatric
EXTERIORS.....Ordinary
INTERIORS.....Acceptable
DETAIL.....Unconvincing
TIME.....Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

SURELY this is nothing that any one would ever take very seriously. It is an ordinary surface melodrama with more than three reels devoted to a fake marriage incident, which is based upon an impossible situation where the "willun" bribes a colored telephone boy to have any call that might come from his apartment transferred to the home of a friend, where this friend is waiting to respond as a fake minister. This telephone call situation was surely a wild-eyed idea, and the action which followed the fake marriage was just about as convincing.

The entire offering moved along with a lot of action, but little sincerity. It never hit a truly human moment, and most audiences will let it run through without ever regarding it as anything except so much film.

Jean Sothern, who was presented as the star, was decidedly lacking in the necessary personality to register properly. Her costumes were hardly what would be called classy, and her general appearance lacked the girlish sweetness and appeal to make a successful star on the screen.

The members of the supporting cast were called upon to do a lot of theatric scenes, and they were done in a theatric manner.

In the supporting cast were Mae Melvin, Ogden Crane, Franklyn Hanna, Arthur Housman, Richard Tucker, Mrs. Charles Willard and Walter Miller.

The Box Office Angle.

I wouldn't consider this a worth-while offering, because it lacks the human note necessary to make it register satisfactorily with the average audience. It may be accepted if you play it as a "filler," but I would not advise that you book it and figure that it will be anything but ordinary. It is not nearly as good as some of the other offerings presented to date by Art Dramas.

Miss Sothern has appeared in a number of offerings, but I can't feel that she has sufficient box office value to justify her being starred alone.

The name "The Cloud" doesn't mean anything in particular, and so I cannot see any box office value in this offering.

CRUDE CONVENIENT MELLER POORLY PLAYED AND DIRECTED

Violet Mersereau in

SUSAN'S GENTLEMAN

Bluebird

DIRECTOR.....Edwin Stevens
AUTHOR.....Kate Jordan
SCENARIO BY.....John C. Brownell
CAMERAMAN.....Lewis Ostland
AS A WHOLE.....Cheap, crude and actory
STORY.....Unconvincing, painfully convenient melo romance
DIRECTION.....Theatric; poor groupings; permitted overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Just good straight stuff
LIGHTINGS.....Many too uniform; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable; lacked distinctive touches
STAR.....Pretty, but made camera-conscious at times
SUPPORT.....Very actory
EXTERIORS.....Generally acceptable; some rather poor
INTERIORS.....Rather stagey; not artistically lighted
DETAIL.....Most convenient
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

IF the Bluebird folk want to maintain the high standard they have set by two or three good productions in the past couple of months, they should be very careful about permitting such offerings as this to go out under that trademark.

There is absolutely no excuse for this being considered a worth-while offering, even though it may have box office value because of the presence of Violet Mersereau.

The story was painfully convenient as to construction, and yet the author had the nerve to refer sarcastically to such books as "The World Agin' Her" upon frequent occasions. I don't believe that there ever was a "yeller-back" written that could have had any worse situations than those incorporated in this.

The general atmosphere of the offering was very artificial, and the entire cast was inclined to "act" upon any and all occasions—even Miss Mersereau was camera-conscious many times, so that the only solution is that the director was at fault.

The story was one of those two-generation things, with Miss Mersereau as an English girl who cloped with a groom in the first part of the story, and in the latter part of the film as her own daughter, with the groom a drunken, no-account father.

The vampire—and, oh, boy! she was some "vamp"—who figured in the first part of the story, causing the mother to duck away with the groom, shot a man eighteen years later, and then accused the young hero, so that he promptly sailed away to America and immediately walked right over to the star's home and rented a room. Truly, "They do it in the movies."

The aforesaid "wamp" didn't show the change of hair in the passing of eighteen years, which in itself is quite some achievement—and act—well, sir, she just acted all over the place!

At a fancy dress ball, this being the occasion upon which she arranged the elopement of mother, she was dressed a la Carmen, and somehow she seemed to want to hold that Carmen pose through all the rest of the film.

Bradley Barker, who was the groom, and Sidney Mason, the hero in the last part of the offering, were both quite camera-conscious at all times, and consequently failed to impress.

Somehow, all through this offering it seems that things just happened at the right time, upon any and all occasions. The groom-father was sitting in New York reading about Sidney Mason having escaped when accused of murder, and by heck!—the "defective" what had been chasing Mason from England walked right up to father at that particular moment and said: "What do you know about this man?"

Then, after hero had been taken to Merrie England, and the little star had found grandfather and started to her ancestral home, the auto bearing her obligingly drove up to a road where hero was working with a gang of convicts, and, although the convicts had suits that were exactly similar, the star picked out her hero when she was fully sixty yards away, although she had no reason in the world to figure that he would be there, except that the director had told her that hero was one of the gang.

Possibly in order to provide a "big" scene, they pulled a complete horse race and worked it into the story by having the hero tell the shero about how he had "won the Derby" once. That should be a cinch for scenario writers seeking thrills. All they have to do is to let one character tell the other a few lines, and then pull a lot of Keystone "thrills."

Others in the cast were Maud Cooling, William O'Neill and James O'Neill.

The Box Office Angle.

This is one the poorest offerings Miss Mersereau has had, and if she gets money for you I would consider the advisability of playing this, because she doesn't register nearly so well as she should. The painful convenience of the plot and the rather crude handling of the action will certainly arouse no enthusiasm, and I fear that most of your patrons will mark it down as another "bloomer."

If they allow you to get away with murder occasionally without making serious complaint, possibly this wild romantic stuff may be accepted, even though they don't believe it. I have a hunch, however, that the average fan is too well acquainted with the possibilities of pictures to accept this sort of thing and consider it good entertainment. Certainly nobody would ever see this and then suggest to a friend to look it over.

OBVIOUS SURFACE MELO

Carlyle Blackwell in

THE SOCIAL LEPER

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Harley Knoles
AUTHOR	Florence C. Bolles
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary surface melo
STORY	Didn't register; slowly built to innocent-man-over-murder-victim's-body situation
DIRECTION	Made action fairly interesting, considering material
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied, but generally good
LIGHTINGS	Many very good; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Didn't register
SUPPORT	June Elvidge excellent; others ordinary
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable; some rather "setty"
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THERE was nothing to this story, the climax being the very ancient situation of hero discovered over the murdered man's body, with the result that he was accused of the crime.

The producer has saved the first few reels by a sort of "reverse English" on the story, which started it off with a lot of crystal gazing, fortune telling stuff and then led up to a narrative of the hero explaining how he had been married to the vampire in years gone by. Then came the murder of the "vamp" by her latest victim, with the hero accused, and after that it took about a reel of "third degree" stuff before they finally arrested the real murderer, the audience knowing all the time who was guilty.

June Elvidge, as the vampire, carried most of the scenes in which she appeared, by her poise and authority. She screens very well and was particularly good to look at in her close-ups. She was the only character who did anything impressive.

Mr. Blackwell, as the hero, failed to arouse any enthusiasm, and in a number of close-ups his teeth showed up very badly. This should have been remedied.

Arthur Ashley, as the latest victim of the vamp, played his nervous scenes so extravagantly that they will not register convincingly.

Evelyn Greeley, as the sweet young innocent, was decidedly camera-conscious, at all times, holding a pose through most of her scenes.

The general atmosphere was acceptable, with a few good lightings, but there was not enough distinction to the handling to redeem the very ordinary story.

Others in the cast were Mrs. Eugene Woodward, Edna Whistler, Isabel Berwin and George MacQuarrie.

The Box Office Angle.

I don't consider this an offering worthy of being presented with any promise as to its being worth while, because it is an ordinary plot presented in a semi-society atmosphere, with the society woefully lacking as to distinction. Miss Elvidge was the only personality that registered at all, and she didn't have enough to do to carry the offering.

If you are playing ordinary program stuff regularly and have found it practical to show these "weak sisters" instead of going outside to get something worth while on the open market, then this may sneak by. It has been acceptably done, but is such an ancient plot that it can't possibly make anybody enthuse.

I would dodge it.

NEVER REALLY REGISTERS

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN

Producer of

STATE RIGHTS FILMS

1482 Broadway, New York City

BABY MARIE'S CUTE TRICKS PUT OVER ANOTHER

Baby Marie Osborne in

TOLD AT TWILIGHT

Balboa—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Henry King
AUTHOR	Dan F. Whitcomb
CAMERAMAN	William Beckway
AS A WHOLE	Entertaining kid stuff
STORY	Not much, but sufficient
DIRECTION	Registered cute tricks
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied, but acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Some too uniform; others rather contrasty; generally acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Very cute; generally natural
SUPPORT	A cute coon; adults satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Ordinary; a few rather pretty
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Obliging
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

WE get here another five-reeler in which Little Mary Sunshine proves the frequently demonstrated fact that a child's laughter will bring a smile to an old grouch.

There is surely nothing complicated about this offering, it being quite apparent that the entire production has been devised and directed to provide opportunity for the Sunshine Kiddie to do her little stunts. The only bit of plot comes in at the finish, where hubby is in need of coin, because of a false "tip" on the market, with the result that he tries to burglarize the home of the wealthy old man, where h's child is an honored guest for the night.

The kiddie came downstairs and saw her father with a mask on. She also wore a mask, with which she was going to "scare" her old host. She thought that her father was playing a joke on her.

There was a touch of pathos in the meeting, even though it is so painfully convenient. The nice old man provided the necessary funds to put her father back on his feet, and so all ended happily.

Most of the offering was devoted to the antics of little Miss Osborne, with a funny little coon as her companion on many of her adventures. These included a chicken fight, an adventure as beggars with a sign borrowed from a blind couple, and an attempt at swimming in a public park. The little coon almost divided honors with the star as to the number of laughs registered.

Daniel Gilfether, as the wealthy old man, was a very likeable character.

Henry King, as Baby Marie's father, was quite acceptable.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe this is a good bet, figured as entertainment, particularly if you have had any success with the previous Mary Sunshine features.

To be true, it is rather a small thread to hang five reels of action on, but, to my mind, the majority of film fans would rather look at a lot of cute kid stuff fairly tied together than they would at most of the cheap melodrama and sex stuff that is now being unloaded.

I would particularly appeal to the mothers to send their children to see this, so as to build up your matinee business. Since, in this offering, Baby Marie is shown as a sort of a feminine Peck's Bad Boy, it is possible that some of our wild-eyed censors may think this not a fit subject for children, but I hardly think that the average healthy youngster will start out trying to steal blind men's signs simply because this kid does it in the picture. And supposing they do—it wouldn't ruin the world!

Go to it on the basis of promising cute kid stuff. Don't specifically state that it is a wonderful production. Emphasize the "cute" angle.

WALTHALL IN INTERESTING DRUNKARD CHARACTERIZATION

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson in

BURNING THE CANDLE

Essanay—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR	Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR	Turner White
SCENARIO BY	Harry Beaumont
AS A WHOLE	Excellent drink drama; Walthall hitting on high
STORY	Not unusual or new, but registered human touches
DIRECTION	Gave proper value to little points
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	No attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK	Dissolves excellent; close-ups very good
STARS	He, sincere convincing characterization; she, appealing, with poise and authority
SUPPORT	Good types
EXTERIORS	Good; not unusual
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Many nice little bits
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

MOST every one knows by now that when it comes to portraying a drink-befuddled human, Henry B. Walthall is SOME boy.

There is practically nothing new in this offering as to story construction, but considerable attention has been given to registering the manner in which a well-meaning young man is led into the drink habit by thoughtless friends, employers and even by a well-meaning wife.

After four reels of hitting the bumps, and going clear to the gutter, we found Henry returning victor over the accursed enemy, and he and his wife were reunited, with the other gink who had been waiting in the offing placed permanently in the discard.

Wifey remained faithful throughout this, and the man who wanted to marry her didn't develop into a willun—for which we thank the author.

There are several "gulps" in the scenes where Henry came back to see his old boss and in the scenes where he returned to his wife.

On the finish the old judge took his colored servant to the wine cellar to break up all the bottles and casks, and the title where the coon registered "Mah Gawd, Jedge!"

will certainly get a yell, thereby sending everybody out with a smile.

The struggle with the demon rum was presented with the customary silent battle, but Mr. Walthall does this sort of thing very well, and at no time did it become annoying. As handled, the production should register a sincere sermon and still not get too far from the point where it can be called entertainment. I was glad to note that Mr. Walthall had had his hair trimmed. That helped some.

Miss Charleson, as the wife, was particularly pleasing. She has an appealing personality, and still registers with sufficient authority to make her scenes carry conviction.

There were a number of very good types in the supporting cast. John Cossar, as the employer, made his part stand out.

No particular attempt was made to give artistic lightings in this, or distinctive class to the sets. A rather bad back drop was noticeable in some of the office scenes.

Others in the cast were Thurlow Brewer, Julien Barton, Frankie Raymond and Patrick Calhoun.

The Box Office Angle.

Figuring the popularity of Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson, I would say that this is a subject which should pull some business, and I believe it has been well enough done to register as quite worth while. Certainly it is an old theme, and the production depends rather upon the human handling and the little touches than upon any twists or original angles in the story, and consequently many may feel that it is something which has been done too often. If any complain on that score, I would simply say, "But wasn't it beautifully done?" Most of Shakespeare's plays have been done frequently enough, but that doesn't keep people from appreciating them when they are done properly.

When all is said and done, I believe everything to-day is tending toward characterization, and surely this is a production based entirely upon human thoughts and characterizations.

With 2,500 of the 2,800 counties in this country legally "dry," I would think that the sentiment would be in favor of this as good preachment. I would call particular attention to the recent appearances of Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson in such productions as "The Truant Soul" and "Little Shoes," and also mention the fact that Mr. Beaumont who directed this, also directed that very successful offering, "Skinner's Dress Suit."

FAIRLY INTERESTING CHARACTERIZATIONS. LACKS HEART-INTEREST

Bessie Love in

A DAUGHTER OF THE POOR

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Edward Dillon
AUTHOR	Anita Loos
AS A WHOLE	Fairly done character studies
STORY	Mostly characterization; fairly interesting as done
DIRECTION	Not artistic; some scenes not impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Appealing, but lacked emotional strength at times
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not distinctive
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Rather "setty"
DETAIL	Acceptable; not elaborate
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH this is fairly interesting as a study of the mental condition of a child brought up among poor socialists until she became a socialist herself, still it lacks the essential heart-interest moments to make it register as a truly pleasing production.

It is quite possible that the presence of Roy Stewart as the hero had something to do with this feeling of incompleteness, because Mr. Stewart is so much bigger than Miss Love that it is pretty hard for any one to grow enthusiastic over a mental picture of love between the two. Since such a love interest is never definitely developed, we find that we have been hanging between two fires all the way, with our little heroine finally handed over to a wild-eyed young socialist author who never really gets any sympathy from anybody.

It is pretty hard to register a story based on mental conditions which has no love thread that is carefully defined. In this case the absence of the real heart-interest moments is chiefly responsible for the failure of the offering to make a favorable impression.

Early in the production we saw Miss Love's uncle as the janitor in a print shop going through some bits of business which were apparently a careful plant for a fire. Then he walked out without the fire, and we saw him in front of an automobile as if we were going to have an accident. But this also was avoided. I will give the author credit for these two little suspense tricks which Griffith made use of to such a great extent years ago, but they did finally pull the fire, so that the first one is discounted doubly by making it possible for the audience to say: "Well, they finally did get to the fire."

Max Davidson, as Miss Love's uncle, gave a true-to-life character study, but there was a bit too much of the suggestion of burlesque comedy in his work at times.

George Beranger was truly wild-eyed as the young socialist author.

Carl Stockdale, as the publisher, had a bad make-up on. It would have been much better had they used a real type for this part instead of having Mr. Stockdale make up for the character.

Carmel Myers was the heroine who languished in the background.

The Box Office Angle.

You can possibly sneak by with this, but it isn't an offering worthy of any real boosting. The psychology was there as to the various characters, but the lack of heart-interest touches and a sure-enough romance keep the offering from registering in a manner to make it please the average audience.

Bessie Love is all right in this sort of thing, but I think the public would rather catch her in such offering as "Hell-to-Pay Austin." If you have it scheduled on your regular booking, take a chance without making any specific promises. Certainly it isn't worth going out of your way to secure.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

WELL DONE UNDERWORLD CHARACTERIZATIONS ROUGH BUT HUMAN

Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney in HELL MORGAN'S GIRL

Bluebird Special

DIRECTOR	Joseph De Grasse
AUTHOR	Harvey Gates
SCENARIO BY	Ida May Park
CAMERAMAN	King D. Gray
AS A WHOLE	Underworld drama very well done
STORY	Barbary Coast characterizations, with hero and "shero" rising from the gutter
DIRECTION	Gave great atmosphere and interesting action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STARS	Splendid characterizations
SUPPORT	Some exceptionally good types
EXTERIORS	Good
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Good underworld stuff
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

AS a characterization study this will rank very high. Being an underworld theme, it will be exceptionally interesting to many, but some may not like it.

Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney have given us some big scenes and a lot of truly worth-while little touches. The supporting cast included an exceptional lot of real underworld types, and the atmosphere was truly that of a Barbary Coast dive.

The story was simple. It had to do with the son of a very wealthy man, who went to the dogs and drifted into Hell Morgan's place, where he received the favor of the proprietor's daughter, who was a sort of "queen" in this particular domain. The willun was a gang-leader who wanted the girl, and this provided the several conflicts.

The big climax came when the earthquake hit Frisco, with some good scenes getting over the chaos of that terrible disaster, the final bits being the death of Hell Morgan, with the hero and "shero" reunited in a rescue camp.

While there are some scenes that will possibly prove rather unpleasant to finicky fans in certain communities, still it must certainly be said that the producer and players have given a faithful and convincing portrayal of the characters in hand.

In the supporting cast were Joseph Girard and Alfred Allen.

The Box Office Angle.

This offering has been condemned in New York City by the police commissioner pending certain eliminations, and I can't say at this time as to whether or not these eliminations will be made for the entire country. I presume that the changes have to do, for the most part, with some of the more violent scenes in the "Hell Morgan" cafe, although most of these aren't much worse than many we have had in other productions. I presume that the objection arises because we get so much of the underworld stuff in this one subject.

To be true, this is more interesting than uplifting, but it does register the fact that, even when a man or woman hits the depths, there is a chance to get back.

Certainly this is a strong dramatic subject with some really forceful scenes, and unless you feel squeamish about showing underworld stuff I'd say that this is an offering which can be counted upon to register as forceful and truly dramatic.

You might play up particularly the fact that this depicts life as it was on the Barbary Coast, the famous Frisco resort, before the earthquake destroyed this section of the city, with the big climax of the story coming just as the earthquake hits Frisco.

If you are going to play this I would mention particularly some of the recent offerings in which this trio of stars appeared under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. Two of these were "The Piper's Price" and "The Price of Silence."

INTERESTING MARRIAGE-MISTRESS MELO WITH GOOD AND BAD SPOTS

Gail Kane in

AS MAN MADE HER

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	George Archainbaud
AUTHOR	Helen Beare
SCENARIO BY	Frances Marion
CAMERAMAN	Philip Hatkin
AS A WHOLE	Interesting, but "sexy;" doesn't grip
STORY	Marriage-mistress mess, but holds fairly well
DIRECTION	Had good and bad spots, but big moments didn't grip
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; some too uniform, showing "set" imperfections
CAMERA WORK	Generally good
STAR	Interesting to observe, but didn't register sympathy appeal
SUPPORT	Good, except in big moments, when camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	A few very good shots
INTERIORS	Some very good; others "setty"
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

WHILE this will be considered interesting, many may object to the mistress-marriage tangle involved, and certainly the dramatic moments don't get under your shirt and grip as they would if they really convinced.

Gail Kane is a striking figure and is certainly interesting when in action as a semi-vamp or an injured wife, but she lacks the little touch of appeal which would have made her more important in this register at the heart.

The story tells of her life with Frank Mills, living as his mistress, which was followed by his desertion when he decided to marry, with Miss Kane immediately taking up with his brother, who married her secretly and brought her home.

Unable to denounce Miss Kane without acknowledging his own weakness, Mr. Mills was forced to accept her. Later he found his own marriage to be a mistake and began triffling again with Miss Kane, now his brother's wife.

Miss Kane led him on, even after the birth of her baby, and finally we found Mr. Mills threatening to kill her and himself if she didn't go away with him. She refused and he denounced her as his former mistress, before her husband and his own wife, but Miss Kane told of how he had deceived her when she went to him, and her husband forgave her.

The story finished with Mr. Mills as a "drunk" in the gutter and Miss Kane as a happy wife and mother.

There is no question but that this sort of thing does happen and has happened, but the switching of the affections in an immediate family at such close range is a subject that isn't altogether pleasant to the average public. If the dramatic moments had been made a bit more convincing, and if Miss Kane was possessed with a little more appeal and less of the stately-beauty-sophisticated-woman appearance, the dramatic twists would have registered more effectively.

In many places the atmosphere was quite classy, with rather good lightings, but at times the lightings were so uniform as to make quite noticeable the imperfections in the sets and the make-up of some of the artists. This, in a way, detracted from the general impression.

There were quite a number of scenes shown in a restaurant with a well-known Hawaiian dancer from a local restaurant, shown in action in various Hawaiian dances. These will be interesting, to say the least.

Generally the titles were rather good, but a few of them missed fire, as for instance, this old rip-an'-tear slogan: "For that d—— lie you shall die like the dog that you are!"

It was very noticeable in one scene in the restaurant, where Mr. Mills and Miss Kane had some dramatic action in the foreground, that two women "extras" who sat directly back of them, insisted on craning their necks to look at the camera all the time. They should have been "spoken to."

Frank Mills and Edward T. Langford, as the two men, were quite pleasing in repose, but decidedly inclined to "act" when it came to the drammer. This camera-conscious acting on their part injured many of the more important scenes.

The old trouble of leading men failing to make up their hands was quite noticeable in an important scene between Mr. Langord and Miss Kane. Mr. Langord's hands looked like those of a truck driver when they got near the star's face.

Gerda Holmes was quite satisfactory as the wife of Mr. Mills.

Others in the cast were Miss Layton and Miss McDowell.

The Box Office Angle.

As program releases go, this ranks rather well. It certainly holds the interest, even though it doesn't get under the skin, and the fact that we have many close-ups helps to keep the attention centered on the screen.

Miss Kane should be a rather good box office drawing card, and you can use a query somewhat after this fashion in your advertising. "Has a man the right to deny a woman ultimate happiness if he has been the cause of her early error?"

Frank Mills has appeared in a number of feature productions—some Triangle-Ince features, one for Mutual, some International films—and he may be well-known and liked in your community. If so, register the fact that he is playing opposite Miss Kane in this offering. Gerda Holmes' name may also help a lot.

PAINFULLY OBVIOUS, TIRESOME SURFACE ACTION PLOT

Viola Dana in

THE MORTAL SIN

Columbia-Metro

DIRECTOR	John H. Collins
AUTHORS	Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock
SCENARIO BY	John H. Collins
CAMERAMAN	John Arnold
AS A WHOLE	Painfully obvious, slow and tiresome
STORY	Ye ancient invalid-husband, with wife sacrificing-honor-for-funds dream stuff
DIRECTION	Very old-school; too much "people in and out"
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective; others a bit contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Rather good, yet lacked artistic distinction
STAR	Good, but badly handicapped by plot
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Much too much
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

ANY audience, anywhere, will guess this before it has gone a hundred feet.

It certainly seems to me that it's all wrong to make five reels out of such very old situations when nothing has been added to the idea except a lot of exits and entrances, since the days when it was used for five hundred feet and one-reel subjects.

The plot—if it can be dignified by that name—tells of the struggling author, threatened with a physical breakdown, who goes to sleep at his work, which of course means a dream.

Then we find in the dream that Hubby is forced to go West for his health, while Wifey tries to earn enough to restore his health. Of course, she has difficulty and finally sacrifices her honor to save Friend Hubby, who returns unexpectedly and strangles her because she is living with his employer, who has published his book. When the men come to arrest the murderer he awakens and finds his wife arousing him from his "nightmare."

In the strangling scene, apparently to avoid censor argument, they showed husband grabbing wifey by the neck, and then the half of the screen where wifey stood was blotted out, and we saw hubby working hard at the strangling game, with his victim invisible. After he finished his job, we were shown the wife on the floor.

Even with such a terribly old story, this might have gotten by had they introduced many human touches and little bits of business which would have registered as true-to-life incidents. Instead of padding out the five reels with such material, however, they used exits and entrances that became quite funny.

They showed a shot of some steps leading to the author's home about twenty times without moving the camera, with various character walking up and down these steps. They did the same thing with a hallway, and we had a tiresome lot of scenes of people getting in and out of automobiles, etc., etc. The day is gone when it was considered proper to show on the screen every move the characters make from the time they leave one location until they reach another. Audiences now want only the necessary action, and every scene should be made to mean something.

Viola Dana, Augustus Phillips and Robert Walker had practically all of the action between them, and it should have been a very cheap film to produce, because most of the scenes were made in a very few sets, with an appalling repetition of some of the shots, as afore-

(Continued on following page)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

JAMES DURKIN
FEATURE PRODUCER

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from preceding page)

mentioned.

The actual handling of the scenes was satisfactory, but the plot was so obvious and ancient that I'm quite sure most audiences will want to take a nap while this is on the screen.

Others in the cast were Lady Thompson, Louis B. Foley and Ricca Allen.

The Box Office Angle

If you figure this as simply a program offering to fill in when you must have something, it is possible that you can get it by as acceptable, although I'm quite sure that even if an audience isn't familiar with this time-honored story, they will think it is very slow and rather tiresome.

If you can arrange for anything of merit instead of this, I would surely do so, because there is a serious question in my mind as to the actual box office value of Viola Dana.

Certainly I wouldn't make any promises as to this production, if you play it, and I surely would not tell anything about the story, because it'll be remembered by all of your regulars.

This isn't what any one might consider a pleasant subject, because of the rather forced justification of the sex sacrifice, and the murder finish. I would keep that in mind when I considered this, providing you have a community which is a bit touchy on sex and violence at the present time.

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1917. NO. 12 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
589	Fox	71.5	69.1	81
1551	Triangle	73.7	66.7	320
442	Metro	71.3	68.0	42
343	Vitagraph	70.4	67.6	64
1702	Paramount	71.7	66.2	297
410	World	67.5	61.4	36
203	Bluebird	62.8	62.4	17

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1702	Paramount	71.7	66.2	297
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85	4
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
1	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	What's His Name	75	100
1	Behind the Scenes	97	85
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
1	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
4	Cinderella	85	97	1
1	The Million	70	90
3	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	Dancing Girl	70	55
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	80
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	Warrens of Virginia	66	82
1	Country Boy	60	60
4	David Harum	84	74	1
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
2	Gretna Green	100	100	1
2	Are You a Mason?	78	78
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
2	Snobs	67	40
3	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
2	Help Wanted	80	75
4	The Woman	88	59	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	3
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
4	Stolen Goods	78	70
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
4	Pretty Sister Jose	82	73	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	58	2
2	The Dictator	45	45
4	Wild Olives	87	82
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
1	The Clue	80	100
5	Kindling	80	82
2	Fighting Hope	82	85
4	Kilmeny	76	72
3	Seven Sisters	90	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
7	Rags	90	95	4
1	Sold	80	65
5	Secret Orchard	78	72
4	Nearly a Lady	67	74
4	Marriage of Kitty	70	55
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
2	Majesty of the Law	40	45
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
3	Esmeralda	85	85	1
1	Case of Becky	80	80
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	6
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
7	Armstrong's Wife	80	63
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	74	2
7	Gentleman from Indiana	85	76
7	Prince and Pauper	91	84	3
9	Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo	83	68
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
16	The Cheat	94	77	10
7	The Reform Candidate	80	48
8	The Immigrant	72	59
9	Old Homestead	88	83	4
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
8	Temptation	79	73	1
8	The Foundling	76	78	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
5	Mice and Men	82	81	2
6	The Golden Chance	80	58	2
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
6	The Spider	87	68	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	67	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	80	3
8	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	2
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
11	Poor Little Peppina	86	82	5
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	3
11	Ben Blair	72	63
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	62	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	76	81	1
6	Saleslady	75	64	1
12	Audrey	73	73	3
6	Sowers	64	33
9	The Heart of Paula	71	56	1
8	The Race	71	65
6	Eternal Grind	68	31	2
6	Love Mask	61	54	2
7	Molly Make-Believe	90	86	5
6	The Red Widow	62	51	1
10	Heart of Nora Flynn	69	36	4
6	Moment Before	50	62	1
9	David Garrick	61	39
7	Innocent Lie	52	46
13	Maria Rosa	82	46	4
11	Alien Souls	68	66	1
11	Fued Girl	61	54
15	Pasquale	78	57	3

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
13 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59	2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
21 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
19 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
15 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
19 The American Beauty	64	61	3
22 The Dupe	60	60	1
22 The Smugglers	53	50	1
26 The Selfish Woman	72	68	4
29 Davy Crockett	67	62
18 Dream Girl	69	64	3
27 Under Cover	79	75	5
11 International Marriage	55	51	1
17 Common Ground	64	64	1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95	23
10 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
11 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
21 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	9
11 The Stronger Love	53	52
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
14 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
19 Honorable Friend	65	62	1
18 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
18 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
19 Parson of Panamint	80	69	6
11 Big Sister	47	58
11 Reward of Patience	63	53
10 The House of Lies	73	61	1
10 Daughter of MacGregor	51	41
14 Ashes of Embers	87	85	5
12 Quest of Life	58	58
10 Anton the Terrible	48	49
12 The Lash	55	52
9 The Storm	75	61	1
13 The Intrigue	81	53	1
12 Her Father's Son	73	57	2
10 Witchcraft	51	51
9 The Kiss	73	69	1
10 Rainbow Princess	84	74	2
9 Seventeen	90	76	1
8 Miss George Washington	97	93	6
12 Heir to the Hoorah	78	68	3
11 Soul of Kura San	82	74	1
7 Son of Erin	81	70
8 Unprotected	54	56	1
7 Years of Locusts	49	51
7 Plow Girl	77	55
5 The Yellow Pawn	61	60	1
5 Nanette of Wilds	36	47	2
8 Martyrdom of Philip strong	47	35
4 Coney Island Princess	58	63	1
6 Road to Love	79	55	1
7 Oliver Twist	86	63	3
4 Victoria Cross	58	55	1
7 Traveling Salesman	79	58	2
6 Right Direction	84	61	1
8 Snow White	98	97	5
5 Redeeming Love	61	57	1
7 The Slave Market	75	67	2
5 The Evil Eye	26	37	1
4 Great Expectations	81	50
4 Happiness of Three Women	75	48	1
4 Betty to the Rescue	37	35
3 Girl Like That	47	28
2 Lost and Won	73	50
1 The Golden Fetter	10	50

TRIANGLE

1551 Triangle	73.7	66.7	320
8 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
8 The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
11 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
5 Sable Lorcha	64	53
4 The Golden Claw	61	72
8 Double Trouble	65	64	2
7 Aloha Oe	63	65	1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
7 Jordan is a Hard Road	58	54
6 Winged Idol	53	52
3 Penitents	28	32

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
11 The Edge of the Abyss	67	61
8 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
10 Between Men	72	69	1
14 Let Katy Do It	87	66	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
8 Last Act	80	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
17 Hell's Hinges	93	88	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
14 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	75	3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	67	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
15 The Raiders	79	70
13 The Habit of Happiness	92	86	5
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
16 The Aryan	85	86	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
16 The Good Bad-Man	90	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Not My Sister	82	78	3
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
18 Primal Lure	82	77	4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
18 Market of Vain Desire	81	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
22 Bugle Call	95	80	7
21 Reggie Mixes In	92	81	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
15 The Dividend	68	65	1
19 Wild Girl of the Sierras	43	51
20 Apostle of Vengeance	83	87	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
24 The Phantom	86	73	7
26 Flirting with Fate	88	85	10
28 The Deserter	82	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
24 Captive God	69	72	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77	2
19 The Payment	81	74	3
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
17 Honor Thy Name	88	71	4
18 Devil's Needle	63	63	1
21 Shell 43!	90	66	3
23 Hell-to-Pay Austin	82	67	6
19 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55	1
18 Home	91	80	9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
15 The Patriot	76	79	5
18 Social Secretary	90	72	7
12 The Thoroughbred	78	68	1
10 The Little Liar	67	56	4
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91	6
12 Dawnmaker	56	80	2
11 Diane of the Follies	70	72	1
19 Manhattan Madness	94	91	11
12 Plain Jane	89	81	8
11 Old Folks at Home	84	70	2
12 The Jungle Child	58	59	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
13 Return of Draw Egan	91	86	6
13 The Vagabond Prince	74	68	3
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
9 Corner in Colleens	93	86	5
4 Sister of Six	71	54	1
10 Fifty-Fifty	90	83	4

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
3 War's Women	62	57
8 Atta Boy's Last Race	58	63
10 American Aristocracy	96	93	6
7 Microscope Mystery	59	44
10 Honorable Algy	80	69
10 Jim Grimsby's Boy	61	45
10 The Devil's Double	90	91
10 The Children Pay	74	62
7 Children of the Feud	58	58
7 The Criminal	41	41
5 Gable in Souls	83	77
7 The Wharf Rat	42	52
9 The Matrimaniac	96	95
10 The Sin Ye Do	97	81
9 The Heiress at Coffee Dan's	56	46
7 Three of Many	54	44
6 The House Built Upon Sand	82	71
1 Nina, the Flower Girl	35	35
5 The Female of the Species	85	82
8 Truthful Tulliver	98	96
6 The Weaker Sex	91	90
4 The Little Yank	35	51
4 Bride of Hate	80	70
1 The Iced Bullet	80	60
1 The Americano	100	100
1 Chicken Casey	50	50

WORLD

410 World	67.5	61.4	3
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
2 The Master of the House	68	53
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	85
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Blue Grass	70	65
1 Fruits of Desire	40	50
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
5 Trilby	81	60
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	55	78
3 Salvation Nell	60	45
3 Family Cupboard	50	57
4 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	72
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	65
1 Body and Soul	40	45
2 The Ransom	63	45
4 The Labyrinth	66	60
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
5 Camille	83	70
3 The Rack	89	60
1 Fine Feathers	70	40
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
3 Then I'll Come Back to You	80	72
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	50
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
3 Closed Road	87	81
4 Feast of Life	60	74

Reports	% P.	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
5 Her Maternal Right	56		72
5 Sudden Riches	77		72
1 Twin Triangles	80		30
5 Tangled Fates	55		60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42		53
5 His Brother's Wife	83		74	2
10 Perils of Divorce	61		63
12 La vie de Boheme	48		50
2 What Happened at 22	82		80
5 Crucial Test	59		58
6 Weakness of Man	61		69
12 Sally in Our Alley	68		68
13 Paying the Price	69		70	1
12 Miss Petticoats	59		61
14 Woman's Way	75		74	4
13 The Summer Girl	56		57
12 Rail Rider	68		60
10 Husband and Wife	75		63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76		72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73		66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72		70
11 Dark Silence	77		79	2
4 The Revolt	66		63
7 The Gilded Cage	75		70
6 Hidden Scar	77		67
6 The Scarlet Oath	60		62
7 Man Who Stood Still	71		63
7 The Heart of a Hero	58		48
2 Without a Soul	80		90
11 Bought and Paid For	94		94	8
9 Madness of Helen	54		53
6 Men She Married	58		55
2 Deep Purple	80		75
6 All Man	51		50	1
5 Broken Chains	37		36
7 The Rise of Susan	78		89	5
3 World Against Him	32		30
4 A Woman Alone	60		59
3 The Man Who Forgot	47		34
2 On Dangerous Ground	50		43
4 Marriage a la Carte	73		73	1
1 The Unpardonable Sin	40		55
2 The Bondage of Fear	60		45
1 Tillie Wakes Up	80		80
1 The Hungry Heart	90		70

METRO

442 Metro	71.3	68.0	42
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
3 Shooting of Dan McGraw	81	78
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	80	60
1 Right of Way	70	35
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy to Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
5 The Yellow Streak	85	64
8 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
1 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
6 A Man and His Soul	83	83	2
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
5 Her Great Price	80	71	1
8 The Wall Between	78	82	1
8 The Kiss of Hate	60	74
8 Half-Million Bribe	71	47

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
7 Playing With Fire	79	76
10 The Come-Back	75	73	1
7 The Snowbird	79	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Yonkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
9 Scarlet Woman	72	83	1
9 Dorian's Divorce	73	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
6 Flower of No Man's Land	58	75
8 The Purple Lady	82	63
10 The Eternal Question	76	83	1
11 The Quitter	69	73
14 River of Romance	88	74	7
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
12 God's Half Acre	71	59	1
12 Weakness of Strength	67	52
10 The Pretenders	81	73	1
7 The Upheaval	57	63
8 Light of Happiness	72	73	1
9 Mister 44	89	92	4
8 The Wheel of the Law	77	66	1
9 Dawn of Love	65	59
6 Iron Woman	41	56
4 Life's Shadows	66	60
11 In the Diplomatic Service	66	85	4
8 The Brand of Cowardice	64	52
8 Gates of Eden	69	50
10 Extravagance	69	84	3
4 The Wager	86	56
1 My Madonna	80	85
5 The Wager	83	57
5 The Sunbeam	45	38
7 Big Tremaine	68	82	2
6 Black Butterfly	63	78	3
4 Stolen Triumph	48	40
4 Awakening of Helena Richie	61	61
3 Pidgin Island	87	82
5 Vanity	73	60
5 The White Raven	94	94	2
4 A Wife by Proxy	54	48
3 Threads of Fate	47	43
1 Bridges Burned	70	70
1 The End of the Tour	50	65

FOX

589 Fox	71.5	69.1	81
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	72
2 Devil's Daughter	77	65
4 Should a Mother Tell?	80	80
1 Wormwood	90	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
8 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
9 Blue Blood and Red	82	68
5 Slander	80	72
9 Modern Thelma	57	47	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
8 Blazing Love	69	67
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
10 The Spider and the Fly	67	72	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	66
10 A Woman's Honor	69	71
19 East Lynne	88	87	8
15 Ambition	71	67
16 A Man From Bitter Roots	84	82	2
16 Caprice of the Mountains	68	66	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
20 The Beast	88	71	6
22 Under Two Flags	94	93	10
16 End of the Trail	71	79
17 Sporting Blood	61	57	1
15 Little Miss Happiness	76	70	3
18 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	58
13 Her Double Life	84	58	8
9 Where Love Leads	69	61
12 Fires of Conscience	65	69	1
10 The Straight Way	69	74
7 Ragged Princess	76	68
11 The War Bride's Secret	75	54	3
9 Romeo and Juliet	86	86	4
4 Love and Hate	66	55
2 Mischief Maker	70	70	1
2 Jealousy	75	85
3 Sins of Her Parent	89	74	2
2 The Mediator	70	60
1 Battle of Life	75	60
2 The Vixen	53	73
1 The Love Thief	90	90
1 The Primitive Call	40	75
1 The Darling of Paris	60	70

MUTUAL

116 Mutual	74.7	71.7	14
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	90	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	85
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife's Friend	70	75
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	82	85	1
1 Inner Struggle	45	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	85
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	80
1 The Decoy	50	80
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	60	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	80	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	80	100	1

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 The Haunted Manor	84	86
1 Feathertop	86	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
5 Doorsteps	65	60	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
8 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	60	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
8 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
2 A Welsh Singer	60	53
1 Man Who Would Not Die	85	75
1 Three Pals	90	80
3 Manager of the B. & A.	63	70
3 Pearl of Paradise	67	68	1
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
2 Faith	75	48
2 Miss Jackie of the Navy	93	85	1
1 A Dream or Two Ago	75	60
2 Innocence of Lizette	100	85

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
3 The Fireman	80	83
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
14 The Count	87	84	8
9 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
7 The Rink	96	99	6
1 Easy Street	80	100	1

PATHE

123 Pathe	68.2	68.9	13
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
8 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
8 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	55
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	63
8 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78	1
5 Shine Girl	69	70
8 Fear of Poverty	65	68
2 The Test	60	48
3 Saint, Devil and Woman	44	57
3 Light That Failed	69	69	1
8 Shadows and Sunshine	86	84	2
2 Prudence, the Pirate	58	73
2 Arms and the Woman	78	50	1
1 The Challenge	70	60
2 Joy and the Dragon	85	78
1 Romantic Journey	80	60
2 Her New York	80	68
1 Kick In	80	83

BLUEBIRD

203 Bluebird	62.8	62.4	17
8 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Wrong Door	75	85
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
5 Crippled Hand	58	69	1
8 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
5 Eye of God	64	80	1
8 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
14 Shoes	72	77	3
10 Broken Fetters	63	54	1
8 The Love Girl	63	64	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
7 Silent Battle	74	83
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	84	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
11 Saving the Family Name	80	55	1
9 Behind the Lines	63	63
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
3 The Chalice of Sorrow	72	65
3 Social Buccaneers	72	60
3 Gloriana	77	77
3 Stranger from Somewhere	65	52
1 The Price of Silence	100	100
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
3 The Honor of Mary Blake	57	48
1 The Right to be Happy	50	40
2 Black Orchids	90	90	1
1 Her Soul's Inspiration	50	40
1 God's Crucible	75	65
1 The Piper's Price	40	20
1 Bugler of Algiers	95	65

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Jewel	83	65
1 Scandal	80	72
2 Langdon's Legacy	80	71
2 Love's Pilgrimage	73	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83	1

RED FEATHER

70 Red Feather	65.6	61.4	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
2 Beckoning Trail	88	71
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
8 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	54
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	68	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
8 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
1 Polly, Put the Kettle On	65	70
2 Fighting for Love	73	68
1 Heart Strings	65	40
1 Love Aflame	90	80
1 The Terror	70	60

GREATER VITAGRAPH

343 Vitagraph	70.4	67.6	6
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80
5 Juggernaut	74	77
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
8 Sins of the Mothers	87	87
8 Crooky	70	69
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
3 The Cave Man	74	60
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	93
5 The Great Divide	88	75
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
3 Island of Surprise	87	85
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
8 Night Out	80	76
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
2 The Writing on the Wall	70	40
4 Kennedy Square	88	66
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	55
5 Hunted Woman	74	54
4 Hero of Submarine D-2	74	71
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
2 The Two-Edged Sword	70	55
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
7 Salvation Joan	78	59
8 God's Country and Woman	89	85
1 Love's Toll	60	80
7 Law Decides	79	68
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76
3 Lights of New York	70	78
7 The Destroyers	68	57
2 Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
4 Man Behind the Curtain	85	76
9 The Shop Girl	78	79
3 The Conflict	67	47
7 Fathers of Men	71	67
10 The Tarantula	83	74
12 Daring of Diana	62	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
10 Light at Dusk	84	71
7 The Alibi	70	80
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
4 Footlights of Fate	68	80
11 The Combat	83	85
4 The Kid	61	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
3 His Wife's Good Name	54	75
9 Through the Wall	79	61
12 The Chattel	71	82
8 Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67
5 Blue Envelope Mystery	59	62
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
9 Last Man	85	71
4 Devil's Prize	40	54

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
4 The Price of Fame	40	41
4 Dollars and the Law	45	71
5 Enemy to the King	65	66	2
3 Rose of the South	74	67
8 Whom the Gods Destroy	59	74	3
2 The Ninety and Nine	65	70	1
2 Indiscretion	48	65	1
1 Man of Mystery	40	50	1
6 My Official Wife	91	84	1
2 Glory of Yolanda	75	70	1
1 The Enemy	60	60

KEYS

98 K-E-S-E Service	69.1	64.5	22

1 The Bank	90	90	1
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
2 Thou Shalt Not Covet	78	52
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
1 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
1 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
1 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
1 The Raven	87	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
8 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
2 Shepherd of Bargain Row	65	55
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
3 That Sort	70	45	1

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
7 The Return of Eve	75	74	2
5 The Country God Forgot	75	65
6 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 The Innocence of Ruth	60	81
1 At Piney Ridge	60	60
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
2 Prince of Graustark	85	82	1
3 The Cossack's Whip	84	51
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
1 Last Sentence	90	90
2 Truant Soul	98	73	1
1 Skinner's Dress Suit	100	80	1

SPECIAL FEATURES

1 Heart of Maryland	0	40
1 The Immortal Flame	80	72
1 Her Surrender	85	70
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
5 The Christian	81	78	1
6 Birth of a Nation	100	100	5
2 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
11 The Common Law	89	95	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
4 The Libertine	86	91	4
1 My Country First	60	60
5 The Foolish Virgin	29	57	1
7 The Pride of the Clan	83	86	6
1 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea	90	100	1
1 The Crisis	80	75
11 Less Than the Dust	67	84	4
9 War Brides	73	66	7
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
3 Civilization	60	67	1
2 Cabiria	45	45
2 Marvelous Maciste	85	55
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
5 The Iron Hand	65	46
8 Police	63	81
3 Tilly's Punctured Romance	95	95	2
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
6 The Whirl of Life	69	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	91	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	63
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	68	1
8 Eternal City	90	95	1
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
4 Little Girl Next Door	75	95	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
7 Where Are My Children?	84	89	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
11 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	78	58	2
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1
1 Whoso Taketh A Wife	90	90
1 Lash of Destiny	80	50

SERIALS

1 Patria	90	95
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
8 Who's Guilty	78	78
9 Iron Claw	92	91
2 Diamond Runners	84	83
5 Shielding Shadow	90	89
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
8 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
1 Lass of the Lumberlands	20	60
1 Girl and the Game	73	45

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Address Van Dyke Studio, 939 8th Ave. Columbus 9630

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON

Heavies

YORKE METRO

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

ENTERTAINING COMEDY DRAMA. STARS HAVE PERSONALITY

Irene Howley and Jack Devereaux in

HER FATHER'S KEEPER

Eastern Fine Arts-Triangle

DIRECTORS	The Rosson Brothers
AUTHOR	Robert Shirley
CAMERAMAN	Roy Overbaugh
AS A WHOLE	Stars with personality in classy atmosphere register humanly
STORY	Had human spots and held nicely
DIRECTION	Registered many laughs; gave distinctive, classy atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Very good
CAMERA WORK	Splendid; effective vignetting
STARS	Both have personalities that will win
SUPPORT	Some splendid types
EXTERIORS	Taken intelligently
INTERIORS	Classy
DETAIL	Many fine little touches
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

I FIGURE this as one that will be considered excellent entertainment anywhere. The story has a human note with lots of comedy, and it holds nicely despite one or two places where it slows a bit.

Irene Howley is good to look at and plays humanly, with an enthusiasm that convinces.

Jack Devereaux looks like a real "find." He is the only man outside of "Doug" Fairbanks that I've seen who puts over the buoyant-enthusiasm personality stuff on the screen without having it appear forced. He'll win any audience before he has gone six scenes, and from that time on all of his antics will do much towards holding the interest in what is developing among the various characterizations.

The plot has to do with a society girl who wanted to watch over her father because her dead mother had feared that a desire for more wealth would drag the father into something illegal, and that trouble might result.

Mr. Devereaux, the son of the business rival of Miss Howley's father, wanted to marry Miss Howley. Her father, Frank Currier, said "No," and said it emphatically. She then asked for a chance to work in father's office and be a business woman, and when father refused there was a split, and the little lady walked out and landed down in Washington Square to live with an aunt.

When father learned that Mr. Devereaux was a nightly visitor, he determined to break his firm in the "Street." Miss Hawley, in order to be on the job, persuaded her father's secretary to take a vacation, and she appeared in her place. Father, who had said that he would never speak to his daughter, again permitted her to stay, despite the fact that it made him quite peeved. This was rather an impossible situation, but it provided some good little touches.

Daughter then learned that father was arranging an illegal combine to whip her sweetheart, and so she and sweetheart hung a dictagraph in father's home and then presented him with a copy of the conversation while sweetheart stood across the street ready to drop another copy in the mail box, addressed to the attorney general, but, of course, father and his friends agreed to call everything off and we had a happy clutch on the finish.

Since I figure this is written purely for purposes of entertainment, and since it is essentially comedy, all the impossible or improbable points can be overlooked Certainly there are lots of laughs—and they are sure-fire laughs earned by intelligent touches.

There was a funny old type used as a detective by father in keeping tab on his daughter, who will be responsible for quite a lot of hilarity.

I want to comment particularly upon the camera work, because the vignetting of many scenes was decidedly effective.

There were some excellent titles planted in the action, and they helped the fun-getting qualities of the offering. quite a little.

Others in the cast were Jack Raymond, John Hanneford and Walter Russell.

The Box Office Angle

To get any money with this you'll have to make a fuss about it.

Irene Howley is fairly well known to dyed-in-the-wool picture fans, but she isn't known to the once-in-a-while patron. Jack Devereaux is new and an unknown quantity to all of your fans, although he has been with "Bunker Bean" for two years, and, in case that production has played in your city, I'd mention it.

I would say that you can safely recommend this as an entertaining human comedy, and you might sneak in the statement that it is the type of story which has been used for Douglas Fairbanks.

It is never nice to make comparisons, but Jack Devereaux's work can't help but remind one of "Doug" because of the similarity in general style, but certainly no one can accuse Mr. Devereaux of doing anything like an imitation of Mr. Fairbanks. I understand that he has worked along the same lines for some time, and so he must not be classed with some picture folk who've recently tried to change their style to register things as "Doug" does.

I believe Miss Howley is a very good bet, and since I understand that she is to be starred in another Triangle offering, I'd certainly advise that you plug her strong in your advertising in order to build an asset for future billing.

Make it very plain that this is comedy and that it is clean. I believe that those points will pull more business today than any other advertising angles which you might possibly think out. Community film fans are a bit sick of the sex stuff and the surface "meller."

WID'S REACHES THREE THOUSAND OF THE BEST THEATRES, BOTH LARGE AND SMALL, IN THIS COUNTRY. AND IT'S READ.

MELLER WITH HUNCHBACKS AND DUMPS DOESN'T ENTERTAIN

Wedgwood Nowell and Gypsy Harte in

THE PULSE OF LIFE

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Rex Ingram
AUTHOR	E. Magnus Ingleton
SCENARIO BY	Rex Ingram
CAMERAMAN	Duke Hayward
AS A WHOLE	Artistic, but depressing; hardly entertaining
STORY	Never hits hard, and slumps on finish
DIRECTION	Gave fine atmosphere, but over-emphasized unpleasant items
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Some distinctive bits
STARS	Good; she has very expressive face
SUPPORT	Objectionable hunchbacks
EXTERIORS	Some very fine
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Good, but too much rough stuff
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

I HOPE some good friend takes Director Rex Ingram out and shows him a bit of the sunny side of life some day. I'm getting sort uv peeved with Rex, because he insists on giving us such depressing stories of the seamy side of life, with the unpleasant sight in every one of his offerings of not one, but several unfortunates, maneuvering about apparently for no purpose other than to show their afflictions.

Most every one feels sorry for a hunchback, but I can't feel that the average film fan likes to see a production in which these unfortunates are brought into the action apparently for no other reason than to show their deformities, with the additional unpleasant fact that in many places they are roughly treated. Possibly Rex is searching for the distinction of being the "Hunchback Director." I don't know what it is—but, anyway, it's all wrong.

There's nothing particularly unusual or new about this plot, it being the old story of the girl lured from her home in Italy by the smooth-tongued stranger who tired of her after reaching America, with the result that she drifted into the underworld.

A young artist "fell" for her while using her as his model, which caused complications with his guardian and fiancée, the customary murder and false accusation drifting in about the fourth reel.

Instead of having the fuse blow out this time, the hero's execution was halted when he fainted just outside the death chamber, this word coming to us after the governor had dramatically announced, "It is too late; he has been executed!"

Possibly with the thought of making it a bit different, they then sent the Italian shero back to her waiting father in the old country, while hero and his fiancée did a clutch. That was possibly logical, but since the entire story was purely surface meller, the ending might have been along the same conventional lines.

Wedgwood Nowell, as the glib-tongued stranger, was quite satisfactory, but didn't make any unusual impressions in this character.

Gypsy Harte registered the most distinctive characterization, and this young lady seems to have a particularly expressive face suggesting possibilities for dramatic work which may bring her up rapidly if given the proper opportunity.

The other members of the cast were quite satisfactory, although their work didn't stand out. In the cast were Dorothy Barrett, Molly Malone, Nick Dunaew, Al MacQuarrie, Millard Wilson and Seymour Hastings.

Most of the regulars have a sort of feeling of antagonism these days when a director shows a character arriving in New York Harbor, proving that it is New York by flashing the Statue of Liberty. They evidently had no stock piece of this, and to show us our lady of the blazing torch, what do you think they went and done? Oh, boy! They painted a back drop showing our friend of the guiding light with stationary clouds in the back, and took a close-up picture of this, which was cut into the action so as to register the fact that the characters were sailing into New York Harbor. I think this is positively criminal!

The Box Office Angle

This is rather an artistic production and has a few good dramatic moments, with some excellent underworld atmosphere, but I think it is entirely too rough and too noticeably lacking in worth-while elements to register as good entertainment with the average fan.

Good lightings and artistic atmosphere are just as desirable as ever, but they can hardly put over an offering to-day unless the story has some value.

If you have a small community house which seems to care particularly for the more wholesome little bits of entertainment, I believe I'd dodge this, because it lacks the worth-while qualities to make it really "enjoyable."

If your people like mellerdrammer with a touch of the rough stuff and a goodly sprinkling of underworld characters, they may consider this a very good offering because of Miss Harte's work and the fact that it is decidedly artistic at times.

If you should decide to play it, advertise Miss Harte particularly, because she is the dominant personality of the offering.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General
of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios
and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York City

MORE SUBSCRIBERS MEANS BIGGER, BETTER WID'S

STAR'S FINISHED VAMP WORK MAKES IT INTERESTING

Dorothy Dalton in

THE DARK ROAD

Ince-Triangle

DIRECTOR	Charles Miller
AUTHOR	John Lynch
SCENARIO BY	J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN	Clyde De Vinna
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE	Voluptious vampire in classy settings
STORY	Episodical victim incidents, with war background
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive atmosphere and made some scenes impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some quite distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Worked wicked wiles wonderfully well
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Some excellent shots
INTERIORS	Distinctive
DETAIL	Very good, although convenient
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

THERE will undoubtedly be a great many people who will not like this, simply because it presents a vampire who begins the story as a wife and then, for sheer love of variety, shifts her affections from one to another of the other characters who appear on the scene. Of course, she "cashes in" on the finish.

The European war was used as a background, with Miss Dalton's final "friend" turning out to be a spy who had secured information from her regarding the movements of the English.

Hubby learned of his wife's treachery when this spy's message was intercepted, and he had the spy arrested and then threw a knife at a picture of Cleopatra, which the "vamp" seemed to worship, with the result that, when the knife pierced the heart of the woman in the painting, the "vamp" standing before it ceased to live.

I'm not just sure what school of psychic research this thought comes under, and I don't think audiences will worry much, the main point being that they get the vampire out of the way without making hubby a murderer.

Throughout this offering Miss Dalton, who has quite a "figger," gave us an elaborate exhibition of the most approved methods of the successful society "wamp." Her work was convincing, to say the least, and it'll undoubtedly prove interesting to many.

Robert McKim, as the willunous spy, gave a splendid performance, with Jack Livingston and Jack Gilbert, as the husband and victim No. 1, acceptable in their respective parts.

Walt Whitman and Lydia Knott were the parents of Mr. Gilbert, who entertained the vampire while she made love to their son.

The Box Office Angle

As a plot this is interesting, although it has the objectionable vampire element, but it can hardly be called a story which truly stirs.

If your patrons are rather bitter against the showing of the details of a vampire at work, I'd forget this, because it has little else of any interest. If your fans seem to like the vampire stuff, they should consider this decidedly entertaining.

Miss Dalton has done a number of quite worth-while characterizations, and by referring to some of her films of the past you can possibly pull in quite a little business. It would certainly be necessary for you, however, to refer to these other films, because her name isn't yet big enough to be generally remembered without such a reminder.

HUMAN CHARACTERIZATIONS, RATHER ENTERTAINING; ENDING TOO LONG

Wilfred Lucas in

A LOVE SUBLIME.

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTORS	Tod Browning and Wilfred Lucas
AUTHOR	Samuel Hopkins Adams
SCENARIO BY	Tod Browning and Wilfred Lucas
AS A WHOLE	Character study that registers
STORY	Human touches and action nicely blended
DIRECTION	Made scenes effective and kept atmosphere human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good; not unusual
LIGHTINGS	Acceptable; not distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Forceful, yet very human
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Had atmospheric touches
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE that the tendency everywhere is toward the human characterization heart-interest story.

Here we get a little offering centered about a big Greek iron-worker and a little waitress from a restaurant, with the greater part of the action occurring in a little square where various Bohemian folk congregated.

The waitress was injured in an accident—which, by the way, was remarkably well handled—and afterward had to go to a hospital for an operation.

Through the carelessness of a busy interne, Mr. Lucas was told that she had died, when he called for information one day. He started a rough-house in the hospital and was sent to jail for thirty days.

When he came out, his mind was somewhat affected, and every night he stood in the park to serenade with his clarionet under the window of the hospital room formerly occupied by his sweetheart.

He was attacked by roughnecks and rescued by the Bohemian gathering, who afterward located his sweetheart through one of the roughneck gang, who had been injured, telling them of a girl in the hospital who had at one time given him some big Greek cigarettes.

The girl, who had called at the rooms and was told that Mr. Lucas had gone back to Greece, had taken employment in the hospital, and there was a very effective reunion between these two. The scenes following the clutch at the end, however, were held entirely too long. It was good stuff, but when you pull a clutch in a picture these days, the audience starts to go home. No matter how human the additional footage may be, it is hard to hold them.

There were many splendid types in this, such as the little red doctor, the parson who could fight and do other things like human beings, and the artist—not forgetting the roughneck of the hospital, who gave a splendid performance.

Mr. Lucas is a powerfully-built man and suggests tremendous strength. He carried through this characterization beautifully with a number of little bits of pathos that will certainly "get under the shirt" of most any one.

Carmel Myers, as the girl, was decidedly pleasing.

There were many unusually well-worded titles in this, some of them being sure-fire laugh-getters.

In the supporting cast were Fred Turner, Alice Rae, George Beranger, Jack Brammall, James O'Shea and Bert Woodruff.

The Box Office Angle

In communities where they prefer the human characterizations to ordinary melodrama, I'd say that this would please very much. There is more action to it than we have had in some of Mr. Lucas' other productions, and there is an excellent heart-interest suspense element.

I believe you can feel very safe about recommending this as an offering that will certainly register, no matter what sort of community you have. There are scores of good touches, and the titles help to plant them effectively. Occasionally there is a spot which is a bit slow, but we get enough genuine action to more than offset this.

Wilfred Lucas has done a number of exceptional characterizations, so that his ability is generally recognized. I believe that the chief problem you will have in getting business on this is to assure your patrons that there is enough action and suspense-heart-interest in the story to hold their attention.

Understand, I don't consider this one of the greatest films of the year, but certainly it is far superior to the ordinary surface melodrama stuff which is being turned out by the stereotyped machinery of most program releasing companies.

ANCIENT FARCE IDEA MADE FAIRLY PLEASING BY HANDLING

Lionel Barrymore and Irene Howley in

HIS FATHER'S SON

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	George D. Baker
AUTHORS	Rennold Wolf and Channing Pollock
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	John Arnold
AS A WHOLE	Crude in spots, but has good laughs
STORY	Very ordinary and ancient, but trimmings get laughs
DIRECTION	Saved several ordinary situations by handling
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; some bad spots
LIGHTINGS	Varied; good and poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STARS	He, a bit forced at times, but registered generally; she, excellent
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Good; not particularly distinctive
DETAIL	Good for comedy
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERING the fact that this is the old "rich man's son who bet he could hold a job for a month," I believe that Producer George Baker has done exceptionally well in making it entertaining comedy with a few very good spots.

Of course, there was the girl—and Irene Howley is quite SOME girl. She has personality. Both Miss Howley and Mr. Barrymore had fathers, and the fathers were enemies, and rival gem collectors.

With Mr. Barrymore serving as butler in Miss Howley's home, he caught the crook and married the girl on the finish. Of course, the crook was the "London Larry" type posing as an English lord.

Now, I'll leave it to you if that isn't SOME original story!

In one or two places Mr. Baker gave us stuff that was a bit different, and there are enough laughs in the offering as it stands to carry it by, because no one will ever take it seriously at any time.

Lionel Barrymore seemed a bit forced in his efforts to be funny in some of his scenes, but, despite these bad spots, he registered generally in a rather pleasing manner.

Frank Currier and Charlie Eldridge, as the fathers, were both good.

A lot of burlesque melodrama was dragged in, which was done a la Keystone stuff, and it'll surely register rather well. The funniest point in this burlesque, however, was a scene where various "extras" came out and waited for Mr. Barrymore to hit them on the head with a stuffed club. The boys weren't supposed to know that they were going to be hit, but each one stopped at the head of the stairs and involuntarily pulled in his horns a bit while waiting for the big club to descend, which would send him tumbling to the bottom of the stairs.

They also dragged in a "shadow party," in order to get over a couple of pieces of business, one being a love scene and the other a thief working at a safe shown in the shadow on the screen. While these effects were all right, it was rather silly to see about fifty or sixty supposedly intelligent society people gathered before a screen where a gink did the old shadow stuff with his hands. This would have been satisfactory as an incidental part of an evening's entertainment, but it was presented as the important event of the evening, with considerable preparation beforehand and several titles referring to the party as a "shadow party." I certainly think that these titles should be changed so as to leave this as a little surprise incident during the evening rather than the main thought of the gathering.

Others in the cast were Walter Horton, George A. Wright and Phil Sandford.

The Box Office Angle

While this is not a marvelous production, I believe that you can certainly get it by very nicely, because there are a lot of laughs in it, and as entertainment it moves smoothly enough to be generally accepted.

Miss Howley is now being starred by Triangle, and she has a splendid picture in her first offering, "Her Father's Keeper," so that you can play her up strongly in connection with Mr. Barrymore.

It might be a good idea here to mention the fact that this comedy was produced by George D. Baker, who produced "The Wager," "The Dust of Egypt" and many other Metro and Vitagraph successes.

Don't promise that this is a startling success, but say, rather, that you feel certain they will get enough laughs out of this to make it an enjoyable evening. Talk about Lionel Barrymore's work in "The Yellow Streak" and "Dorian's Divorce."

UNCONVINCING SURFACE STORY IS FAIRLY ENTERTAINING

Marc MacDermott and Peggy Hyland in

BABETTE

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Charles J. Brabin
AUTHOR	F. Berkeley Smith
SCENARIO BY	A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN	Jos. Schelderfer
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting, but never grips
STORY	Spotty; painfully convenient; unconvincing
DIRECTION	Some good atmosphere; composition and grouping stagey, with action rather theatric
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; too contrasty in spots
LIGHTINGS	Some very fine; others contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Too few angles
STARS	Pleasing, but rather theatric
SUPPORT	Quite acceptable
EXTERIORS	Rather "setty"; lacked distinctive beauty
INTERIORS	Some very good; a few "stagey"
DETAIL	Quite convenient
TIME	Seventy-four minutes (5 parts)

THIS a story, this is one of those obliging plots that wanders along with very few complications and always a convenient twist to straighten out every tangle. It seems to me that such situations as these have long ago been laid upon the shelf.

A starving man snatches a bankroll from a gink's hand, in a bank, is arrested and recognized as a famous crook, and when confronted by the man from whom he had taken the money, we found that the thief's wife had saved the injured party's wife from starving, just a reel before, and so, of course, the thief was not held.

That should be good for a groan.

Then, immediately following that situation, we had this thief happy with his wife and child for the final clutch, and although he had been unable to sell a single painting through two or three reels, he received a letter announcing that he had won the grand prize at the Paris salon. Oh, boy—truly "They do it in the movies!"

The best thing in this offering was a few scenes planted at the beginning which were entirely incidental to the story. They showed a group of tourists visiting an old dungeon, with the keeper of this dungeon telling them wild tales about the prisoners, the ghosts, etc., all of which were backed up by fake prisoners and dollar-a-day "ghosts," very much as the "opium dens" on the East Side are handled for the benefit of the boobs on the sight-seeing cars. This was a human bit and nicely handled. It should register anywhere.

Marc MacDermott has the advantage of appearance, and he has always had poise and authority. Unfortunately, however, Mr. MacDermott is rather inclined towards the theatric, and in this he made too many gestures.

Peggy Hyland, as Babette, the dungeon-keeper's daughter, who fell in love with the famous thief and agreed to marry him, not knowing his past, was rather pleasing, but she had little opportunity for anything that could be called emotional work.

There was one very good double-exposure bit, where in Miss Hyland's eyes, shown very large upon the screen, we had double exposed in the pupil of each a baby's face. That was the director's method of telling that a newcomer was on the way.

There were some very good lightings, but in a number of the scenes the photography was quite contrasty, and a good many of the sets looked "setty."

There were too many exterior shots taken against blank walls, or other inartistic locations that might have just as well been made with some very beautiful exterior background.

It was decidedly noticeable throughout the offering that the grouping of the characters was not particularly good. They were made to play to the camera, which is always bad.

In the supporting cast were Templar Saxe and William Dunn.

The Box Office Angle

While this is fairly interesting because of a few touches that almost get over as human, I would certainly not enthuse over it as being a great picture, because the story is painfully poor and convenient and the general handling is kept from being truly convincing by the theatric gestures and the stagey grouping of the characters.

If Marc MacDermott and Peggy Hyland can pull you money at the box office, then this is a good bet for one day. It isn't so bad but what your regulars will accept it as a one-day offering. I certainly would not play it longer than that, particularly if your fans are checking you up carefully on story values.

CRUDE OLD SCHOOL MELLER THAT NEVER HITS HOME

Charlotte Walker in

MARY LAWSON'S SECRET

Thanhouser-Pathe

DIRECTOR	John B. O'Brien
AUTHOR	Lloyd Lonergan
CAMERAMAN	W. B. Harris
DIRECTION	Lacked human note; followed old-school "meller" stuff
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good
LIGHTINGS	Acceptable; not distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Quite camera-conscious
SUPPORT	Ordinary; also camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Lacked artistic distinction
INTERIORS	Rather "setty"
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THIS is one of those surface "mellers" that swings along without ever registering in a convincing manner, and about every so often they had a convenient twist that truly made you groan internally.

I believe that it's time to give proper burial to the situation of finding the innocent heroine standing over the dead man with a weapon, which shall be followed by the trial scene showing the judge and jury for many close-ups. In this, they cut to the judge, who was giving a correct imitation of a wooden Indian, at least ten times.

They then pulled an escape while the convicted innocent was being taken to prison, but they didn't show the actual scene where she was rescued from her guards—probably because they thought the censors might cut it out, anyway.

Then came the wager made by the millionaire hero that he could go to a strange town with only a dollar in his pocket, get a job and hold it for a month. Some guy was supposed to bet him $10,000 that he couldn't. I'd like to find a few of those ginks willing to bet on such a proposition. This same thought was pulled in a Metro comedy this week. Truly, "Great (?) minds do run in the same channel."

Of course, hero met the escaped innocent, and they were married and happy until our expected friend, the blackmailer, showed up. He was taken care of, however, and then they pulled a bird!

Two guys who were said to be "newspapermen" nonchalantly walked into the millionaire's private grounds and stood ten feet away with a camera, tripod, etc., snapping a picture of the millionaire and his wife without the couple ever noticing that they were there. To begin with, newspapermen don't work like that, a tripod isn't necessary, and believe me—they couldn't get a picture under such circumstances without being seen. Anyone will know that, but the photograph was needed so that it could be printed in the papers and bring the officers of the law to arrest the escaped innocent convict, millionaire's bride.

Well, when the officers came, the millionaire and his bride did a getaway across a lake in a motorboat, encountering a storm. They were wrecked, and each thought the other dead, with a number of scenes centered around a coffin (which most members of an audience will not care for) only to find out at the end that the blackmailer was in the coffin, and not either wife or husband—and the obliging blackmailer had confessed that he, and not the wife, was guilty of the murder.

It's easy to see that this is not what would be called a convincing plot, and certainly it was done with entirely too much stress on the surface melodrama to make it register. The entire cast were so conscious of the camera that the scenes never really impress.

Charlotte Walker seemed unable to get away from the fact that she was acting, and, to my mind, she is far from being a girlish ingenue type, so it can't be said that she helped the offering by her presence.

Others in the cast were N. S. Wood, Inda Palmer, and Robert Vaughn.

The Box Office Angle

It would seem to me that you should be able to find something which should register better than this. Miss Walker's work on the screen to date has not been sufficiently satisfactory to make her a real box office value, and the convenience of the story and the fact that it is purely surface melo puts this in the class of films to be accepted if necessary but dodged if possible.

Certainly I would not show it more than one night, and I wouldn't show it at all if a more human offering can be secured.

I can't see any advertising angle that would make it possible for you to honestly boost this. The story would sound pitifully pre-historic if you told them the plot.

ANCIENT OBVIOUS MELO WITH ARTISTIC LIGHTINGS

Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman in

THE PRISON WITHOUT WALLS

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	E. Mason Hopper
AUTHOR	Robert E. MacAlarney
ADAPTED BY	Beulah Marie Dix
CAMERAMAN	Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE	Surface meller junk; never registers
STORY	Obvious; convenient; ordinary
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive atmosphere, but situations were beyond saving
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Artistic; distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STARS	Pleasing, but had little to do except look hansom'
SUPPORT	Routine movie types
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Generally good; bad newspaper insert
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

ANY ordinary fan will have this one guessed before it is on the screen five minutes.

It is the ordinary surface "meller" telling of the prison expert who was locked up in order that he might get evidence against the "man higher up." Of course, the "man higher up" was engaged to marry the heroine, and the prison expert immediately fell in love with her, she obligingly taking him into her home as a secretary, it being explained that she had a hobby for reforming crooks.

In the offing was a maid who had also been taken into the shero's home to be reformed, and she, throughout the offering, scowled fiercely at the willun from behind her "fortifications." Occasionally the willun condescended to give her a smile, whereupon she agreed to do his "doity woik."

After trying to "get" the hero once or twice, the willun finally forced an ex-convict to go to shero's home and rob the safe. He planned to place the blame on hero, not knowing that hero was a prison expert, but, of course, the gink what went to do the job had been befriended in prison by shero, so instead of finishing the job he took a note to the governor, while Friend Shero came down in her nightie and discovered hero at the safe. Some new (?) situation!

Then came the final grand clean-up in the governor's office, with the "man higher up" being introduced to the hero prison expert, with all his accomplices gathered about to verify the evidence against him.

Just to make it more "intrickut," the lady of the "fortifications" shot the willun at the end.

This thing never had a chance to register as anything except ordinary "movie meller," and it seems a shame to waste good lightings and atmosphere on such a story.

William Conklin, who did the willun, had a black moustache which was most willunous.

Others in the cast were Billy Elmer, Lillian Leighton and Helen Ankewich.

The Box Office Angle

I can't figure that this will be considered a good offering, because it is such an ordinary routine "meller." It has been given rather a good setting and the players are satisfactory, but film fans surely do not relish the constant repetition of these obvious stories. This same thought has been used before, and I hardly feel that there is any angle in the story which can be safely exploited.

If you must play this program stuff and can't get something outside which will be better, I would say that it would be advisable to simply advertise the name of this offering and the stars, without any promise regarding the story or production. Certainly I wouldn't play this more than a day.

IT SURELY IS A TRAGEDY, DESPITE IMPRESSIVE ATMOSPHERE

Florence Reed in

THE ETERNAL SIN

Brenon Productions—Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR.....Herbert Brenon
ADAPTED FROM.....Victor Hugo's "Lucretia Borgia"
SCENARIO BY.....George Edward Hall
CAMERAMAN.....J. Roy Hunt
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR.....George Fitch
EDITED BY.....James McKay
AS A WHOLE.....Tragic melo that misses fire badly
STORY.....Incoherent at start; got funny towards end
DIRECTION.....Impressive beauty and distinction, but dramatic scenes over-reach and fail to register
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Many very beautiful bits; some just good
LIGHTINGS.....Some distinctive; some just good
CAMERA WORK.....Good
STAR.....Very impressive until story broke; then missed fire
SUPPORT.....Sort of jumbled background; not clearly defined; parts didn't stand out
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere perfectly; well chosen; some very beautiful
INTERIORS.....Many very big and impressive; some just good
DETAIL.....Story not clear at times; atmosphere excellent
TIME.....One hour and thirty minutes (8 parts)

TRULY, this was an unfortunate choice for a feature film. It was just still more unfortunate that the producer didn't stop the story before he came to the antidote situation. There could have been a big, tragic finale with the first poisoning, and while even then it would not be an audience-appeal picture, it would have been much better than it is.

Producer Herbert Brenon has given us a very impressive atmosphere with big sets and good detail, and his choice of exterior locations was excellent. But he has undertaken to do something which is a very dangerous thing to attempt, and that is to transfer dramatic situations which would be great on the speaking stage, to the screen. Although working under the handicap of being a costume story and a tragedy—and these are truly handicaps—there was a still greater obstacle—that of attempting to make melodramatic moments hold which positively have not a chance without the aid of the human voice.

If Florence Reed had been portraying the big scenes which came in the latter part of this offering on the stage, her voice would have held the audience serious and attentive, and thereby would have made a decidedly favorable impression. Without the voice and with the use of melodramatic speeches given as titles these situations became funny.

The story tells of Lucretia Borgia, wife of the ruler, having kept a son in the charge of faithful friends without him knowing whom his mother was or her husband having any knowledge of his existence.

The son had five companions, who, as we might expect, had five fathers, and her son's companions decided that they were the ones to kill Lucretia's brother. They did, and then she killed each one of them by torture, the harrowing details of which were shown to the audience and also the five sons who came to plead for mercy.

The story up to this point was not clearly handled, because most every one about me thought that Lucretia's son was one of the five boys who came to plead for a father. In fact, I thought so myself for quite a time.

After this torture incident the action slowed up quite a bit, but we soon saw the five sons merrily setting out for a carnival, with apparently little thought of the awful fate that had come to their fathers. Lucretia's son also came to this carnival, and, while I think of it, I want to mention that it seemed to be a funny sort of a carnival, because we never saw any one on the street except these six guys.

Anyway, Lucretia learned that her son was in town, put on a mask and went out to see him. When she took off her mask, after practically telling him that she was his mother, the five companions rushed up and denounced her as the famous poison champ. For this she swore vengeance, and immediately plotted that the five ginks should be poisoned.

Muchly peeved at discovering that he had been conversing with the best little poisoner in the country, son walked out to the front gate and pried the "B" off Lucretia's name, which left it "O-R-G-I-A," this being considered a great insult.

For thus tearing up the front gate, Lucretia's husband, who thought this young feller was his wife's lover, had him arrested and gave him the privilege of poisoning the man who had thus insulted her. Then came the fireworks.

After a very, very dramatic scene, which began to hit on only about "two" after running a while, Lucretia finally fed the wine to son. I was ready to quit. I figured the show was over after she had failed to put over the good old trick of switching the glasses, and then—oh, boy, what d'ye s'pose she went and done?

Here she had us all worked up to figuring that this kid was going to cash in, and then she reached down—I cant' tell you where—and brought up "Eureka," the antidote. I could just "feel" that audience. It was a mental groan. From that moment on there wasn't a chance.

Things got even worse, though, because the son promptly wandered out and joined the five faithful fighters, who were joyfully hieing themselves to the party Lucretia had prepared. There were ladies enough at the table to go around, and the females had been handed the white wine, which was "pe-ure," while the gents were given the red wine, which we knew was deadly poison.

They all went to it quick, so as to save footage, and then—ha, ha! From back of the great velvet curtain stepped the Interlocutor! It was Lucretia, and she exclaimed: "Gentlemen, you are all poisoned!" This was bad enough, boys, but just to prove that she hadn't started, the curtains were drawn to one side, and there—there before them stood five perfectly good broadcloth coffins, 1917 models—and, by heck, Lucretia had even gone to the trouble of having each guy's name planted on his particular coffin.

Now, this poison of Lucretia's had a funny way of working. It seemed that you had quite a little time to live after drinking it—although it'd sure "git yer" in the end. Here stood these five ginks, knowing that they were going to die, and not a bloomin' one of 'em tried to stick a knife into 'Cretia. They all filed in and looked for the place-cards so as to know whose coffin was "which," and then the curtains were allowed to fall back, so that 'Cretia dear and son could be dramatic in the foreground.

Several around me were beginning to lay odds that son had enough antidote in him that the second dose was not going to touch him anyway, when mother again reached down into the place which I couldn't mention before and produced—ha, ha! you've guessed it!—the "nanny-goat!" Immediately all bets were off, but son got dramatic and said if there wasn't enough for all of 'em, that, by heck—he wasn't going to drink any, and with a gesture which clearly said "Coises!" he hurled it to the floor. Then he proceeded to do the job which the five should've undertaken—to stick a knife gently into mother, and they only had five coffins!

Although many parts of this story were not clearly intelligible and many of the characters in the supporting cast were hard to follow, still there was an awful lot of diagram "This-is-a-chair" titles which were decidedly unnecessary. A good many of these came in before dramatic scenes which could be understood by almost any one. It also struck me that Lucretia and her boy must have had an awful time making those fancy "M's" with which they began the letters they wrote—unless they had a rubber stamp.

William E. Shay, who appeared as Miss Reed's husband, had very little to do but stand around and look sore. He did that, all right. The son seemed to be a little bit too light for his part. The other characters were quite satisfactory, but the parts didn't stand out.

In the supporting cast were Stephen Grattan, Richard Barthelmess, Alex. K. Shannon, A. G. Parker, M. J. Briggs, Edward Thorne, Anthony Merlo, Elmer Patterson, William Welsh, Henry Armetta, Juliet Brenon, Jane Fearnley and Henrietta Gilbert.

The Box Office Angle.

Despite all the things that are wrong with this, you can probably get it over for one time around, because a great many of your fans will be afraid to say that they don't like it, being that it is so impressive as to atmosphere.

However, I certainly would not take any chances on playing this for several days, because they'll probably "get next" to it. Certainly it isn't what would be called entertaining.

When Mr. Brenon's friends get through telling him about this tragedy, I'm quite sure that he'll not make any more stories like this. He is now working on a detective production—"The Lone Wolf"—and I think he will be big enough to admit that this was an artistic error and come through with real stuff next time.

Kindly understand that there is a lot about this film in the way of big sets and atmosphere detail that will register with the average audience with sufficient strength to keep them wondering as to whether they can afford to admit that they didnt like it.

If you play it be sure that you make it very plain that it is a tragedy dealing with the poisonings of the famous Lucretia Borgia. Prepare them for some horrible details, and in that way you can very possibly get by. I fear that most any audience will see the funny side of the situations after the antidote gets into action, but you will have to take a chance on that, and there's a gambler's chance that a majority of your fans will be afraid to kick.

You have an excellent opportunity of featuring Miss Reed, not because of her previous picture appearances, but because of the fact that she has one of the most prominent parts in the biggest dramatic theatrical offering in New York City at the present time—"The Wanderer," which is playing at the Manhattan Opera House. Go to that angle strong! It will certainly stir up considerable respect for Miss Reed.

Of course, you know Mr. Brenon's reputation, he having produced "A Daughter of the Gods," "War Brides" and many other features.

FAIRLY ENTERTAINING, BUT MORE MELO THAN HUMAN

Jack Pickford in

THE DUMMY

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Francis J. Grandon
AUTHORS	Harriet Ford and Harvey J. O'Higgins
SCENARIO BY	Eve Unsell
CAMERAMAN	Lawrence E. Williams
AS A WHOLE	Comedy with good and bad spots
STORY	Missed much comedy; drama became "meller"
DIRECTION	Gave more action than characterization
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	Good personality for character
SUPPORT	Acceptable
EXTERIORS	Lacked distinction or beauty
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Convenient at times
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

AS a play "The Dummy" depended more upon characterizations and some good laughs than upon the melodrama. Unfortunately, in the picturization we find the actors doing things which make us think that any minute the feller will step from behind the curtain and announce that "On next Saturday night we will give away a beautiful couch and a set of dishes."

A few good moments are registered, with a number of laughs from the messenger-boy "dummy" detective situation, but not one-tenth of the opportunities were taken advantage of.

The plot concerns a kidnapping case, with a messenger boy who wanted to be a detective entering the situation as a "plant," placed by the detectives on the case. This messenger boy was also kidnapped, with the understanding that he was a deaf mute son of a Chicago millionaire.

The balance of the story has to do with his neat rescue of the little girl from the kidnappers and finally from the sheriff, who tried to lock the kids up in order to claim the $10,000 reward.

The boy hero landed the child safely in the detective's office, and it finished with the reward and the very good last line of the play, where he was asked what he was going to do with his money and replied: "Count it."

If they had stopped the offering as they did the play, with that line, it would leave everyone with a smile on his face, but instead of doing that we found another thirty or forty feet showing the young hero "feeding" himself. That certainly isn't necessary. Anyone could figure that he was going to get a "feed" after landing such a reward.

Jack Pickford, as "The Dummy," and Ethelmary Oakland, as the little kidnapped child, were the bright spots in this offering. Their work will make it register as interesting.

Frank Losee, as the detective, was very good, and the kidnappers and parents were acceptable.

The child's mother wore an unnecessarily lo-and-behold gown in most of her scenes, about which the director should be spoken to gently.

Others in the cast were Edwin Stanley, Helen Greene, and Ruby Hoffman.

The Box Office Angle

While this offering fails decidedly in registering all of the human character touches presented in the play, it will probably be accepted as an interesting little offering by the average fan, who has become hardened because of the preponderance of ordinary junk.

Jack Pickford's name may be worth something at the box office because of his sister's prestige, and you can mention the fact that he was recently co-starred in "Great Expectations" with Louise Huff.

If you figure that you can safely play this, you might arouse some interest by telling your fans that it is a story of a messenger boy, who had a chance to be a detective, posing as a deaf mute. That sounds interesting.

If you are playing Paramount pictures for a week, I believe that you can probably get an outside subject which will have more box office strength and give more satisfaction.

This should be a safe bet for one day.

PLEASING STAR AND PRETTY LOCATIONS COLORED. THAT'S ALL

Pearl White in

MAY BLOSSOM

Astra—Pathe—Hand-colored

DIRECTOR	Edward Jose
AUTHOR	Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN	Ben Struckman
AS A WHOLE	Pretty in spots, but painful story badly acted
STORY	Elementary melo, muchly padded
DIRECTION	Picked fine locations; permitted extravagant over-acting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Sometimes beautiful; sometimes ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Some very beautiful; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good, but not enough angles
STAR	Pleasing in hoop-skirts
SUPPORT	Very "actory"
EXTERIORS	Coloring and locations will save it
INTERIORS	A few good; many ordinary; too gaudily colored
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

AS a drama this is a good colored scenic.

Very evidently this was made with the intention of hand-coloring the exteriors, and, as a result, there are scores of exquisitely beautiful locations. The interiors were also hand-colored, but unfortunately there was too much green and yellow used, with the result that the interiors looked cheap because of the gaudy colors.

The story was a very elementary "meller," which was badly overplayed, the result being that it frequently became funny. The plot was certainly not complicated.

A "lady-killer" impressed an innocent maid and secretly married her, while a young doctor stood on the sidelines and gnashed his teeth. The husband was keeping the secret because his grandfather, who was to leave him much money, didn't want him to marry.

About the time grandfather died, a singing vampire blew into town, and hubby "fell" hard. The minister who had married him had obligingly died, and the witnesses had gone to California. So he burglarized the dead minister's home, ripped "the poipers" from the record book and then "wery wiciously" stood before his wife and tore them into bits. He then married the singing "vamp."

After a goodly portion of his coin had been spent the vampire walked out on him, and then he proceeded to get "stewed" very regularly. Meanwhile, his innocent, record-destroyed wife had decided to marry the aforementioned young doctor, and in another reel they had a baby.

Of course, it was only necessary then to kill off the "stewed husband, and this was neatly done by a scene where he saw a few snakes and then overturned a lamp, with the director giving us all the details down to the final falling of the little shanty after it had burned to a crisp—and, oh, boy, I won a dollar betting that he stick in that last piece of film showing the building crumbling. How these fellers can figure there's anything dramatic in a shanty falling over after it's burned up, is more than I can guess—but they will do it!

Of course, all this was done in hoopskirts and costumes for the boys to fit, and with the coloring slapped on freely, it was certainly picturesque in spots, with the exteriors decidedly beautiful. Even the slender melodramatic story would have had a good chance with the coloring and locations as they stood, had the director kept his characters human. But Hal Ford, "wicious" he-wampire, and Niles Welch, as the actory juvenile physician, certainly put over poses which are going to take most of your regulars back to the days when they got two seats for thirty cents on Monday night.

The titles were quite in keeping with the melodramatic players, a sample being: "Midnight, and a desperate deed!"

The offering opened with a song about the bee that came along and picked a blossom, which was left afterwards, and I'm inclined to believe that, unless your regulars are charitably inclined because of the colored scenic beauty, they will think they've been beautifully "stung" by the bee.

Pearl White was the bright spot in the offering. It is rather odd to see Friend Pearl doing an ingenue after all the wild serials, but she does it well and looks like a million dollars in the hoopskirt, with the cruls hand-colored.

The Box Office Angle.

Now, despite the fact that this has some meller spots which will undoubtedly prove funny to all of your real fans, I believe that you can figure this a production which will get by, because of the beautiful exterior locations and the charm of Miss White. When a story drifts into "meller" such as this the audience gets into the "I-don't-care" spirit and accepts the beauty that comes, without serious complaint. They'll possibly mention the awful over-acting, but they will also talk about the wonderful beauty of many of the locations.

In billing this I would be very particular about emphasizing the fact that it has been hand-colored, and I'd also play up the statement that it was photographed in Maryland, in some of the most beautiful locations seen in months in any film.

HUMAN LITTLE TALES THAT WILL REGISTER

O. HENRY STORIES

Vitagraph—General Film

DIRECTOR	Thomas R. Mills
AUTHOR	O. Henry
SCENARIO BY	Helmer W. Bergman
CAMERAMAN	Fred Held
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally human character studies
STORIES	By best short story writer
DIRECTION	Characters and atmosphere kept human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Acceptable; no effort for effects
CAMERA WORK	Good
ACTING	Generally very good; a few camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Good; not exceptional
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Ninety minutes (6 Reels)

THE world has come to recognize O. Henry more and more every day as the greatest teller of human short stories.

There is a wonderful lot of material in his volumes for presentation on the screen, and I'll say that the Vitagraph Company is truly fortunate in having this material to work with.

They are presenting these stories in three-reel length, and it seems to me that it is rather a pity if they intend to confine all of the O. Henry material to that length, unless they manage to make some decided improvement in the material used for five-reel features. Of course, it is good business to have good short subjects, but it is much more important to have good feature subjects.

There is nothing exceptional or strikingly artistic about the direction or handling of these offerings, but certainly the characters have been kept human, and the wonderful descriptive phrases from the author, used as titles, surely do help the general effect.

O. Henry is particularly noted for having maintained suspense and giving a bit of a twist on the finish. This element is rather well registered in the films.

The Box Office Angle

Since, in recent years, a surprising number of O. Henry sets have been sold in this country, this having resulted in every one being more or less familiar with his knack of hitting the heart with a little touch, I believe that you should be able to do a surprisingly big business by intelligently featuring this author.

I wouldn't go wild in my advertising as to promises regarding the productions themselves being so wonderful. That is entirely unnecessary. Center your attention upon the fact that Vitagraph made these films and talk about ten times more of O. Henry than any other angle.

You can, of course, get a lot of co-operation on these pictures by having the book-stores plug them, and I believe it would be a great idea to have a certain night each week as "O. Henry Night." That gives the ones who particularly care for this author's works a chance to make arrangements sufficiently far in advance.

ORDINARY WHITE SLAVE MELO CRUDELY HANDLED

Bessie Eyton, Vivian Reed and George Fawcett in LITTLE LOST SISTER

Selig—X.-E.-S.-E.

DIRECTOR	Al Green
AUTHOR	Virginia Brooks
SCENARIO BY	Gilson Willets
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary surface "meller"; white slave stuff
STORY	Convenient action, lured-girl stuff
DIRECTION	Old-school grouping and ordinary atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary; sometimes poor
LIGHTINGS	Generally poor
CAMERA WORK	Old school; not enough angles
STARS	Ordinary
SUPPORT	Didn't register
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	"Setty"
DETAIL	Obliging
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

NO one will ever worry about sending a friend to see this. It is routine surface mellerdrammer of the girl-lured-to-the-city type, with a young soriety woman doing the reform clean-up by taking a job in the office of the man who owned all the vice property.

The funny angle about this story is that, despite the fact that this young reformer figured prominently in the newspapers, those who were to have their property confiscated through her campaign never seemed to take the trouble to find out what she looked like.

In line with the same reasoning, we found this young man walking out on the owner of the property at a certain point in the story, telling him whom she was, with the very dangerous follow-up of her going to one of the dives, where she was known as having been the owner's secretary, without any thought as to his sending notice to the dive-keeper to look out for her. Of course, the notice did come, and that brought the final big fight, with the police closing in.

The general atmosphere of this was quite ordinary and the action never registered in such a manner as to get under the skin. At the opening of this story it looked like they might be going to present some human characterizations, but the moment they landed the lured girl in the city, it was just straight surface "mellerdrammer" that settled all bets.

Mr. Fawcett, Miss Eyton and Miss Reed are hardly to be blamed for their failure to make any distinct impression, because the offering simply passed by on the screen as so much "filum." It didn't hit home.

They called the hero "Ambrose"—which I think is SOME name for a hero— and just to prove that they were good at names, they called the underworld dump the "Cafe Sinister."

Almost all of the artists in every scene were called upon to come in and play to the camera, instead of to each other, and the general indications were that a very old-timer or a very new beginner had directed this.

We were shown a reporter who came to gather news, bearing a stenographer's note-book. Oh, boy!—'tain't done!

(Continued on following page.)

C. M. ACKERMAN (Ackie)
ACTOR-AUTHOR-DIRECTOR
PALACE PLAYERS FILM CORP.
TIMES BLDG.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

FRANCIS J. GRANDON
PRODUCING FEATURES
LASKY

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID'S IS READ NOT SKIMMED

(Continued from preceding page)

If you want to get just an idea as to the atmosphere and tone of this entire offering, I'll give you one title, which came when the Cafe Sinister was raided. It said: "Patience, my sister, fly from this place!"

In the supporting cast were Harry Lonsdale, Al W. Filson, Will Machin, Tom Bates, T. C. Jack, Eugenie Besserer, Marion Warner and Joseph Singleton.

The Box Office Angle

I'd forget this.

If you are running ordinary program releases and simply need something of the ordinary white slave surface "meller" movie routine it may get by and fill in for one night, but if you are trying to build a real reputation for your theatre, I would take a little trouble and book up something worth while for that night instead of just sliding this by.

WRITE THAT FRIEND AND TELL HIM ABOUT WID'S.

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT

WID'S

A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1917. | NO. 13 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
481	Metro	70.8	67.4	48
600	Fox	71.6	69.2	83
362	Greater Vitagraph	67.9	65.3	68
1631	Triangle	69.3	63.4	343
1800	Paramount	67.9	63.1	315
422	World	67.5	62.1	39
208	Bluebird	62.3	62.3	17

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
300	Paramount	67.9	63.1	315
1	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
1	The Virginian	90	78	1
1	Such a Little Queen	80	80	1
1	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
1	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	The County Chairman	80	80
1	What's His Name	75	100
1	Behind the Scenes	92	84
1	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
1	Rose of the Rancho	87	80
1	The Bargain	83	83	1
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
1	The Crucible	94	92	1
1	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
1	Cinderella	88	98	2
1	The Million	70	90
1	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
1	The Dancing Girl	71	68
1	The Italian	77	62	1
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
1	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
1	Mistress Nell	88	95
1	Buckshot John	90	90
1	Her Triumph	60	74	1
1	The Warrens of Virginia	66	76
1	Country Boy	60	60
1	David Harum	86	78	1
1	A Gentleman of Leisure	80	70
1	The Caprices of Kitty	95	90
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
1	The Governor's Lady	97	85
3	Gretna Green	100	100	2
3	Are You a Mason?	78	84
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
3	Snobs	69	53	7
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
5	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
5	The Woman	86	59	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
5	Stolen Goods	78	75
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
5	Pretty Sister Jose	82	78	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	56	2
1	Clarissa	75	80
2	The Dictator	45	45
5	Wild Olive	82	69
5	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
2	The Clue	74	88
6	Kindling	81	82
1	The Running Fight	67	70
3	The Fighting Hope	77	80
5	Kilmeny	75	73
4	Seven Sisters	91	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
8	Rags	91	96	5
2	Sold	83	72
6	The Secret Orchid	79	74
5	Nearly a Lady	65	75
6	The Marriage of Kitty	76	64
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
3	The Majesty of the Law	56	60
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
4	Esmeralda	89	89	2
2	The Case of Becky	65	65
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	0
7	Madame Butterfly	80	82	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	58
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
8	Armstrong's Wife	79	65
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	83	76	2
8	A Gentleman From Indiana	86	78
7	Prince and Pauper	91	84	3
10	Mr. Grex from Monte Carlo	84	69	1
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
17	The Cheat	94	79	11
8	The Reformed Candidate	82	54	1
8	The Immigrant	72	59
10	The Old Homestead	88	84	7
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	3
9	Temptation	81	75	2
8	The Foundling	76	76	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
5	Mice and Men	82	81	3
6	The Golden Chance	80	68	3
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
6	The Spider	87	65	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	55	3
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	48	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	88	3
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
12	Poor Little Peppina	87	84	0
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	3
11	Ben Blair	72	66
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	66	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	78	81	3
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
12	Audrey	73	73	3
6	Sowers	64	54
9	The Heart of Paula	71	56	1

WID'S

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
8 The Race	71	65
6 Eternal Grind	68	81	3
6 Love Mask	61	54	1
7 Molly Make-Believe	90	88	4
6 The Red Widow	62	51	1
10 Heart of Nora Flynn	69	56	4
6 Moment Before	50	43	1
1 David Garrick	61	39
7 Innocent Ile	52	46
13 Maria Rosa	82	83	4
11 Alien Souls'	68	66	1
11 Fued Girl	61	54
15 Pasquale	78	52	1
13 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59	2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
21 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
19 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
15 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
19 The American Beauty	61	61	3
22 The Dupe	60	60	1
22 The Smugglers	53	50	1
26 The Selfish Woman	72	68	4
29 Davy Crockett	67	62
16 Dream Girl	69	64	3
27 Under Cover	79	75	5
27 International Marriage	55	51	1
27 Common Ground	64	64	1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95	23
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
23 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	9
10 The Stronger Love	53	52
11 Public Opinion	82	72	4
19 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
19 Honorable Friend	65	62	1
18 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
18 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
19 Parson of Panamint	80	69	6
11 Big Sister	47	58
11 Reward of Patience	63	53
11 The House of Lies	79	68	1
11 Daughter of McGregor	53	45
15 Ashes of Embers	87	83	6
13 Quest of Life	58	59
10 Anton the Terrible	48	49
12 The Lash	55	52
9 The Storm	75	61	1
13 The Intrigue	81	53	1
12 Her Father's Son	73	57	2
10 Witchcraft	51	51
9 The Kiss	73	69	1
10 Rainbow Princess	84	74	2
10 Seventeen	89	76	2
9 Miss George Washington	97	94	7
12 Heir to the Hoorah	78	68	3
11 Soul of Kura San	82	74	1
7 Son of Erin	81	70
9 Unprotected	53	55	1
8 Years of a Locust	48	51
7 Plow Girl	77	55
5 The Yellow Pawn	61	60	1
8 Nannette of the Wilds	37	52	2
8 Martyrdom of Philip strong	47	35
4 Coney Island Princess	58	63	1
6 Road to Love	79	55	1
7 Oliver Twist	86	63	3
5 The Victoria Cross	50	52	1
8 Traveling Salesman	79	58	2
6 Right Direction	81	61	1
8 Snow White	98	97	5
5 Redeeming Love	61	57	1
7 The Slave Market	75	67	2
5 The Evil Eye	26	37	1
4 Great Expectations	81	50
4 Happiness of Three Women	75	48	1
4 Betty to the Rescue	37	35
6 A Girl Like That	51	41
4 Lost and Won	66	46
5 The Golden Fetter	45	52
5 His Sweetheart	74	40
5 The Wax Model	67	58
3 Each to His Kind	40	40
3 Her Own People	72	42
3 The Black Wolf	27	27
2 The American Counsel	28	)20
3 The Fortunes of Fifi	47	55	2
2 On Record	28	)20
2 Winning of Sally Temple	10	15
2 Those Without Sin	20	25	1
2 Castles for Two	25	20
1 Out of the Wreck	10	15
1 Sapho	80	90	1
1 Prison Without Walls	30	35
1 The Dummy	30	15

TRIANGLE

1631 Triangle	69.3	63.4	343
9 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
8 The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
13 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
5 Sable Lorcha	64	53
6 The Golden Claw	61	72
8 Double Trouble	65	64	2
7 Aloha Oe	63	65	1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
1 Jordan is a Hard Road	58	54
6 Winged Idol	53	52
8 Penitents	28	32
11 The Edge of the Abyss	67	61
8 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
10 Between Men	72	69	1
14 Let Katy Do It	87	66	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
9 The Last Act	79	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
17 Hell's Hinges	93	88	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
14 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	75	3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
15 The Raiders	79	70
13 The Habit of Happiness	92	86	5
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
16 The Aryan	85	86	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
16 The Good Bad-Man	90	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Not My Sister	82	78	3
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
18 Primal Lure	82	77	4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
19 Market of Vain Desire	82	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
22 Bugle Call	95	80	7
22 Reggie Mixes In	92	79	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
15 The Dividend	68	65	1
19 Wild Girl of the Sierras	43	51
20 Apostle of Vengeance	83	87	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
24 The Phantom	86	73	7
26 Flirting with Fate	88	85	10
28 The Deserter	82	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
24 Captive God	69	70	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77
19 The Payment	81	74
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
18 Honor Thy Name	88	72
18 Devil's Needle	63	63
21 Shell 43!	90	66
24 Heli-to-Pay Austin	83	67
19 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55
18 Home	91	80
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62
15 The Patriot	76	79
18 Social Secretary	90	72
13 The Thoroughbred	79	70
10 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91
13 The Dawnmaker	53	77
12 Diane of the Follies	68	69
19 Manhattan Madness	94	91
12 Plain Jane	89	81
12 Old Folks at Home	85	69
13 The Jungle Child	58	58
10 The Rummy	68	50
13 Return of Draw Egan	91	86
13 The Vagabond Prince	74	68
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
10 A Corner in Colleens	92	85
5 Sister of Six	65	47
11 Fifty-Fifty	89	82
3 War's Women	62	57
10 Atta Boy's Last Race	55	57
11 American Aristocracy	94	92
8 The Microscope Mystery	46	41
10 Honorable Algy	80	69
11 Jim Grimsby's Boy	64	57
10 The Devil's Double	90	91
10 The Children Pay	74	62
9 Children of the Feud	53	51
7 The Criminal	41	41
6 A Gamble in Souls	77	73
8 Wharf Rat	39	45
10 The Matrimanic	95	96
10 The Sin Ye Do	97	81
9 The Heiress at Coffee Dan's	56	46
7 Three of Many	54	44
6 The House Built Upon Sand	82	71
4 Nina, the Flower Girl	38	34
6 Female of the Species	81	78
9 Truthful Toliver	98	97
8 The Weaker Sex	91	89
5 The Little Yank	32	45
6 A Bride of Hate	77	65
5 The Iced Bullet	55	37
7 The Americano	100	100
4 Chicken Casey	78	51
5 Jim Bludso	73	38
5 The Crab	78	55
1 Girl of the Timberclaims	20	20
6 The Gunfighter	56	68
3 The Bad Boy	60	22
3 Princess of the Dark	15	20
1 Stage Struck	10	25
2 Last of the Ingrams	20	20
1 Blood Will Tell	25	20
1 Love Sublime	20	25
2 The Little Brother	18	18
4 Back of the Man	100	86
1 Bettsy's Burglar	20	14

WORLD

422 World	67.5	62.1
1 Hearts Afire	65	62
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
1 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	82
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
2 The Master of the House	68	53
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	50
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	60
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	80
2 Ballet Girl	82	65
3 Marrying Money	79	65
1 Wishing Ring	64	60

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Sow	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	60
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	60	40
1 Blue Grass	70	65
1 Fruits of Desire	40	50
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
5 Trilby	81	69	1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
3 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	50	57	1
4 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	73	1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
2 The Ransom	63	43
4 The Labyrinth	66	65
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	65
6 Camille	86	81	2
3 The Rack	89	69
1 Fine Feathers	70	40
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	80
4 Yellow Passport	82	85	2
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
1 Women's Power	30	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
3 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
3 Then I'll Come Back to You	80	72	1
3 The Reapers	77	67
1 Shadow of Doubt	75	60
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
1 Closed Road	87	81	1
7 The Feast of Life	61	73
1 Her Maternal Right	56	72
5 Sudden Riches	77	72
1 Twin Triangles	60	30
5 Tangled Fates	55	60
3 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74	1
3 Perils of Divorce	61	63
2 La vie de Boheme	48	50
1 What Happened at 22	82	80
3 Crucial Test	59	58
1 Weakness of Man	61	60
1 Sally in Our Alley	68	68
1 Paying the Price	70	70	1
1 Miss Petticoats	59	61
1 Woman's Way	75	74	1
1 The Summer Girl	56	57
3 Rail Rider	68	60
1 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
1 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
1 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
1 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
1 Dark Silence	77	79	2
1 The Revolt	66	63
1 The Gilded Cage	75	70
3 Hidden Scar	77	67
1 The Scarlet Oath	60	62
1 Man Who Stood Still	71	63
1 The Heart of a Hero	58	48
1 Without a Soul	80	90
1 Bought and Paid For	94	94	8
1 Madness of Helen	54	53
1 Men She Married	58	55
2 Deep Purple	80	75
1 All Man	51	50	1
1 Broken Chains	37	36
1 The Rise of Susan	78	89	5
1 World Against Him	32	30
1 Woman Alone	65	65	1
1 On Dangerous Ground	57	54
1 The Man Who Forgot	53	43
1 Marriage a la Carte	73	73	1
1 The Unpardonable Sin	40	55
1 The Bondage of Fear	62	52
1 Tillie Wakes Up	78	73
1 The Hungry Heart	87	78	1
1 The Square Deal	80	75

METRO

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
481 Metro	70.8	67.4	48
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
3 Shooting of Dan McGraw	81	78
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	85
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
3 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
5 The Yellow Streak	85	64
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	81
4 The Turmoil	70	55
3 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
6 A Man and His Soul	83	83	2
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
5 Her Great Price	80	71	1
8 The Wall Between	78	82	1
5 The Kiss of Hate	60	74
5 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
7 Playing With Fire	79	76
10 The Come-Back	75	73	1
7 The Snowbird	79	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Youkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
9 Scarlet Woman	72	83	1
9 Dorian's Divorce	73	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
6 Flower of No Man's Land	58	75
8 The Purple Lady	82	63
10 The Eternal Question	76	83	1
11 The Quitter	69	73
14 River of Romance	88	74	7
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
12 God's Half Acre	71	59	1
12 Weakness of Strength	67	52
10 The Pretenders	81	73	1
7 The Upheaval	57	63
9 The Light of Happiness	67	61	1
9 Mister 44	89	92	4
8 The Wheel of the Law	77	66	1
9 Dawn of Love	65	59
6 Iron Woman	41	56
4 Life's Shadows	66	60
11 In the Diplomatic Service	66	85	4
8 The Brand of Cowardice	64	52
9 Gates of Eden	66	47
10 Extravagance	69	84	3
7 The Wager	79	57
1 My Madonna	80	80
6 The Sunbeam	44	36
8 Big Tremaine	68	81	3
8 The Black Butterfly	70	79	4
6 Stolen Triumph	53	49
5 Awakening of Helena Richie	61	61
6 Pidgin Island	63	71
8 Vanity	62	51
9 The White Raven	84	83	4
6 A Wife by Proxy	43	39
7 Threads of Fate	39	38
5 Bridges Burned	48	70
5 The End of the Tour	33	30
2 One of Many	75	40

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 The Secret of Eve	20	95	1
2 The Promise	88	88	1

FOX

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
600 Fox	71.6	69.2	83
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
3 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
3 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
3 Gilded Fool	67	73
3 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	66	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
3 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Mile House Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
9 Blue Blood and Red	82	68
5 Slander	80	72
9 Modern Thelma	57	47	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
8 Blazing Love	69	67
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
10 The Spider and the Fly	67	72	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
10 A Woman's Honor	69	71
19 East Lynne	88	87	9
15 Ambition	71	67
17 Man From Bitter Roots	82	80	2
17 Caprice of the Mountains	67	64	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
20 The Beast	88	71	6
23 Under Two Flags	94	91	16
16 End of the Trail	71	79
17 Sporting Blood	61	57	1
15 Little Miss Happiness	76	70	3
18 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
13 Her Double Life	84	86	3
9 Where Love Leads	69	61
13 Fires of Conscience	64	70	1
11 The Straight Way	68	73
7 Ragged Princess	76	66
12 The War Brides Secret	74	55	3
9 Romeo and Juliet	86	86	4
5 Love and Hate	66	60

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Mischief Maker	70	70	1
3 Jealousy	73	85
3 The Mediator	72	70
4 Sins of Parents	91	78	3
1 Battle of Life	75	60
2 The Vixen	53	73
1 The Love Thief	90	90
2 The Primitive Call	70	78
2 The Darling of Paris	65	63
1 The Bitter Truth	80	80	1

MUTUAL

121 Mutual	74.2	71.6	14
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	25
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	83	[illegible]	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	[illegible]
1 Hidden Law	100	[illegible]	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	58
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	98
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
5 Doorsteps	65	60	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
1 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	90	1
2 Strength. Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	60	68
2 A Welsh Singer	60	53
1 Man Who Would Not Die	85	75
1 Three Pals	90	80
3 Manager of the B. & A.	63	70
1 Pearl of Paradise	67	68	1
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
3 Faith	77	58
2 Miss Jackie of the Navy	93	85	1
1 A Dream or Two Ago	75	60
2 Innocence of Lizette	100	85
1 The Butterfly Girl	70	70
1 The House of Scandal	0	10
1 The Man From Oregon	95	75
1 The Wolf Man	50	50

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
4 The Fireman	75	88
4 The Vagabond	55	[illegible]
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
1 One A. M.	63	81	1
15 The Count	88	85	8
9 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
3 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
7 The Rink	96	99	6
4 Easy Street	95	100	4

PATHE

126 Pathe	67.9	68.8	13
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
3 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
5 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	82
8 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78	1
5 Shine Girl	69	70
1 Fear of Poverty	65	95
2 The Test	60	48
3 Saint, Devil and Woman	44	57
1 Light That Failed	69	69	1
3 Shadows and Sunshine	96	84	2
2 Prudence, the Pirate	58	73
3 Arms and the Woman	70	53	1
2 The Challenge	70	60
3 Joy and the Dragon	78	68
1 Romantic Journey	80	60
2 Her New York	80	68
1 Kick In	80	83

BLUEBIRD

208 Bluebird	62.3	62.3	17
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
5 Crippled Hand	58	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
5 Eye of God	64	80	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	69	62
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
14 Shoes	72	77	3
10 Broken Fetters	63	54	1
8 The Love Girl	63	64	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
7 Silent Battle	74	83
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
11 Saving the Family Name	80	55	1
8 Behind the Lines	63	68
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
3 The Chalice of Sorrow	72	65
3 Social Buccaneers	72	60
3 Gloriana	77	77
3 Stranger from Somewhere	65	52
2 The Price of Silence	100	100
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
4 The Honor of Mary Blake	53	51
1 The Right to be Happy	50	40
3 Black Orchids	73	80	1
1 Her Soul's Inspiration	50	40
1 God's Crucible	75	65
1 The Piper's Price	40	20
2 Bugler of Algiers	88	77
1 The Eagle's Wings	78	75

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Jewel	83	65
1 Scandal	80	72
2 Langdon's Legacy	80	71
2 Love's Pilgrimage	73	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83
2 Idle Wives	50	100

RED FEATHER

70 Red Feather	65.2	61.0
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
2 Beckoning Trail	88	71
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
1 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
1 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
2 Polly Put the Kettle On	43	45
2 Fighting for Love	73	68
1 Heart Strings	65	40
1 Love Allame	90	80
1 The Terror	70	60

GREATER VITAGRAPH

262 Greater Vitagraph	67.9	65.3
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80
5 Juggernaut	74	77
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
3 Sins of the Mothers	87	87
3 Crooky	70	69
1 Playing Dead	75	75

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	1
1 Rights of Men	50	80
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
3 The Cave Man	74	60
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
1 Nation's Peril	91	92
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
6 The Great Divide	83	73	2
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80	1
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	80
3 Island of Surprise	87	85
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
3 Night Out	80	76	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
2 The Writing on the Wall	70	40
1 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
1 Hero of Submarine D-2	74	71
1 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
Supreme Temptation	60	60
1 The Two-Edged Sword	70	50
Vital Question	80	55
Flames of Johannis	40	40
Salvation Joan	78	59
God's Country and Woman	89	88	4
Love's Toll	60	80
The Law Decides	80	70	4
The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
The Suspect	79	76	1
Lights of New York	70	78
The Destroyers	68	57	1
Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
Man Behind the Curtain	85	76
The Shop Girl	78	79	1
The Conflict	67	47
Fathers of Men	71	67
The Tarantula	83	74	3
The Daring of Diana	61	79
Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
Light at Dusk	84	71	3
The Alibi	70	60
The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
Footlights of Fate	68	80
The Combat	81	85	1
The Kid	61	60
Phantom Fortunes	42	62
His Wife's Good Name	54	75
Through the Wall	79	61	1
The Chattel	71	82	2
Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67	1
Blue Envelope Mystery	59	62
Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
Last Man	85	71
Devil's Prize	40	54
The Price of Fame	40	41
4 Dollars and the Law	45	71
6 Enemy to the King	59	66	2
3 Rose of the South	74	67
5 Whom the Gods Destroy	59	74	3
3 Ninety and Nine	70	73	1
3 Indiscretion	40	58	1
3 A Man of Mystery	52	50	1
6 My Official Wife	91	84	3
3 The Glory of Yolanda	72	72	2
1 The Enemy	60	60
3 The Girl Philipa	60	75	2
1 The Courage of Silence	65	60	1
2 Money Magic	40	65
1 Blind Justice	40	70
1 Arsene Lupin	65	45
1 Intrigue	20	20

KEYS

102 K. E. S. E. Service	69.8	66.1	22

1 The Bank	90	90	1
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
2 Thou Shalt Not Covet	78	52
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	1
2 Shepherd of Bargain Row	65	55
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	80
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
3 That Sort	70	45	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
3 The Prince Chap	40	33
8 The Return of Eve	75	73	2
6 The Country God Forgot	73	64
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 The Innocence of Ruth	60	81
1 At Piney Ridge	60	60
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
3 The Prince of Graustark	83	82	1
3 The Cossack's Whip	84	51
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
2 The Last Sentence	55	70
2 Truant Soul	98	73	1
1 Little Shoes	80	70
1 Adventures of Buffalo Bill	65	100
1 Skinner's Dress Suit	100	80	1

SPECIAL FEATURES

6 The Libertine	83	78	4
1 My Country First	60	60
5 The Foolish Virgin	29	57	1
11 The Pride of the Clan	65	73	6
12 Less Than the Dust	63	80	4
2 20,000 Leagues Under Sea	78	100	2
1 The Crisis	80	75
10 War Brides	72	64	7
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
1 The Witching Hour	40	40	1
3 Tillie's Punctured Romance	90	90	2
1 America Waiting	10	15
1 Is Any Girl Safe?	90	60
1 Beulah	60	60
4 Panthea	85	80	4
1 The Price She Paid	80	65	1
4 Vera, the Medium	54	58	1
1 Gods of Little Children	65	60
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
7 Where Are My Children?	84	89	2
5 Alice in Wonderland	76	80	1
11 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	78	58	1
1 Purity	92	96	1
1 The Clansman	99	100	1
1 Whoso Taketh A Wife	90	90
1 Lash of Destiny	80	50

SERIALS

1 Patria	90	95
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
10 The Iron Claw	93	92
3 Diamond Runners	84	83
7 The Shielding Shadow	91	91
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
2 Lass o' the Lumberlands	40	55
1 Girl and the Game	73	45
1 The Great Secret	20	40

lid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

homas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

WANT TO BUY

Good feature productions of established reputation.

Age doesn't matter if quality right.

Will also consider Films never released that may be re-edited.

A full line of European War Pictures.

SUN PHOTOPLAY EXCHANGE

A. E. Siegel, General Manager

218 West 42d Street. Phone Bryant 4922

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

COHAN BIG WINNER—HANDLING EXCELLENT—NET RESULT SURE-FIRE HIT

George M. Cohan in

BROADWAY JONES

Cohan—Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Joe Kaufman
AUTHOR ..... George M. Cohan
CAMERAMAN ..... Lawrence E. Williams
AS A WHOLE ..... A sure-fire comedy clean-up
STORY ..... Has very human moments and holds nicely
DIRECTION ..... Gave splendid atmosphere and kept action human; an excellent bit of work
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Good; some excellent
CAMERA WORK ..... Splendid; good close-ups and several unusual effects
STAR ..... Kept character very human; will land as big favorite
SUPPORT ..... Very good; types well chosen
EXTERIORS ..... Very good New York stuff, with nice small-town contrasts
INTERIORS ..... Excellent; hotel lobby reproduction wonderful
DETAIL ..... Very good
TIME ..... Eighty-two minutes (7 parts)

IF there was any question in the mind of any one regarding George M. Cohan's screen possibilities, this first production will certainly end all arguments.

Mr. Cohan has gone over with a bang, and will immediately rank as one of the screen's biggest favorites.

Probably the most pleasing item in his performance was the fact that he kept his character really human, and I am sure that any one would have thoroughly enjoyed his performance even if they had no idea whatever as to who the young man might be.

Because of the fact that Mr. Cohan has been so badly mimicked by so many hundreds of cheap vaudeville entertainers, who have endeavored to give our good old friend General Public in the out-of-the-way places an idea of the famous actor-playwright, he came into the films with something of a question in the minds of thousands of film folk as to his ability to "get his stuff over." The answer is that the screen to-day is calling for personality, and surely Georgie has oodles of that. He isn't only over—he's landed up with the very best!

We must give to Producer Joe Kaufman an exceptional lot of credit for this production, because it was no small undertaking to bring out such a famous personage in his first film and keep the story properly balanced with effective shadings of contrast in atmosphere, and the so-much desired human touches that delight any audience, whether registered by star or "extra."

The story starts in a small town and follows the restless youth who insisted upon having his million to go to the city to play with, through all the wild expenditures which he made in an effort to have Broadway know that he was there.

When he suddenly discovered that he was "broke," there was a quiet touch of pathos in the manner in which the realization was registered, and on the finish we had some effective mob scenes, where the factory workers who feared impending starvation threatened to burn up the factory, which the trust had promised to buy.

I believe the final scenes where Broadway Jones comes out to face the indignant workmen to tell them that he was one of them again, will stir any audience.

There is a nice little thread of love interest running through the story, and it is never overdone. The situations where the youthful spendthrift agrees to marry the old hen with much coin, are made understandable by the manner in which his unfortunate financial tie-up is registered, and he will be readily forgiven when the good old heroics are brought in on the finish.

As was entirely fitting—because Mr. Cohan has often been said to be the best publicity man the American flag has ever had—the introduction of the star came as a dissolve of a close-up through the flag which was fluttering in a strong breeze.

I want also to particularly comment upon several camera effects which registered electric signs in action.

Of course, this is essentially a comedy, and I'd be willing to gamble that any audience, anywhere, is going to get a goodly share of laughs out of the situations and the little bits of business. The titles were particularly well written and perfectly timed to register laughs at most on time-table schedule. Any one who doesn't get his money's worth out of this has lost any sense of humor that he ever possessed.

Marguerite Snow, playing opposite Mr. Cohan, was very pleasing as the little small-town girl who awaited her hero's return. All of the other types fitted into the action beautifully, and the entire cast was very nicely balanced.

Producer Kaufman is deserving of particular credit for the manner in which he handled the mob scenes. As a rule, these mobs are nothing but a bunch of arms waving "extras," but Mr. Kaufman has, through the use of intelligent camera angles and good cutting, given a tempo to this ensemble action which will surely be very effective.

In the big sets of the ballroom there was somewhat of a suggestion of cramped studio quarters, but, nevertheless, all of these sets showing how Broadway Jones spends his money will be impressive and realistic. Seldom, if ever, have I seen such an absolutely accurate reproduction of any set as the one which showed us the lobby of the Hotel Knickerbocker. You will find many a "wise" one in your audience explaining that this scene was actually taken in the hotel, when, as a matter of fact, it was made in the studio.

The scenes taken in the Pennsylvania Terminal were very effectively handled, and they were taken from excellent angles. One long shot, where Mr. Cohan chased down the steps and on through the station to the train, will get a big laugh when he does a wild leap through the last door. Others in the cast were Ida Darling, Joe Smiley, Russell Bassett and Crawford Kent.

The Box Office Angle

It surely isn't necessary for me to tell you what you can do with this. The picture is there, it will absolutely please any one unless they are impossible, and I don't know of any one who should be a better drawing card than George M. Cohan. This being his first production, I believe that you should be able to do absolute capacity with it, since you can safely guarantee a truly entertaining comedy. I'd make it plain that the story is one which contrasts contentment of small-town life with the wild, supposedly worth-while existence in the city.

You might say something like this in your ads. "Did you ever spend a first night in a big city hotel, all alone? Then you know how Broadway Jones felt when he hit Broadway and Broadway didn't know it."

I surely believe that you can afford to pay real money for this picture, because you can get big money with it. To my mind, it is certainly good business to pay a big price for a production when you are dead sure it is going to have a clean-up. For instance, if you pay a hundred dollars for a picture and do one hundred and fifty when you show it, and please your people, it is certainly much better business than to pay thirty dollars for a picture, do eighty with it and send them out dissatisfied, or at best luke warm.

SOME BEAUTIFUL EXTERIORS HELP VERY ORDINARY MELO

Claire McDowell in

THE BRONZE BRIDE

Red Feather

DIRECTOR.....Henry McRae
AUTHOR.....A. J. Burkey
AS A WHOLE.....Exteriors helped fairly interesting action
STORY.....Elementary; important dramatic moment indefinite
DIRECTION.....Registered good atmosphere ,but lacked dramatic balance
PHOTOGRAPHY....Some beautiful shots; some ordinary
LIGHTINGS.....Many very good; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Good, but not enough angles
STAR.....Acceptable; not distinctive
SUPPORT.....Just acceptable
EXTERIORS....Many beautiful locations helped offering
INTERIORS.....Generally good; too much of same angle
DETAIL.....Acceptable; not clear at times
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY this story was not worth five reels. Because of this fact, there were scenes which did not advance the plot, and after a time I think that any audience will become restless waiting for the story to move on a bit.

In the first two or three reels there were a great many exceptionally beautiful exteriors artistically photographed, and undoubtedly these will do much to register this offering as an acceptable feature.

Unfortunately, however, just about the same time these exteriors stopped, we reached a situation in the story which was very, very indefinite and rather confusing.

The entire plot of the offering concerned a white man who landed in a western camp, after leaving his home in the East, only to be befriended by an Indian girl, who nursed him after he was injured.

The heart-interest situation was where the Indian girl's people came to the cabin and compelled the white man to marry the Indian girl against his will. It was clearly stated that he had done her no wrong, and something was suggested about a tradition, but this point was very vague and will certainly be confusing.

At all events, the two were married, and then a title jumped several years, with a boy playing about the house. Then came a letter from the white man's family asking him to come home, and he went East with his son, deserting his wife.

At this point we were told that the wife's father had much gold from a secret mine, and she promptly followed her husband East, and in two weeks became an accomplished society favorite—which, believe me, is some stunt!—with the result that she, of course, won back her husband, whose father had in the meantime told his boy to go look up his wife, even though she were an Indian.

This story is decidedly obvious to the extent that most any audience will be a few hundred feet ahead of the actual climax of any situation, and on that account it drags very badly at times. The material as it stands might have made a pretty fair one- or two-reel, or if the story were given a better development, it might have made a good feature.

Figured as Red Feather releases run, the beautiful exteriors in the early part of this will probably make it register as a satisfactory offering. Unfortunately the weakness at the end sort of allows it to slump seriously, and as a result your audience may get rather an unfavorable impression to leave the theatre with.

Miss McDowell was not particularly impressive as the Indian girl, and, in fact, none of the cast did anything which could be called distinctive.

There was one scene where the husband walked out in the woods and had a vision of a group of girls standing about him, which was bad enough to be funny.

In a great many places the grouping of the characters was decidedly suggestive of posing to have their pictures taken. The fault of too many scenes taken from the same angle where nothing of dramatic importance occurred, helped to slow up the picture. A number of what should have been dramatic moments were injured by a tendency to be "actory."

A few of the titles were quite melodramatic, as, for instance: "Now, paleface, you settle with me!"

The Box Office Angle.

If you are handling just the average run of Red Feather releases, this should get by if others have. The class of audience which cares for the melodramatic stuff may consider this rather a good offering, because it gets away to a very good start on account of the beauty spots.

I would particularly emphasize in my advertising that this production has been made in the beautiful mountains of California. Don't promise too much on it, because the slump at the finish may cause them to come out and fuss with you if you have said that it is going to be unusual.

BINDERS MAKE EASY FINDERS—GET ONE, $1.50 PREPAID ANYWHERE.

FAIRLY ENTERTAINING, WITH GOOD AND BAD SPOTS

Seena Owen in

A WOMAN'S AWAKENING

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Chester Withey
AUTHOR	Frank E. Woods
CAMERAMAN	David Abels
AS A WHOLE	Rather interesting despite weak spots
STORY	Has some new angles and some old ones
DIRECTION	Kept action interesting and registered a few comedy bits
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	Good; hardly distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Good, except angles on very important scene
STAR	Pleasing personality
SUPPORT	Some very good; some ordinary
EXTERIORS	Good; not unusual
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good, except in murder scene
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

SOMEWHAT different touch is given to the first few reels of this by registering the thought of the girl who believed in equal rights trying to convert an unsophisticated beauty from the country to her belief. The system worked all right until the pupil decided to marry and then the theory didn't seem to go.

A gink who wanted her money more than anything else, made good use of it for himself after marrying her, and finally got a large chunk from her, which she had to borrow from a former lover on a promise from Hubby that he would quit working as her hubby and not annoy her any more.

When the "doity" blackguard got the money and then refused to walk out on the job of husband, the wife's invalid mother, who had been planted in an invalid's wheel chair all through the offering, calmly murdered him from behind a curtain. The former lover came in at about this time and felt that the wife had killed her husband, while the wife thought that the former lover had done the deed.

They "framed up" a suicide alibi, which went through without a hitch, and then after a little footage of "misunderstanding," the mystery was cleared by the confession of the mother's colored servant, and we had the customary clutch.

Seena Owen, as the unsophisticated wife, and Alma Rueben, as the very wise equal-rights theorist, were both very pleasing. It seems to me that Miss Ruebens had about as much to do as Miss Owen, and there must have been a commercial reason for starring Miss Owen without mentioning Miss Rueben.

In a number of places, very clever titles were used, some of these being composed for the most part of dots and dashes, with a word or phrase here and there, suggesting the high spots of a woman's-rights speech made by Miss Rueben. All of these will be good for a laugh, and whoever wrote the titles is to be congratulated, there being a private hunch in my system that the author, Mr. Woods, is also responsible for all the titles. This may sound like an odd statement to you, but I can tell you that it is really seldom that an author writes the actual titles which are used in a film production. They are decidedly "chewed up" before the script gets on the screen.

The sets were quite a lot better than the Fine Arts sets have been, and in a few places the lighting was better.

The worst spot in the offering was the murder scene, because the "willun" was shown to place a revolver on a small table in such a manner that the invalid mother, seated in her chair, could not have seen him place it there, and yet she wheeled her chair around to a position which made it possible for her to reach through the curtains, secure the gun and kill the "willun." Since audiences are decidedly wise about camera angles these days, I fear that most of them will notice this inconsistency.

With Kate Bruce as the invalid mother, and Spottiswoode Aitken, another old Griffith favorite, as a friend of the family, you of course know that the two parts were nicely handled.

A. D. Sears, as the hero lover who came to the rescue on the finish, and Charles Gerrard, as the willunous hubby were very good.

Jennie Lee, who has been in so many of Mr. Griffith's more important productions, appeared as the colored servant of Miss Bruce.

The Box Office Angle.

This isn't a great picture, and at the same time it isn't by any means a poor one. The interest is maintained rather well, and it should be quite acceptable almost anywhere as a one-day attraction.

There is quite some doubt as to Miss Owen's box office value, but I would suggest that you depend rather upon naming the entire cast of Griffith favorites than upon featuring the star alone. Most fans are familiar with the names of those prominent in the cast, and it would seem to me to be good business to call attention to all of them, without exception.

You have another advertising angle in the prominence given to Miss Rueben's theories regarding equal rights for women, and if you want to have a little fun with this subject you might go after it along this line: "What do you think women would do if they were generally acknowledged to have the same rights as men? Would they all wear trousers, and smoke cigars? See what Seena Owen and Alma Rueben do in 'A Woman's Awakening.'"

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General
of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios
and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York Ci

PERSONALITY OF STAR AND HANDLING MAKE THIS REGISTER

Anita Stewart in

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Perry N. Vekroff
AUTHOR	Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady
CAMERAMAN	Arthur T. Quinn
AS A WHOLE	Star and handling make this register splendidly
STORY	Went along fine until financial battle; will be generally liked
DIRECTION	Gave classy, distinctive atmosphere and handled star to advantage
PHOTOGRAPHY	Most of it excellent
LIGHTINGS	Some very artistic and effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Many fine bits; generally good
STAR	Beautiful and magnetic personality
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	A few excellent; generally good
INTERIORS	Distinctive; impressive; generally classy
DETAIL	Good, except amount of money involved and newspaper insert
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

I CONSIDER Anita Stewart one of the most pleasing stars of the screen. She is beautiful, intelligent, possessed of a charming personality and is of such a distinctive type that somehow her face holds you because of its expressiveness.

Miss Stewart, in the past six months, has had some bad productions built around her, but she has stood out above these surroundings, and I think that to-day she holds a muchly-to-be-desired position in the hearts of millions of fans. She is given quite a lot of opportunity in this, with direction which intelligently gave her as much as possible, and certainly I believe that the average audience will be more than pleased with the net result.

This story starts off with rather a bromide situation, when we found Miss Stewart discovering her fiance kissing another girl in a conservatory. But this is followed in rapid succession by her breaking her engagement and agreeing to marry her guardian, who is very much in love with her, despite the fact that he is older.

Immediately after the ceremony, however, the little bride came to a realization of what she had done, and she pleaded with her husband that he continue to treat her as a child, he having been her guardian ever since her father's death.

Loving her as he did, her husband was big enough to agree to this, and then we found the wife, after meetings with the young man who had been her fiance, going to Reno to secure a divorce. Up to this point, the story had moved along beautifully, with several nice dramatic moments. Now, however, they started one of those financial battle things in which millions were handed around in the nonchalant manner that they do only in the "movies."

We learned that Miss Stewart had six millions, and when her ex-fiance, whom she now wanted to marry, started to battle with her present husband in order to put him out of commission, the young ex-fiance nonchalantly wired the star to send along a couple of million, since he needed it in a deal. This was bad enough, but the author then made the star calmly sit down and advise her attorney to turn over all her money to friend ex-fiance. The sum total of this, as I noted, having been previously registered as six millions.

The lawyer, who had been acting as the wife's advisor, was a friend of hubby. He thought this was all wrong, and so he wired the wife and told her so, explaining that ex-fiance was trying to ruin her husband with the money borrowed from her. This, of course, brought wifey to a realization of her inner soul, and she shot in a wire countermanding her previous instructions regarding the nonchalant six million, and followed this by coming home in person to tell hubby how sorry she was that she'd ever left him.

To make everybody understand that there was not going to be any more mind-changing stuff, ex-fiance, who was now "broke," was sent home to shoot holes in himself, and he did it in approved fashion.

There was opportunity for Miss Stewart to wear a number of beautiful costumes, and Director Perry Vekroff gave her some distinctive lightings, which made her beauty truly effective.

There were a number of very artistic scenes, but one of the exceptionally good exterior locations was a little shot showing Miss Stewart at Reno thinking over the prospect of a divorce.

Charles Richman, as the guardian who became husband, played with more reserve than he has in some of his other offerings, and, because of this, was decidedly more impressive and pleasing. He had the poise and authority necessary for the character, and by restraint kept his emotions from overreaching.

Rudolph Cameron, as the fiance who slipped a bit occasionally, was quite satisfactory, although nothing exceptional. The other members of the cast were pleasing, but hardly distinctive.

In one place they gave us an effect which Vitagraph has registered before under different conditions, and I consider it very good. It gave the impressions of a drink-muddled brain, and I think it will certainly register as different and effective with any audience.

There was one newspaper insert which was headed: "Wall St. Gossip—Happenings in the Circle of Frenzied Finance." If any newspaper printed a heading like that, the guy what wrote it should have been "canned."

Others in the cast were Charles A. Stevenson, Gordon Gray, Josephine Earle and Katherine Lewis.

The Box Office Angle.

You ought to know Miss Stewart's box office value by now, but if you happen to be laboring under the impression that it isn't good, I want to suggest that you forget your own impressions and go after this as if you considered her the greatest star in the country, and I believe you'll be agreeably surprised with the results you secure.

Personally, I consider Anita Stewart a sure-fire winner with most audiences, because she is beautiful, and still a bit different. She is intelligent and blessed with a face capable of registering emotions without any semblance of "acting." Her very sincerity and earnestness makes her work register convincingly, and there is nothing of more value today in character portrayals on the screen than sincerity.

You should be able to help your business on this particular production somewhat, by referring to Charles Richman's presence in the offering, because he has received a lot of advertising through his appearance in "The Secret Kingdom" and other Vitagraph features. He is well known to those who have followed the speaking stage, because of his work in many big dramatic productions and if he has appeared in the last year or two in your city, on the stage, I believe I'd refer to that fact. If you are in doubt regarding this, you might inquire of your local theatre manager, who can probably tell you off-hand.

You might say that this is a human drama of intermingled pathos and sweetness, telling the story of a child who married a real man before she realized what it meant. That sounds interesting anyway.

STEVENSON'S FANCIFUL TALE IN VERY BEAUTIFUL ATMOSPHERE

Sessue Hayakawa in

THE BOTTLE IMP

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHOR	Robert Louis Stevenson
SCENARIO BY	Charles Maigne
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Very interesting and truly well done
STORY	Fanciful, but holds perfectly
DIRECTION	Gave artistic atmosphere, excellent trick photography and interesting action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective and decidedly artistic
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STAR	Very pleasing
SUPPORT	Very good; natives helped atmosphere
EXTERIORS	Some truly beautiful
INTERIORS	Many very fine; all distinctive
DETAIL	Fine, except titles mentioning American coins
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

YOU can't go wrong on this, figuring it from most any angle.

To begin with, it is a famous story by one of our best fiction writers, and Producer Marshall Neilan has given us an artistic atmosphere that makes the offering truly distinctive. There are scores of wondrously beautiful locations used, and the lightings of the exteriors were very effective throughout the offering.

Sessue Hayakawa, who landed with a bang many moons ago in "The Cheat," has one of the best opportunities since that famous production. There is not so much dramatic work in this offering, he appearing as a Hawaiian. He fits naturally into the character, and, finished artist that he is, his personality is going to make a very favorable impression.

It struck me as rather odd that Lehua Waipahu, the little Hawaiian lady chosen to play opposite Hayakawa, should resemble in a rather striking degree our good friend Bessie Love. At least, it seemed to me that she did. Others may not see it.

Most of the other members of the cast were natives, and this, in conjunction with the fact that many of the scenes were taken in locations which certainly suggested the Hawaiian Islands, helped keep the fanciful, mysterious yarn convincing, despite the very wild and impossible stunts that the author has provided.

"The Bottle Imp" is simply a sort of different angle on "Aladdin's Lamp," with the important additional twist of tying a fearful curse to this wishing bottle. The man who possessed it could have anything he wanted, but, unless he sold it for less than the purchase price before he died, he was destined to float on through eternity in a sea of fire.

The main thought of the offering as screened seems to be to get the thing which the wisher wanted most, and then find some one willing to buy the wonderful bottle. The two lovers sort of passed it back and forth through the medium of friends in order to keep one another from the awful curse, but finally it was wished onto a roughneck sailor who had been lurking in the offing for that purpose throughout the five reels.

The truly serious error which has been made in this production is one which can still be remedied, and it seems to me that it should be corrected by all means.

With the scenes laid in Hawaii, we found the characters talking about and spending American money. Since Hawaii is one of Uncle Sam's children, this all may be very feasible, but the fanciful character of the story would suggest that it refers to a Hawaii of the past, rather than a Hawaii of the present, and surely the mention of half-dollars, cents, etc., jars seriously when it slaps you in the face from these titles.

In the end, of course, we found the man with Chinese money, possessed of the bottle. It would be a very simple matter to change the present titles so as to have the bottle sold for certain native coins, and I am very sure that every one will understand the relative importance of these coins. I'll bank on the fact that any one knows that the smallest Chinese coins have the least intrinsic value of any coins of any country. It was only a question of time that they get to dealing with Chinese coins in passing the bottle from one to another, and I believe it could have been worked out in the scenario a little more logically than to have the Chinese coins discovered as they were, through a theft committed by the "willunous" sailor.

With the American coin titles out, I'd say that this is a decidedly better than program offering, because the truly fanciful plot, which deals with wishing, etc., is decidedly interesting and will keep their minds tied to the story development.

Others in the cast were H. Komshi, George Kuwa, Guy Oliver and James Neill.

The Box Office Angle.

With the combination of Robert Louis Stevenson, Sessue Hayakawa and Producer Marshall Neilan, I believe that you should be able to do very well with this offering. The fact that the story is laid in Hawaii and is of a fanciful character, which makes it at least interesting to every one, should give you an opportunity to appeal to all classes.

I'd dwell particularly upon the artistic beauty of this offering, mentioning the exceptionally beautiful exterior scenes and the unusual care which has been taken in the making of the interiors.

You should be able to do rather well on your matinees, since it is more or less of a fairy tale, and on that account can be recommended for the children.

You might tie this up in your advertising with some such thought as the following: "What would you do if you could get anything you wished for by rubbing a magic bottle, and yet knew that you would be accursed forever if you failed to sell the bottle for less than you bought it, before you died? Supposing you'd bought it for one cent—what then? See Sessue Hayakawa in Robert Louis Stevenson's 'The Bottle Imp.'"

UNIMPRESSIVE SURFACE STORY WITH GOOD STAR

Mme. Petrova in

THE WAITING SOUL

Pop. P. & P.—Metro

DIRECTOR.....Burton L. King
AUTHOR.....Marion Short
SCENARIO BY.....Wallace C. Clifton
SUPERVISED BY.....Aaron Hoffman
CAMERAMAN.....Geo. W. Hill
AS A WHOLE.....Unimpressive action with titles attempting preachment thought
DIRECTION.....A few good scenes and many that registered nothing; production appeared badly chopped up
PHOTOGRAPHY....Had good and bad spots; generally muddy, with some contrasty lightings
LIGHTINGS.....Not good
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable
STAR....Impressive despite handicap of atmosphere and situations, although make-up showed frequently
SUPPORT.....Good and poor
EXTERIORS.....Very few and ordinary
INTERIORS.....A few good; many ordinary
DETAIL.....Convenient
TIME.....Sixty minutes (5 parts)

YOU can simply count this as another Petrova offering which isn't what could be called artistic from any viewpoint, and certainly the story fails to get under the surface, because the assembling of the film leaves us with a tremendous number of titles broken by short flashes of film which registers the effect almost of reading a preachment on the prenatal influence.

There are many convenient spots in the plot development which bring such and such a character in at just the right moment when it will start something, and the only suggestion of situations is secured in that way.

The best scenes in the film as it stands are those between Mme. Petrova and Wilfred Shields, in which Mr. Shields, who is presented as a lecturer, explains rather dramatically the divine gift of motherhood, emphasizing in many spoken titles the fact that if Petrova didn't confess that she had known her husband's friend intimately before her marriage, the fear of discovery would influence the life of her coming baby.

Finally Petrova decided to confess, and when she did Hubby told her that he had known about it all the time, when everything was lovely.

The atmosphere was decidedly lacking in distinction, principally because the lightings were rather muddy, with the photography of some of the close-ups too contrasty. There were many close-ups of Petrova, and, as usual, the distinctive beauty of this star held the attention and remained impressive despite the fact that the story was not getting underneath your shirt.

Mahlon Hamilton, as the husband, was unfortunately as camera-conscious as ever, with the result that his scenes lacked the human note.

Mr. Shields, as the lecturer, made his small part stand out, and the other members of the cast were acceptable, but little more.

Others in the cast were Mrs. Mathilde Brundage, Wyndham Standing, Mrs. Lottie Ford, Anna Laughney and Roy Pilcher.

The Box Office Angle.

These Petrova productions which aren't technically good have become rather a well-known quantity, so it is a question which you can best decide whether or not they should be played.

There is every possibility that Petrova's work with Paramount will be better, and if you are also playing Paramount features, it might be advisable to hold off—and yet you can figure that she has had so many bad ones that one more will not seriously interfere with results when you are going to announce that it is an entirely new deal on the new stuff.

If you play this I'd confine my advertising to the star and to the one thought in the offering—is a mother likely to influence the life of an unborn child because of a secret fear in her own heart?

FAIRLY INTERESTING HERO OPENS SAFE PLOT—WILL GET BY

William Desmond in

BLOOD WILL TELL

Ince—Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Lloyd Ingraham
AUTHOR.....Mary H. O'Connor
AS A WHOLE.....Fairly interesting surface action
STORY.....Rather convenient and obvious
DIRECTION....Gave good atmosphere, but scenes didn't register humanly
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good
LIGHTINGS.....A few effective; generally just good
CAMERA WORK.....Good
STAR.....A bit actory
SUPPORT..Just acceptable, with one or two good spots
EXTERIORS.....Some good; others ordinary
INTERIORS.....Very good; had distinctive class
DETAIL.....Convenient, but acceptable
TIME.....Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

ONE of the things which will strike every one regarding this production is the fact that it would seem as if the author were suggesting that it would be advisable for rich men's sons, when cast off, to take up the gentle art of safe opening in order that they might be on the job when father is reported dead and the vault cannot be opened. That's what happens in this, and they call it "Blood Will Tell."

The production starts off with some young-man-chasing-chorus-girl stuff, and of course the chorus girl is one of those innocent young things. They decided to get married, with headline-in-the-newspaper results, and father told son that he was "through."

Then the stock exchange battle started, with the customary mob scene in the stock exchange set, this finishing up with father being reported dead by his enemies and son coming to the rescue, taking his place at the desk and announcing that he was going to run things. The idea of a youngster, who knew nothing about the stock market, taking charge of such a battle was rather humorous, and they stopped it quick by stating that the vault was locked and consequently no securities were available.

In his odd moments, son had been learning to be an expert safe opener under the tutelage of a lot of fancy crooks. Of course, in order to provide the necessary "sob" stuff, wifey was ill with a baby on the way. Consequently that was supposed to excuse Hubby for wanting to be a burglar.

Anyway, the ability to open a safe by the wonderful "touch of the hand" stuff, a la Jimmie Valentine, came in on the grand finale, when he worked the combination of the big vault and released the securities which would save father's firm. Father then came in as soon as the firm was saved, and then son went to his mother, where he found his wife and baby.

The general class which marks all Ince sets made the early part of this offering rather distinctive, but I can't enthuse over the personality of Mr. Desmond, or that of Miss Markey. Possibly they might be called "types," but certainly audiences will not feel the bond of sympathy with these two that they would with two more popular favorites who might not be quite so perfect in the matter of type.

J. Barney Sherry, as the doctor, who gave father a bum steer, and Robert McKim, as one of the williuns, gave the best performances of any in the cast.

Margaret Thompson was very good as a rough-and-ready chorus lady, and the other members of the cast were acceptable.

The Box Office Angle.

While this is certainly not an offering that any one is going to enthuse over, it being the old stuff so far as story is concerned, with several very convenient and obvious angles, still I believe the atmosphere places it in a position to be considered a little better than the average program release in this day of fearful melodramas and painful surface junk.

From the box office viewpoint, I don't consider William Desmond or Enid Markey as possessed of any decided box office drag, but the prestige of the Ince-Triangle name may help you some in certain communities.

If you are picking your stuff, this is a good one to miss. If you have to run them as they come, I'd let it slide by without making any fuss one way or another. If you say that it has a "Jimmie Valentine" incident, you will only be telling them that it is the old stuff. If you say that it is a story of a boy who saved his father in a stock exchange battle, they'll think it's even older. I would suggest that you tell them the name, the star and the company and let it go at that, if you're going to run it.

GOOD SPOTS OF STAR, BUT VAMP AND MELO PULLED IT DOWN

Marjorie Rambeau in

THE GREATER WOMAN

Frank Powell—Mutual.

DIRECTOR	Frank Powell
AUTHOR	Alfred Boyesen
SCENARIO BY	Clara S. Beranger
CAMERAMAN	William Wagner
AS A WHOLE	Messy, melo at end
STORY	Made quite Vampish
DIRECTION	Allowed overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some good, mostly flat
LIGHTINGS	Some very beautiful of star
CAMERA WORK	Some good, some poor angles
STAR	At times very beautiful
SUPPORT	Overplayed, poor types
EXTERIORS	None to speak of
INTERIORS	Some good; many too setty
DETAIL	Slipped
TIME	65 minutes (5 parts)

THIS got tiresome before the end, with some laughs at the wrong time, and the vamp, oh, she was some vamp.

The story of this was quite simple, starting with Miss Rambeau falling for a strong-visaged rube, whom she decided she was afraid of, going to Paris the next morning. In Paris she married a poor simp of an artist with some short courtship.

Friend Rube, after getting turned down, came to New York to make his fortune, which he did in a couple of scenes and two titles, and finally got wealthy, wicked and wise.

Then friend Rube started to ruin the poor-simp-artist-hubby, with a vamp and the steel market. But after many scenes in the vamp's apartments and of a broker's office we get the wife still remaining firm to poor-simp-hubby.

This offering has one big fault of not getting under way until the middle of the third reel. That may be called suspense, but, believe me, it isn't the kind that holds your audience.

The direction of this allowed several slips, such as the dancer using the same costume in three different acts and doing the same dance. 'Tain't done! We also had Friend Rube in the "shero's" home wearing his hat, which isn't usually done even if he was perturbed.

Miss Rambeau was certainly lighted to advantage in some of her scenes, and she was particularly beautiful in her scenes with the baby. These were the only good lightings used in the entire production. In some of the scenes in her home the shots were much too long, and in one set a "davenport" stood directly in front of the camera and detracted very much from the work of the players. This set was always "shot" from this one angle.

The strong-visaged Rube was SOME (?) rider, and later he had some "ha-ha, I got you" scenes which he overplayed quite a bit. He didn't quite look the part of a man of the world.

Sara Haiden was the vampire—oh, she "vamped" all over the place and her make-up brought a yell—and if ever any one overplayed, she sure did.

Others in the cast were Frank Ford and Aubrey Beattie.

The Box Office Angle.

Marjorie Rambeau's name will probably pull you some business, but can you afford to play it? The ten-twent'-thirt's will not like it—it's too slow—and your regular fans will certainly catch all the slips. The story is not new, and neither is it well done. Surely the "vamp" will get a "howl" anywhere.

However, if you must run it, I would certainly go light on advertising it and would speak only of Miss Rambeau's beautiful lightings.

SURFACE MELLER—INCOHERENT AND RIDICULOUS IN SPOTS

Alma Hanlon and Edward Ellis in

THE LAW THAT FAILED

Apollo—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR.....Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR.....Louis Reeves Harrison
CAMERAMAN.....M. W. Hall
AS A WHOLE.....Cheap movie "meller" with many very bad spots
STORY.....Never impresses and lacks coherence
DIRECTION.....Pitifully old-school at times; never really good
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Not good
LIGHTINGS.....Generally muddy; a few close-ups good
CAMERA WORK.....Fair; lacked good angles
STARS.....Didn't impress under handicaps
SUPPORT.....Rather crude
EXTERIORS.....A few fairly good
INTERIORS.....Lacked distinction; some rather cheap
DETAIL.....Some points not clear; one awful snow "effect"
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

AS presented, this story runs along without ever becoming perfectly clear and clean-cut, principally because of a lack of titles to straighten out some of the situations, and partly because there are several types who were so similar in appearance as to be somewhat confusing.

The general atmosphere of the offering was rather crude, and the handling of the dramatic situations lacked the necessary finesse to make them register effectively. The average audience looking at this might accept it as a lot of "movie" stuff that didn't make much difference one way or the other, but certainly it'll not please them.

There is one scene alone, which is important because of the bearing it has upon the story, that has been made ridiculous to such an extent that the one point will kill any possible respect for the offering as a whole.

This scene was a dramatic bit played in a prospector's cabin while a storm was supposed to be raging outside. We saw several exteriors before and after in which it was really snowing, with the snow blowing somewhat in a flurry. The director evidently planned to get the "effect" of the howling blizzard outside the cabin, and so he posted some property boy at a window directly in the center of the back wall, where no one could possibly miss it, and this property boy stood there throwing salt about every second or two, before the window, in such a manner that any child will know that some feller was very busy there with a bucket of imitation snow. This crude error is so funny that it'll surely pull the eye of every one away from the happening in the cabin.

To crown this blunder, we had a snow scene where the two characters made their exit from this cabin, and as they did so, somebody threw a handful of imitation snow through the door. Oh, boy!—if that doesn't get a laugh, I'm a bum guesser!

The plot had to do with a rich prospector who had toiled for years until he stumbled into a cabin one night, in a delirious condition. The woman who lived there, figuring to take advantage of the stranger, made him believe that he had murdered her husband in his delirium.

For years afterward she blackmailed him, and when he planned to marry the girl he loved, she sent another threatening letter.

Going to her room, he apparently murdered her and placed her body in a trunk, which was taken away by two expressmen, who had been previously ordered by the woman, she having had intentions of leaving the city. I note that the synopsis tells that he locked the woman up in a secret room, but the film indicates that he murdered her and put her in a trunk.

Anyway, he was brought to trial and the evidence seemed to indicate that there was no question as to his guilt. His attorney, however, arose and demanded that he be released, since the body of the woman had not been produced. The jury arose in their seats and said that they thought he was guilty, and yet the judge said that he had only one choice in the matter, that is, he must free him.

Meanwhile the audience had seen the trunk, carried away by the expressmen, accidently dumped into a river, and the one very bad flaw is that every one will want to know why the police failed to trace these expressmen who called for this trunk.

Following the granting of his freedom, the murderer called on the girl he loved, and she refused to marry him, thinking him guilty, and the offering ended with his suicide.

Alma Hanlon has done some things rather worth while, but certainly she doesn't stand out particularly in this.

Edward Ellis has considerable poise, and with proper handling might register, but unfortunately there were other types in the offering who, in a general way, resembled him. Consequently he did not impress.

The other members of the cast were rather ordinary, and the dialect titles used to register the fact the the "willuness" was a foreigner were quite funny.

Others in the cast were J. K. Roberts, Florence Short and Harold Vermilye.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't see any reason why any one should book this, unless they have to have something and aren't very particular as to what it is. There is nothing that could be called entertaining in the story and it surely is lacking in both human interest and heart interest.

I hardly feel that the one point of law, that a murderer cannot be convicted unless the body is presented, is altogether pleasing as a thought, and surely the offering hasn't been intelligently enough produced to justify playing it because of its technical qualities. It is an ordinary "movie meller" production of a poor story. If your people will stand for such a thing then the moderate price at which you can get this may make it good business.

Personally, I fear that it is not advisable to play crude productions, no matter what the price you may get them for. Understand, I am not condemning the thought of making films at a reasonable figure in order to rent them at a reasonable price, because there is certainly a market for that sort of thing, but, just the same, even though the expenditure isn't great, the results should be far superior to what we get here.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ORDINARY SURFACE ACTION WITHOUT A PERSONALITY

Edith Hallor in

A MAN AND THE WOMAN

U. S. Amus. Corp.—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Mme. Alice Blache
AUTHOR	Emile Zola
SCENARIO BY	Mme. Alice Blache
CAMERAMAN	John G. Haas
AS A WHOLE	Surface action melo doesn't register
STORY	Wife-in-name-only stuff, realization on finish
DIRECTION	Old-school; crude spots; lacks human note
PHOTOGRAPHY	Barely acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Fair and poor
CAMERA WORK	Not good
STAR	Ordinary
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Not well handled
INTERIORS	Just acceptable
DETAIL	Too much of it; bad titles
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THE argument advanced in favor of presenting these comparatively crude surface-action productions is that there is a ready market for such cheap films. It is possibly a fact that many exhibitors are willing to buy what they can get cheap, but I can't say whether it is good business to play such offerings as this, even though they cost only a small rental, because it would seem to me that the average audience which is at all inclined to be critical would feel that this offering is decidedly too old-school to register satisfactorily, and surely there is no one personality in the production to justify its existence.

The story concerned a young man who agreed to marry a girl, to give a name to her child, with the understanding that he was to be husband in name only. Of course, he fell in love with his wife, and then the father of the child loomed up, making an effort to really marry the young lady.

We had a couple of regulation "misunderstood situations" which were deliberately planned by a very "willunous willuness," and finally, after the hero had started to kill himself and then stopped, we got the clutch.

There is nothing particularly new about any angle of this plot, and certainly this old stuff hasn't been well enough produced or intelligently enough played to make it register as a worth-while offering.

There was a noticeable lack of good camera angles, and in entirely too many cases the characters seemed to be grouped to have their pictures taken.

One of the most noticeable instances of this stagey, camera-conscious grouping of characters so that they could "have their pictures taken," was an attempt to inject some comedy by the presence of several colored kids. If they had not been lined up in a row with several of them gazing at the camera, this might have registered as a good point. As it stands, it misses fire.

There was nothing particularly artistic about any of the interiors, and, while several of the exteriors showed picturesque corners of public parks, etc., the locations were not entirely fitted for the offering, since they seemed to have been chosen for the possibilities of showing the fountain more than anything else.

The titles were particularly poor, some of them being ridiculously funny. As a sample of the sort of inane thing put on the screen as titles, I might quote this: "It is impossible to see her now—her child is ill," with the very funny answer—"How provoking." Almost immediately afterward the title "Thank you" was registered in a manner which made it equally funny. They then pulled one title—"Meet me to-morrow at eleven, at the old place"—which I'm sure most one-time attendants at the stage mellerdrammers will recognize as an old friend.

On the whole, the offering was very badly edited, and quite poorly assembled. Whoever decided to use Edith Hallor as the star, has another guess coming. She isn't star material. There was no one in the cast who stood out in a distinctive manner.

Others in the cast were Leslie Austen, Kirke Brown, H. B. Barker, Yolande Doquette, Zadee Burbank, Lorna Volare, Mrs. Willis Barker, P. H. Rallow, Harrison Ferguson, Harriet Thompson and Mrs. Miller.

The Box Office Angle

If you are using these very moderate priced program offerings to fill in on certain bad nights, you may have a different angle on this from anything that I can figure.

I can't see that this has the essential human qualities to make it entertaining, and, although an audience which is not critically inclined might accept it, I can't feel that they'd feel they could recommend it to any friend. You must remember that whenever your audience feels unable to recommend a picture or say it is good, your theatre's reputation is being injured just that much.

STARTED AS CHARACTER STUDY; ENDED AS MELO—STAR LIFTS IT

Ethel Clayton in

A MAN'S WOMAN

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Travers Vale
AUTHOR	William Addison Lathrop
CAMERAMAN	Max Schneider
AS A WHOLE	Star helps; support hurts; story slumps
STORY	Good characterization idea, became surface melo
DIRECTION	Gave good atmosphere, but bad groupings, and made players camera-conscious
PHOTOGRAPHY	Clean-cut; generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Very few effects; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not enough angles
STAR	Beauty and personality lifted offering decidedly
SUPPORT	Very camera-conscious and actory
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some very good; generally acceptable
DETAIL	Acceptable; very convenient at times
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THERE was every indication at first that this was going to be a rather good characterization study without the customary blood-and-thunder melodrama.

Miss Clayton's presence lifted the production from the first, because she is a truly charming personality, but the camera-conscious acting of Rockliffe Fellowes and other members of the cast soon discounted the production, and when they got into the convenient melodrama at the finish, whereby the murderer hired by the "willuns" arrived in time to shoot the boss "willun" instead of the husband, because he found him talking to his wife, the percentage of the production was lowered quite a bit.

The thought which they started out with concerned the placing of a delightful little beauty in the home of two old maids, sisters of her young husband, who was so busy that he couldn't conceive of his wife being mistress in her own home. The wife was made to live according to set rules, and cared for and fussed with as if she were a little baby. Finally the young beauty rebelled, and then we had a misunderstanding.

In the offing had been lurking a former suitor, now district attorney, and this man had appointed the husband as his assistant for a purpose.

Coming to the grand climax, the district attorney called upon friend wife while his assistant was making a final grand raid upon the gambling houses. The wife had been warned that her husband was to be killed and that the district attorney had a hand in it, and so she sent for the "willun" to get his plans from him. The guy what was to do the killin' blew in at just the right moment to poke a hole through the district attorney, mistaking him for the husband.

Previous to this, a bartender, befriended by the wife early in the story, had overheard the murder plot, and now he arrested the murderer. When the bartender overhears the plot by listening through a chimney opening, I've a hunch that it may get a laugh, because surely they were not doing business in that barroom on that day, or some one would have made inquiry as to why the bartender was standing with his ear glued to that hole in the wall.

One of the funniest things was when the gambling raid started. One "extry," a pretty good-sized gink, got under the gambling table right in the foreground instead of making a break for the window or door. Any two-year-old child will know that he would've been seen, and this attempt to hide was not funny—it was ridiculous.

More and better camera angles and more close-ups would have helped this, and it is to be regretted that the supporting cast was so decidedly inclined toward "acting." Miss Clayton's presence will save the offering from being poor, and with many she may make it quite worth-while.

In the supporting cast were Justine Cutting, Eugenie Woodward, Johnny Hines, Ned Burton and Ed M. Kimball.

The Box Office Angle

Considering this as a program release, the presence of Miss Clayton makes it a worth-while box-office value. The production will be accepted by average audience without too severe criticism, principally because of Miss Clayton's personality, and if you've been getting by with the average run of World productions, I'd say that this will be considered a good offering despite the melodramatic stuff on the finish.

In my advertising I would play up Miss Clayton for all she is worth and forget to mention Mr. Fellowes or any of the other members of the cast. In most anything in which he has appeared, Mr. Fellowes has been more or less camera-conscious, and consequently I fear that he has failed to register as a favorite.

I would play up the characterization thought with some such advertising as the following:

"Do you think a wife can be pampered and petted too much? See 'A Man's Woman.'" "Do you think a wife should be kept as a pet house cat, or allowed to assert her own individuality. See 'A Man's Woman.'"

Understand, this production has its bad spots, but, considered as the average program release runs, it should prove quite acceptable to the average fan.

FANCIFUL LITTLE STORY HELPED BY STAR AND SETTINGS

Vivian Martin in

THE SPIRIT OF ROMANCE

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR	E. Mason Hopper
AUTHOR	George Hopkins
SCENARIO BY	Adele Harris
CAMERAMAN	Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE	Pleasing light entertainment in classy atmosphere
STORY	A bit obvious, but will register satisfactorily
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive class and kept action pleasing
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Very good; some quite effective
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STAR	Pleasing personality; registers splendidly in close-ups
SUPPORT	Acceptable, but hardly distinctive
EXTERIORS	Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Generally very classy and distinctive; staircase set not quite so good
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED entirely from the viewpoint of entertainment, I believe that the average audience will accept this as a very pleasing little comedy-drama. Vivian Martin has made her greatest successes in such offerings, and somehow her personality seems to fit in with these fanciful little semi-fairy tales.

Producer Mason Hopper has given us a number of good little touches, which registered humanly, and the Morosco Studios have provided the distinctive, substantial, impressive settings which have marked their better offerings. In some places the lightings were excellent, and generally the atmosphere of the offering was decidedly pleasing.

There is nothing truly original about the plot, and most film fans will have an awful good hunch as to how it's all going to end soon after it starts, but, nevertheless, I believe they will prefer it to the cheap blood-and-thunder mellerdrammer.

Miss Martin appears as a maid-of-all-work in a curio shop, whose sincerity strikes the fancy of a very wealthy grouch, whose relatives were waiting for him to die. This grouch had constructed in his home many secret rooms, sliding panels, etc., to indulge a spirit of romance evolved from early-day reading.

Taking refuge in one of these handsomely furnished secret rooms, the millionaire "played dead," leaving his entire fortune to Miss Martin in order to see what the effect would be. She brought his unpleasant relatives there to live, and gradually reformed them, putting the son to work at selling good clothes, since that seemed to be the only thing he knew anything about.

The son of the curio dealer, who had invented a kettle that would not boil over, was presented with sufficient coin to exploit his invention, which of course became a tremendous success.

On the finish the millionaire came back to life, adopted Miss Martin and saw her do a nice "clutch" with the successful inventor.

One of the very bad spots was the use of the time-honored subterfuge of a masked ball, so that the millionaire might wander about among his friends, unrecognized, and I want to protest here again against doing this sort of thing in pictures, because Mr. Standing was not unrecognizable with the small mask which covered his eyes.

(Continued on following page.)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
CONTRACTING FEATURE PROD'CRS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from preceding page)

Throughout the offering the spirit of romance was seen to be flitting hither and thither in a double-exposure effect which was rather well handled, and consequently the name is given some definite connection with the story.

Herbert Standing as the millionaire, Colin Chase as the young inventor and George Fisher as the youth who became an haberdasher, were quite satisfactory, but their work didn't stand out particularly.

Others in the cast were Eleanor Hancock, Percy Challenger, Daisy Robinson and H. F. Crane.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can figure this as a safe bet for a pleasing little offering that is not to be exploited too heavily. It is certainly more entertaining than the blood-and-thunder melodrama, which fails to register, and never at any time does it make pretense of being more than it is—a fanciful little modern fairy tale. The distinctive atmosphere and the interest in what will happen with the grouchy millionaire's money will hold the attention of most any audience, and I believe they'll all leave with rather a happy feeling after looking this over. Miss Martin's personality is quite pleasing, and she is particularly effective in her close-ups.

I believe you can figure on this as an offering which will go particularly well with children, if you have certain days on which you take that into consideration. Understand, I don't consider it a great picture for either adults or children, but, at least, there's nothing objectionable that might offend any parent who would send a child to your house.

THE TIE THAT BINDS—GET A BINDER TO KEEP YOUR "WID'S."

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE
THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM
WID'S
INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1917. NO. 14 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

Index from Sept. 14, 1916 to Oct. 29, 1917

There will be an index in Wid's every three months following this issue. Each issue containing an index will have a colored cover to make it easily noticeable from the other issues.

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
	PARAMOUNT
94	The Storm	Sept. 14
75	The House of Lies	Sept. 21
76	The Reward of Patience	Sept. 21
80	A Daughter of MacGregor	Sept. 21
94	Her Father's Son	Sept. 28
94	The Intrigue	Sept. 28
89	Anton, the Terrible	Oct. 5
14	The Quest of Life	Oct. 5
23	The Lash	Oct. 12
10	Ashes of Embers	Oct. 12
55	Witchcraft	Oct. 26
58	The Rainbow Princess	Oct. 26
74	A Son of Erin	Nov. 2
75	The Heir to the Hoorah	Nov. 2
35	The Soul of Kura San	Nov. 9
17	The Plow Girl	Nov. 23
23	The Years of the Locust	Nov. 23
38	The Martyrdom of Philip Strong	Nov. 30
10	The Yellow Pawn	Nov. 30
11	Miss George Washington	Nov. 30
12	Nanette of the Wilds	Nov. 30
54	The Road to Love	Dec. 7
16	A Coney Island Princess	Dec. 7
15	The Victoria Cross	Dec. 14
12	The Traveling Salesman	Dec. 21
12	Oliver Twist	Dec. 21
10	Redeeming Love	Dec. 28
16	The Right Direction	Dec. 28
8	The Slave Market	Jan. 4
10	Snow White	Jan. 4
20	The Evil Eye	Jan. 11
11	Great Expectations	Jan. 11
18	Betty to the Rescue	Jan. 18
12	The Happiness of Three Women	Jan. 18
50	Lost and Won	Jan. 25
18	A Girl Like That	Jan. 25
70	His Sweetheart	Feb. 1
17	The Golden Fetter	Feb. 1
17	The Wax Model	Feb. 8
13	Each to His Kind	Feb. 8
15	The Black Wolf	Feb. 15
16	Her Own People	Feb. 15
19	The Winning of Sally Temple	Feb. 22
17	The American Consul	Feb. 22
11	On Record	Mar. 1
12	The Fortunes of Fifi	Mar. 1
51	Those Without Sin	Mar. 8
13	Castles for Two	Mar. 8
16	Sapho	Mar. 15
18	Out of the Wreck	Mar. 15
17	The Prison Without Walls	Mar. 22
19	The Dummy	Mar. 22
12	The Bottle Imp	Mar. 29
17	The Spirit of Romance	Mar. 29
	ARTCRAFT
16	Less Than the Dust	Nov. 9
17	The Pride of the Clan	Jan. 11
10	The Poor Little Rich Girl	Mar. 8
18	Broadway Jones	Mar. 29

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
	LASKY SPECIAL
9	Joan the Woman	Jan. 4
	TRIANGLE
903	Plain Jane	Sept. 14
908	The Dawn Maker	Sept. 14
913	Diane of the Follies	Sept. 14
914	The Jungle Child	Sept. 14
976	Manhattan Madness	Sept. 21
992	The Vagabond Prince	Sept. 28
998	A Corner in Colleens	Sept. 28
1015	The Return of Draw Egan	Oct. 5
1027	Old Folks at Home	Oct. 12
1031	Sister of Six	Oct. 12
1037	Atta Boy's Last Race	Oct. 19
1040	Jim Grimsby's Boy	Oct. 19
1042	Fifty-Fifty	Oct. 19
1046	Rummy	Oct. 19
1059	The Criminal	Oct. 26
1071	Honorable Algy	Nov. 2
1076	The Microscope Mystery	Nov. 2
1090	The Devil's Double	Nov. 9
1093	Somewhere in France	Nov. 9
1094	American Aristocracy	Nov. 9
1109	Bawbs o' Blue Ridge	Nov. 16
1143	Children of the Feud	Nov. 30
1152	Three of Many	Dec. 7
1153	The Sin Ye Do	Dec. 7
1155	The Children Pay	Dec. 7
1157	A Gamble in Souls	Dec. 7
1166	The Matrimaniac	Dec. 14
1172	The Wharf Rat	Dec. 14
1189	The Heiress at Coffee Dan's	Dec. 21
1190	The Female of the Species	Dec. 21
1198	The Weaker Sex	Dec. 28
1199	Truthful Tulliver	Dec. 28
7	The Americano	Jan. 4
19	Nina, the Flower Girl	Jan. 11
41	The Crab	Jan. 18
42	The House Built Upon Sand	Jan. 18
51	Chicken Casey	Jan. 25
57	The Bride of Hate	Jan. 25
59	A Girl of the Timber Claims	Jan. 25
72	The Gun-Fighter	Feb. 1
75	Jim Bludso	Feb. 1
79	The Iced Bullet	Feb. 1
91	Princess of the Dark	Feb. 8
100	The Bad Boy	Feb. 15
109	The Last of the Ingrams	Feb. 15
121	The Little Brother	Feb. 22
126	Stage Struck	Feb. 22
135	Betsy's Burglar	Mar. 1
138	Back of the Man	Mar. 1
166	The Square-Deal Man	Mar. 15
173	A Daughter of the Poor	Mar. 15
182	Her Father's Keeper	Mar. 22
184	The Dark Road	Mar. 22
184	A Love Sublime	Mar. 22
200	A Woman's Awakening	Mar. 29
203	Blood Will Tell	Mar. 29

McCLURE—SEVEN SINS—TRIANGLE

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
54	Envy	Jan. 25
62	Pride	Jan. 25
89	Greed	Feb. 8
104	Sloth	Feb. 15
139	Passion	Mar. 1
154	Wrath	Mar. 8

WORLD

909	Friday, the Thirteenth	Sept. 14
978	Dark Silence	Sept. 21
991	The Revolt	Sept. 28
1012	The Hidden Scar	Oct. 5
1028	The Gilded Cage	Oct. 12
1037	The Man Who Stood Still	Oct. 19
1043	The Scarlet Oath	Oct. 19
1057	The Heart of a Hero	Oct. 26
1069	Bought and Paid For	Nov. 2
1092	The Madness of Helen	Nov. 9
1126	The Men She Married	Nov. 23
1135	All Man	Nov. 30
1151	Broken Chains	Dec. 7
1174	The Rise of Susan	Dec. 14
1186	The World Against Him	Dec. 21
12	A Woman Alone	Jan. 4
22	On Dangerous Ground	Jan. 11
40	The Man Who Forgot	Jan. 18
43	The Bondage of Fear	Jan. 18
60	Tillie Wakes Up	Jan. 25
63	The Hungry Heart	Jan. 25
77	The Red Woman	Feb. 1
109	A Square Deal	Feb. 15
137	A Girl's Folly	Mar. 1
140	The Web of Desire	Mar. 1
152	The Dancer's Peril	Mar. 8
171	The Social Leper	Mar. 15
174	As Man Made Her	Mar. 15
206	Man's Woman	Mar. 29

METRO

905	The Light of Happiness	Sept. 14
907	The Upheavel	Sept. 14
983	Mister Forty-Four	Sept. 21
993	The Wheel of the Law	Sept. 28
1014	The Dawn of Love	Oct. 5
1026	The Iron Woman	Oct. 12
1047	Life's Shadows	Oct. 19
1058	In the Diplomatic Service	Oct. 26
1072	The Brand of Cowardice	Nov. 2
1094	The Gates of Eden	Nov. 9
1102	Extravagance	Nov. 16
1121	The Wager	Nov. 23
1149	Big Tremaine	Dec. 7
1171	The Sunbeam	Dec. 14
1184	The Black Butterfly	Dec. 21
1204	The Stolen Triumph	Dec. 28
13	Pidgin Island	Jan. 4
29	Vanity	Jan. 11
46	The Awakening of Helena Ritchie	Jan. 18
46	A Wife by Proxy	Jan. 18
58	White Raven	Jan. 25
69	Threads of Fate	Feb. 1
95	Bridges Burned	Feb. 8
102	One of Many	Feb. 15
108	The End of the Tour	Feb. 15
156	The Barricade	Mar. 8
158	The Promise	Mar. 8
159	The Secret of Eve	Mar. 8
175	The Mortal Sin	Mar. 15
185	His Father's Son	Mar. 22
203	The Waiting Soul	Mar. 29

METRO SPECIAL

1052	Romeo and Juliet	Oct. 26

FOX

973	Where Love Leads	Sept. 21
999	Fires of Conscience	Sept. 28
1008	The Straight Way	Oct. 5
1011	Her Double Life	Oct. 5
1021	The War Bride's Secret	Oct. 12
1045	The Ragged Princess	Oct. 19
1053	Romeo and Juliet	Oct. 26
1118	Love and Hate	Nov. 23
1122	Jealousy	Nov. 23
1124	The Mediator	Nov. 23
1140	The Mischief Maker	Nov. 30
1150	The Vixen	Dec. 7
1168	Sins of the Parents	Dec. 14
1170	The Battle of Life	Dec. 14
1202	The Love Thief	Dec. 28
11	The Island of Desire	Jan. 4
17	A Modern Cinderella	Jan. 11
26	The Price of Silence	Jan. 11
39	Bitter Truth	Jan. 18
47	The Victim	Jan. 18
49	The Primitive Call	Jan. 25
73	One Touch of Sin	Feb. 1
110	The Darling of Paris	Feb. 15
120	The Scarlet Letter	Feb. 22
136	The Tiger Woman	Mar. 1
143	The New York Peacock	Mar. 1
164	A Tale of Two Cities	Mar. 15

FOX SPECIAL

1038	A Daughter of the Gods	Oct. 19

MUTUAL

910	The Light	Sept. 14
1004	Dulcie's Adventure	Oct. 4
1006	Charity	Oct. 4
1022	Philip Holden—Waster	Oct. 12
1024	The Torch Bearer	Oct. 12
1025	A Woman's Daring	Oct. 12
1036	Bluff	Oct. 19
1076	The Undertow	Nov. 2
1095	East is East	Nov. 9
1105	Immediate Lee	Nov. 16
1108	The Pearl of Paradise	Nov. 16
1122	A Woman's Awakening	Nov. 23
1166	The Rink	Dec. 14
1173	Miss Jackie of the Navy	Dec. 21
204	The Greater Woman	Mar. 29

PATHE

1022	Prudence, the Pirate	Oct. 5
1044	Saint, Devil and Woman	Oct. 5
1073	The Light that Failed	Nov. 2
1078	The World and the Woman	Nov. 2
1087	Shadows and Sunshine	Nov. 2
1107	Arms and the Woman	Nov. 16
1124	The Sultana	Nov. 23
1127	Divorce and the Daughter	Nov. 23
1143	The Hidden Valley	Nov. 30
1170	King Lear	Dec. 14
1175	The Challenge	Dec. 14
1189	The Romantic Journey	Dec. 21
1200	Joy and the Dragon	Dec. 28
1204	Her New York	Dec. 28
20	Twin Kiddies	Jan. 11
30	Kick In	Jan. 11
31	The Image Maker	Jan. 11
53	A Modern Monte Cristo	Jan. 25
61	Sold at Auction	Jan. 25
90	Her Life and His	Feb. 8
111	Crime and Punishment	Feb. 15
142	The Empress	Mar. 1
155	The Vicar of Wakefield	Mar. 8
157	Pots-and-Pans Peggy	Mar. 8
172	Told at Twilight	Mar. 15
186	Mary Lawson's Secret	Mar. 22
190	May Blossom	Mar. 22

BLUEBIRD

915	The Evil Women Do	Sept. 14
977	Wanted—a Home	Sept. 21
991	The Chalice of Sorrow	Sept. 28
1013	The Social Buccaneer	Oct. 5
1024	Love Never Dies	Oct. 5
1061	The End of the Rainbow	Oct. 26
1078	Gloriana	Nov. 2
1106	A Stranger from Somewhere	Nov. 16
1108	The Measure of a Man	Nov. 16
1133	The Bugbar of Algiers	Nov. 30
1152	The Price of Silence	Dec. 7
1156	The Sign of the Poppy	Dec. 7
1169	The Honor of Mary Blake	Dec. 14
1188	The Right to be Happy	Dec. 21
1197	God's Crucible	Dec. 28
18	The Piper's Price	Jan. 4
26	Her Soul's Inspiration	Jan. 11
29	Black Orchids	Jan. 11
52	The Mysterious Mrs. M.	Jan. 25
62	The Devil's Pay Day	Jan. 25
71	The Reward of the Faithless	Feb. 1
90	The Man Who Took a Chance	Feb. 8
124	The Saintly Sinner	Feb. 22
134	Polly Redhead	Mar. 1
154	The Gift Girl	Mar. 8

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
158	The Boy Girl	Mar. 8
167	Mutiny	Mar. 15
170	Susan's Gentleman	Mar. 15
174	Helt Morgan's Girl	Mar. 15
183	The Pulse of Life	Mar. 22

BLUEBIRD SPECIAL

1136	The Eagle's Wings	Nov. 30

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

996	Idle Wives	Sept. 28
1183	The People vs. John Doe	Dec. 21
25	20,000 Leagues Under the Sea	Jan. 11

RED FEATHER

995	The Romance of Billy Goat Hill	Sept. 28
1007	Barriers of Society	Oct. 5
1054	The Isle of Life	Oct. 26
1072	The Place Beyond the Winds	Nov. 30
1088	The Heritage of Hate	Nov. 9
1139	Kinkaid, Gambler	Nov. 30
1142	The Mainspring	Nov. 30
1185	The Morals of Hilda	Dec. 21
1203	A Child of Mystery	Dec. 28
6	Mixed Blood	Jan. 4
18	The Double Room Mystery	Jan. 11
21	Polly Put the Kettle On	Jan. 11
23	Fighting for Love	Jan. 11
55	Love Aflame	Jan. 25
78	The Scarlet Crystal	Feb. 1
94	He An' Me Pal	Feb. 8
103	The War of the Tongs	Feb. 15
104	The Terror	Feb. 15
117	The Girl and the Crisis	Feb. 22
133	The Gates of Doom	Mar. 1
168	The Girl Who Lost—Border Wolves	Mar. 15
199	The Bronze Bride	Mar. 29

VITAGRAPH

906	The Chattel	Sept. 14
911	His Wife's Good Name	Sept. 14
981	The Combat	Sept. 21
990	Through the Wall	Sept. 28
997	Blind Justice	Sept. 28
040	The Blue Envelope Mystery	Oct. 19
043	A Prince in a Pawnshop	Oct. 19
044	The Firm of Girdlestone	Oct. 19
062	The Last Man	Oct. 26
068	The Devil's Prize	Nov. 2
089	The Price of Fame	Nov. 9
119	An Enemy to the King	Nov. 23
120	The Dollar and the Law	Nov. 23
154	My Official Wife	Dec. 7
158	Rose of the South	Dec. 7
167	Whom the Gods Destroy	Dec. 14
172	The Enemy	Dec. 14
187	The Ninety and Nine	Dec. 21
5	The Girl Phillipa	Jan. 4
37	Indiscretion	Jan. 18
45	Her Right to Live	Jan. 18
56	The Glory of Yolanda	Jan. 25
56	The Man of Mystery	Jan. 25
74	Money Magic	Feb. 1
94	The Courage of Silence	Feb. 8
123	Kitty Mackay	Feb. 22
125	Arsene Lupin	Feb. 22
165	Aladdin From Broadway	Mar. 15
169	Intrigue	Mar. 15
186	Babette	Mar. 22
201	The More Excellent Way	Mar. 29

VITAGRAPH-GENERAL FILM

191	O. Henry Stories	Mar. 22

K. E. S. E.

010	The Country God Forgot	Oct. 5
960	The Return of Eve	Oct. 26
110	The Cossack Whip	Nov. 16
125	The Chaperon	Nov. 23
159	The Breaker	Dec. 7
201	The Prince of Graustark	Dec. 28
15	The Last Sentence	Jan. 4
28	The Master Passion	Jan. 11
50	The Truant Soul	Jan. 25
52	Little Shoes	Jan. 25
60	The Princess of Patches	Jan. 25
86	Skinner's Dress Suit	Feb. 8

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
107	The Royal Pauper	Feb. 15
122	The Heart of Texas Ryan	Feb. 22
172	Burning the Candle	Mar. 15
191	Little Lost Sister	Mar. 22

ART DRAMAS

44	The Rainbow	Jan. 18
72	God of Little Children	Feb. 1
76	Her Good Name	Feb. 1
85	Rosie O'Grady	Feb. 8
120	The Adventurer	Feb. 22
123	The Accomplice	Feb. 22
152	The Moral Code	Mar. 8
166	Pride and the Devil	Mar. 8
170	The Cloud	Mar. 15
205	The Law that Failed	Mar. 29
206	A Man and the Woman	Mar. 29

SELZNICK PICTURES

998	The Common Law	Sept. 28
1101	War Brides	Nov. 11
1205	The Foolish Virgin	Dec. 28
24	Panthea	Jan. 11
92	The Argyle Case	Feb. 8
132	The Price She Paid	Mar. 1
188	The Eternal Sin	Mar. 22

FROHMAN AMUSE. CORP.

1005	The Conquest of Canaan	Oct. 5
1134	The Witching Hour	Nov. 30

SERIALS

902	The Scarlet Runner (Epos. 1, 2, 3, 4)	Sept. 14
1137	Pearl of the Army (Epos. 1, 2, 3)	Nov. 30

STATE RIGHTS

IVAN-ENLIGHTMENT FILM CORP

88	Enilighten Thy Daughter	Feb. 8

GOLDEN EAGLE-SUPERB FILM

979	The Flower of Faith	Sept. 21

INTERNATIONAL

912	Jaffrey	Sept. 14
1111	The Ocean Waif	Nov. 16

ANTI VICE-M. P. CORP.

982	Is Any Girl Safe?	Sept. 21

DUDLEY FEATURES-UNITY SALES-S. R.

1060	The Land Just Over Yonder	Oct. 26
139	Glory	Mar. 1

FOREIGN SPECIAL—S. R.

1070	The Masque of Life	Nov. 2

BALBOA—B. S. MOSS—S. R.

1026	The Power of Evil	Oct. 12
1074	Boots and Saddles	Nov. 2

IVAN FILM-S. R.

1056	Her Surrender	Oct. 26
1091	The Sex Lure	Nov. 9
126	Two Men and a Woman	Feb. 26

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES S. R.

1029	Where is My Father?	Oct. 12

SELIG SPEC.—SHERMAN ELLIOTT

1010	The Crisis	Oct. 5

PAGE	TITLE	DATE
	TRIUMPH.—MAMMOTH—S. R.
1104	The Libertine	Nov. 16
	LIFE PHOTOPLAY-EDUCATIONAL FILMS S. R.
1126	Snow White	Nov. 23
	ELLA WHEELER WILCOX-G. P. HAMILTON
974	Inherited Passions	Sept. 21
	KITTY GORDON FILM CORP.
14	Vera, the Medium	Jan. 4
	REX BEACH SPECIAL PROD.
101	The Barrier	Feb. 15
	CREATIVE FILM CORP.—S. R.
74	The Girl Who Didn't Think	Feb. 1
	FRIEDMAN—HILLER & WILK
118	A Mormon Maid	Feb. 22

Triangle Heads the List

In making our deductions from the EXHIBITORS' OWN REPORTS we find that Triangle heads the list of program Companies.

We have made this list by taking a general average from EXHIBITORS' OWN REPORTS, including the percentage of pleased patrons, percentage box office, and the percentage of repeats based on the number of reports.

The third, fourth and fifth columns are comparisons of averages of the last seven months with the averages of all the reports that have been sent us.

TRIANGLE	56.8	P. P. same	B. O. higher	Repeats high
K. E. S. E. Service	54.5	P. P. high	B. O. high	Repeats low
MUTUAL	54.4	P. P. high	B. O. high	Repeats low
PATHE	52.5	P. P. same	B. O. same	Repeats medium
FOX	51.8	P. P. low	B. O. high	Repeats low
METRO	48.4	P. P. low	B. O. low	Repeats low
VITAGRAPH	47.9	P. P. very low	B. O. very low	Repeats medium
WORLD	47.3	P. P. low	B. O. high	Repeats low
PARAMOUNT	46.8	P. P. very low	B. O. very low	Repeats medium
BLUEBIRD	43.8	P. P. high	B. O. low	Repeats very low
RED FEATHER	43.3	P. P. high	B. O. low	Repeats zero

This chart is made from the issue of March 22d, and are compared with the company averages of the same issue.

Here is a truly interesting analysis of the exhibitors' percentage reports indicating developments in the past six or seven months.

By checking carefully the variance in these percentages you will note some shifts that are important. The bad slumps of some of the companies can only be attributed to poor stories, since the stars, directors and studio conditions have not changed materially.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General
of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios
and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York Ci

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

STORY IDEA GOOD ENOUGH TO MAKE THIS DESPITE BAD SPOTS

Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon in

THE CLOCK

Bluebird

DIRECTOR ..... William Worthington
AUTHOR ..... Aaron Hoffman
SCENARIO BY ..... Maie B. Havey
CAMERAMAN ..... Friend F. Baker
AS A WHOLE ..... Idea and action kept it entertaining
STORY ..... Provided good laughs and had excellent underlying thought
DIRECTION ..... Had good spots and bad spots
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very clean-cut; occasionally bad close-ups
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very fine; a few too contrasty
CAMERA WORK ..... Not enough angles; some close-ups terribly lighted
STARS ..... He, needs hair-cut and more attention to appearance in close-ups; she, very pleasing
SUPPORT ..... "Willun" awful; others acceptable
EXTERIORS ..... Some very beautiful; some just ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good
DETAIL ..... A few weak spots; generally good
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

ANY audience will feel a bit antagonistic at first when they discover that Mr. Farnum is doing a very obvious imitation of "Doug" Fairbanks. After they get used to it and find Mr. Farnum's limitations, they may accept his good points and feel that he does get away with the buoyant personality stuff fairly well.

There are two very serious handicaps to Mr. Farnum's ersonality, one of these being that he needs a haircut ery badly, and the other that, in some close-ups taken ith his face turned directly towards the camera, he oks positively repulsive. This was due to poor make-up nd bad lighting, but nevertheless it was there. In a rofile close-up Mr. Farnum is very pleasing, and most his scenes played at a distance were quite satisfactory. Aaron Hoffman is credited with this story idea, and to m must go most of the credit for the fact that this will gister most anywhere as a very interesting and accept- le bit of entertainment.

The plot idea concerns a young man who never man- ged to arrive on time for any appointment. He lost veral jobs because of this and almost lost his fiancee's ve. Suddenly he was informed that he had been left a ndsome income by an old uncle, with the stipulation at he must wind a clock at ten o'clock every night, go bed and arise at six in the morning when the alarm ng. Of course, the underlying thought was to demon- rate that after doing this for a few weeks it became a atter of habit, so that he could do it without the clock. For the finish we had the "willun" sending a man to eal the clock, which was rather a far-fetched farce, th the final expose of the "willun" before the heroine d her father, and the announcement by the heroine at she was really the mysterious old "uncle," who had lled the clock to the hero.

There was one point in the plot where it looked to me as if they missed an excellent chance, it being a situation where the hero missed a boat going to South America, which he was supposed to catch in order to hold down a job. He had been out on a bachelor's dinner and after getting "stewed" was bathing in the surf with his evening clothes on, when he discovered that it was time to catch the boat. After a wild automobile chase, he arrived on the dock just as the boat was sailing out. Now, it will occur to almost everyone that it would have been a very easy matter to catch this boat in a steam launch or even in a tug, and the fact that our hero made no attempt sort of drops him a bit in the minds of the audience. He wired to his employer, telling him that he'd missed the boat, and the employer replied that "his resignation was accepted." I believe that it would have been much funnier had he made a wild chase in a steam launch to catch the boat, only to get on deck in time for the employer to inform him that he was discharged, not having kept his appointment at the dock.

Mr. Farnum could have made rather a pleasing impression as a whole had the director and cameraman been more careful as to many of the close-ups which were used. All of these bad ones could have been made more pleasing by more intelligent handling.

The early scenes showed some beautiful photography, much of which was exceptionally clean-cut, but this was handicapped by the fact that too many of the scenes were taken from exactly the same angle, thereby losing the charm of variety.

The "willun" was certainly awful! He was the typical rip-an'-tear "heavy" and insisted upon "acting" all the time.

Agnes Vernon didn't have a great deal to do, but she was quite pleasing.

In the supporting cast were Marc Fenton, Frank Whitson, Willis Marks and Frederick Montague.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that this would have appealed to audiences even better if there were not such a plainly noticeable attempt to do the Fairbanks stuff, with several incidents such as a rough-house in a dance hall, dragged in by the heels in order to do "Doug's" stunts.

The story idea is sufficiently good to make sure that any audience will consider this worth while, and, personally, I've a hunch that they'll like it quite a lot at this time, because of the recent avalanche of very ordinary surface melodrama. Even with the bad spots, it has enough laughs to get over very satisfactorily.

In advertising this I would play up particularly the idea that a clock may change a man's entire career. You might use such lines as the following:

"Do you own a clock—I mean a 'pet' clock? You should." "Have you a little clock of your own at home? You should have." "Do you appreciate what your clock means to you. You should!" etc., etc.

Play these up for several days before you announce the name of the offering and the time that it will be shown in your theatre. Then, when you tie this advertising up with your theatre date, emphasize the thought that a clock has the power to change any man's career, offering to prove it to every one's satisfaction in the Bluebird production in which Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon are starred.

EXCELLENT ALLEGORY, BUT A BIT TOO MUCH THOUGHT FOR AVERAGE FAN

Ben Wilson, Lorraine Huling and Maude George in

EVEN AS YOU AND I

Lois Weber Production—Universal—State Rights

DIRECTOR.....Lois Weber
AUTHOR.....Lois Weber
CAMERAMAN.....Al Siegler
AS A WHOLE....Interesting allegory, but with some will not register as entertaining
STORY.....Showed thought and registered human frailties by effective allegory, with occasional bits of Hell
DIRECTION.....Technically good, but permitted preachment to overshadow human touches
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good, although at times contrasty
LIGHTINGS.....Some very effective; some too contrasty
CAMERA WORK....Excellent "doubles" and trick stuff
STARS—Very good, although some of Wilson's close-ups marred by photography
SUPPORT.....Good
EXTERIORS.....Very good
INTERIORS.....Good, with devilish Hell scenes
DETAIL.....Nicely handled
TIME.....Sixty-seven minutes (6 parts)

WE have come to expect that in every Lois Weber production there will be a sincere underlying motive.

In this offering the thought is there, and as an allegory preachment it is decidedly interesting.

Unfortunately, figured from an entertaining viewpoint, it seems to me that there is a bit too much of the allegory to permit of this appealing to the average film patron as pleasing entertainment. Those who like to take their film offerings seriously will get all of the points in this as they were intended, and certainly many of the thoughts will hit home with thinking patrons, with sufficient strength to make them consider this as a decidedly worth-while offering. However, the weak angle, as I see it, figuring from the exhibitor's viewpoint, is that the frivolously-inclined patron seeking only entertainment will refuse to take this as seriously as the author-producer intended, and consequently will be a bit inclined to poke fun at some of the Hell scenes and the repeated visits of the Devil and his playmates.

The idea presented is an allegorical study of the temptations offered to a happy young couple who have love, honor and youth numbered among their possessions. These three virtues are indicated by three bits of statuary standing in their home, the work of the sculptor-husband. In contrast with these two, we have other characters, such as the frivolous wife, the man made stern by experience, the good friend, etc.

From the depths of Hell our old friend the Devil sends forth various messengers to tempt the good couple, and finally win from them, one at a time, love, honor and youth.

The Hell scenes have been rather elaborately done, and were quite effective as such, but just as most folks to-day refuse to accept the Hell and brimstone preachings of ministers, I fear that the average film fan will be inclined to see the humorous side of "extras" stripped and greased to portray fiends incarnate bearing great webbed wings.

At the finish, when both husband and wife have reached the depths, we found them saved and brought together through Repentance.

In several places we get good looks at a number of "figgers," this being particularly true of Maude George, who is sent by Old Nick to tempt Ben Wilson. Maude was shown in a pose from which Ben was doing a bit of sculpturing, and I couldn't help but think that she looked like a cross between a corset ad. and one of Annette Kellermann's mermaids. She had on a dress, so that the censors can't very well kick, and—oh, boy!—if there was a line of her figger that didn't show—I couldn't tell you where it was.

Mr. Wilson, as the tempted husband, gave a good characterization, but in a number of his close-ups the lighting was bad, which marred somewhat the effect of his performance.

Miss Huling was quite acceptable as the wife, although, somehow, her personality didn't carry the appeal which might have made this even more human.

Priscilla Dean, as the frivolous wife, handled her part very well, and also displayed quite some, thank you!

Harry Carter was a real devilish old devil, and several of his chief assistants surely did look the part without any overdone makeup, when appearing in their human form.

The Box Office Angle.

The thought back of this is big enough to justify your playing it and billing it as a forceful, intelligently-presented allegory on temptation, and I believe you can rest easy as to any one criticizing it. Even though some of your fans may see more of the humorous side and refuse to take this very seriously, I feel sure that they'll all agree that it carries a thought and has been intelligently treated.

Because of the fact that it is preachment along general lines rather than upon some specific evil, I would not figure it a production that would stand a very long run. It will register satisfactorily, but will hardly cause your patrons to dig up their friends and recommend to them that they see it.

Certainly it is better than just a program release, and we must again give Miss Weber credit for having maintained a standard to the extent of having produced what is at least a distinctive picture. I can emphatically say this: It is one of the best, if not the best, allegory I have ever seen. Since the screen is so essentially a place to portray the real things of life, it is actually harder to do an allegory before the camera than it is to do one on the stage. I can't recall any allegorical production that has been as well handled as this.

In considering playing this you must remember that name of Lois Weber stands for a lot at the box office these days, particularly when you mention in your advertising the fact that she has produced such successes as "Hypocrites," "Scandal," "Where are My Children?" "Jewel," "The People vs. John Doe," etc.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

RATHER OBVIOUS PLOT WITH ONE GOOD THOUGHT—PLAYED TOO FAR FROM CAMERA

George Beban in

THE BOND BETWEEN

Pallas—Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... Donald Crisp
AUTHOR ..... George Beban
CAMERAMAN ..... J. O. Taylor
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly interesting, but failed to grip
STORY ..... Had one good thought, but rather obvious action
DIRECTION ..... Played scenes too far from camera to register humanly
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some very good; most of it ordinary
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very effective; some too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied; not enough close-ups
STAR ..... Good characterizations, but human touches lost by absence of close-ups
SUPPORT ..... Some good types, but not truly distinctive; leads too youthful
EXTERIORS ..... Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good
DETAIL ..... Good, but obvious at times, with some bad spots
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

WE have come to expect exceptionally human characterizations from George Beban, and in this offering, which he wrote, he mapped out a characterization which surely would have been delightful had the director brought him into the foreground sufficiently and played more of the action in close-ups.

There was a decided tendency to play too many of the scenes at such a distance from the camera as to lose the value of the expressions, and this tended to cause the action to float along without registering at the heart, as it should.

The story, although based upon an interesting thought, was quite obvious, and it moved slowly but surely towards a climax which will be anticipated by any audience long before it arrives.

Mr. Beban was presented as a quaint old French piano instructor who had three chums—one a Russian, one a German and one a Hungarian. As might be expected, they gathered a little comedy out of this strange assortment of nationalities in connection with the European war, but demonstrated that, when it came to a show-down, the friends were ready to go to the rescue of their old chum who had been imprisoned.

Mr. Beban's son was an art student who was the innocent victim of a thief, who stole valuable oil paintings, covered them over with water-colors, and so smuggled them into this country. I cannot remember that this particular idea has ever been used in a feature offering, and it will prove interesting, although in one place the manner in which a detective handled what was supposed to be a very valuable old master, was quite ridiculous, since he nonchalantly put it under his arm and walked out, without appearing to care whether he bumped into any one or not.

The old piano instructor was made night watchman at an art museum, for obvious reasons, the thief picking out the night on which he took his job as a good one to steal the famous painting, with the watchman's son coming to the museum just in time that he might be suspected of the theft.

A youthful heroine (Vola Vale), who wasn't bad, except she seemed quite young to be so high in the U. S. Secret Service, happened to be on the trail of the art smuggler, and, of course, after the hero and his father were arrested, she loomed up to save the young man, with whom she'd fallen in love, and everything was "slovely."

In quite a number of places we had the very substantial, impressive sets which mark most of the Pallas productions, and there were some decidedly effective and artistic lightings. As a whole, however, the atmosphere and lightings were not sufficiently uniform to maintain the distinctive class which the few exceptional bits indicated might prevail. The average audience will consider this interesting, but it'll not get "under their shirt," as it would had the offering been played with more close-ups and had Mr. Beban been given more opportunity to register the characterization of which he is capable.

The opening introduction of Mr. Beban was very good, since it presented him first as the author, with a dissolve which brought him directly into the character, seated with his friends as described in the first pages of his manuscript.

Miss Vale, as the heroine, did nothing very unusual, but was quite acceptable, with the possible criticism of her youth.

Colin Chase as Mr. Beban's son was acceptable, but little more. He didn't really impress.

Eugene Pallette, as the art thief, may have been wearing his own mustache, but—oh, boy!—it did look "phoney!" It was a typical "willun's" badge!

They had a gink playing the chief of the New York police who certainly didn't look the part. Greater care should be used in the selection of such characters, particularly when the city in which the official is supposed to be acting is named.

Others in the cast were John Brunton, Nigel de Brullier, Paul Weigel, W. H. Bainbridge, Signor Buzzi and Mrs. Buehler.

The Box Office Angle

Considering this as an average program release, it will probably prove acceptable, because it is at least fairly interesting and has a bit of action, even though the development is somewhat obvious. It is unfortunate that Mr. Beban isn't given greater opportunity for characterization, because most of the fans who follow his work will expect that particularly.

You can safely play this as a program offering, but I'd be cautious about making any extravagant promises as to merit. I would say that the story concerns the uncovering of extensive thefts of very valuable oil paintings by a girl in the U. S. Secret Service, and also mention the introduction of many humorous little encounters between Americans who were inclined to consider themselves enemies because of their hyphenated ancestry, until the real test came, which proved that, after all, they were friends first.

If you want to tackle that angle you might use some such billing as this:

"Do you realize that there is really a bond between most of our hyphenated Americans? See what brings together a Russian, a German, a Frenchman and a Hungarian in this production."

You might also say that Mr. Beban has been appearing in the past as an Italian, but in this instance gives a characterization of a lovable old French piano instructor.

PATRIOTIC PREPAREDNESS TITLES, WEEKLY STUFF AND ONLY FAIR DRAMA MAKES TIMELY OFFERING THAT SHOULD GET MONEY

Harry Morey, Alice Joyce and Naomi Childers

WOMANHOOD

Vitagraph Special

DIRECTORS..William P. S. Earle and J. Stuart Blackton
AUTHORS.....Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady and J. Stuart Blackton
SCENARIO BY.....Helmer W. Bergman
CAMERAMAN .....Clark R. Nickerson
AS A WHOLE.....Illustrated titles, "weekly" stuff and ordinary melo jumbled into wave-the-flag-appeal
STORY....Unconvincing "meller" that didn't ring true for war time; furnishes thread to hang "weekly" scenes on.
DIRECTION.....Achieved preparedness preachment, but missed fire in many places
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Some very good; some very poor; decidedly varied
LIGHTINGS.....Varied from fine to poor
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STARS....Apparently working under direction; failed to make parts hit hard
SUPPORT.....Good and poor; some weak types
EXTERIORS....."Weekly stuff" and scenics quite interesting; story scenes good and bad
INTERIORS.....Some good; some poor
DETAIL.....In many instances lacked impressive dignity
TIME.....One hour, thirty-five minutes (7 parts)

COMMODORE BLACKTON has given us another "Battle Cry of Peace" preparedness preachment, and, although in many ways this is better than the first offering, the fact that the film business has moved quite rapidly in the intervening months, leaves this at the present time still further behind the procession, so far as the offering is technically concerned.

The drama is ordinary, and in many places entirely too savoring of cheap "meller" to be impressive. The offering is frequently burdened with bad titles.

Considered from a commercial, money-getting viewpoint, this should be a clean-up, because of the very fortunate fact that the producers had it ready for release at this moment.

The production is sort of a hodge-podge of illustrated titles making patriotic appeals, scenes of soldiers marching, battleships, etc., such as is commonly known as "weekly stuff," and every now and then short sequences of the dramatic story. Because of the martial spirit which is sweeping the country, these appeals will undoubtedly arouse considerable enthusiasm anywhere, and consequently the general effect will be, that the production will be considered an important one. Surely it will make people talk, and bring business to the box office.

It seems to me that a very serious error has been made in one important item, in that the producer has very noticeably played up Theodore Roosevelt in a manner that almost becomes a proposition of forcing him into the applause moments. From the speeches made by Commodore Blackton and Burr McIntosh on the opening night, it would seem that one of the chief thoughts of those responsible for this, was to make Mr. Roosevelt secretary of the Navy. It may be a good thing to try to do nice things for our neighbors, but it appears to me that in this critical moment it is a grievous error for any speaker to mount a platform and declare that America has only two kinds of men—"Bryans" and "Roosevelts." No matter what any one may have thought or said before election, Woodrow Wilson is our President to-day, and, in view of the recent exposures of the German plot with Mexico, it would seem that he was decidedly wise in what he did.

In both places where Mr. Roosevelt is brought into this production, the audience will be worked up by the titles to expect to see a picture of President Wilson. Certainly our President's picture should be used, and, while the construction is such that John Smith's picture might have brought applause, it seems in decidedly poor taste to plant Roosevelt, as Mr. Blackton has done, instead of the man who is leading our country to-day.

In the speeches made during the intermission of the first showing of this offering, a fervent plea was made that Mr. Roosevelt be named as secretary of the Navy. I can think of no more fitting comparison for this than to say that it would be quite similar to an instance where a prominent program manufacturer might be our president, and some well-meaning soul might suggest that L. J. Selznick be named as secretary of the Navy. The program manufacturer and Mr. Selznick would be about as near co-operation as Roosevelt would be with President Wilson. When a real leader is trying to get action, it is hardly reasonable to expect him to go out and get as his lieutenant the man who has been trying to "kick him on the shins" for the past few years. Unless I am decidedly mistaken, this error of playing up Roosevelt is going to be adversely commented on very generally throughout the country. Some of you exhibitors should make this very clear to Commodore Blackton before the production has gone too far.

As I have said, most of this offering is made up of marching soldiers, battleships, submarines and more or less disconnected flashes of night and day warfare. The dramatic story presented Mr. Morey as a young American who became "Director of Energies" of this country, with Naomi Childers as his sister, who dressed as Joan of Arc to encourage recruiting and was shot down by the invaders when captured, in order to carry out the simile of the French peasant girl.

Alice Joyce, as Mr. Morey's sweetheart, did some mysterious work as a spy in the enemies' headquarters, but all of the dramatic scenes fell short of the necessary impresive dignity. We saw meetings of what were supposed to be the greatest minds in America, held in a barren room only protected by one little door that was broken down by one soldier, who bumped his gun against it twice. This door had one of those "lodge-meeting" panels that they raised to look through at you before letting you in, which made it even funnier—because in case you happened to be some one they didn't want to let in, it certainly would not have been much of a task to get in anyway.

The incident having to do with the kidnapping of the American Joan of Arc was rather funny, because in time of war they certainly would not go to all the trouble taken by these invaders to carry the captive to headquarters. She would have been killed first and then taken to the boss in that condition, if he wanted to see her.

In accordance with the other almost impossible dramatic moments, we found our hero threatening to blow up the Woolworth Tower, where the enemy headquarters were, by a wireless topedo, unless he was released. The enemy commander freed him and killed his own son, who started to halt the American's departure. I'd like to know how they figured that the American wouldn't blow up the tower, anyway, just as soon as they turned him loose. From what I have heard, they do much things in war time!

The story opened with all of the eastern part of this country captured by the enemy because of our unpreparedness, and finished with this country triumphant after proper preparedness measures had been put to work.

Others in the cast were James W. Morrison, Peggy Hyland, Templar Saxe, Joseph Kilgour, Walter McGrail, Mother Maurice, Edward Elkas, Bobby Connelly, Bernard Siegel and John Costello.

The Box Office Angle.

Undoubtedly you can get some money with this thing. It is certainly timely, and the good old hokum has been smeared on in such a manner that it will stir many to real enthusiasm.

One of the funniest items about the entire offering was the suggested thought that this was produced "to save the country." Believe me, bo—I wouldn't make any mistakes about that. Don't try to make out that you are the best little patriot in town because you played this film, but book it on a straight commercial basis and try to get some money with it, since it tells a story of things that might, according to an imaginative author, happen if invaders ever landed on our eastern shores.

The titles that make up the preparedness preachment have been rather well hung together. Of course, there ar many of them, and surely there are entirely too many titles hung to the dramatic action. But, for the average audience, this offering will be considered quite worth while, principally because it will be accepted as preachment.

The name is a bad one. Several people spoke to me about it, saying that they expected to see a birth control picture. Make it very clear to all of your fans that this offering has to do with preparedness and an imaginary invasion of New York and New England.

VERY ORDINARY MELLER DRESSED UP WITH ALLEGORICAL TITLES

Joan Sawyer and Stuart Holmes in

LOVE'S LAW

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Tefft Johnson
SCENARIO BY	Mary Murillo
CAMERAMAN	Maxwell Held
AS A WHOLE	Very ordinary melo with funny attempt to save it by allegorical titles
STORY	Never really registers; titles tried to make it allegory
DIRECTION	Gave beautiful exteriors, but interior lightings very bad; general action rather messy
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some fine; some ordinary; some bad lightings
LIGHTINGS	Exteriors generally very good; interiors generally poor
CAMERA WORK	Decidedly varied
STARS	He, good, with little to do; she, very ordinary, lacking screen personality
SUPPORT	Some good; some very "actory"
EXTERIORS	Many very beautiful shots
INTERIORS	One or two good; many "setty"
DETAIL	Rather incoherent; idea of characters calling one another by allegorical names, truly funny
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

THIS offering, which presents Miss Sawyer for the first time on the screen, proves conclusively that it isn't always possible to make a screen star out of any personality who may be able to do something else right well.

As a film favorite, Miss Sawyer is a good dancer. She is utterly lacking—at least in this offering—in the essential personality needed to register successfully on the screen, and in most of her scenes she registers nothing whatever. Her expressions are what one of my friends calls "Bla—!"

A rather humorous attempt has been made to take this very ordinary melodrama and make it impressive by giving each of the characters an allegorical name—that is, they were called "Malice," "Jealousy," "Passion," "Innocence," etc., etc.

Miss Sawyer, as Innocence, floated around through the first few reels with her hair down her back, equipped in the accepted gingham gown which so many of our "movie" stars have found to be a life-saver on certain occasions. Joan doesn't altogether get away with it, because she really makes a much better impression when she gets all "dolled up" towards the end, even though she does look just about "bored to death" in these scenes. Of course, every one will want for her to begin dancing, and I fear a good many will get a quiet snicker out of the barefoot gallop she does in the woods to prove to the gypsies that she is SOME "bird" with her feet.

Along about the fourth reel, Joan pulled some "honest-to-Jerry" dancing and did a few steps on a table, in a space about a foot square, that some of the tango "bugs" may appreciate very much. Personally it looked to me like a sales ad. for a new pair of slippers, because there wasn't much connection in this skull o' mine between the two or three very minute gyrations which she performed and what I always considered dancing

Afterwards, on a ballroom floor, our dancer did a few fancy steps which will go over all right, but that sort of thing has been so thoroughly done in so many films by other performers that it certainly will not justify the other footage in this offering

It was a happy thought on the part of some one to take this melodrama and write allogorical titles for it But whoever had this happy thought fell down flat when they ran wild to the extent of having the characters speak to one another, calling themselves and the others by the allegorical names As, for instance, in one place the girl called "Jealousy" said to "Innocence": "I am Jealousy, the destroyer. Go, before I kill you!" Believe me, Bo—they don't talk like that—even in gypsy camps! This same idea of having characters call one another by these "pet names" was used so frequently that it really destroyed the impression made by the use of the allegorical thought

Nevertheless, there is the possibility that some fans will be sufficiently impressed by this allegorical stuff to feel that they have no right to severely criticize this production, since it is something that they do not altogether grasp. I have known this sort of thing to be put over before, and there's a possibility of it sneaking by without outspoken argument.

Stuart Holmes and Leo Delaney, in the supporting cast, were rather good, and Olga Grey, as the gypsy girl called "Jealousy," made a good impression, despite the fact that she wanted to be wickedly "wicious" at times.

Some of the semi-"extras" in the offering, such as the man called "Wealth," were very poor, and many of the sure-enough extras were awful!

In the supporting cast were Richard Neill and Frank Goldsmith.

The Box Office Angle.

Personally, I'd dodge this. But if it is absolutely essential that you play the "darn" thing because you can't get something else, I would try to sneak it by on Miss Sawyer's reputation as a dancer and the fact that it has been made an allegory. Of course, the thing do to is to pretend that it always was made for an allegory, and then it is possible that your fans will be a bit afraid to make a serious kick.

If you were going to play it, I would lay particular stress upon the fact that there are many beautiful exteriors, because you are certainly safe there, some of the exterior shots being truly distinctive and beautiful.

The presence of Stuart Holmes may be worth quite a little in the box office, because since this picture was made, which is some months ago, Mr. Holmes has been promoted to stardom, and is now being starred alone. He is one of the best-known men in filmdom, and has a very large following.

STAR'S CHARACTERIZATIONS MAKE VERY OBLIGING PLOT INTERESTING

Dorothy Phillips in

THE GIRL WITH THE CHECKERED COAT

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Joseph De Grasse
AUTHOR	E. Magnus Ingleton
SCENARIO BY	Ida May Park
CAMERAMAN	King D. Gray
AS A WHOLE	Miss Phillips' characterizations held interest
STORY	Painfully convenient
DIRECTION	Gave very good atmosphere and held interest despite obliging situations
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Many distinctive and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent; some fine "doubles"
STAR	Truly remarkable characterizations
SUPPORT	Good; not exceptional
EXTERIORS	Some very artistic; generally very well handled
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good, except convenient
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

IT would seem that the author of this had in mind providing an opportunity for a capable actress to give good characterizations, and planned more upon that one point than anything else, with the result that the main situations were simply hung together by convenient happenings which were given little thought or consideration.

Certainly it would have been possible to work this story idea out in a manner that would have kept it from being painfully obliging.

As the offering stands, any audience will be interested in Miss Phillips' dual characterizations, but, at the same time, there will be many groans over the terribly convenient manner in which things happen. This convenience kills the human note and destroys any possibility of the offering seeming real or plausible.

To begin with, these two sisters, who looked alike, and had been separated since childhood, were found at the opening of the story living in adjoining rooms, in a boarding house, without knowing one another. That was the first jar. The pickpocket sister, of course, discovered the other when she was trying to escape from the police, with the result that she obligingly changed clothes with the innocent young thing and made her getaway

Following this, the convenient points loomed up on every turn, with such very improbable happenings as a clever pickpocket putting on a distinctive ring, which she had stolen, when she knew that every detective would be on the look-out for that piece of jewelry.

She then obligingly wandered through a storm to a certain corner, where a man who knew about the jewelry and the innocent sister's arrest was seeking shelter from the rain, and there she tried to pick his pocket so that he might catch her and discover the ring on her hand, this, of course, resulting in his directing her "willunous" movements from that time on to the finish.

This was presented as a mystery, but it doesn't remain a mystery to the audience, save that possibly they'll wonder why no one discovered the likeness between the girls until the final moment.

On the finish, the good sister married Friend Hero, and the bad sister was taken away to jail. They have followed this with a scene which certainly should be eliminated, since it shows the good sister happy at home, with the bad sister lying by the doorstep in the gutter, where Friend Husband passes her by without even a "once-over." Since the titles have tried to throw the blame on the men for the bad girl's errors, many will feel that it is all wrong to leave her in the gutter on the finish. After all, the girls were sisters.

The general atmosphere was quite good, with many excellent lightings. The cameraman certainly knew his business, and as a result we had a number of double exposures which will be startling to those who do not understand the possibilities of camera tricks.

Most of the credit for keeping this offering interesting must go to Dorothy Phillips. She has given two excellent characterizations and has kept them truly distinctive. Any audience will be interested in watching her work, even though the story does miss fire.

Lon Chaney, as a "willun," had poise and authority, and William Stowell was a pleasing hero. The other members of the cast were acceptable.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe you can get this by very nicely by centering the attention upon the interesting work of Miss Phillips in the dual characterization. I would not lay much emphasis upon the story and would depend entirely upon playing up Miss Phillips' appearance in two distinctive and contradictory roles. You might even state that some people have thought that Miss Phillips didn't play both parts, but that the Bluebird Company was willing to give a healthy prize to any one who could prove that she didn't.

I'd mention specifically the recent Bluebird successes in which Miss Phillips has appeared, such as "The Piper's Price," "The Price of Silence," and "Hell Morgan's Girl."

SNAPPY, CLASSY CROOK MYSTERY ACTION STORY THAT WILL PLEASE

William Courtenay in

THE HUNTING OF THE HAWK

Astra—Pathe

DIRECTOR	George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR	George B. Seitz
CAMERAMAN	A. C. Miller
AS A WHOLE	Fast mystery melo that will please
STORY	"Under Cover" style of crook-detective action plot
DIRECTION	Gave class to atmosphere and kept action interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally clean-cut; some beautiful bits
LIGHTINGS	Many sharp, but uniform; some effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Fitted character of 'ansom, fightin' 'ero
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Most of them decidedly classy
INTERIORS	Distinctive, and, oddly enough, matched exteriors
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH this is one of those fast-moving crook-detective melodrama things that the wise fan will have figured many reels in advance, still it is played straight through, with enough suspicion thrown upon the hero that the average patron will be very much surprised to learn on the finish that the crook is, after all, the detective.

The story savors very much of "Under Cover," it having many of the same essentials, and, while most of the actual incidents have been twisted, surely the general thought is the same.

William Courtenay, as the secret service chief who steals the necklace to keep the real crook from getting it and goes through many wild adventures, including an exciting chase in and out of the house, through windows and back again, was a good selection for this particular character, because he is clean-cut, active and rather impressive as to personality.

Marguerite Snow as the girl—and you know there always must be a girl in these crook-detective things—was very good. Miss Snow had to be mistreated by the willun, whose wife she became through his having preyed upon her innocence after making a counterfeiter of her poor old father, and, of course, you understand that Friend Hero had to fall very much in love with her.

There was only one solution for all this, and that was that some one had to shoot a hole through the willun. This was done in the fifth reel, with all appearances indicating that Miss Snow was the guilty one, until one of the willun's former henchmen blew in with a confession on the finish, explaining how he'd killed the guy by firing from a window at the same time that Miss Snow had fired.

The exteriors and interiors were exceptionally good. The exterior of the country home, where the house party was held, was truly classy, and the interiors were impressive enough to match up, thereby giving the scenes for the final bit of chase-em-around stuff a touch of distinction that helped the offering.

Robert Clugston, as "The Hawk," was a good crook. He fought fast and died hard.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that most any audience anywhere would consider this a good hour's entertainment. It is snappy, interesting and classy. To be true, most of the wise "birds" will commence to figure right away that they're being fooled about Mr. Courtenay being a crook, but, just the same, the picture is played straight through so sincerely, with suspicion thrown upon him, that, although they'll have a chance to say to themselves, "I knew it!" on the finish, still they will be held interested up to that time.

I believe most any of them will like this and will be inclined to tell you so. For some time I have said that there are two kinds of sure-fire material at the present time, one of them being human-heart-interest stories, and the other mystery-suspense stuff with a little class to the atmosphere. Certainly this is decidedly bettter than the average program release these days, and I'd get it and promise an interesting bit of entertainment.

Of course, there is a chance to play up in your advertising such lines as the following:

"Look out for 'The Hawk!'" "'The Hawk' is coming!" etc., etc., with tie-up lines a few days later stating that William Courtenay, Marguerite Snow and Robert Clugston are busy in hunting "The Hawk," and will be glad to show your patrons how it is done on such and such a date.

HUMAN TOUCHES AND COMEDY BITS WILL CARRY THIS OVER

Jackie Saunders in

SUNNY JANE

Balboa—Mutual

AS A WHOLE	Will please because of comedy touches
STORY	Slight, but has good burlesque twists
DIRECTION	Gave comedy stuff proper emphasis
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	A few very artistic; some ordinary, but generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good; not exceptional
STAR	"Pep" made her pleasing
SUPPORT	Acceptable
EXTERIORS	Some very good; generally acceptable
INTERIORS	Some good; some a bit crude
DETAIL	Many good comedy bits
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

VIEWED as entertainment, I believe that this will register very satisfactorily almost anywhere, since the director has worked in so many bits of pleasing comedy.

The story idea is quite slender and is not to be taken seriously, but only considered as a basis for the development of the comedy touches.

The heroine is presented as one of those youngsters who has a marvelous imagination, and she relates many thrilling adventures which never happened, each of these being enacted on the screen in much burlesque detail.

There was oodles of animal stuff introduced, the heroine having all sorts of pets, from white mice to a goat. The list included a rooster, a donkey, a couple of cats, a bird, and so on down the line.

The mice were the centre of two or three little incidents which will certainly register laughs. One of these was an adventure in which they played around father's feet while he was trying to sleep, the other being a scene where they escaped from their hiding-place in the girl's boarding-school. A good laugh was registered where the star was playing leap-frog with a farmhand and then had her goat butt the farmhand while he was down, and many similar bits of business were brought in when needed to keep the audience in good humor.

The plot proper was quite elementary, having only to do with a wealthy young man falling in love with our country wildflower, with the result that he offered to send her to school.

Of course, when she returned completely educated, she had adopted the mannerisms of what she thought would be his ideal, with the result that she was a great disappointment.

Realizing this, she put on her old gingham gown and became a rough-neck again, whereupon he promptly ordered the chauffeur to "beat it" quick to the first justice of the peace.

Jackie Saunders has considerable "pep" and was generally pleasing throughout the offering. Her make-up was rather too noticeable in most of her scenes, particularly when she was doing the rough-neck country lass, but I believe nearly every one will like her in this production. There was not much to it except Jackie and her pets, although there were no terribly bad spots in the supporting cast.

There was one set which was supposed to be the home of a very wealthy girl, and some scenic artist had painted many panels of beautiful (?) landscapes. This was pretty crude as a set to represent the home of sure-enough wealthy people. The young man who was in love with the wealthy girl was also rather a "stick."

The scenes showing the little star as Cleopatra were rather well handled, and still pictures of this particular incident showing the bare-legged dancing girls and Jackie in a lo-an'-behold gown, etc., may be of value in attracting some of your fans. This Cleopatra stuff, of course, was another of the heroine's wild dreams, and, although it was sort of dragged in, it was at least interesting.

The Box Office Angle

If you bill this as a very amusing story of a little girl who somehow couldn't tell the truth, I believe it will get over very satisfactorily. I'd emphasize the fact that it's a comedy, and dwell upon such points as these: "How would you like to awake at night and find several white mice playing around on your feet? See 'Sunny Jane.'" "Have you ever heard a romantically inclined young girl describe a thrilling 'rescue' from a kidnapper, which really never happened? See the way Sunny Jane tells about it. It's sure good for a laugh." "Can you imagine what would happen in a girls' boarding-school if a hundred white mice were turned loose? See 'Sunny Jane.'"

Understand, this is not a technical triumph or anything of that sort, but it is an entertaining little light comedy without a "willun," and with many sure-fire laughs. Certainly that sort of thing is decidedly more desirable than the surface melodramas which have been unloaded recently by most of the program companies.

REPULSIVE AND OBJECTIONABLE DETAIL SHOWN TO REGISTER PREACHMENT

Dr. Harry Haiselden, Hamilton Revelle and Henri Bergman in

THE BLACK STORK

Wharton, Inc.—Sherriot Pictures Corp.—State Rights

DIRECTORS ..... The Whartons
AUTHOR ..... Jack Lait
AS A WHOLE ..... Forceful as preachment, but decidedly unpleasant in spots
STORY ..... Arranged to register case similar to one which brought Dr. Haiselden into limelight
DIRECTION ..... Preachment sequence well arranged, but dramatic action mechanical and rather crude technically PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good; not very artistic
LIGHTINGS ..... Ordinary; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Ordinary
STARS ..... Bergman excellent; Revelle overplayed; Doctor camera-conscious
SUPPORT ..... Quite ordinary
EXTERIORS ..... Not many, but acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Generally good
DETAIL ..... Entirely too much of "horrible example" stuff
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERED purely as preachment for better children, and as an argument against permitting defectives to marry, or allowing hopelessly maimed children to live through surgical operations, this is certainly an impressive preachment. Considered from the viewpoint of entertainment, I would say that an average fan would consider it entirely too overburdened with close-ups of horrible examples of defective children.

To be sure, in order to make the preachment hit hard, it was necessary to show a number of these examples, but I do believe that the production would be just as effective with about half as many close-ups of these cripples.

The entire first reel is devoted to an analytical discussion of the difference between Uncle Sam's protection of live stock and his protection of human beings. This has been rather well titled and shows some good human bits of kids and babies contrasted against animals.

So far as the dramatic part of the offering is concerned, my opinion is that it is entirely too crude and mechanical to register as human or convincing. Since these scenes are only given to carry through a certain thought, this may be excused, however, by the average audience.

The story leads up to the point where a mother is to decide whether or not an operation be performed upon a crippled child, the case being exactly similar to the one in which Dr. Haiselden figured in Chicago. From that time on the story is carried through the means of calling it a vision, into the growth of the crippled boy, and finally develops into a tragedy, when, after being shunned by all men, the boy murdered the doctor who had performed the operation which kept him alive.

The late Henri Bergman in the part of the crippled monster gave a truly forceful characterization. His was the only bit of acting that truly convinced and registered, and certainly his scenes will be very impressive.

Hamilton Revelle, as the father, was rather inclined toward overplaying, and Dr. Haiselden. as was to be expected, was quite camera-conscious. The Doctor, however, was hardly worse than many other members of the cast, who were plainly aware of the fact that they were being photographed.

Allan Murnane, as the young secretary who wanted to marry the doctor's nurse, was fairly pleasing, but overplayed too frequently, with the result that his actory movements fitted into the general mechanical atmosphere, and so his part did not stand out.

Others in the cast were Jane Fearnley and Elsie Esmond.

The Box Office Angle

Because of the fact that this is a preachment story dealing with a thought which is being widely considered in every community at the present time, I would say that this should certainly get the money. To my mind, it would be very important, however, that you make it very clear in your advertising that this offering is a forceful preachment rather than a human dramatic story, and you should take particular pains to impress the fact that, while the thoughts are something that every one should consider, they aren't altogether pleasant.

If you'll go about this advertising intelligently, you will be able to arouse just as much interest, if not more, in this offering, and at the same time you will have provided yourself with a perfect alibi to keep any one from coming out and telling you that they don't like to see such things. You must make your advertising on this point so strong that it will be, in fact, a warning as to the unpleasant character of some parts of the production, but you can at the same time say that in order to realize some truths it is necessary to face the unpleasant side.

If you have a community that is particularly squeamish, it might be advisable to consider the possible elimination of some of the close-ups in this, but it will be absolutely essential that you prepare your audience for the unpleasant sights if you intend to play the offering in any form.

As preachment, you can definitely promise that this hits hard. I wouldn't say anything whatever regarding the dramatic value of the offering, because it is rather mechanical.

ORDINARY SURFACE MELLER FAIRLY DONE IN GOOD SNOW SCENES

Shirley Mason and Pat O'Malley in

THE LAW OF THE NORTH

Edison—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR	Burton George
AUTHOR	Edward H. Griffith
CAMERAMAN	Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE	Mounted Police "meller" with good snow exteriors
STORY	Obvious, convenient, ancient junk
DIRECTION	Failed to make action human
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Lazy; too few angles
STARS	Acceptable juveniles
SUPPORT	Routine melo types, dressed up "willun"
EXTERIORS	Some beautiful snow stuff
INTERIORS	Acceptable studio North Woods cabins
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THEY took most of the exteriors for this out in the snow. That's the best thing that can be said about it. Some of these locations were really beautiful, particularly a few which registered an half-dozen waterfalls in the background.

The story was one of those Mounted Police things, with the hero, a poor but honest, struggling youth; the shero, the daughter of the commanding officer; and the willun, one of those sleek, sneaky guys what done wrong by a half-breed "goil" and walked around wearing a dinner coat at night. I hain't never been up in Canada where these North Woods pictures are supposed to be made, but—by cricky! —it didn't seem right to have this guy walking around in a dinner coat when the rest of the bunch were wearing Mackinaws. Of course, they used to do it that way with the companies that gave away an exquisite "sweet" of furniture to the housemaid that held the lucky number on Saturday night, but, nevertheless, those things shouldn't be forced upon our educated film fans.

The story of this, after a slow start, which proved that the true-blue 'ero and the wild, wicked "willun" both wanted the "goil," reached a point where Friend Willun thought the half-breed girl that he'd lured to destruction intended to tell things, and then he sneaked out behind some bushes and shot her with his automatic.

Somehow, all of a sudden, they accused the 'ero of doing the deed, and then, after it had snowed several days, the heroine nonchalantly wandered out to the particular spot where the "goil" had been killed, and, despite the fact that it had been snowing, she immediately found a picture of the willun which the "goil" had kissed just before "cashing in." Of course, this picture should have been snowed under and quite hard to find, but the director had told Miss Mason where to look for it, so she couldn't go wrong.

For a finish we had the startlingly original (?) situation of the shero inviting the willun to keep her company over night, since father was going away. Possibly they didn't intend it so, but that durned title read kind of funny. Anyway, father, he hadn't gone at all, he hadn't, and—by heck!—he and the hero—they hid behind the door, they did, while Shirley, she coaxed the willun a bit and he just told all he knew. Funny how those guys will do that in the movies.

To finish it off in a hurry, the half-breed girl's brother just "happened" along at this psychological moment, and he did a little listening himself outside the window, so that he could limber up his trusty rifle and shoot holes through the guy that had to die before they could finish the picture.

Miss Mason was acceptable as the heroine, but had little to do except wander around and look as sweet as possible.

Pat O'Malley wore a uniform as if he liked it, and was quite a 'ansom 'ero, such as all of the two-seats-for-thirty-cents people used to love.

Richard Tucker, as the sleek "wun," was all right except for his persistent use of his dinner coat and boiled shirt.

Others in the cast were Charles Sutton, Sally Crute, Fred Jones and Robert Keggerris.

The Box Office Angle.

If you can still get by with this ordinary surface melodramatic junk, the snow exteriors may save your shirt on this. Personally, I'd advise you to hunt up something a little more human. If they want to see snow stuff, run a five-hundred foot scenic.

The fact that Shirley Mason has been advertised all over the place as one of the "Seven Sins," may help you to get something on this sort of an offering, but I can't believe that it is good business to get them in, only to send them away with a grouch in their hearts.

Boys, you've got to remember there's a to-morrow in this business, and we're killing off the "regulars" fast enough as it is. Do your derndest to get a good picture every day. You owe it to yourself, even if you don't consider your patrons—because, believe me, the exhibitors that don't stop to worry about their patrons these days, are very soon liable to find themselves in the position of having no patrons to worry about.

INCOHERENT ADAPTATION OF INDIAN CONQUEST STORY—NEVER REGISTERS

Harold Lockwood and May Allison in

THE HIDDEN CHILDREN

Yorke Film—Metro

DIRECTOR	Oscar C. Apfel
AUTHOR	Robert W. Chambers
SCENARIO BY	Oscar C. Apfel
CAMERAMAN	Tony Gaudio
AS A WHOLE	Somewhat incoherent, but will be accepted
STORY	Not made perfectly clear and lacks drama that is truly tense
DIRECTION	Failed to hit human note frequently enough
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; a few beautiful bits
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Generally good
STARS	Pleasing
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	Fitted story
INTERIORS	Some very good; others acceptable
DETAIL	Acceptable; but too many long titles
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

I FEAR that this will become tiresome to almost any one before it gets to the final battle scenes, which are fairly interesting.

The production is burdened with many long speeches, presented in the language of the period, which may be all very well for correct detail, but, nevertheless, is quite tiresome for the average film fan.

Despite the use of these titles, which were for the most part the sort of "flowery" junk that Indian translations become, the story was not any too clearly explained. Somehow, the offering seemed to lack the human note which is so essential. The stars were pleasing enough, but the costumes and atmosphere presented a historical period, and the tiresome titles planted between scenes that lacked real action dragged the offering.

The story concerns two children who were placed by their mothers in the care of foster-parents, so that they might escape being sacrificed by the Indians. Mr. Lockwood was one, and Miss Allison the other of these children, and we found Mr. Lockwood as a scout in the Colonial army which was seeking to destroy the "Long House" of the Iroquois nation, with Miss Allison following the army as it marched to Catherines-town, determined to reach her mother, who was a prisoner there.

Miss Allison's mother, who had a gift for fortune-telling, was established as the white sorceress by Amochol, the high priest of Catherines-town. When the armies finally arrived, with the scouts and Miss Allison in the fore, the "Feast of Dreams" was under way. This brought out a lot of barelegged dancers and other fantastic sights, with the two stars and a few Indians hiding behind some bushes about one hundred yards away, watching the proceedings. This particular scene was the nearest thing to a tense dramatic moment, and it wasn't very dramatic, because it seemed impossible that the group of intruders should not be discovered.

The high priest was going to kill Miss Allison's mother because she told him that they were all going to "cash in" very shortly, but he changed his mind when a few scouts came running home to tell of their army having been defeated in a big battle.

Several priests then took the mother for a walk so that the hero and his friends could rescue her, and this was followed by the army coming in and cleaning up with the Indians, it of course remaining for Friend Hero to be the particular guy who should kill off the high priest after a hand-to-hand struggle that looked somewhat like a one-step.

In some of the battle scenes they used several hundred people, some as Colonial soldiers and others as Indians, and, except for the fact that some of the "extras" did a little dodging as they got near the camera and some of the others made many motions as if they were fighting, without really getting near anyone, these battle scenes will register quite satisfactorily. To the average fan these battle scenes will be fairly impressive, but the fan with the quick eye will get a few laughs out of certain scenes.

Intelligent editing would have helped this decidedly.

In the supporting cast were Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward, Lillian West, Henry Heberty, George MacDaniel, A. B. Sills, Howard Davies, Clara Lucas, A. Allardt, Daniel Davis and Charles Cummings.

The Box Office Angle

I am afraid that the rather dragged out manner of telling this story will keep it from registering as a truly pleasing offering, although you may feel rather safe in booking it if you have to fill in with something. Even though your fans will not feel particularly pleased, they'll probably have a hunch that it is a very commendable adaptation of one of Robert W. Chambers' successful stories, and consequently they should not criticize very much.

The unfortunate fact that the titles are decidedly burdened with language will register an unfavorable impression with most fans, without their being exactly able to tell you why they are displeased. The chances are that after seeing this you'll find that most of your fans do not particularly care for it, although they may be unable to put their fingers on just the point which kept it from appealing to them.

If you can get something else which is more of a sure-fire character, I surely would. If not, I would play up particularly the names of the stars and the fact that this is an adaptation of one of Mr. Chambers' novels.

In referring to this, you might dwell upon the fact that it is a story of the Iroquois Indians, and not the Western tribes who are so well known to film fans from the cowboy stories. You can make it clear that the story has to do with Colonial days, when the Indians were powerful in the East.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Herschel Stuart

Asst. Gen. Mgr. of the

HULSEY THEATRE CHAIN

IN TEXAS

is ALIVE

HIS FRIENDS KNOW IT!

He sent out 23 letters asking that many friends to subscribe to "WID'S," and in two days he forwarded me

EIGHT PAID SUBSCRIPTIONS

Believe me, I appreciate such co-operation. Who will be the next booster to get busy?

THIS IS THE LETTER MR. STUART SENT OUT:

Dear Friend—

Wid Gunning, Editor of "Wid's" Magazine, will have a birthday in the near future. I am especially anxious to mail Wid $50.00, covering five annual subscriptions, as a remembrance from this territory. In that connection, I wish you would mail me a check, made out to Wid Gunning, for $10.00, which will cover your annual subscription, to start right away.

I will not get any rake-off from this, but I am heart and soul with Wid, and he is the most deserving, as well as the biggest man, outside of the producing end of the film business.

If you will mail me your check today I will feel obliged to you, and it will help along the best cause that needs promotion in our great industry.

Please do me this one favor.

Cordially yours,

(Signed) HERSCHEL STUART.

March 24, 1917. Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Tex.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

BURTON KING
Directing Mme. Petrova

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

HERE IS YOUR ONE BIG CHANCE

To tell the Producers what you want.

As it is, you don't have much to say about what you run in your theatres, but,

The Exhibitors' Own Reports

tells the Producer what goes and what don't. Make 'em out now!

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. NEW YORK, APRIL 12, 1917. NO. 16 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
625	Fox	73.1	70.2	85
493	Metro	70.9	67.5	49
384	Vitagraph	69.0	65.9	70
1650	Triangle	69.5	63.5	343
1848	Paramount	68.3	63.7	316
433	World	67.5	62.1	39
212	Bluebird	62.3	62.2	18

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1848	Paramount	68.3	63.7	316
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	55
4	The Virginian	90	78	1
1	Such a Little Queen	80	80	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	86	76	4
1	The County Chairman	80	80
1	What's His Name	75	100
3	Behind the Scenes	92	84
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
1	Rose of the Rancho	87	80
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
3	Sign of Cross	88	88
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
5	Cinderella	88	98	2
1	The Million	70	90
3	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
2	The Dancing Girl	71	68
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	80	80
1	Mistress Nell	88	95
1	Buckshot John	90	90
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
2	The Warrens of Virginia	66	76
1	Country Boy	60	60
5	David Harum	86	78	1
1	A Gentleman of Leisure	80	70
1	The Caprices of Kitty	95	90
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
1	The Governor's Lady	97	85
3	Gretna Green	100	100	2
3	Are You a Mason?	78	84
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
3	Snobs	69	53
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
3	Captive	82	61
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
5	The Woman	86	59	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	2
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
5	Stolen Goods	78	75
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
5	Pretty Sister Jose	82	78	1
5	Jim the Penman	64	65
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	82	85	1
5	Arab	89	58	2
1	Clarissa	75	80
2	The Dictator	45	45
5	Wild Olive	82	69
3	Chimmie Fadden	90	71
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
2	The Clue	74	88
6	Kindling	81	82
1	The Running Fight	67	70
3	The Fighting Hope	77	80
5	Kilmeny	75	73
4	Seven Sisters	91	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
8	Rags	91	96	5
2	Sold	83	72
6	The Secret Orchid	79	74
5	Nearly a Lady	65	75
6	The Marriage of Kitty	76	64
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
3	The Majesty of the Law	56	60
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	53
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
4	Esmeralda	89	89	2
2	The Case of Becky	65	65
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	4
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	56
6	Bella Donna	91	77	2
8	Armstrong's Wife	79	65
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	1
8	A Gentleman From Indiana	86	78
7	Prince and Pauper	91	84	1
10	Mr. Grex from Monte Carlo	84	69	1
9	Jane	75	51
8	Unknown	79	69	1
17	The Cheat	94	79	11
8	The Reformed Candidate	82	54	1
8	The Immigrant	72	59
10	The Old Homestead	88	84	7
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
9	Temptation	81	75	2
8	The Foundling	76	76	1
4	Tongues of Men	80	53	1
5	Mice and Men	82	81	2
6	The Golden Chance	80	68	2
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
6	The Spider	87	68	1
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	1
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
6	Madame Le Presidente	17	51
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	74	80	1
6	Fell in Love With Wife	55	41	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
8	Out of the Drifts	89	80	1
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
12	Poor Little Peppina	87	84	4
14	To Have and to Hold	74	70	3
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
5	Code of Marcia Gray	56	31	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	70	61	2
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
12	Audrey	73	73	3
6	Sowers	64	58
9	The Heart of Paula	71	56	1

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
8 The Race	71	65
6 Eternal Grind	68	81	1
6 Love Mask	61	54	1
7 Molly Make-Believe	90	86	5
6 The Red Widow	62	51	1
10 Heart of Nora Flynn	69	54	4
8 Moment Before	50	65	1
8 David Garrick	61	39
7 Innocent Ile	52	46
13 Maria Rosa	82	80	4
11 Allen Souls	66	66	1
11 Fued Girl	61	54
15 Pasquale	78	52	1
12 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	72	59	2
18 Saints and Sinners	53	49
17 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
21 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
21 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
13 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
14 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
19 The American Beauty	61	61	3
22 The Dupe	60	60	1
22 The Smugglers	53	50	1
26 The Selfish Woman	72	68	4
10 Davy Crockett	67	62
18 Dream Girl	69	64	3
17 Under Cover	79	75	5
17 International Marriage	55	51	1
17 Common Ground	64	64	1
34 Hulda From Holland	95	95	23
29 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
21 Woman in the Case	72	72	3
18 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	9
18 The Stronger Love	53	52
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
18 Rolling Stones	63	63	2
19 Honorable Friend	65	62	1
18 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
18 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
19 Parson of Panamint	80	69	6
11 Big Sister	47	58
11 Reward of Patience	63	53
11 The House of Lies	79	68	1
11 Daughter of McGregor	53	45
15 Ashes of Embers	87	83	6
13 Quest of Life	58	59
10 Anton the Terrible	48	49
12 The Lash	55	52
9 The Storm	75	61	1
13 The Intrigue	81	53	1
12 Her Father's Son	73	57	2
10 Witchcraft	51	51
9 The Kiss	73	69	1
11 The Rainbow Princess	84	74	2
11 Seventeen	88	75	2
10 Miss George Washington	97	95	8
13 The Heir to the Hoorah	79	69	3
12 The Soul of Kuri San	82	75	1
8 A Son of Erin	79	69
9 Unprotected	53	55	1
9 Years of a Locust	46	49
8 The Plow Girl	77	58
6 The Yellow Pawn	60	57	1
6 Nannette of the Wilds	37	52	2
4 Martyrdom of Philip strong	47	35
4 Coney Island Princess	58	63	1
8 Road to Love	79	55	1
8 Oliver Twist	85	65	3
5 The Victoria Cross	50	52	1
8 The Traveling Salesman	74	56	2
8 The Right Direction	82	59	1
10 Snow White	96	95	5
7 Redeeming Love	62	58	1
8 The Slave Market	73	66	2
6 The Evil Eye	37	36	1
6 Great Expectations	79	57
6 Happiness of Three Women	75	57	1
5 Betty to the Rescue	34	36
7 A Girl Like That	50	43
5 Lost and Won	65	45
6 The Golden Fetter	52	59
6 His Sweetheart	78	49
6 The Wax Model	72	62
6 Each to His Kind	46	45
6 Her Own People	79	58
5 The Black Wolf	42	45
4 The American Counsel	49	35
4 The Fortunes of Fifi	58	64	2
3 On Record	45	34
3 Winning of Sally Temple	34	38
3 Those Without Sin	43	43	1
2 Castles for Two	25	20
1 Out of the Wreck	10	15
1 Sapho	80	90	1
1 Prison Without Walls	30	35
1 The Dummy	30	15

TRIANGLE

1650 Triangle	69.5	63.5	343
9 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
8 The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
13 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
8 Sable Lorcha	64	53
6 The Golden Claw	61	72
8 Double Trouble	65	64	2
7 Aloha Oe	63	65	1
8 Lily and Rose	61	53
7 Jordan is a Hard Road	58	54
6 Winged Idol	53	52
8 Penitents	28	32
11 The Edge of the Abyss	67	61
8 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
10 Between Men	72	69	1
14 Let Katy Do It	87	66	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
12 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
12 Betty of Greystone	76	68	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
9 The Last Act	79	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
17 Hell's Hinges	93	88	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
14 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	75	3
13 Martha's Vindication	83	77	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
15 The Raiders	79	70
13 The Habit of Happiness	92	86	5
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
16 The Aryan	85	86	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
16 The Good Bad-Man	90	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	72	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
16 Not My Sister	82	78	3
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
18 Primal Lure	82	77	4
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
19 Market of Vain Desire	82	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
12 Bugle Call	95	80	7
22 Reggie Mixes In	92	79	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
15 The Dividend	68	65	1
19 Wild Girl of the Sierras	43	51
20 Apostle of Vengeance	83	87	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
24 The Phantom	86	73	7
26 Flirting with Fate	88	85	10
28 The Deserter	82	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
24 Captive God	69	70	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77	2
19 The Payment	81	74	3
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
18 Honor Thy Name	88	72	4
18 Devil's Needle	63	63	1
21 Shell 431	90	66	3
24 Hell-to-Pay Austin	83	67	6
19 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55	1
18 Home	91	80	9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
16 The Patriot	78	79	5
19 The Social Secretary	91	73	7
14 The Thoroughbred	80	71	1
10 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91	6
13 The Dawnmaker	53	77	2
12 Diane of the Follies	68	69	1
20 Manhattan Madness	94	91	11
14 Plain Jane	89	81	3
13 Old Folks at Home	86	70	2
13 The Jungle Child	58	58	1
10 The Rummy	68	50	1
14 The Return of Draw Egan	90	86	6
13 The Vagabond Prince	74	68	3
13 Somewhere in France	78	67
10 A Corner in Colleens	92	85	5
6 Sister of Six	71	54	1
13 Fifty-Fifty	94	84	4
3 War's Women	62	57
10 Attn Boy's Last Race	55	57
11 American Aristocracy	94	92	7
8 The Microscope Mystery	46	41
10 Honorable Algy	80	69	3
11 Jim Grimsby's Boy	64	57	3
10 The Devil's Double	90	91	5
10 The Children Pay	74	62	3
9 Children of the Feud	53	51	1
7 The Criminal	41	41
6 A Gamble in Souls	77	73	3
8 Wharf Rat	39	45
10 The Matrimaniac	95	96	5
10 The Sin Ye Do	97	91	6
9 The Heiress at Coffee Dan's	56	46	2
7 Three of Many	54	44
6 The House Built Upon Sand	82	71	3
4 Nina, the Flower Girl	38	34
6 Female of the Species	81	78	2
9 Truthful Toliver	98	97	6
9 The Weaker Sex	90	87	4
5 The Little Yank	32	45	1
7 The Bride of Hate	76	65	3
5 The Iced Bullet	55	37
8 The Americano	99	99	6
5 Chicken Casey	74	49	1
6 Jim Bludso	71	38	1
6 The Crab	78	56	3
3 A Girl of the Timber Claims	24	24
7 The Gun-Fighter	59	71	4
3 The Bad Boy	60	22
3 Princess of the Dark	15	20
1 Stage Struck	10	25
2 Last of the Ingrams	20	20
1 Blood Will Tell	25	20
1 Love Sublime	20	25
2 The Little Brother	18	18	1
4 Back of the Man	100	86	2
1 Bettsy's Burglar	20	14

WORLD

433 World	67.5	62.1	3
1 Hearts Afire	65	65
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
2 The Master of the House	68	53
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	65
1 Love's Cross Roads	85	60
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
The Dollar Mark	55	42
Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
As Ye Sow	100	45
Stolen Voice	60	50
Face in the Moonlight	50	60
Women and Wine	60	40
Blue Grass	70	65
Fruits of Desire	40	50
Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
Trilby	81	69	1
Idols	40	40
Master Hand	86	80
Devil's Toy	57	73
Salvation Nell	60	47
Family Cupboard	50	57	1
Heart of Blue Ridge	84	73	1
Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
Hearts of Men	80	52
Body and Soul	40	45
The Ransom	63	43
The Labyrinth	66	65
Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
The Senator	75	60
Sins of Society	76	65
Camille	86	79	2
The Rack	89	69
Fine Feathers	70	40
The Clarion	60	75
Women in 47	76	80
Yellow Passport	82	85	1
Price of Happiness	52	60
Women's Power	30	50
Cowardly Way	60	60
Passersby	60	60
Man and His Angel	62	45
Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
The Struggle	60	60
Hand of Peril	72	60
Then I'll Come Back to You	80	72	1
The Reapers	75	65
The Shadow of Doubt	78	65
Social Highwaymen	75	48
Closed Road	87	81	1
The Feast of Life	61	73
Her Maternal Right	56	72
Sudden Riches	77	72
Twin Triangles	80	50
Tangled Fates	55	60
Fate's Boomerang	42	53
His Brother's Wife	83	74	2
Perils of Divorce	61	63
La vie de Boheme	48	50
What Happened at 22	82	80
Crucial Test	59	55
Weakness of Man	61	60
Sally in Our Alley	68	68
Paying the Price	70	70	1
Miss Petticoats	59	61
Woman's Way	75	74	4
The Summer Girl	56	57
Rail Rider	68	60
Husband and Wife	75	63	2
Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
Velvet Paw	73	66	1
Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
Dark Silence	77	79
The Revolt	66	63
The Gilded Cage	75	70
Hidden Scar	77	67
The Scarlet Oath	60	62
Man Who Stood Still	71	63
The Heart of a Hero	55	48
Without a Soul	80	90
Bought and Paid For	91	93
The Madness of Helen	57	54
Men She Married	58	55
The Deep Purple	82	73
All Man	52	52	1
Broken Chains	37	36
The Rise of Susan	79	88	5
World Against Him	32	30
Woman Alone	61	61	1
On Dangerous Ground	53	56
The Man Who Forgot	53	43
Marriage a la Carte	73	73	1
The Unpardonable Sin	40	55
The Bondage of Fear	62	52
Tillie Wakes Up	80	74
The Hungry Heart	87	78	1
The Square Deal	80	75

METRO

493 Metro	70.9	67.5	49
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
3 Shooting of Dan McGraw	81	78
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	55
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
5 The Yellow Streak	85	64
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
5 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
3 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
6 A Man and His Soul	83	83
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
5 Her Great Price	80	71	1
8 The Wall Between	78	82	1
5 The Kiss of Hate	60	74
5 Half-Million Bribe	71	47
7 Playing With Fire	79	76
10 The Come-Back	75	73	1
7 The Snowbird	79	77
7 Million a Minute	73	85	1
3 Spell of the Youkon	78	68
5 His Great Triumph	55	48
9 Scarlet Woman	72	83	1
9 Dorian's Divorce	73	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
6 Flower of No Man's Land	58	75
8 The Purple Lady	82	63
10 The Eternal Question	76	83	1
11 The Quitter	69	73
14 River of Romance	68	74	7
6 The Child of Destiny	44	55	1
11 Devil at His Elbow	60	55	1
12 God's Half Acre	71	59	1
12 Weakness of Strength	67	52
10 The Pretenders	81	73	1
7 The Upheaval	57	63
9 The Light of Happiness	67	61	1
10 Mister 44	88	93	4
8 The Wheel of the Law	77	66	1
9 Dawn of Love	65	59
6 Iron Woman	41	56
5 Life's Shadows	66	60
12 In the Diplomatic Service	67	83	4
8 The Brand of Cowardice	64	52
10 The Gates of Eden	67	47
11 Extravagance	69	82	3
8 The Wager	80	60
1 My Madonna	80	85
6 The Sunbeam	44	36
9 Big Tremaine	71	81	4
8 The Black Butterfly	70	79	4
6 Stolen Triumph	53	49
6 Awakening of Helena Richie	63	64
7 Pidgin Island	64	71
9 Vanity	61	53
10 The White Raven	85	86	4
6 A Wife by Proxy	43	39
7 Threads of Fate	39	38
6 Bridges Burned	46	69
5 The End of the Tour	33	30
2 One of Many	75	40
1 The Secret of Eve	20	95	1
2 The Promise	88	88	1

FOX

625 Fox	73.1	70.2	85
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	52	92
4 Fool There Was	82	96	2
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	82	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	35
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	35	57
2 The Nigger	100	70
4 The Gilded Fool	70	75
5 Devil's Daughter	77	95
4 Should a Mother Tell?	83	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	85
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
8 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
2 Carmen	98	99	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
8 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	80
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
8 Fighting Blood	72	66
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
10 Blue Blood and Red	84	69
6 Slander	80	70
10 A Modern Thelma	59	49	1
8 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
9 Blazing Love	70	68
11 Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
10 The Spider and the Fly	67	72	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
10 A Woman's Honor	69	71
20 East Lynne	87	86	9
15 Ambition	73	67
17 Man From Bitter Roots	82	80	2
18 Caprice of the Mountains	68	64	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
20 The Beast	88	71	6
24 Under Two Flags	94	92	16
16 End of the Trail	71	79
18 Sporting Blood	61	57	1
16 Little Miss Happiness	77	71	3
18 Daredevil Kate	73	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
13 Her Double Life	84	88
9 Where Love Leads	69	61
13 Fires of Conscience	64	70	1
11 The Straight Way	68	73
8 The Ragged Princess	77	70
13 The War Bride's Secret	76	58	3
10 Romeo and Juliet	87	86	4
5 Love and Hate	66	60

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Mischief Maker	70	70	1
3 Jealousy	73	85
3 The Mediator	72	70
4 Sins of Parents	91	78	3
1 Battle of Life	75	60
2 The Vixen	53	73
1 The Love Thief	90	90
2 The Primitive Call	70	78
1 The Island of Desire	80	90
1 The Price of Silence	85	100
2 The Bitter Truth	83	80	1
3 The Darling of Paris	77	75
2 One Touch of Sin	83	85
2 A New York Peacock	93	90
1 The Scarlet Letter	90	85
1 The Tiger Woman	100	100	1
1 Sister Against Sister	90	80
1 A Tale of Two Cities	100	100	1

MUTUAL

124 Mutual	74.3	71.7	14
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	40
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	90	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	75
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	50
3 Miracle of Life	83	83	1
1 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	90
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	60
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
2 The Bruiser	80	60	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
2 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	58
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
5 Soul Mates	68	60
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
1 Doorsteps	65	60	1
1 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
3 Youth's Endearing Charms	72	67	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
2 A Welsh Singer	60	53
1 Man Who Would Not Die	85	75
1 Three Pals	90	80
3 Manager of the B. & A.	63	70
4 The Pearl of Paradise	74	73	1
1 Dulcie's Adventure	90	66
1 Faith	70	59
2 Miss Jackie of the Navy	93	85	1
1 A Dream or Two Ago	75	60
2 Innocence of Lizette	100	85
1 The Butterfly Girl	70	70
1 The House of Scandal	0	10
1 The Man From Oregon	95	75

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
4 The Fireman	75	88
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100	2
1 The Wolf Man	50	50
1 Bluff	85	80
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
15 The Count	88	85	M
9 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
7 The Rink	96	99	6
4 Easy Street	95	100	4

PATHE

131 Pathe	67.8	68.6	13
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	80
2 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
2 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	55
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
6 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	65
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	68
8 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78	1
5 Shine Girl	69	70
2 Fear of Poverty	65	95
2 The Test	60	48
3 Saint, Devil and Woman	44	57
3 Light That Failed	69	69	1
5 Shadows and Sunshine	94	75	2
2 Prudence, the Pirate	58	73
3 Arms and the Woman	70	53	1
2 The Challenge	70	60
3 Joy and the Dragon	78	68
1 Romantic Journey	80	60
3 Her New York	78	60
3 Kick In	75	83

BLUEBIRD

212 Bluebird	62.3	62.2	18
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
1 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	45	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	48	58
2 The Great Problem	79	66
3 Gaylord Waring	62	66
5 Crippled Hand	58	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
1 Measure of a Man	50	50
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
5 Eye of God	64	80	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
14 Shoes	72	77	3
10 Broken Fetters	63	54	1
8 The Love Girl	63	64	1
6 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
7 Silent Battle	74	83
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
6 Love's Lariat	58	60

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
3 The Chalice of Sorrow	72	65
7 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61
8 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
11 Saving the Family Name	80	55
8 Behind the Lines	63	63
3 Social Buccaneers	72	60
4 Gloriana	69	70
3 Stranger from Somewhere	65	52
2 The Price of Silence	100	100
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
4 The Honor of Mary Blake	53	51
1 The Right to be Happy	50	40
3 Black Orchids	73	80
2 Her Soul's Inspiration	55	39
2 God's Crucible	83	75
1 The Piper's Price	40	20
2 Bugler of Algiers	88	77
2 The Eagle's Wings	74	70

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Jewel	83	65
2 Scandal	80	72
2 Langdon's Legacy	80	71
2 Love's Pilgrimage	73	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83
2 Idle Wives	50	100

RED FEATHER

72 Red Feather	64.9	60.2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	80	4
2 Beckoning Trail	88	71
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
1 The Sphinx	60	60
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	70
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	6
1 Heritage of Hate	90	8
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	2
3 Huntress of Men	49	5
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	6
2 What Love Can Do	50	8
3 Half a Rogue	78	6
1 Sons of Satan	60	4
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	6
1 Folly of Desire	20	4
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	4
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	5
4 The Target	76	4
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	6
2 Narrow Path	82	6
2 Drugged Waters	57	5
3 If My Country Should Call	58	6
2 Black Friday	60	6
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	7
1 The Isle of Life	60	6
2 The Mainspring	72	6
1 Morals of Hilda	80	8
2 Mixed Blood	70	5
1 The Child of Mystery	45	1
2 Polly Put the Kettle On	43	4
3 Fighting for Love	70	6
1 The Double Room Mystery	60	2
1 Heart Strings	65	4
1 Love Aflame	90	8
1 The Terror	70	6

e-orts	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat

GREATER VITAGRAPH

4 Vitagraph	69.0	65.9	70
Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
Juggernaut	74	77	2
Island of Regeneration	85	81	4
Sporting Duchess	40	30
Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
Crooky	70	69	2
Playing Dead	75	75
Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
The Rights of Men	74	85
Turn of the Road	82	78
The Cave Man	74	60
Heights of Hazard	75	44
Nation's Peril	91	92
The Man's Making	60	78
Price of Folly	95	90	2
The Great Divide	83	73	2
Souls in Bondage	100	80	1
Thou Art the Man	72	57
Green Stockings	87	88	2
Milady's Slipper	90	90
Island of Surprise	87	85
Gods of Fate	62	62
Night Out	80	76	1
The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
The Writing on the Wall	70	40
Kennedy Square	88	66	1
For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
Hunted Woman	74	54	1
Hero of Submarine D-2	74	71
Dollars and the Woman	78	53	1
Supreme Temptation	60	40
The Two-Edged Sword	70	21
Vital Question	80	55
Flames of Johannis	40	40
Salvation Joan	78	50
God's Country and Woman	89	66	4
Love's Toll	60	30
The Law Decides	80	70	4
The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
The Suspect	79	76	2
Lights of New York	70	78
The Destroyers	68	57	1
Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
Man Behind the Curtain	85	76
The Shop Girl	75	70	1
The Conflict	67	47
Fathers of Men	71	67
The Tarantula	83	74	3
The Daring of Diana	61	79
Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
The Light at Dusk	85	72	4
The Alibi	69	69
The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
Footlights of Fate	68	80
The Combat	81	84	1
The Kid	61	60
Phantom Fortunes	42	42
His Wife's Good Name	64	76
Through the Wall	78	61	1
The Chattel	71	82	3
Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67	1
Blue Envelope Mystery	59	62
Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
The Last Man	81	69
Devil's Prize	40	54
The Price of Fame	42	45
Dollars and the Law	45	71
The Enemy to the King	61	68	2
Rose of the South	70	65
Whom the Gods Destroy	59	73	3
Ninety and Nine	74	73	1
Indescretion	59	61	1
A Man of Mystery	52	50	1
My Official Wife	91	84	3
The Glory of Yolanda	73	70	2
The Enemy	60	60

Re-ports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
5 The Girl Philippa	70	79	2
2 The Courage of Silence	58	60	1
3 Money Magic	50	70
2 Blind Justice	50	63
1 Arsene Lupin	65	45
1 Intrigue	20	20
1 Kitty Mackay	30	30

KEYS

106 K. E. S. E.	69.6	66.3	22
1 The Bank	90	90	1
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
2 Thou Shalt Not Covet	78	52
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	90	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	90
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	40
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
2 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
1 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	67	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
3 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
2 Shepherd of Bargain Row	65	55
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
3 That Sort	70	45	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	55	75
4 The Prince Chap	46	41
8 The Return of Eve	75	73	2
7 The Country God Forgot	74	64
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 The Innocence of Ruth	60	81
1 At Piney Ridge	60	60
1 Heart of the Hills	50	39
3 The Prince of Graustark	83	82	1
4 The Cossack Whip	84	56
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
2 The Last Sentence	55	70
3 The Truant Soul	78	68	1
1 Little Shoes	80	70
1 Adventures of Buffalo Bill	65	100
1 Skinner's Dress Suit	100	80	1

SPECIAL FEATURES

1 Heart of Maryland	0	40
1 The Immortal Flame	80	72
1 Her Surrender	85	70
1 Heartaches	70	78
2 Geoffrey Manning	70	75
1 Garden of Knowledge	100	100	1
5 The Christian	81	78	1
6 Birth of a Nation	100	100	6
1 Unwritten Law	35	80
2 The Escape	67	70	1
5 Birth of a Nation	100	100	4
11 The Common Law	89	95	4
1 The Salamanders	40	75
6 The Libertine	83	78	4

Re-ports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Re-peat
1 My Country First	60	60
6 The Foolish Virgin	29	58	1
13 The Pride of the Clan	69	74	6
13 Less Than the Dust	61	78	4
2 20,000 Leagues Under Sea	78	100	2
1 The Crisis	80	75
10 War Brides	72	64	7
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
2 The Witching Hour	60	60	1
3 Tillie's Punctured Romance	90	90	2
1 Race Suicide	67	60
1 Shanghaied	90	90	1
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
1 Jaffery	63	55
3 Civilization	60	67	1
2 Cabiria	45	45
2 Marvelous Maciste	85	55
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1
5 End of the World	20	57
1 Birth of Character	20	50
3 Birth of Man	62	88
1 Love's Sacrifice	60	60
1 Fire and Sword	20	60
3 Doctor Neighbor	53	49
5 The Iron Hand	65	46
3 Police	63	81
1 America Waiting	10	15
1 Is Any Girl Safe?	90	60
1 Beulah	60	60
5 Panthea	82	78	4
2 The Price She Paid	90	78	2
4 Vera, the Medium	54	58	1
1 Gods of Little Children	65	60
1 Salomy Jane	90	100
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	3
6 The Whirl of Life	68	84	3
2 Silver Threads Among Gold	84	92	1
2 Victory of Virtue	50	100	1
5 The Melting Pot	78	53	2
4 Ramona	73	60
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
1 Hiawatha	40	100	1
1 The Aftermath	40	40
2 Salisbury's Wild Life in America	60	73
1 Hypocrites	60	90
1 The Only Son	40	60
1 Judge Legard	80	40
3 The Alien	98	60	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	42
5 The Little Girl Next Door	77	87	3
1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
8 Where Are My Children?	79	84	2
6 Alice in Wonderland	76	86	1
12 Romeo and Juliet (Metro)	79	60	3
1 Purity	92	90	1
1 The Clansman	90	100	1
1 Whoso Taketh A Wife	90	90
1 Lash of Destiny	80	80

SERIALS

1 Patria	90	95
13 Gloria's Romance	75	81
2 Crimson Stain Mystery	52	60
4 Mysteries of Myra	87	86
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
3 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
10 The Iron Claw	93	92
2 Diamond Runners	84	83
7 The Shielding Shadow	91	91
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	50
3 Scarlet Runner	67	64
2 Lass o' the Lumberlands	40	55
1 Girl and the Game	73	48
1 The Great Secret	20	40

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN

Producer of

STATE RIGHTS FILMS

1482 Broadway, New York City

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same pe centage, we have placed the one with the higher pe centage of repeats first.

Re-ports	Features	Company	% P. P.	% B. O.	Re-peats
6	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith	100	100	5
7	The Americano	Triangle	99	99	6
5	The Floorwalker	Mutual Chap.	97	100	2
7	The Rink	Mutual Chap.	97	99	6
9	Truthful Tulliver	Triangle	98	97	6
20	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	94	91	11
10	Miss George Washington	Paramount	97	95	8
17	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	93	88	11
10	Snow White	Paramount	96	95	5
10	The Matrimaniac	Triangle	95	96	5
5	The Goose Girl	Paramount	95	95	4
34	Hulda From Holland	Paramount	95	95	23
8	The Ne'er Do Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
5	Behind the Scenes	Mutual Chap.	94	93	4
8	Rags	Paramount	91	96	5
22	Peggy	Triangle	95	91	15
24	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	92	16
11	American Aristocracy	Triangle	94	92	7
10	Still Waters	Paramount	95	91	6
5	Cinderella	Paramount	88	98	2
5	The Eternal City	Far. Spec.	90	95	3
6	The Serpent	Fox	92	93	1
10	The Iron Claw	Serial	93	92
12	Bought and Paid For	World	91	93	8
11	The Common Law	Selznick	89	95	4
7	The Shielding Shadows	Serial	91	91
10	The Devil's Double	Triangle	90	91	5
10	Mister 44	Metro	88	93	4
16	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	89	91	6
5	Graustark	K. E. S. E.	88	90	4
7	Molly Make Believe	Paramount	90	88	5
10	The Sin Ye Do	Triangle	97	81	6
13	The Habit of Happiness	Triangle	92	86	5
13	Fifty Fifty	Triangle	94	84	4
5	Destruction	Fox	86	91	4
10	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	92	85	5
8	God's Country and Woman	Vitagraph	89	88	4
9	The Weaker Sex	Triangle	90	87	4
7	Prince and a Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
8	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	89	88	2
14	Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	90	86	6
6	My Official Wife	Vitagraph	91	84	3
5	Green Stockings	Vitagraph	87	88	2
23	Little Lady Eileen	Paramount	86	89	9
22	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	80	7
12	The Battle Cry of Peace	Vitagraph	95	80	4
21	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	16
17	The Cheat	Paramount	94	79	11
15	The Count	Mutual Chap.	88	85	8
26	Flirting with Fate	Triangle	88	85	10
20	East Lynne	Fox	87	86	9
7	Where Are My Children?	Universal	84	89	2
10	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	87	86	4
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
10	The Old Homestead	Paramount	88	84	7
13	Her Double Life	Fox	84	88	3
18	Home	Triangle	91	80	8
12	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	87	84	4
6	The Pride of the Clan	Artcraft	87	84	3
22	Reggie Mixes In	Triangle	92	79	10
10	The White Raven	Metro	85	86	4
16	The Aryan	Triangle	85	86	4
11	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	84	87	4
16	The Cood-Bad Man	Triangle	90	81	4
15	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	87	83	4
8	Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	3
14	Plain Jane	Triangle	89	81	3
20	Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	83	87	3
16	Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	81	3
5	Shadows and Sunshine	Pathe	94	75	3
6	Bella Donna	Paramount	91	77	3
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	3
8	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	78	3
9	The Rise of Susan	World	79	88	3
7	Undine	Bluebird	80	87	3
5	Dawn of a Tomorrow	Paramount	82	85	3
7	Island of Regeneration	Vitagraph	85	81	3
6	A Man and His Soul	Metro	83	83	3
12	The Combat	Vitagraph	81	85	3
17	His Picture in the Paper	Triangle	89	76	3
7	Camille	World	86	79	3
11	Carmen	Paramount	82	83	3
7	Wildflower	Paramount	88	76	3
5	Little Girl Next Door	State Rights	77	87	3
19	The Social Secretary	Triangle	91	73	3
6	Chimmie Faddin Out West	Paramount	88	76	3
5	David Harem	Paramount	86	78	3
8	Gentleman From Indiana	Paramount	86	78	3
5	What Will People Say?	Metro	80	84	3
6	Excuse Me	Pathe	90	73	3
5	Mice and Men	Paramount	82	81	3
11	Trail of Lonesome Pine	Paramount	74	89	3
11	Seventeen	Paramount	88	75	3
7	Helene of the North	Paramount	85	78	3
15	Stepping Stones	Triangle	87	76	3
6	Kindling	Paramount	81	82	3
14	The River of Romance	Metro	88	74	3
6	Madame X	Pathe	71	91	3
13	Maria Rosa	Paramount	82	80	3
5	Alice in Wonderland	State Rights	76	86	3
17	Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	82	80	3
6	The Libertine	State Rights	83	78	3
5	The Soul Market	Metro	84	77	3
5	The Soul of Broadway	Fox	83	78	3
5	Chimmie Faddin	Paramount	90	71	3
5	Panthea	Selznick	82	78	3
5	The Man From Mexico	Paramount	90	70	3
18	Honor Thy Name	Triangle	88	72	3
14	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	85	75	3
5	Pretty Sister Jose	Paramount	82	78	3
16	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	78	3
13	Martha's Vindication	Triangle	83	77	3
8	The Wall Between	Metro	78	82	3

No. of Features With 5 Reports	Company	Honor Features
33	Paramount	150
31	Triangle	130
10	Fox	47
8	Metro	53
7	Vitagraph	29
4	Mutual-Chaplin	6
4	Pathe	9
3	World	34
2	Selznick	2
2	Serials	4
1	K. E. S. E.	3
1	Bluebird	18
2	State Rights
1	Griffith	1
1	Paramount Special	1
1	Universal Special	1
1	Artcraft	1

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

ABSORBING ADAPTATION OF SUCCESSFUL NOVEL HUMANLY PLAYED AND EXCEPTIONALLY WELL PRODUCED—HAS WONDERFUL BIG SYMPATHY CHARACTER.

George Loane Tucker's Production of Hall Caine's

THE MANX-MAN

Featuring Fred Groves, Elizabeth Risdon and Henry Ainley

Geo. L. Tucker—Cosmofotofilm

DIRECTOR ..... George Loane Tucker
AUTHOR ..... Hall Caine
SCENARIO ADAPTATION....By George Loane Tucker and Hall Caine
CAMERAMAN ..... Ernest Palmer
AS A WHOLE.....Absorbing human drama that grips
STORY.....Big, convincing, appealing and stirring
DIRECTION.....Wonderful characterizations in picturesque, human atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Excellent; a few wonderful bits
LIGHTINGS.....Generally good; a few very beautiful
CAMERA WORK.....Very good; splendid "doubles"
STARS.....Big, human characters forcefully portrayed; they lived the parts
SUPPORT.....Excellent types
EXTERIORS .....Picturesque; actual scenes of story
INTERIORS .....Very good; excellent atmosphere
DETAIL ..... Excellent
TIME .....Two hours (8 parts)

HALL hail, George Loane Tucker! Hats off to Fred Groves, and congratulations to Elizabeth Risdon! We can also say to Hall Caine that he can bless the day when he decided to let George Tucker, an American, do his big story, "The Manx-man," for the films.

We hailed "The Barrier with delight as a wonderful film that proved conclusively that big-name stars were not essential to make a fine film when a real story was at hand. Just mark it down in your little book that "The Manx-man" settles all possible arguments on that score.

Hall Caine's story required very intelligent handling, and certainly Mr. Tucker, in collaborating with Mr. Caine on the scenario of this, has succeeded in retaining the big, vital, human moments of this successful novel, and at the same time carrying the central threads of the story without a break. It was a big book to get on the screen, and, because of the contrasting characterizations, it was essential that all of the incidents be recorded, so that the effect of the lives of the parents of the two boys who figure in the main portion of the story, could be properly understood.

At the first showing of this big production it ran a solid two hours without intermission. This was a daring test, because any two-hour film is supposed to be presented with an intermission, and Mr. Tucker has arranged for an intermission in his production, having taken it with that in mind, but felt that for a showing to the trade he would carry it straight through without a break.

Considered technically, I believe that "The Manx-man" stands as the most perfect adaptation of a big novel that has ever been screened. Oddly enough, it has the same sort of a big sympathy character that made "The Barrier" stand out, but in contrasting it with "The Barrier" I believe that the early scenes held the interest better, and surely there is as much drama in the big, vital moments of the last few reels.

The scenes between Mr. Ainley, Mr. Groves and Miss Risdon, and those in which the little baby figured will hit home with any one, and certainly they have been effectively handled.

The big ensemble scenes in which thousands of Manx-men and soldiers figured came in about the sixth or sixth reel, at a time when they were particularly impressive. The fact that all of the scenes in this were made on the Isle of Man, in the actual location of the story itself, gives an added interest to the production, and, of course, the atmosphere and types were perfect.

The story is known to millions, but if you have not read it, it would be impossible for me to give you the dramatic possibilities in a few paragraphs, although I can tell you that it is constructed on the conflict between two boys who had been chums since boyhood, one of whom became the Deemster or judge of the island, and the other, who was an illegitimate son of the judge's uncle, who went away to the Kimberly mines and returned after having been reported dead.

Pete, the boy who went away, was engaged to a young girl, the daughter of an innkeeper. In his absence she became a woman and learned to care for his chum who became the Deemster. When Pete returned, the Deemster, anxious for a career, gave up the girl, who, having promised herself to Pete before he went away, married him.

After the child was born, Pete's wife found that she couldn't forget the Deemster and finally went to him, at his request. Believing that his wife had gone away with another, Pete called in his friend, the Deemster, and in a very powerful scene which will register with any audience, Pete dictated a letter to his wife in answer to one which he had written himself, telling her to come back.

Eventually the Deemster's conscience conquered, and he confessed to Pete that he had taken the wife away, and then Pete realized for the first time that his wife had never loved him and that the Deemster was really the father of the baby.

The story ends with Pete placing the child in the arms of the wife he had divorced by perjuring himself, who was now reunited with the Deemster, who had given up his office and refused the proffered governorship. The film fades out with this big, human six-footer sailing away from his beloved isle.

In this one picture Fred Groves has been made a film star of the first magnitude. His characterization is a triumph. He has poise and authority and yet carries all of his scenes with an ease and naturalness which never at any time suggested the actor. Since Mr. Groves is essentially a "find" of Producer Tucker, a great portion of the credit must naturally go to G. L. T.

Certainly, after this film has played this country, the fans will be clamoring for more productions in which Fred Groves shall appear.

Elizabeth Risdon, in the part of Kate, screened to splendid advantage, was nicely lighted in most of her scenes and registered an appealing, human personality that makes her more dramatic scenes truly effective.

Henry Ainley, as Philip, the Deemster, had a very, very difficult part to portray. He was, according to the situations, under a terrific mental strain at all times and wasn't the big, virile man that Pete was. Occasionally there was a tendency on the part of Mr. Ainley to act a bit, but, because of the character, I am quite sure no one will notice this except those of us who get the technical points. Mr. Ainley's character had to be handled with just the proper shadings, because it was the intention of the author and director to throw the sympathy to Pete.

The remaining characters were splendidly chosen as to type, and all were in perfect keeping with the atmosphere. There was not a false note in the supporting cast.

In the introductory of this big offering Mr. Tucker has given some intelligently-written explanatory titles which make clear some of the more important points about this very unusual island and its government, and occasionally in the offering, without at any time permitting it to jar, he has introduced picturesque ex iors which will give an audience a splendid conception of the atmosphere of this independent little country.

There were a few exceptionally beautiful locations, one cameo-like bit being a scene where Miss Risdon was shown standing beside a stream in which there were two cows—one white and one black. There was another beautiful bit showing the surf breaking over the rockbound coast and some sunset scenes of boats leaving the harbor of Castletown, which were truly beautiful as to composition and lighting.

There was one very good bit of double exposure, registering the thought of the new Deemster when he mentally placed Kate as his wife at the banquet table, and the photography throughout was all of a very high quality.

While this is a picture made in what we call a "foreign" country, with a company of artists who are not American, it has been done by an American director, and Mr. Tucker has kept his production so well in hand that if it had not been labeled as an offering made on the Isle of Man, no one would ever have dreamed that it was anything but an American film, so far as the advanced technique is concerned. It would, of course, have been impossible to have secured the desired atmosphere in this country, and so the policy of sending American producers abroad is hereby fully justified, and following the great war this will undoubtedly be done rather extensively instead of the sometimes disastrous attempts to portray foreign atmosphere which have been attempted here.

Mr. Tucker has made use of the close-up and has generally kept his figures in proper foreground, with sufficient variety of camera angles and cutting and flashing to make this register as an exceptionally well done "big film," technically speaking.

The Box Office Angle.

This should get big money and should be good for a run anywhere if properly handled. Hall Caine's prestige should help to get them in at first, particularly if backed by a guarantee from the exhibitor that the production is a noteworthy one, and the added distinction of this having been made on the Isle of Man with the full co-operation of the government and natives of this independent little nation should attract many.

After your first audiences have seen "The Manx-man," you can depend upon the word-of-mouth discussion bringing new thousands. It is a film that will be recommended by word of mouth. It has action, a very interesting story, with perfectly maintained suspense and a dominating character that carries the sympathy to the very end, making every one leave the theatre thinking of him.

In your advertising I would play up Fred Groves and call attention to the fact that he is now in the trenches fighting for the Allies. If he comes out of the war Mr. Tucker hopes to make more big films with him as a star.

You can play up George Loane Tucker as one of America's best directors, who went to England a few years ago and successfully established himself there, producing some of the most notable films that have been made on the other side of the water.

In all of your mention of the author, Hall Caine, I would at the same time hammer home the fact that he collaborated with Mr. Tucker on the scenario and assisted in securing the sanction of the government of the Isle of Man to have the film made there in the actual locations of his famous novel.

This offering will be played as an evening's entertainment, for the present at least, and, properly handled, it is going to be one of the greatest successes to date.

ORDINARY ACTION MELO HELPED AT TIMES BY STAR'S BEAUTY

Kitty Gordon in

FORGET-ME-NOT

Peerless-Brady-World

DIRECTOR	Emile Chautard
CAMERAMAN	Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE	Unconvincing surface "meller" with some bright spots
STORY	Just a lot of action that never really registered
DIRECTION	Had some good atmosphere and some ordinary spots; gave star good close-ups
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; some ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Registered beautifully at times, which helped offering
SUPPORT	Rather actory and mechanical; didn't really convince
EXTERIORS	Some very beautiful; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Some distinctive; some ordinary because of lighting
DETAIL	Acceptable, although convenient
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

IF your fans like to look at beautiful backs and pretty gowns they may accept this ordinary surface melodrama in order to have a chance to see Kitty Gordon in some of the very beautiful close-ups which she is given in this production.

The story is one of those ordinary surface melodramas that never has a chance to really convince you, and it is played in the rather mechanical, actory manner which seems to indicate the feeling on the part of the artist that it is just a question of turning out so much footage. The scenes didn't really impress or convince, because they are the old stuff which has been ground through the mills so often, and while the average audience may consider this fairly interesting, they certainly will not enthuse over it from any angle.

It all had to do with a "vamp" against whom one of her victim's brothers swore vengeance, with the net result that he saved up for fifteen years, finally met her and became a victim himself, losing all of his coin and going to prison for killing her hubby.

She then tried to force herself into an English family, into which her son had married, but she wasn't wanted, and this provided additional footage, until they finally got rid of her by hiring a gink to scare her who conveniently looked like the "wop" who'd tried to avenge himself upon her and had gone to prison for killing hubby.

There were many convient angles to the plot development, and things seemed to happen when needed, in the routine manner that some of our scenarioists use when it's a question of grinding out so many scripts in a given time.

In the last reel or two we had a number of close-ups of Miss Gordon which were truly beautiful, and they were the only really redeeming features of the entire offering, so far as I could see.

Montagu Love as the vengeful "wop" was quite willunous, but nobody cared much.

The other members of the cast were rather ordinary. There were Alec B. Francis, George MacQuarrie, Norma Phillips, Lillian Hebert, James Furey and Henrietta Simpson.

The Box Office Angle.

You must figure this as just another one of those ordinary melodramas that rambles along with a certain amount of surface action which has been presented in a half-and-half atmosphere, part of which is quite artistic and part very ordinry.

If Kitty Gordon has pulled you any business in the past, her presence in this may save it, and make it acceptable because she is very well lighted in a good many scenes and takes occasion to wear some pretty gowns cut quite a la Lo-and-Behold.

If your fans are pretty tired of the surface melodrama junk, I'd try to find something a little more human than this. Certainly I'd not figure it good for more than one day, because no one would ever look at this and then go out and dig up friends to urge them to see it.

PRETTY STAR IN ORDINARY SURFACE MELO WITH SOME ACTORY PLAYERS

Anna Q. Nilsson in

THE INEVITABLE

Erbograph—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Ben M. Goetz
AUTHOR	C. Doty Hobart
CAMERAMAN	James Robertson
AS A WHOLE	Obvious "meller" badly overplayed in spots, misses fire
STORY	Well-known situations of daughter avenging father through son of father's partner
DIRECTION	Registered good close-ups, but permitted some bad overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	A few good; all clean-cut, but generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Good straight stuff
STAR	Her personality lifted offering decidedly
SUPPORT	Very actory
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; not distinctive
INTERIORS	Acceptable; lacked distinctive class
DETAIL	Generally good, although convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

MISS NILSSON'S personality helps this offering very decidedly, and frequently makes it interesting, but still the fact that the story is an old friend which has been done so often in the films that it is known backwards, will keep any audience from becoming very enthusiastic.

The supporting cast was decidedly inclined towards proving that they could "emote," and the work of Wilson Reynolds, Albert Tavernier and William Bailey was particularly bad, from the viewpoint of overplaying. The first two were very noticeably camera-conscious, and Mr. Bailey did his willun along the approved rip-an'-tear lines, which is entirely too crude for present-day film fans.

Chester Barnett, the young hero, got through most of his scenes most satisfactorily, but in one or two places he "acted" a bit, and one little scene toward the end, where he beat his fists against his forehead, was enough to put the kibosh on him for this offering. That bit of "emoting" is going to get a laugh most anywhere from the wise ones.

The plot told the well-known story of the business partner who died when falsely accused of defalcation, and then we saw his daughter planning revenge by tempting the son of the man who had caused her father's death.

Of course, there was a willun in the office who had really stolen the money, and, although he was caught trying to steal more and sent up the river, he eventually escaped and figured in the final action.

As is customary in such plots, Miss Nilsson, while tempting Mr. Barnett in order to make him spend his money, fell in love with him, and after telling him that she had only been "kidding" him right along to ruin him, she discovered that she really loved the boy, and so when things were cleared up in a hurry in the last three or four scenes, they got to a clutch for the final fade-out.

The photography was clean-cut, but the lightings were generally too uniform. The sets were acceptable, but lacked distinction, and the fact that the lightings were uniform kept the sets from registering in as pleasing a manner as they might have had more spot-lighting been used.

There were many close-ups, and Miss Nilsson particularly was photographed to splendid advantage in many scenes.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that this is hardly a worth-while offering, because the plot is obvious, well-known and decidedly surface meller. It never really convinces or gets under your shirt, and most fans to-day prefer the little human stories to the plain surface melodramas.

The overplaying of several of the characters keeps this ordinary, and I'd say that you should steer clear of it unless you figure to fill in with it for just one night.

If Miss Nilsson can pull you any money at the box office, this may get by satisfactorily for one night, particularly when you can figure that it will come to you at a reasonable rental.

Certainly this is no worse than many of the offerings which are presented regularly on some of the more pretentious programs, but, still, that doesn't make it any the more pleasing to your regulars, who are anxious to see worth-while stuff.

I wouldn't tell 'em what the story is about, because most of them will say, "Nay, nay—I've seen it too often!"

UNDERWORLD CHINK MELLER THAT MISSES FIRE

Wedgwood Nowell in

THE FLOWER OF DOOM

Red Feather

DIRECTOR ..... Rex Ingram
AUTHOR ..... Rex Ingram
CAMERAMAN ..... Duke Hayward
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly interesting, but rambling underworld melo
STORY ..... Seemed badly assembled; failed to get anywhere
DIRECTION ..... Some excellent atmosphere, with good individual scenes, but too much underworld stuff
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good; some excellent; a few bits bad
LIGHTINGS ..... Many excellent bits; other scenes varied from good to poor
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied from fine to poor
STAR ..... Was really Gypsy Harte
SUPPORT ..... Fine "Chink" heavy; other good types
EXTERIORS ..... Fitted atmosphere of underworld
INTERIORS ..... Good Chink and underworld stuff, but rather too much of it
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH the atmosphere of this offering and the development of the plot may prove fairly interesting to your fans, I hardly think that it will convince any one or impress them as real drama.

The plot was one of those underworld melodramas in which roughnecks and Chinks figured, with rival tongs at war and the newspaper reporter's girl kidnapped by one of the Chinks furnishing the chief bits of excitement.

Somehow, the assembling seemed to be very poor, because the story rambled and rambled without getting anywhere in particular. One situation, where Nick Dunaew greeted his Chinese sweetheart when she came through a secret door, with the old Chink willun coming to interrupt the proceedings, seemed to have been repeated as if they'd used a re-take.

There were the usual rough-and-tumble scraps, with a lot of stuff showing underworld characters and the ways of the wicked Chinese. Of course, on the finish the newspaperman and his detective friends rescued the girl, and all was well.

Wegwood Nowell was a sort'uv superior willun, but Gypsy Harte really had most to do as a cabaret dancer who became the shero of the "meller."

Millard K. Wilson, as the newspaper reporter, kept rather well in the character. At least, he didn't carry a stenographer's notebook!

Some of the roughneck types were quite picturesque and looked like they might be the real thing, and one "dope" figured in several scenes with all the frills. As a "dope," he was very good—but who wants to see a "dope," anyway?

The Chink "heavy" was very good, his face being a truly wicked one when shown in close-ups.

While most of the sets were rather good and generally made effective by good lighting there was one scene showing a room in which the plaster was supposed to be broken on the wall, which was very, very badly handled.

Nicholas Duneaw figured in sort of a side-issue love affair with a Chinese girl, which had little to do with the other plot thread.

Others in the cast were Yvette Mitchell, Tommy Morrissey, Frank Tokonaga, Gordo Keeno and Evelyn Selbie.

The Box Office Angle.

In the form which this gets on the screen, I'd figure that it may get by as a fairly interesting underworld melodrama, but I can't say that it'll register as very entertaining with the average audience. I believe that they have sort of tired of this underworld Chinese tong, roughneck-gangster stuff, and I certainly wouldn't give this more than one day and wouldn't figure it even for that length of time if you can get something else which will register as better entertainment.

I can see no advertising angles in the production as it stands, the only thing which you can talk about being the fact that there are several Chinese actors and some true-to-life scenes in the depths of Chinatown.

As a Chinatown "meller" this will please those who might like that sort of thing. It is hardly an offering which will appeal to a community audience.

MADE VERY ENTERTAINING BY CHARACTERIZATIONS AND HUMAN TOUCHES

William Nigh and Violet Palmer in

THE BLUE STREAK

Fox Film

DIRECTOR ..... William Nigh
AUTHOR ..... William Nigh
CAMERAMEN ..... Jos. Ruttenberg and A. Lloyd Lewis
AS A WHOLE ..... Entertaining human stuff that will please generally
STORY ..... Good human basic idea very intelligently handled
DIRECTION ..... Registered excellent atmosphere and characterizations
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some very good; generally acceptable, although occasionally a bit indiscreet
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STARS ..... Quite pleasing
SUPPORT ..... Excellent types
EXTERIORS ..... Many very beautiful shots; fitted atmosphere nicely
INTERIORS ..... Very good
DETAIL ..... Many fine little touches
TIME ..... Seventy minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE that any audience anywhere will enjoy this very much.

Producer Nigh has taken a human little idea and has developed it with some good atmospheric touches, many little human bits of detail and some nice characterizations on the part of some well-chosen types. He plays the leading part himself and handles it very well, making the character truly likeable.

The story tells of a no-account wealthy man's son who was sent West, which is the old-time routine start. But from that time on everything is centered on one thought, which was a very good one.

The innocent young daughter of a gambling-house keeper was kidnapped by Mr. Nigh and two very, very rough roughnecks, who were his companions, and these three flipped a coin to decide who should have the prize.

The kiddie had never enjoyed the association of any other girls or women and had lavished most of her love upon a large doll, making clothes for it in odd moments. When one of the ruffians discovered a shirt about baby size they jumped to the conclusion that their captive was about to become a mother.

Already she had taken them unawares by proceeding to boss them around quite actively, with startling results, and now this revelation suddenly softened these hardened pirates, so that they became her willing slaves.

"The Blue Streak" hurried off to the settlement and brought back the only woman, who was as rough as the men, and was known as "Bar-fly," and when she learned how the roughnecks had been given a false impression she decided to keep up the deception.

There were many good laughs brought into the action from that time on and we also had a lot of snappy action, good riding and fast shooting. The sheriff and his deputies tried to capture the roughnecks, but were in turn captured themselves, and the sheriff was permitted to remain providing he'd help prepare for the coming arrival. He spent most of his time building a cradle.

The three men, in turn, offered their names to the young captive, so that the baby might have a name, but she refused them in turn, and then "The Blue Streak" went in search of a gambler who'd hurriedly left the camp when they kidnapped the kid, "The Blue Streak" thinking that this gambler was responsible for the fancied condition of the heroine.

Even the justice of the peace agreed to continue to fool the boys, and they were led to believe that the marriage ceremony was performed and then the "Bar-fly" had the beautiful idea of telling the ruffians that the bady had died.

She dug a grave, and this touch, although it may sound a bit off-color, was so well handled that it registered some delightful contrasts in pathos and comedy.

Finally the captive "fessed up" that it had all been a deception, and on the finish she asked "The Blue Streak" if he wouldn't kidnap her all over again. This he promptly did, and carried her back to his dad, making dad acknowledge her as his welcome daughter-in-law at the point of a gun.

Mr. Nigh's characterization of the quick-shooting man was an excellent bit of work, and Ed. F. Roseman as "Butch," Martin Faust as "Half-and-Half," and Ned Finley, as the sheriff, gave splendid characterizations.

Violet Palmer, as the innocent young thing, looked the part and carried it through nicely. She was an appealing little personality and screened rather well.

Ruth Thorpe handled the Bar-fly characterization with just the right touches to keep it from being overdone.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that you can consider this a good bit of entertainment for any audience. It has scores of little human touches carefully handled and still there is enough action as a background to make it appeal to those who like "blood and thunder" well handled.

From the viewpoint of entertainment, I believe that this is one of the best things Mr. Nigh has ever done. It isn't a tremendous, big film, but it will certainly please generally, and offerings which do that are rare enough these days.

You can safely promise that they'll enjoy this. I'd confine my advertising to that thought, and not tell too much about the story.

RATHER OBVIOUS, OLD-TIME SITUATIONS HELPED BY STAR'S HANDLING

Robert Warwick in

THE FAMILY HONOR

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Emile Chautard
AUTHOR	Adrian Gil-Spear
CAMERAMAN	Lucien Tainguy
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting, with good and poor spots
STORY	Ancient, obvious situation of strong brother rescuing weak from "vamp," only to fall himself
DIRECTION	Registered some splendid moments, with others missing fire
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; sometimes just fair
LIGHTINGS	Most of them excellent, but quite a number too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STAR	Forceful; made scenes impressive
SUPPORT	Generally very good; Hull missed fire
EXTERIORS	Good; but very few
INTERIORS	Generally very good, but a few made ordinary by lighting
DETAIL	A bit too much at times, making scenes drag
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

THIS story has been done so often that the average fan will have it guessed before it has been under way five hundred feet, even though Mr. Warwick, the star, doesn't actually get into the situations until the third reel. They will know that, after the weak brother has been thoroughly disgraced, the hero brother is to come along and "fall" for the vamp, while the weak brother turns to his early sweetheart.

In the first two reels, we had a couple of short flashes of Mr. Warwick drilling with some soldiers, and these scenes have every indication of having been dragged into this in order to get over a touch of the war spirit, because of recent international developments. No further reference is made to his connection with the army after he gets into the story proper in the third reel, which seems to make the early introductory scenes decidedly a matter of afterthought.

Despite the fact that the story is so obvious, the producer has, by intelligent lighting and good close-ups, held the interest right well through most of the scenes, except for the fact that he has frequently given too much detail to a situation, thereby causing the action to drag.

Mr. Warwick and June Elvidge had quite a number of scenes, which were very well handled, and Miss Elvidge was given a very prominent part, with many close-ups. The weak spot of the entire offering was Henry Hull. He was presented in the character of a weak-willed younger brother, but, even as such, he somehow failed to register convincingly. He seemed to be "acting" most of the time.

The general atmosphere was quite distinctive, but occasionally we found a set that was too uniformly lighted, this resulting in the lighting exposing the fact that some of the back walls were painted, and also bringing into too great prominence the fact that some gilt furniture was being used rather profusely.

After the weaker brother had gone the limit and the stronger brother decided that the vampire wasn't wicked after all, we found a rather melodramatic finish where the father of the two boys ordered his younger son to kill himself because of the disgrace he had brought upon the family. Of course, the older brother broke through the locked door at the psychological moment and stopped the forced suicide, explaining that the vampire was not one who would bring disgrace upon the family, but one who would enhance the ily honor.

This being the case, father was made to appear to be sort 'uv a boob, because it would seem he should have done a little investigating himself before being willing to sacrifice his youngest son.

The Box Office Angle.

The presence of Robert Warwick and the fact that he has a part which gives him an opportunity to intelligently and in a dignified manner carry many important scenes should make this production better than the routine program release, figured from the average audience angle.

The story is one that you should sort of dodge in your advertising, because it is well-known, but in seeing it on the screen the good lighting in spots and the rather distinctive manner in which some of the scenes have been lighted and played will help carry this through and make it register as at least acceptable.

If the name of June Elvidge is worth anything at your ticket window I would play up the fact that she has a prominent part in this, and you might also mention Gerda Holmes and Alec Francis. I don't believe that Mr. Hull's name will pull you any business.

About the only safe advertising angle is to feature Mr. Warwick very strongly and promise that the production is a dramatic contrast between a stronger and a weaker brother, presented in a distinctive atmosphere.

MOSTLY RAVINGS OF DOPE VICTIM—FUNNY ALLEGORY AT END

Margarita Fischer in

THE DEVIL'S ASSISTANT

Pollard—Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Harry Pollard
AUTHOR ..... J. Edward Hungerford
AS A WHOLE... Hardly entertaining, because too much tortured heroine stuff
STORY ..... Mostly scenes of dope victim's ravings
DIRECTION ..... Registered "creepy" stuff to make you squirm, but many points badly done, with allegory on finish that was funny
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very good; some just ordinary CAMERA WORK ..... Some excellent "doubles; generally good
STAR ..... Put in five reels of tortured dope stuff
SUPPORT ..... Rather camera-conscious, with trained eyebrows
EXTERIORS ..... A few very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Generally good; not distinctive DETAIL ..... Too much of horrors, with allegory that will surely get a laugh
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

AS soon as this thing started it was painfully obvious that we were in for five reels of tortured heroine, and, believe me, we got it with all the frills.

The plot started right off with a willun and a willuness who were looking for trouble, because the willun had wanted to marry the girl and the willuness had wanted to marry the man who had failed to consider their respective wants and had gone off and were married happily.

The willun, being a doctor, proceeded to dish out dope to the wife, to start trouble which might bring her to him, and practically the entire offering was devoted to the effects of the dope upon the wife.

She became groggy and did such wild things as to come down to greet her guests in her nightgown; imagine that "wicious" eyes were staring at her from every part of the room, etc., until the darned thing was enough to make anybody feel a bit "creepy."

Finally she agreed to run away with the doctor in order to get some more dope, and they went out into a storm, so that the director could get some night effects in the rain. As we expected, the cabin in which they took refuge was struck by lightning and the willun killed. However, the husband arrived in time to lift up friend wife, and after all this five reels of agony showed us one scene of her getting back to happiness, and this was the final clutch.

In between the cabin being hit by lightning and the arrival of hubby, they pulled a lot of allegory showing Death riding up on a white horse to knock at the cabin and carry away the wife's double-exposed soul, and he took her for a ride on the River Styx, in which a lot of fellers were swimming, and this was funny enough to get a laugh, but the final blow came when they arrived in the director's conception of Hell.

Along with other weird things, he had a big dog with a couple of bum heads hung on either side of his real head, and—oh, boy!—if they don't get a laugh it'll be because no one in your community has a sense of humor.

It was quite some shock after going through all this to find that hubby calmly walked in, picked the lady up and found her alive. I can't figure out why they pulled all this death stuff with the old boy in the ferryboat when she didn't really "cash in."

Certainly I wouldn't consider this entertainment. The director may have figured that it was going to provide a wonderful emotional role for Miss Fischer, but I'm bettin' that the public, who pay to be entertained, would rather see Miss Fischer doin' comic opera stuff like "Miss Jackie of the Navy" than weird dope emotional scenes.

The titles were particularly crude both as to wording and lettering. The same cheap border was used throughout most of the offering, with entirely too much decoration on the sides, and most of the titles were lettered so close together that it was very difficult to read them.

Both Monroe Salisbury, who was the willunous doctor, and Jack Mower, who was the hubby-hero, had very peculiarly trained eyebrows, those of Salisbury being particularly funny. This was supposed to suggest the fact that he was in some way related to the Devil, but I'm inclined to believe that it'll stir the lagging sense of humor in most fans, rather than impress them as a good thought in the way of make-up.

The Box Office Angle.

Personally, I would say that this isn't the sort of production to present in a community house. It may get by where you cater to fans who like melodrama and weird things, but I wouldn't figure that any audience would consider it entertaining. Almost the entire footage is devoted to the effects of dope on Miss Fischer, and there is nothing either dramatic, convincing or really interesting about the development of the story.

I'd surely dodge this if there is any chance of getting anything worth while, and if you play it I believe, in justice to your fans, that it would be advisable to make it clear that this is a story showing the terrible effects upon a young woman who unknowingly became a victim of the drug habit.

WELL KNOWN OLD SITUATIONS HELPED BY PERSONALITIES AND HANDLING

Frances Nelson in

THE POWER OF DECISION

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	John W. Noble
AUTHOR	George W. Gunn
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	Herbert O. Carleton
AS A WHOLE	Close-ups and players' personalities helped very ancient, obvious plot
STORY	Convenient, obvious and often seen on screen
DIRECTION	Handling of players and lightings lifted ancient situations somewhat
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; some close-ups excellent
LIGHTINGS	Mostly spotlighting; generally very good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Very beautiful at times; generally pleasing
SUPPORT	Davidson excellent; others good and fair
EXTERIORS	Storm stuff very good; others satisfactory
INTERIORS	Generally very good
DETAIL	Acceptable, although very convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THE fan who thinks most about story situations will consider this pretty punk stuff, because he'll know the plot by heart and will want to groan every time a new situation looms up. The fan who appreciates good lightings, players' personalities, intelligently-handled close-ups and dramatic pauses will get enough out of this to consider it worthwhile, even though the story is quite familiar.

The plot is the old thought of the young innocent who married an artist only to find a bit later that the caller who rudely entered was his first wife.

The injured heroine walked out and afterwards married, although she told her new husband about her past. Then the other man was brought in again, and the question comes—what shall I do?

Unfortunately, the plot dovetails so nicely that the very convenience of the situations was tiresome. We found the real husband, who was an author, writing a book entitled "The Power of Decision," which dealt with a heroine placed in the same position as his wife. That is, she was compelled to choose between a man of the present and one of the past.

To make it more "intrickut," the author-husband called for an illustrator, and the artist almost-husband came in to draw the pictures. Then author-husband insisted that wifey should act as model, she having started out in life in that capacity, and the last reel or two was chiefly occupied with wifey standing in front of a sign-board which pointed the right road and the wrong road, while the cynical almost-husband drew her picture and the real husband discovered them embracing every so often.

By way of added interest, we found a butler who wanted to rob the safe, and he discovered the guilty ones embracing, so that the wife couldn't inform on him when she caught him with the goods. This bit was introduced so that on the finish, when hubby started away and came back because his automobile "bust," they could pull a "twist." We found hubby and wifey standing by the window waiting for the willun artist to call for the "wif." A man came to the window, hubby shot a shot, and the man fell in. The wise ones will all guess it before they get to the close-up, but maybe some of them won't. Of course, the man shot was the butler, who'd come back to steal the coin, and the bold, bad artist, he heard the shot and rode away, he did.

In her anxiety lest hubby should be arrested, the wife proved that she really did care for her author-hubby.

There were many long scenes in this between Miss Nelson and John Davidson, who was the cynic willun. Both of these players have personalities that will hold the average audience very nicely. They have been nicely lighted and the dramatic pauses were quite effective, so that I have an idea that this will be accepted as interesting by many, who might not like it except for the fact that they have been bored to death with the many badly-done program offerings of recent months.

There were some close-ups of Miss Nelson which were exceptionally beautiful. These were very well lighted, and most of them plainly posed, but since she was supposed to be posed for some one to paint her, this was quite permissible.

Richard Tucker, as the author-husband, was quite acceptable, although his personality isn't the sort to make you particularly enthusiastic over him.

Mary Asquith, as the miniature painter, was very much inclined to "act," but the other members of the supporting cast were quite satisfactory.

In the supporting cast were Sally Crute, Fuller Mellish and Hugh Jeffrey.

The Box Office Angle.

As program releases go, I'd say that this is quite acceptable, despite the convenient plot, principally because of the rather intelligent handling of their characters by Miss Nelson and Mr. Davidson.

I wouldn't figure on playing this more than one night, however, because a story such as this hardly arouses enthusiasm such as is needed to cause favorable word-of-mouth discussion.

Some of the convenience in this is blamed on "Fate," and if you have nerve enough, you might use advertising something like this: "Do you believe that we have the power of decision to decide what we shall or shall not do, or do you think that our lives are regulated by what we call "Fate"?

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

WHEN EDITED WILL BE EXCELLENT BIG FEATURE—TOO LONG NOW

H. B. Warner in

GOD'S MAN

Frohman Amus. Corp.—Sate Rights

DIRECTOR ..... George Irving
AUTHOR ..... George Bronson Howard
SCENARIO BY ..... Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN ..... William A. Reinhart
AS A WHOLE ..... Many human bits and oodles of material, but entirely too long STORY ..... Principally devoted to shots at New York life
DIRECTION ..... Many incidents splendidly developed, with good little touches, but unecessary scenes and a few slips made offering drag in spots
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good, although varied decidedly at times
LIGHTINGS ..... Generally excellent, although a few too contrasty and some too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good, although varied
STAR ..... Forceful, impressive personality that dominated action
SUPPORT ..... Walter Hiers excellent; some others fine some a bit weak
EXTERIORS ..... Some excellent; some ordinary; water stuff didn't match with storm
INTERIORS. Generally very good; a few not well lighted
DETAIL ..... Generally very good, but too much of it
TIME ..... Two hours and ten minutes (9 parts)

CERTAINLY this was decidedly too long as shown to the trade. I have been told that they intend to cut it, but it seems to me a pity that the cutting wasn't done before the film was given the first big showing.

George Bronson Howard's book was chiefly devoted to taking good, hard shots at New York City, working into this by showing the battle of three young men who tried to buck the game.

There is certainly plenty of material in this to make a very big feature, and the important incidents are forcefully human and effectively truthful. As the offering stands at present, however, the burden of the unnecessary scenes and incidents drags down the better sequences, with the result that some of the best of the film loses its value because the very length of the offering makes it tiresome.

The screen adaptation seems to have given most of the meat from the book, but as the production was screened there was entirely too much superfluous material.

There were many titles, most of them rather long, and some of them could have been eliminated. But certainly the titles were well written, and in many places they made scenes very effective, which, without the titles, would have been more or less ordinary.

If this offering is promptly and intelligently edited down to about 6,500 feet, which will certainly be sufficient footage, it will be a great film. I can realize that it is going to be no simple task to do this, because the production is an adaptation of a book carrying many story threads, but, nevertheless, the editing can be done, and after it has been done what will remain will be many times more effective.

H. B. Warner, in the part of a member of a family of ministers who went through the battle with New York City, was an exceptionally fortunate selection for this character. He has the intelligence, the poise and the impressive authority to dominate situations, and he certainly seemed to be an ideal choice for this particular type.

Walter Hiers, that happy-go-lucky-looking fat boy, made an individual hit as one of Mr. Warner's chums. He registered many laughs and played naturally throughout the offering. His death scene at the finish would have been a very effective bit of pathos except for the fact that it was taken from a very bad angle, and after laughing at him through most of the film, I fear that some one is liable to see the humorous side of this fat youth stretched out full length before the camera, which was "shooting" over his feet.

Edward Earle, as the third of the chums, was acceptable, but failed to register the natural ease displayed by Mr. Warner and Mr. Hiers.

Bob McMillan, as Harvey Quinn, had a good chance to make his small part stand out, because he was given a number of effective speech titles.

Barbara Castleton, as Bertie, was quite pleasing, but it was noticeable that she and several of the girls were made up a bit too heavily, this being particularly evident because of some of the lighting being rather too contrasty.

The final scenes gave us rather a sudden twist, and, as presented, were hardly effective enough to overshadow the depressing influence of the melodramatic tragedies which had just preceded them.

The girl who was to redeem Mr. Warner seemed to be brought into the action a bit too suddenly, she having only one or two scenes before the final clutch, and I believe the average audience would feel much better about it if they had a little more opportunity to size up this sure-enough heroine.

The melodrama dealing with the arrival and wrecking of the ship which was bringing the opium that was being smuggled was right well handled, with the exception of the fact that where a storm atmosphere had been effectively developed with the interior scenes and some of the exteriors on land, the entire sequence went to pieces when we saw the water stuff which showed us a very calm, peaceful sea. To be sure, the boat in the distance seemed to be having a hard time of it, but there was anything but a wild sea running in the foreground, and, unless these scenes are eliminated or made over, this water stuff is going to snap the strength of this entire sequence and cause the audience to lose the effect of the swinging tempo which has been developed.

In the development of the story the author has taken occasion to register some emphatic protests against such well-known conditions as ticket speculators, hat-check boys, cigarettes, drug-selling reformers, etc., and where this has been properly pulled together these points will undoubtedly register very effectively throughout the country, because, while New Yorkers know about the bad spots in New York from personal contact, the folks through the country are interested either from having bumped into them once or having heard much of them.

As it stands at the present time, there was a tendency at times to explain a bit too much in some of the titles, with the result that occasionally the action was anticipated, which is always bad. This was true of an excellent horse racing scene, where we were told the name of the winner before we saw the final rush, which rather injured the effectiveness of this bit. We also had a title, "Father and Son," where there was a very dramatic scene at the finish between Mr. Earle and his father, and surely no one will need this label to make this situation clear. The title detracted from the dramatic tempo and sort of insulted the intelligence of the audience.

The incident which was built upon the newspaper reporter's refusal to write a story about the wild party his friend had attended was badly handled, because, instead of refusing to write the story, he should have said there was nothing doing. If he had admitted that there had been a party, it would have been a very simple matter for the paper to have written the story without him. By the way, the party wasn't so terribly wild after all.

In the supporting cast were Kate Lester, Albert Tavernier, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Barbara Gilroy, Sydney Vorzimer, Harry Eytinge, Marion Fouche, William Frederics, Ricca Allen, Betty Bellairs, Tom Burroughs, Jean Stuart, Maude de Vere, Jack Sherrill, Yona Landowska, Dan Jarrett, Alfred Heming, Sydney D'Albrook, Charles Halton, Arthur Lavigne, H. D. Southard, John Milton, John Macklin and O. G. Putnam.

The Box Office Angle.

If this is trimmed down to the proper footage it should register as a truly excellent and decidedly worthwhile offering. There is a lot of good meat in the production as it stands, there are many bits of human pathos and comedy, and some of the shots at conditions in New York City will delight both New Yorkers and those who've never been in New York.

Mr. Warner is a star who has done consistently well in the films, and I believe he has a following that is growing larger and larger all the time. His name should be worth considerable at the box office.

Walter Hiers has done some very good comedy characterizations in the past few months, and if you have played any of the things in which he has appeared, such as "The Conquest of Canaan" and "His Father's Son," I would call particular attention to his presence in this.

This book by George Bronson Howard was recently the cause of a big damage suit brought by a New York magistrate, and you might refer to this or not, according to your local conditions. The film production doesn't really make any particular refernce to the character of the judge which caused the suit.

Before booking this offering I'd be sure to inquire as to whether or not it has been edited, because in its present form it is certainly too long, and the excess footage detracts from the effect of the parts which have been well handled.

VERY UNCONVINCING MELLER WITH ROUTINE CONVENIENT DEVELOPMENTS

Crane Wilbur in

THE PAINTED LIE

Horsley-Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Thomas Ricketts
AUTHOR ..... Crane Wilbur
AS A WHOLE....Convenient surface melo with a little battle stuff mixed in STORY..... Old, unconvincing, obvious situations
DIRECTION.....Permitted overplaying and never made action sufficiently impressive to get under surface
PHOTOGRAPHY..Acceptable, although decidedly varied
LIGHTINGS..... Generally ordinary; too uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable; frequently too much foreground
STAR.....Accepted 'ansom 'ero type for surface melo
SUPPORT ..... Rather camera-conscious
EXTERIORS....Acceptable; not distinctive; a few classy residences used
INTERIORS....Acceptable; artist's studio rather "junky"
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERED as ordinary program stuff this may register very satisfactorily where you are catering to the class of audience which loves the good old 'ansom 'ero mellerdrammer with the brave one doing a bit of soldiering in the course of the action. They made use of considerable "weekly stuff" of soldiers marching, and the flag was brought in occasionally with the result that these scenes may register fairly well because of the present crisis.

For discriminating audiences, this will surely not please, because the plot is a very convenient surface action story, with situations which certainly do not impress and very much "actory" playing.

The main thought of the story was that a willunous artist had painted a portrait of the hero's sweetheart, at the same time trying to make love to her. When he found that his quick-action methods failed to register, he decided upon that horrible revenge which they do only in the "movies"—to paint a nude portrait using the innocent heroine's face on the figure. Since any ordinary human knows to-day that any artist could do this without having the lady whose face is used actually pose for the painting, it seems rather ridiculous to have this presented as a serious plot. Since several other authors have done this, it would seem that scenario writers, at least, feel that the public has little judgment when it comes to such things.

In this particular instance the artist took the painting to his club to show, with the result that he fought a duel with him—which is another far-fetched point. because he could have very simply put his foot through the painting and thereby stopped all arguments.

Then there was a wronged female lurking in the offing, so that she might kill the willun and afterwards conveniently take poison and faint in front of the heroine's auto, so that she could obligingly confess on her deathbed that she had posed for the painting and had also killed the willun, for which crime the hero had been arrested.

Meanwhile, hero had been ordered to the Mexican border, and they showed us a few skirmishes with some "greasers," which were fairly well done, but not particularly impressive, and, of course, the hero was the gink what led the winning charge, etc.

Mr. Wilbur is well known as a hero for this type of story, and where they like the ordinary melodramatic stuff he will undoubtedly hold his popularity,

The members of the supporting cast were all rather camera-conscious and actory. In the cast were Ida Lewis, Harrish Ingraham and Mae Gaston.

The titles were quite melodramatic and quite in keeping with the general character of the plot development.

Upon several occasions our hero was shown to whip five or six men at a time, which was good stuff in the old ten-twent'-thirt' days, but doesn't ring true on the screen nowadays.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd say that this is about in a class with the sort of surface melodrama which was considered as an average production two or three years ago. It lacks the human element and the convincing strength which is

(Continued on following page.)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID S IS READ NOT SKIMMED

(Continued from preceding page.)

needed to-day to register properly with the intelligent, discriminating audiences. The plot was painfully convenient in all its developments, and never at any time did it really convince.

I am of the opinion that it depends entirely upon whether or not your patrons accept this sort of melodrama as to whether you will be justified in showing this even for one day.

The weekly stuff with the soldiers and the fact that the hero is shown as a fighter on the Mexican border is hardly big enough war stuff to be worth playing up particularly. If we had gone to war with Mexico this might have registered pretty well, but now that we have a much more serious war on our hands, I fear that it will seem just "movie stuff."

I would not talk much about the plot, if you do play this, because "The Painted Lie" thing has been done several times, and surely it isn't a very convincing idea, figured from any angle.

HELP A FRIEND—WRITE HIM ABOUT "WID'S."

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. NEW YORK, APRIL 19, 1917. NO. 16 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

The percentage reports have been omitted this week in order to make room for a few additional reviews. The percentages will be issued in a special folder, which will be mailed to you.

OVERPLAYING, BAD GROUPING AND NEED OF EDITING MAR THIS TECHNICALLY, BUT WILL BE ACCEPTED AS GOOD AND SHOULD GET MONEY

Derwent Hall Caine in

THE DEEMSTER

Arrow Film—State Rights

DIRECTOR	Howell Hansel
AUTHOR	Hall Caine
SCENARIO ADAPTATION BY	Charles A. Taylor and E. A. Bingham
CAMERAMAN	Henry Cronjager
AS A WHOLE	Big story in rather good atmosphere, but overplaying, bad grouping, unnecessary scenes, and absence of human, convincing power caused it to slump and drag
STORY	Offers many big situations, but frequently misses fire as presented
DIRECTION	Gave rather good atmosphere, although interiors lacked distinctive class, but grouped "extras" badly and permitted awful overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied decidedly; some fine and some poor
LIGHTINGS	A few quite distinctive; many good; some too uniform and others too contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Only fair; same camera angle used too much with too many long scenes which marred tempo
STAR	Rather impressive at times, but frequently overplayed and often very camera-conscious and actory
SUPPORT	Generally painfully actory, with no distinctive, impressive characterizations that stood out
EXTERIORS	Generally very good; some excellent, but some ordinary
INTERIORS	A few good, but generally had stagey, setty appearance; were not intelligently lighted
DETAIL	Generally good, but had several slips
TIME	Two hours and five minutes; was too

BECAUSE Hall Caine wrote this story and because his son appeared in it this may get some money, and should if intelligently handled, despite the fact that it has many, many faults, figured from a technical angle.

Among the most important of these were the poor handling of the "extra" groupings, the permitting of serious overplaying, and the "shooting" of many tiresome, long scenes from the same camera angle. In addition to this, the thought will come to many that this production is entirely overburdened with misery and trouble without any comedy relief to speak of, and although this has been one of Hall Caine's most successful novels the fact remains that there is a difference between reading the author's beautiful language, which permits the reader to give full sway to emotions, and seeing these situations enacted by players who frequently miss fire.

The producer has missed the big human elements, because the cast is lacking in players who are capable of dominating situations with their personalities. The artificial groupings of the crowds kept the important scenes from convincing and the awful acting of Alfred Froom as the Deemster killed many a possible opportunity.

The author's son easily showed to better advantage than any other member of the cast. At times he made his scene suite impressive. One of the worst parts of his characterization came when we saw him wearing a coat of furs after having been living as a hermit on the sea coast for seven years, and his lily-white shoulders which were exposed might have been those of a woman kept in a hothouse boudoir. You may say that this is a minor thought, but certainly it will register, whether consciously or sub-consciously, with anyone in any audience.

As this offering stands at present, by which I mean as it was shown for the first night at the Broadway Theatre, it is about two reels too long. Certainly it sags badly at times and frequently becomes very draggy and tiresome. Had it been intelligently edited, even with the faults and direction as they stand, it would have been wonderfully improved, and the general impression would have been much more favorable.

In almost every sequence there were scenes which were unnecessary,—scenes which didn't advance the story in the least and scenes which ran for three and four times the necessary footage to properly register the points desired.

I can't undertake to give you the story of this offering, but can only suggest the main thought.

It deals with characters on the Isle of Man, with the son of the Bishop fighting with the son of the Deemster, through circumstances having to do with a love affair, until the Deemster's son was accidentally killed by a fall from a cliff.

Frightened by the tragedy, the boy, with the assistance of his fisherman friends, buried the body of the Deemster's son at sea. Later the body was washed ashore, and at the famous Tynwald Hill Court the Bishop's son was tried for the murder. When the Deemster was about to pronounce sentence, the Bishop climbed to the mound and exercised his privilege of pronouncing judgment.

He condemned his son to live alone, without assistance from anyone, and thus forced the boy into a hermit's life for seven years, until the Islanders were stricken with a plague and the hermit rescued a dying monk who had come to bring the antidote from Ireland that would cure those who partook of it.

The accursed hermit took from the dying monk the precious cure and gave assistance to those who were dying. Many were cured, and finally he reached the home of the Deemster, whose son had died accidentally, just as the last of the antidote rested in the bottom of the flask. The hermit had also been stricken with the plague, and now he found that the Deemster had lied, and had thus caused the fight which resulted in his son's death.

There was a short struggle as the hermit decided whether he should take the remaining cure or give it to the dying Deemster, but he made the sacrifice and handed the antidote to the man who had ruined his life.

The story finished with the death of the Bishop's son in his hermit's cabin, in the arms of the Deemster's daughter, who had followed him there.

It is easy to see that there is much misery, death and trouble in this. As one woman said on the way out: "I think you need Charlie Chaplin after this to drive away the glooms."

Marian Swayne, as the Deemster's daughter, who was the central figure in the love interest, was fairly good at times, but frequently "acted" too much and generally she was poorly lighted. Her eyes didn't register well in the long shots and her close-ups varied decidedly.

Sydney Bracey, as the Bishop, gave the nearest approach to a good characterization, but at times he slipped into the habit of "acting."

K. Barnes Clarendon, as the Deemster's son, was amateurish.

The other characters were rather camera-conscious most of the time.

In every scene in which many "extras" appeared, with the possible exception of the groupings of fishermen on the pier, the director had them so plainly grouped for the scene that the naturalness of the action was killed.

When we saw the hundreds of people approaching for the famous Tynwald Hill Court gathering, it looked like we were going to get something. They had people all over the landscape almost as far as you could see. When the "extras" were all gathered before the Deemster's mound, however, the producer made an awful "bull." Instead of bringing all the people he had down near the mound, as would have been natural, and then using such camera angles as to give the proper suggestion of a crowd, he put a hundred or more "extras" about a hundred yards back of the mound, spotted all over the landscape in a position which they certainly would not have taken in order to hear or see the proceedings. These "extras" standing thus in back of the dramatic scenes which were enacted by the Deemster, the Bishop and Mr. Caine, killed the possible effectiveness of all this action.

Considered generally, the costuming and detail was good enough to preserve the atmosphere very nicely, but there were a few slips. One of the most noticeable of these was where Mr. Caine had gone out on his boat to bury the body of his chum and had left his hat at his hut. The Deemster came to the hut and was shown to lift the hat with his stick. On the boat Mr. Caine didn't have his hat. Then, when the boat landed, he left wearing the hat, or toboggan, only to appear in the next scene without it, as he was kneeling on the beach, and then when he arrived at the Deemster's home he was wearing it again. It was only a detail, but the wise fans will catch it.

The two scenes taken in a tank, showing fishes darting about to register the fact that the body had reached the bottom and afterwards the fact that it had slipped loose from the stone, were certainly unnecessary and decidedly bad. They should come out immediately.

Some scenes taken at night, which showed a burning boat, were quite effective and rather well handled. There were several double exposures which were decidedly good.

Despite all of the technical flaws listed above, if this film were intelligently edited and decidedly reduced in footage, it would register with the average audience as quite an interesting adaptation of a big, successful novel. It is to be hoped that the editing is done immediately. Sixty-five hundred to seven thousand feet would be plenty as the offering has been produced.

Others in the cast were Alexander Hall, James Levering, Ben Lodge, Thos. O'Malley, Lee Post, Wm. V. Miller and Freeman Barnes.

The Box Office Angle.

While I believe that this is too long to run through without being tiresome as it stands at present, because even with an average audience the technical flaws will tend to keep many of the situations from impressing forcibly, still I think that if this is intelligently edited, it is a production which will get money because of the prestige of Hall Caine and the fact that his son is the star, and in shorter footage it would undoubtedly register very satisfactorily with the average fan and probably please very much the Hall Caine enthusiast, and you must remember that there are probably hundreds of thousands of them in this country.

Even if your fans have not read Hall Caine's works, they know whom he is and what he has written, and consequently have the proper respect for an adaptation of one of his successful novels. Surely the fact that his son appears in the offering will give it an added interest to those who like his works, and the curiosity seekers would probably be willing to pay to see the author's son as an actor, even though they had never read any of the father's novels.

In advertising this I would devote all of my attention to the two points of father and son. It will be unnecessary for you to make any extravagant promises regarding the technical qualities of the offering, and then you will have a proper alibi for the wise ones who can pick the flaws, and those who are easy-going will be sufficiently impressed that they will make no complaint whatever if you have not promised them too much.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General
of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios
and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York City

VERY ORDINARY MELO WITH TRICK MYSTERY ON END THAT MISSES FIRE

Alma Hanlon and Edward Ellis in

THE GREAT BRADLEY MYSTERY

Apollo—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR	Edward Ellis
CAMERAMAN	George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary action melo that misses fire
STORY	Four reels of in and out of office, with trick "mystery" that doesn't impress on finish
DIRECTION	Registered ordinary atmosphere and camera-conscious, unconvincing action
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Ordinary; didn't impress
SUPPORT	Ordinary; "acted" a bit
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Most of them in three office sets
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 jarts)

THIS thing will never impress anybody, principally because they call it "The Great Bradley Mystery" and the audience is going to have a good, long wonder trying to figure where the "Great" comes in. They take about four reels planting reasons for different characters wanting to kill the guy whom we knew is to be killed sooner or later, and then we have about one reel of "mystery" over his death, this "mystery" lasting about one-half day before it is cleared up. Why anyone should call that "The Great Bradley Mystery" is more than I can figure.

This "mystery" situation was based upon the statement of one of the cops who discovered the body that the doors had been locked, with the keys left on the inside of the door, so that the man must have committed suicide. The wise ones will immediately suspect the murderer of having gone through the transom, which was open, but when we finally saw the explanation, it appeared that there were no keys in the door at all, but only that the dead man's keys were found on the desk. That being the case, anyone with a key to the door might have locked it from the outside and gone away.

The inference from the cop's statement at first was, that the keys were found on the inside of the door, which would have made it impossible for anyone to have locked the door from the outside. When we saw the escape enacted, we found the hero, who had been with the "willun" when he was accidentally shot in a struggle, going to considerable trouble to lock the doors and then trolley the dead man's keys to the deck by means of a string running from the transom to the desk, which he afterwards pulled out and took away with him. Since he could have climbed out of this transom, it would have been a much better plot to have had him leave the key in the door and then climb through the transom.

However, as I say, there was entirely too much preparation for this death and not enough mystery about it when it finally arrived to make it really impress.

Most of this was played in the office of the "willun," and on the door leading to one of the two rooms which he occupied, was the word "Private." I'd say that the mystery of this would be—Why should everyone seem to pick out this private entrance as the best way to reach the "willun?" Most of the characters wandered in through that door at some time during the production. In fact, a good part of the picture was devoted to people walking in and out of scenes that didn't mean anything in particular.

There were scads of superflous continuity, this being sprinkled throughout the production in spots that made the offering drag decidedly.

For the first two or three reels Alma Hanlon spent most of her time in a riding habit. It was rather a good-looking outfit, but why wear it all the time—particularly while calling on her friend at his office?

When the dead man was found, a guy supposed to be a newspaper reporter pulled a "beaut"! He looked around very actively and then headed for a telephone booth to call up the wife, who was Miss Hanlon, to whom he said: "Your husband has just committed suicide! Do you know why?" Many in the audience will probably think that the proper answer to this would be: "No—why?" After this brilliant (?) stunt the reporter again proceeded to busy himself about the scene of the crime—as no reporter ever did—and then headed to the telephone with another message to the wife. What I'd like to know is—What paper was this guy working for, or was he simply trying to deliver his news by telephone to the one most concerned, considering it a special service department?

The wife of the janitor was discovered in a hospital, in a private ward such as no wife of a janitor could get into unless some guy paid the bill, and there was no indication of anyone having paid the bill in this case. Many other bad spots marred the effectiveness of this offering.

None of the members of the cast gave a performance that could be called impressive or distinctive, and, for the most part, it was just ordinary "movie meller."

In the cast were Andy Clarke, Florence Short and Bigelow Cooper.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't figure that this will really register as worth while with an audience, because it runs along too far without getting anywhere. Miss Hanlon has been in a number of fairly big films and her name may be worth a little at the ticket window, but she has also been in some poor ones, so that I must leave it to you as to what her box office value in your community is.

"The Great Bradley Mystery," as a name, sounds very promising, but I fear that the offering will be rather disappointing to those who expect a genuine mystery story, because they wait too long before they get to the mystery trick, and then the interest is held only for about half a reel, with the explanation failing to make any startling impression.

As a moderate-priced program offering, this may prove acceptable. It's certainly nothing more than that, and many will be sadly disappointed if you present it as a real feature.

I, personally, am not in favor of this sort of mediocre stuff, because, while it may get by with half of your fans, there is an excellent chance that it will antagonize the more intelligent, and, for the future of the game, we should keep in mind the more intelligent.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO MAY ALLISON
Heavies
YORKE METRO

FAIRLY INTERESTING SACRIFICING SISTER STUFF THAT NEVER IMPRESSES

Blanche Sweet in

THE TIDES OF BARNEGAT

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHOR	F. Hopkinson Smith
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
SCENARIO	Eve Unsell
AS A WHOLE.	Holds fairly well; has some good moments
STORY	Rather obvious and a bit jumpy, but will be accepted
DIRECTION	Gave some beautiful bits and handled individual scenes quite well
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some exceptionally artistic; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Appealing personality; played humanly
SUPPORT	Good, although at times camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Coast line stuff beautiful; generally very good
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Good, although continuity jumpy
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 jarts)

ALTHOUGH this will be accepted as an average offering, no one will ever enthuse over it, because it is just pictures, with situations which are very well known and players who frequently seemed to realize that they were having their pictures taken.

The story made a number of jumps which jarred a bit, and still there was a lot of superfluous continuity which was unnecessary. The worst break in the plot was the sending of some characters to Paris. If the atmosphere was supposed to be English, it certainly missed, because of the railway trains and other American things which were shown, and it seemed rather a jar to see this little school teacher nonchalantly trot off to Paris for a little vacation to be taken on her savings.

The plot deals with the self-sacrificing school teacher who takes charge of the child born to her pretty but weak sister after the man who was to have married her was lost at sea. The weak sister married without telling her husband about her child, and the little school teacher, to keep the secret, allowed it to be thought in the village that the child was her own.

Of course, we knew that sooner or later it would get straightened out, and after they had five reels of film they had to finally show us the scene where the father of the boy who had been drowned proclaimed himself the grandfather of the child and denounced the weak sister, who was visiting in the village with her husband, as the mother.

This made it possible for the hero, who had been lurking in the offing to do a clutch with Miss Sweet, who was playing the school teacher.

All of these situations are very, very familiar to film fans, and consequently they are going to have this story guessed before it gets well started, which is a decided disadvantage.

Producer Neilan has given us some beautiful bits of sea coast stuff, and has managed to keep the action interesting enough to hold the attention of the average non-critical patron.

As a contrast to the sweet, appealing personality of Blanche Sweet, we found Norma Nichols as the sister willing to lie to marry the man she wanted, and Miss Nichols, although she didn't play with the ease which marked Miss Sweet's work, registered very well, so far as physical beauty was concerned, she taking occasion to wear a decidedly L. and B. H. gown in one scene.

Elliott Dexter as the hero who eventually married Miss Sweet had little to do but stall around and wait for the finish.

Little Billy Jacobs was a very cute kid and he registered several scenes that will help make the production appeal.

Others in the cast were Tom Forman, Harrison Ford, Lillian Leighton and Walter Rogers.

The Box Office Angle.

You can probably get by satisfactorily with this, figuring it as an ordinary program release, but I surely would not promise anything much as to the offering being distinctive, impressive, human or anything that sounds very important. The average film fan will accept it as it comes and probably will not kick very much, because it holds fairly well, but no one will ever grow very enthusiastic over it.

The name of F. Hopkinson Smith may be worth something at the ticket window, although I cannot feel that it will be worth very much. Maybe those who do know the author will feel that the picture has to be good because it is an adaptation of one of his novels.

I'd suggest that you take it pretty easy and I wouldn't figure that this is good for more than one day. The "Who is the child's father?" situation affords an opportunity for some who like to complain about that sort of a story to say that it isn't a children's picture, but there's no chance for anyone to register much opposition to this because of the morals of the plot.

MANY CLOSEUPS OF JUST KIDS, WITH A FEW INSTRUCTIVE SCENES

BIRTH

Eugenic Film—State Rights

AS A WHOLE	Mostly picture of kids
STORY	There is none
DIRECTION	No attempt at it
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STARS	A few babies
SUPPORT	A lot of kids
EXTERIORS	Three or four views of cows in pasture
INTERIORS	Mostly scenes in hospital and nurseries
DETAIL	Too much baby stuff to be entertaining all the way
TIME	Fifty minutes (4 parts)

THIS is presented as an educational, supposed to show mothers how to take care of their children. It does register a number of the methods used in the better hospitals, and, for a mother who has never had any advice or suggestion as to how to care for a youngster, this should prove quite interesting.

To those curiosity seekers who figure that they're going to see something they oughtn't to, there will be a sad disappointment in store. The picture is, for the most part, made up of close-ups of babies and children ranging from one to six and seven years of age. There is so much kid stuff, in fact, that it becomes rather tiresome figured as entertainment.

No attempt has been made to make a story of this, but the various scenes of the kids are tied together by the use of a nurse writing a letter to her mother. All of the sub-titles are supposed to be her letter home, with each title telling about some part of the hospital, which is then shown on the screen.

Of course, this cannot be taken seriously, because she would've been "some" letter-writer to have written all the stuff in this. However, it serves the purpose of the makers of the film.

At the very end we see a few scenes of a baby just born, with the doctors resorting to heroic measures to keep the child alive. This is the only thing in the film to justify the title "Birth," but it serves the purpose. Some may feel that this is something which should not go on the screen, but others may be very much interested in it. The sub-titles state that the child was dead when born, but was brought to life by the methods of the surgeon.

The Box Office Angle.

The plan for handling this film is to show it to women only, and, presented in that way, it may get some money because of the natural curiosity of people for such subjects.

If you play it, however, I'd make it very clear that it is an educational subject without any story, designed to show the methods used in some of our hospitals in caring for babies and children up to the nursery age.

While the parents who go to see this offering may not learn anything of much importance, they will probably think it is rather interesting, and if you have labeled it plainly as an educational, I doubt very much if there will be any kick.

Be careful about wording your advertising. Don't promise that it teaches too much, because it doesn't teach what many would like to know, in a manner that they can readily grasp.

GOOD HUMAN TOUCHES MAKE IT ENTERTAINING, NOT BIG

Bessie Love and the Fine Arts Kiddies in

CHEERFUL GIVERS

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Paul Powell
AUTHOR	Mary H. O'Connor
CAMERAMAN	John W. Leezer
AS A WHOLE	Human bits and kid stuff make it entertaining
STORY	Moves smoothly and holds interest
DIRECTION	Kept human and cute stuff prominent; gave satisfactory atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Not distinctive, but good
CAMERA WORK	Good straight stuff
STARS	Played humanly and will appeal
SUPPORT	Very good types
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Some splendid human bits
TIME	Fifty-four minutes (5 parts)

THE fact that this presents Bessie Love and the Triangle kiddies should immediately give anyone an idea as to the sort of offering it is.

The story concerns a well-meaning parson, who thought the "Lord will provide," and Miss Love as his daughter, who had to provide when the Lord didn't, with the kiddies as charges from a bankrupt orphanage, who were turned over to the parson to be taken care of after the congregation of hypocrites had selected the more useful ones to do their house work.

Of course, there is the usual wealthy woman who is sort of a "hard-boiled egg," and her inventive son, with the miserly mother sending for the oldest boy from the orphanage to do her house work. Since there was no old boy left, Bessie decided to take the job herself because it offered the wonderful sum of $150 a year, which of course sounded to the feminine mind like much more than three dollars a week.

It was soon discovered that Bessie was not a boy, but she could make soup out of scraped potato peelings and grated pea shells, so she was kept on the job.

The kids did a pilgrimage to see her, and they arrived just in time to be in on the final blow-up.

Son, having been refused money for his inventions, was going to leave home, and the serpent-like secetary had tempted him to extract mother's money from the safe to use for his inventions. The kids had come downstairs to get something to eat and were hidden in various corners of the room, when the thin, weasel-like secretary lady opened the safe. Then Bessie discovered the situation, extracted the coin and dropped it back of the sofa, hitting one of the kiddies on the head.

Son then came along and found the money already gone, and he did an escape through the window and was arrested by a cop who was obligingly bringing the old parson to the house to recover the orphans.

When cop brought son before mother, Bessie said he hadn't stolen the money because she'd put it back of the sofa, but when they looked back of the sofa it wasn't there. Then the kids came in with the wad of bills, told of seeing the secretary serpent at the safe and mother was again strong for son, with Bessie and the kids also standing in pretty solid.

For a final bit of melo the secretary tried to shoot the miserly mother, but Bessie stopped her, and then everybody was happy.

There were some good titles in this production, and it affords plenty of opportunity for registering little human touches.

Winifred Westover, as the three-dollar-a-week hired girl, who was "some" classy dresser, made the little bit stand out, and Pauline Stark registered very satisfactorily in a small part.

Josephine Crowell was the hard-boiled-egg mother, and Spottiswoode Aitken was the "Lord will provide" parson. Both were very good.

Kenneth Harlan was a pleasing hero, and Bessie Buskirk, as the secretary serpent, gave quite a good characterization.

The kiddies were cute, as they always are.

Others in the cast were William H. Brown and Loyola O'Connor.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that you can figure this as a very satisfactory bit of entertainment, particularly in communities where they like the little human things with kid stuff and appeailng bits of pathetic contrast presented to offset the comedy.

This never registers very effectively as drama, because it is more or less artificial when analyzed as something that might really happen, but it is entertaining and some of the human bits are sufficiently pleasing to make it possible for you to rest quite sure that it will be generally liked.

In billing this I would mention particularly the presence of the kiddies as well as the presence of Miss Love. You might say:

"Do you think the Lord will provide? If so, you must see 'Cheerful Givers.'"

You might also mention that the same star, author and director figured in "Hell-to-Pay Austin."

BILL HART WITH SOME NEW STUNTS—A SURE CLEAN UP

William S. Hart in

THE DESERT MAN

Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR	William S. Hart
AUTHOR	Martin Brown
SCENARIO BY	Lambert Hillyer
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Joe August
AS A WHOLE	Sure-fire winner; has "pep" and new stunts
STORY	Typical Bill Hart stuff, but holds nicely
DIRECTION	Gave splendid atmosphere and made action register
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Very good; a few effects
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Great
SUPPORT	Some fine types
EXTERIORS	A few fine shots; generally excellent atmosphere
INTERIORS	Fitted rough mining town
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

JUST about the time you get it doped out that there is absolutely no other way for Bill Hart to bust into a dance hall and make a hundred men stand around while he pulls the rescue, Bill frames up something new and puts it over in such a manner as to make you like it. He can do this principally because he knows how to make such things register as convincing rather than as theatric clap-trap.

We have come to expect something of a similarity in the stories provided for our big, thinking Western fighter, but no one seems to complain as long as Bill is given a chance to do a few new stunts with just a certain amount of new twists in the plot development.

In this Bill Hart wanders from the desert into a busted mining town and finds a roughneck barber bullying the camp. He runs this guy out, which makes it necessary for him to take charge of the barber's little boy, who was left behind, and then we find Bill "falling hard" for Margery Wilson, whose father was dying. A city doctor had refused to come, and so Bill went after him.

There was a very startling bit where the doctor's horse ran away and headed straight for a precipice, with Bill lassoing the gentleman just before his horse plunged over the cliff. The horse went tumbling down a great distance, but was seen to roll over and land in good condition at the bottom. Of course, we in the trade who know of the technical end of this game, realize some of the things that were done to help make this effective, but, believe me, it's going to register as a genuine thrill with the average audience. It has been very well handled.

The doctor, after being unsuccessful in saving Miss Wilson's father, made love to the girl and took her away. He was a married man, however, and when she discovered this she faced the world broken in spirit, and eventually became a dance hall singer in the vice settlement near her old home, which was now a booming town because of Bill Hart having struck it rich.

The guy what was running the dance hall didn't like Bill because Bill had told him that he couldn't come nearer than a mile with his "Hell Hole," and so Bill's adopted boy was stolen to lure the big feller to the dance hall in order that he might be shot up.

Bill came, all right, in the most approved Hart fashion, and then when he got there he looked over the situation and doped out a new way of "bustin' in." This was a bit complicated, so I won't attempt to describe it, but he puts it over beautifully and finishes up by riding away with his boy, only to find when he reaches his home that the girl of his dreams had heard of his coming and had run away from the dance hall, where she had just arrived to go to work to warn him. Of course, they had a grand time after that.

There was not a weak spot in the entire cast, and all of the types were very good. In support were Buster Irving, Henry Behar, Jack Livingston, Milton Ross, Walt Whitman, and Josephine Headley.

The Box Office Angle.

All I need to tell you about this is that it has "pep," new stunts and action that "gets you." Go to it and promise them a real bit of entertainment, and I feel pretty sure that anyone will like it, with the Bill Hart fans ready to cheer.

If you want to start an argument, you might say: "If some roughnecks had stolen your boy and were lined up fifty strong in a dance hall, ready to shoot you when you stuck your head in, how would you 'bust in'? Bill Hart shows a new way in 'The Desert Man.'"

FOREIGN MELO OVERPLAYED AND UNIMPRESSIVE—FUNNY AT TIMES

THE FATED HOUR

Cines Production—State Rights

AS A WHOLE	Badly overplayed, actory melo in gaudy sets becomes very funny at times
STORY	Vampire-avenging-dead-sister stuff, with tragic finish
DIRECTION	Decidedly foreign; permitted much overplaying, with tiresome long scenes and many gestures
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to poor
LIGHTINGS	A few fine; generally very ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Decidedly too many scenes held too long from same angle
STAR	Some wriggler
SUPPORT	Objectionably foreign
EXTERIORS	A few very gaudy; some interesting
INTERIORS	Too gaudy and garish; big theatre sets fairly impressive
DETAIL	Too much of it
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

I CAN'T see this from any angle except that you might play it as a comedy. The antics of some of the foreign actors would seem quite funny to your fans.

The story is one of those vampire-trying-to-avenge-wronged-sister-with-the-final-result-that-she-forced-the-death-of-the-man-she-really-loved plots, and certainly this is nothing new to any American audience. "The poipers" also figured in part of the action, but by the time they get into the running your audience will not care what is happening except that they might like to watch the "vamp" at her wiggling and squirming. Believe me—she was "some" wiggler!

The actors were all very foreign in their interpretations, and the sets lacked the quiet distinction which marks our better American productions. There was too much gilt furniture and gaudy trimmings.

They had a couple of big theatre sets which were rather good, but such things don't make sufficient impression in these days to justify your playing a foreign film that has no other redeeming qualities.

In the final big theatre set they pulled a fire scene with a panic, which is supposed to be "big stuff." It wasn't made sufficiently impressive to thrill, and a lot of the exterior fire stuff which was cut in, looked very much like ordinary "weekly" junk. One flash of fire engines looked very, very American to me.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't figure that this is a good bet, because it is so painfully foreign that it never, for a moment, has a chance to register as convincing or human drama. There is nothing that might really interest except the wiggles of the "wamp," and the big fire scene, and neither of these elements has sufficient merit to justify your forcing an audience to sit through the remainder of the offering.

A few years ago this foreign stuff was all right, because our American companies hadn't reached the point where they knew how to make really human offerings. Today this would register as comedy rather than as a dramatic tragedy.

I would forget it!

CLASSY VAMP IN DISTINCTIVE ATMOSPHERE WITH IDEA THAT MISSES FIRE

Louise Glaum in

SWEETHEART OF THE DOOMED

Triangle—Kay Bee

DIRECTOR	Reginald Barker
AUTHOR	Jerome K. Wilson
SCENARIO BY	Monte M. Katterjohn
CAMERAMAN	Robert Newhard
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE	"Vamp" who reformed, in classy interiors and good war atmosphere
STORY	Rather interesting, but never gripping
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere and some good action, but failed to make it humanly convincing
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some decidedly distinctive and quite artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Sure-enough classy "vamp"
SUPPORT	Good, but never stood out particularly
EXTERIORS	Generally distinctive; some excellent war atmosphere
INTERIORS	Classy; well lighted
DETAIL	Generally very good, except healthy "dying" hero
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

THIS has been presented in a classy atmosphere of interiors for the opening scenes and some very well handled battle stuff for the latter part of the film, but I can't feel that any one will ever enthuse over it, for the very simple reason that the plot idea is one which fails to get under your shirt and convince.

There has been some little discussion between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Katterjohn as to who was responsible for this plot, Mr. Wilson claiming that he is the author and Mr. Katterjohn insisting that he is responsible for most of it. It would seem that this has been settled by calling Mr. Wilson the author and Mr. Katterjohn the scenarioist. Personally, I can't see the reason for all of this hullabaloo.

The plot is one of those things that a writer might bump into with an exclamation of—"By heck! There's a peach of an idea!" And then he goes ahead grinding it out and keeps on admiring it as an "idea" without ever stopping to get off to one side and dope out how much interest it holds for the average audience.

The idea was simply this: A famous "vamp," after playing with several generals who were supposed to be woman-proof, finally fell in love with a Secret Service man of the conventional hero type. After telling the general who had been keeping her whom she really was, she was told that her hero had been killed in battle.

Then she wanted to do something for her country, and the general, finding her unresponsive to his suggestion that she come back to him, told her that she should go out and make love to all the men who were going to die, thus becoming "The Sweetheart of the Doomed."

Knowing something of the inner workings of most scenario writers' minds, I can understand how this would be considered a "great idea," but I cannot feel that the average human will think very much of it.

The thought was that this female was to chase around from one cot to another and be wife, sister or sweetheart to any guy that was dying, just to make him feel better.

They devoted quite a lot of footage to this love mission stuff, and then they brought in the hero—which we knew was coming all the time—and she had to weep over him a bit, with the doctor saying that he couldn't be saved, and then, all of a sudden, he commenced to wiggle round a bit, and there he was gettin' back his health and gon'er live.

The funniest part of this scene was that the guy never did look very ill. Propped up in bed there, he was about as healthy a lookin' hero as any one could ask for, so your audience won't be surprised at all when the prayers of the reformed "vamp" restore him to her once more.

Producer Reginald Barker is entitled to considerable credit for making this classy. The early scenes were quite distinctive as to the sets and lightings, and the battle scenes were all handled in a manner to make them truly impressive. Because of this and the fact that Miss Glaum has rather an impressive personality when doing classy "vamp" stuff this will prove at least interesting. I'd hardly figure it more than that.

At times, in the development of the plot, there is a suggestion of two previous Triangle subjects—"Somewhere in France" and "Shell '43'!" I don't mean to say that scenes from these previous releases have been used, but the development of the story suggests similar thoughts.

While the supporting cast was quite satisfactory, no individual player made such a distinctive impression as to stand out.

In the supporting cast were Charles Gunn, Roy Laidlaw and Thomas Guise.

The Box Office Angle.

Figured as a program production, I believe you can consider this quite acceptable because of the classy atmosphere. It is not exceptional, but it is better than the average run.

If Miss Glaum has a large following in your community they may like this, even though the plot idea does fail to make any very favorable impression.

I'd say that you can safely use it for one night, but I fear that no one will recommend it to their friends, and for that reason it isn't a very safe bet to play for several days.

In billing this I would call attention to some of Miss Glaum's previous productions, such as "The Wolf Woman," "Somewhere in France," etc., which will help place her clearly in the minds of your fans.

ORDINARY SURFACE ACTION MELO OF TWO STORIES TIED TOGETHER

Lois Meredith in

IN THE HANDS OF THE LAW

Balboa—B. S. Moss—State Rights

DIRECTOR	Henry King
AUTHOR	William O'Hurst
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary surface-action melo that never impressed
STORY	Convenient and obliging; looked like King three reeler with new stuff of star added
DIRECTION	Acceptable, but rather ordinary
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from fine to poor
LIGHTINGS	Some very good; some very poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied; too much from same angle
STAR	Very camera-conscious and "acted" too much
SUPPORT	Ordinary and quite camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	A few very good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Some very good; generally ordinary
DETAIL	Quite obliging; many very explanatory titles; much superfluous continuity
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY this is an ordinary surface-action meller, and it has very much the appearance of being a three-reel story with Henry King as the central figure to which has been added a couple of reels in which Lois Meredith figures, so as to make the entire offering a five-reel feature in which the star's name may be used for advertising purposes. This impression registered because the story started with a very ordinary misunderstood situation caused by borrowed clothes, in which Miss Meredith figured, and then we had much footage in which an old man told her that she should not judge by circumstantial evidence because of what had happened in the years gone by when he misjudged his son.

After the old man had started to tell this story we had much footage of the action in which Henry King figured, with an occasional flash of Miss Meredith and Miss Meredith's friend listening to the old man tell his story.

There were many very long titles, some of which were entirely unnecessary and most of which were certainly too explanatory. They were "A. B. C." stuff, generally explaining just what was to happen in the scenes which followed. This also tended to give the impression that the Henry King scenes had been made and then the titles written in order to tie the Meredith stuff to that in which Mr. King appeared.

There was nothing that could be called good acting in this, since all of the characters were rather camera-conscious and never at any time did they seem human.

The story was rather an ordinary melodrama, with nothing that could be considered novel, and the action was hardly interesting, because there were too many unnecessary scenes.

In telling the story to Miss Meredith, the old man said that the detectives had followed his boy and told him about everything that had happened, and that's why he was able to tell the story. Well—believe me—those ginks must've been "some" defectives to have been close enough to have learned about all the things which the old man told!

The Box Office Angle.

I wouldn't figure this worth-while, since it will hardly leave a favorable impression with any audience, and certainly it isn't a human or entertaining offering.

I do not believe that Miss Meredith has ever been able to acquire a large following among film fans, since she hasn't had many successful productions, and so it is quite a question as to her value at your box office. Even figuring that she will pull you business, I question the advisability of playing this, because there's too much overacting and the plots are rather too convenient and too noticeably divided one from the other, and, because of the handling of the offering, it fails to register as impressive or really worth while.

Considered as a whole, I'd say that this is hardly up to the average program standard, and we all know that that average is low enough today!

ROUTINE LUMBER CAMP MELO HELPED BY PERSONALITIES

Mabel Taliaferro in

A MAGDALEN OF THE HILLS

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	John W. Noble
AUTHOR	Harry Chandlee
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	Herbert O. Carleton
AS A WHOLE	Just fairly interesting; players helped action
STORY	Mountain "meller" romance; obvious and painfully convenient
DIRECTION	Kept it moving and gave good atmosphere but couldn't offset story
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to fair
LIGHTINGS	Some rather good; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	An appealing personality
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty; generally fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Good; not very well lighted
DETAIL	Fitted atmosphere, but convenient
TIME	Sixty-seven minutes (5 parts)

THOSE who like Mabel Taliaferro and Billy Garwood—and there are many who do—will probably get sufficient enjoyment out of this to consider it acceptable, despite the fact that the story is very obvious and painfully convenient and never any too interesting. It lacks the human, convincing power to make it register as sure—enough happenings, and some of the melo which was dragged in will draw smiles rather than cause any feeling of tense excitement.

The plot is the well-known junk about trouble in the lumber lands, with a wealthy man's nephew going to straighten it out, with the result that he fell in love with the daughter of the man who hated the lumber king and eventually became the attorney for the mountaineer against his domineering lumber-owning uncle.

Most any ordinary film fan will be about two reels ahead of this at all times, and the only thing which will save it will be the fact that there is the usual thread of romance with a few pretty mountain stream exteriors to keep it interesting.

There was much melo and most of it was pretty "meller." They were shootin' around quite promiscuous like, the first mix-up being where the mountaineer's son was killed; and the second where the lumber trust owner's nephew shot the mountaineer's daughter when she came to kill him.

We then had quite a stretch of time, with the city chap making love to the ragged princess of the hills, and although the gossips around the village knew all about this guy and whom he was, they didn't tell the girl's father until after they got married—which was very obliging on their part, from the viewpoint of the author. When the gossip brought the news, father started out to "get" the city chap, and daughter warned her new husband in time for him to chase away to the city in response to a fake message stating that his uncle was ill.

It was then necessary to have nephew get run over by an automobile—which was rather poorly handled—this injury keeping him in bed until ragged-princess wife had gotten in a mix-up with foreman—who, somehow, is always a "bully" and a "willun" in these lumber camp situations—and this was followed by a scuffle wherein the foreman was accidentally shot and killed. We then had our good old-time favorite, the court-room scene, with hero recovering from his accident just in time to dramatically rush in at the last moment to make a plea for the girl, and, of course, secure an acquittal from the jury after the usual number of close-ups of judge, jury and audience wiping away a tear.

Although they both seemed to have an equal start, the head of the lumber trust was somehow in that court-room testifying long before the hero arrived. The "whyfore" of this I didn't quite get!

Whoever prepared the titles for this one went wrong on the word "Magdalen," because they spelled it "M-a-g-d-e-l-e-n-e" all the way through on the border of the titles.

Miss Taliaferro is an appealing little person, and it was really her playing and that of Mr. Garwood that made this at least acceptable. Producer Noble kept the action swinging, but the situations were so old that it was impossible to make them grip or register as human.

In the supporting cast were William Davidson, William Black, Charles Brown and Frank Montgomery.

The Box Office Angle.

As an ordinary program release, the presence of Miss Taliaferro and Mr. Garwood may get this by as acceptable. Certainly I wouldn't consider it worth more than one day, and I can't figure anyone becoming very enthusiastic over it at any time.

Melodramas that can be guessed several reels in advance have lost their appealing power for the average film fan. There is no particular advertising angle, except the presence of the "shero" and hero, and I wouldn't promise anything definite as to the merit of the offering in case you do play it.

You can, of course, use the usual "bunk" about "Story of the Lumber Lands Made in the Mountain Country," and all that sort of thing, but it hasn't enough scenic beauty to carry it on that point alone.

If you can find something that is really human, I believe I would grab it instead of this.

INTERESTING ACTION WITH NICE TWISTS BY STAR AND SETS

William Russell in HIGH PLAY

American-Mutual

DIRECTOR	Edward Sloman
AUTHOR	Julius Grinnell Furthmann
AS A WHOLE	Interesting action story rather well done
STORY	Dovetailed to provide twists, but holds right well
DIRECTION	Gave good atmosphere and kept action well in hand
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; some distinctive bits
LIGHTINGS	Generally very good; some bits excellent
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	Impressive; forceful; played humanly
SUPPORT	Good types; rather well handled
EXTERIORS	Not many, but good
INTERIORS	Excellent for Mutual
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-six minutes (6 parts)

THIS registers as one of the best Mutuals I have seen in a long time.

The story provided quite a lot of action, but it was held pretty well down to earth and was seldom overburdened with over-playing.

William Russell was the dominant figure all the way, and this big, six-foot boy has a sort of human personality that keeps his characters from appearing very "actory." He knows how to hold a scene right well, and there were many very good dramatic pauses in this.

The plot was one of those twisted stories that provided complications when needed, there being one character who was in the story only for the purpose of murdering a man in the fourth reel, so that the brother of the girl the hero loved could be accused, with the hero chasing this gink right down to the finish, when he killed himself and left a confession.

The story elements were smoothly developed, however, and the average film fan who likes an action plot will consider this quite worth while.

For some unknown reason we had some excellent sets. It is the first time in many moons that I have seen a Mutual with really intelligently laid-out interiors. They were big enough to be impressive and rather decently furnished. The lightings were also good through most of the story, some bits being very good.

The scenes having to do with a run on the hero's bank were for the most part rather well handled, although in a few flashes the mob seemed to be a bit too busy waving their arms. The situation where some gink threw a brick through the big window while the hero was calmly counting out his personal fortune to the bank examiner was rather effective.

As the girl who was trying to grab the wealthy hero for his coin, Lucille Younge was properly non-appealing.

As the beautiful, sure-enough heroine, Francelia Billington was quite pleasing.

The various characters in the supporting cast were rather good types, and handled their various parts quite satisfactorily. In the cast were Robert Klein, Clarence Burton, Ashton Dearholt, Frank Thompson and Edward Peil.

The Box Office Angle.

William Russell has been becoming more popular all through the country, despite the fact that some of his productions have not been what we would call worth while. This is proof of the fact that this young man has the right sort of personality.

I believe that this offering will help Mr. Russell decidedly, and you can safely play it most anywhere and figure that it will please much more than the average program release being dished out by some of the other companies.

Just promise them that it is an interesting story with plenty of action and a nice element of suspense, and talk particularly about that big manly hero, Bill Russell.

VERY SLENDER UNCONVINCING STORY HELPED BY STARS; HURT BY TITLES

Lillian Walker in

SALLY IN A HURRY

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR.....Wilfrid North
AUTHOR.....A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN.....Thomas F. Molloy
AS A WHOLE.....Mechanical, unconvincing "movie" with awful titles
STORY.....Never had a chance, but, if so, titles would have killed it
DIRECTION.....Gave some good individual scenes, but action as whole never really impressed
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied from fine to poor; generally acceptable
LIGHTINGS.....Some very good; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Decidedly lazy; too much from same angle
STAR.....Helped but couldn't save offering
SUPPORT.....Personalities helped, but seemed camera-conscious
EXTERIORS.....Mostly street scenes, with many people "rubbering"
INTERIORS.....Good, but same camera angle used too often
DETAIL.....Convenient; too much of it
TIME.....Sixty-seven minutes (5 parts)

THIS is one of those waitress-in-love-with-an-English-lord plots, with the roughneck lover of the waitress plotting to win back his fair friend by making the almost-lord fall for a "vamp."

The average audience will be fairly interested in how they are going to do things in this, but any child will be able to guess what is going to happen long before they get to it.

The titles, which adorned the action entirely too frequently, were terrible. Somebody was making an awful attempt to be funny, and I can't remember having recently seen any more pitiful "fishing for laughs."

Lillian Walker has a pleasing personality. That fact helps quite a lot, but, with such an unconvincing story and those awful titles, she was under a handicap which discounted anything she did.

Thomas R. Mills, as the roughneck sweetheart of Waitress Lillian, was good, but Don Cameron, as the younger son of an English lord who became the lord in the last reel, was rather camera-conscious at all times.

Eulalie Jensen is a fine looking girl, and she registered some very good moments, but it would have been impossible for anyone to have saved this story even without the awful sub-titles that were "wished" into it.

There was quite a long series of scenes between Waitress Lillian and her roughneck friend, and the vampire Eulalie and her English friend in a restaurant, and then the author, desiring to pull a little meller on the finish, obligingly summoned Waitress Lillian from out of the blue sky to wait on table at a dinner party where the Englishman and Eulalie were to be guests.

Roughneck Tommy had decided to rob this particular house with the assistance of Eulalie. He was to turn out the lights from the basement while Eulalie "copped" the necklace, but, of course, with Waitress Lillian on the job, they were unable to get away with it. Nothing remained save for the English gink to get a wire stating that his older brother was dead. It came promptly after the robbery affair, so that they could do the finish clutch.

It seems to me that this sort of thing is rather an insult to the intelligence of the average audience of film fans. Certainly the titles can be considered nothing else. They were awful!

In the supporting cast were William Shea and Mrs. West.

The Box Office Angle.

If you need something to fill in for one night, you might possibly sneak this by, but I'd certainly advise you to call it a fanciful light comedy having to do with the adventures of a waitress who fell in love with an almost-English lord. By thus suggesting an alibi for yourself, you will keep your fans from taking this too seriously.

Lillian Walker's name should be good for considerable business, and if you'll mention that Eulalie Jensen and Tommy Mills are in the supporting cast, I should think that that would help some.

However, I'd surely be careful about what I said concerning this and I'd try to plant the thought that it is a fanciful comedy romance.

RATHER ENTERTAINING LIGHT COMEDY—OVERDRAWN BUT FUNNY

George Walsh in

HIGH FINANCE

Fox Film

DIRECTOR.....Otis Turner
AUTHOR.....Larry Evans
SCENARIO BY.....F. McGrew Willis
CAMERAMAN.....Charles Kaufman
AS A WHOLE.....Overdrawn romantic comedy, but will register as entertaining
STORY.....Built for laughs
DIRECTION.....Gave good action and kept comedy moving
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; not remarkable
LIGHTINGS.....Generally good, but not distinctive
CAMERA WORK.....Good
STAR.....Busy athletic hero
SUPPORT.....Very good; gathered many laughs
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Good
DETAIL.....Provided for comedy
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

NO one will ever take this seriously, but then most of your fans will probably be glad to see something that they don't have to take too seriously, there having been a terrific bunch of melodrama foisted upon us in recent weeks.

This is very plainly meant for laughing purposes, and the situations provide many giggles and a few honest-to-goodness horse laughs. Any one should be able to get at least a couple dozen snickers out of it.

Larry Evans is credited with the story, which is based upon some old ideas, such as wealthy man's son and daughter masquerading as servants, with son doing father out of some coin by "salting" a mine and selling him the worthless stock, but the situations have been given intelligent coloring to the extent that they are frequently funny.

An extreme character called Ethelbert provided many laughs as a contrast to our muscular, athletic George Walsh, who was the rich man's son, who signed up to be Ethelbert's guide on a visit to the copper mine.

Mr. Walsh's early explanations of the many daring deeds which he had performed while guiding an English lord who never existed were also visualized, with the result that several laughs were recorded.

Willard Louis, as Mr. Walsh's valet, who afterward impersonated a mining expert in order to buy the worthless stock from father, which was afterward to be resold to him, furnished some healthy snickers by his little comedy bits.

Doris Pawn and Mr. Walsh did the romancing, and another old, familiar situation was made use of when we found these two suspecting one another of thefts which, it was afterward learned, were committed by Ethelbert, who was a sleep-walker.

Many of the situations were rather impossible, and several of the characterizations were decidedly overdrawn. Nevertheless, the average audience will have a good time with it and will possibly say to friends that it is a good film and worth seeing.

It seemed to me that George Walsh was a little too persistent in proving that he was an athlete, because he doesn't do this with the ease that "Doug" Fairbanks does, and when any one pulls this athletic stuff nowadays it registers mentally as an imitation of Mr. Fairbanks. Of course, these fellers may say that they have been athletes for a good many years, but that doesn't alter the situation any more than in the case of Charlie Chaplin and Billy Ritchie. Billy did the tramp stuff on the stage first, it may be true, but Charlie Chaplin did it first in the films, and anybody who followed him was naturally an imitator. The same holds true of the Fairbanks stuff, and when an audience is going to figure that you are imitating somebody, it is better not to do it.

In the supporting cast were Charles Clary, Herschel Mayall, Rosita Marstini and William Marr.

The Box Office Angle.

Although the comedy situations in this were sometimes so overdrawn that individual scenes suggested the Mack Sennett methods, still I believe the average audience enjoys a romantic little make-believe plot of this sort which gives them a chance to laugh at intervals, without doing any thinking.

The last time we had George Walsh and Doris Pawn together in a Fox production—at least, I think it was the last—we got a corking good little bit of entertainment in the form of a Western romantic comedy. It went over beautifully. I believe that Fox contract exhibitors will welcome this as they did that offering, because it provides a relief from the vampire and sex "mellers." Good comedies are always welcome, and when you can promise that there is an interesting story thread and a little bit of romance tied into it, I believe it is a pretty safe bet.

I would play up particularly the fact that Larry Evans wrote this, mentioning some of his big successes, such as, "Then I'll Come Back to You."

INTERESTING MYSTERY STUFF

Earle Williams in

APARTMENT 29

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Paul Scardon
AUTHOR	Edward J. Montagne
CAMERAMAN	Robert A. Stuart
AS A WHOLE	Handling and interesting suspense make this entertaining
STORY	Mystery frame-up that holds nicely
DIRECTION	Made action dovetail, kept things moving and gave good atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Some very effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Impressive hero; very good for part
SUPPORT	Excellent types; all played smoothly
EXTERIORS	Good; nothing unusual
INTERIORS	Rather good; some distinctive
DETAIL	Nicely worked out
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

WHENEVER you find a mystery story that really holds the interest and gives plenty of good action you can figure that it is a very safe bet, if the players are half-way right.

In this offering we get a nicely balanced cast in support of Earle Williams, who fits perfectly as the critic here, and the producer has kept his action swinging at the proper tempo as the sequences developed, and, even though the audience has been rather carefully apprised of the fact that this is a frame-up, many will be a bit in doubt on that point even when things happen in rather a fast and furious manner.

Certainly this is interesting, surely it has been rather well done, and, considered as a whole, I would say that most any one should enjoy it and figure it good entertainment.

WELL PLAYED AND HANDLED

The plot idea started off with the opening of a new play which a noted critic thought was rotten. Since they had a lot at stake the producer-author decided that they would try to change the critic's mind. The producer bought him a few drinks without making much of an impression. Then when the critic left the producer, things began to happen.

The question concerning the play had been that the critic insisted that such things as shown in the play couldn't happen, and that the hero under such conditions would never have done what the author's hero did.

Soon after the critic had finished this statement in his review, he found himself the central figure in a very dramatic incident, and almost before he knew it he was being accused of murder, with circumstances pointing very strongly toward his guilt.

He appealed to the author of the play, who happened to live near by, and the author introduced him to his wife, there being considerable fast action while the critic was trying to make his getaway.

A love interest developed between the critic and the wife, who was abused by her husband, the author, and finally she ran away with the critic, who was trying to escape, and the two landed in a hut in the country, where they were attacked by a couple of ruffians.

About this time officers arrived with the author-husband, and the ruffians were taken in charge, with the critic and his newly found sweetheart carried back to the city. When the critic came to from a bump on the head received from one of the rough-necks, he found that the whole thing had been a "plant" and a "frame-up." There never had been any murder, the cops were all actors, the author's wife was really his sister, and the result was that he very quickly and willingly changed his opinion regarding the play, and asked the author's "wife-sister" if she would sure enough run away with him. She did.

In the first reel they planted very carefully the fact that they might be going to frame up something on the article. Yet, the audience was never told definitely that the happenings were a frame-up, and your average fan will figure that they're all pretty real until they get to the finish. Never at any time does Producer Scardon allow his players to make a false move. When they are together without the critic being present they do things which could mean that they were acting or were sincere. This has all been nicely handled without the subterfuge used in the production of "Cheating Cheaters," where the characters in the frame-up act their parts even when they are alone.

The atmosphhere of this entire offering is good, with quite a number of excellent lightings, and I would say that you can figure that will register as very satisfactory. It will hold and enterain most any audience, with some of them thinking it's great.

In the supporting cast were Denton Vane, Billie Billings, E. Johnston, V. Stuart, Bernard Seigle, Frank Mason, Tommy Brett and Ethel Gray Terry.

The Box Office Angle.

Earle Williams is a good bet at the box office, and since you can safely promise that this is an entertaining offering full of mystery-suspense and exciting, interesting action, I believe you should do very well with it. It isn't the greatest film of recent months, but it will register in a most satisfactory manner.

If you want to use some special lines in starting an argument, you might say: "How would you act if you were accused of a murder of which you were innocent and the evidence against you looked pretty bad? See Earle Williams in 'Apartment 29.'" Or you might say: "Is it safe to say 'Such things never happen,' 'People never do things like that?' See what Earle Williams got up against after such a remark when he visited 'Apartment 29.'"

CRUDE MELO OF KIDNAPPING KID THAT NEVER HAS A CHANCE

Pauline Frederick in

SLEEPING FIRES

Famous Players—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Hugh Ford
AUTHOR	George Middleton
SCENARIO BY	Hugh Ford
CAMERAMAN	Ned Van Buren
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary movie of wronged-wife-kidnapping-kid melo
STORY	Never convinces and frequently drags; decidedly convenient
DIRECTION	Lost human note and failed to hold interest
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally acceptable; but not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary; frequently too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; lacked distinction
STAR	Badly handicapped by artificial, "meller" situations
SUPPORT	Ordinary; actory, at times
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Lacked distinctive class
DETAIL	Convenient; newspaper inserts impossible
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

YOUR intelligent fans will not care for this, because it is an ordinary obvious, convenient melodrama. The atmosphere lacks distinctive class and the story never really registers, since it isn't human, to begin with, and hasn't been registered in a manner to make it convince.

The plot concerns a wronged wife, who doesn't believe in divorce, and her attempt to keep her boy by kidnapping him.

Thomas Meighan is presented as a lawyer who is supposed to take only a professional interest in Miss Frederick, the wronged wife. Since it seemed that he spent most of his time with her and held her hand upon rather short acquaintance, the "professional interest" thing was a bit funny.

After Miss Frederick kidnapped the kid, her husband sent a "defective" to steal him back. It was rather funny to note that this "defective" was supposed to be trailing Miss Frederick for evidence and yet failed to learn that her lawyer visited her in her hotel room and also in her apartment quite frequently. Either of these points would have furnished evidence for a divorce, which he was supposed to be seeking.

However, when sent to recover the kid the "defective" nonchalantly proceeded directly to her apartment without anything to show how he found her, or any indication of there being a clue which might have led him to her home.

When Pauline went to her husband's home to demand her child, after the "defective" had stolen him from her, there was a struggle between our wronged wife and the secretary of hubby, who had become mistress of the home, which resulted in hubby being accidentally shot and killed.

We then had the good old stand-by of years ago—a courtroom scene—with every one lying to prove that Pauline had wilfully killed her husband. Of course, we knew it would finish all right, but, just to make it very convenient, the woman with whom the stolen child had been left, brought him into the courtroom at the psychological moment and made her husband, the "defective," go on the stand and tell the truth. Of course, this settled all arguments, but still it was painfully noticeable that in this big murder case where there had been much conflicting testimony this detective was not cross examined by the prosecution and neither of the attorneys made any plea to the jury.

Since Mr. Meighan was still acting as Miss Frederick's lover-lawyer, we of course got a clutch at the end.

In the supporting cast were John Sainpolis, Maury Stewart, Helen Dahl and Joe Smiley.

The Box Office Angle.

I am afraid that most any audience will get "cold" on this before it is very well under way, because it is overdrawn from the first. The action throughout fails to register humanly enough to be convincing, and, because of that fact, it will simply give the impression of ordinary "movie melo."

Even those who are partial to Miss Frederick will hardly be able to enthuse over her work here, because it isn't the sort of part she has made her greatest successes in, and there is not enough sympathy developed to get under any one's shirt.

You can possibly use this for one night as a program offering and get by with it, but certainly I wouldn't figure on it as an offering that any one is going to rave over. Most of your fans today know enough about story construction to have this analyzed before it gets well started, and the mechanical way it is conveniently developed will not make a very favorable impression.

I can't see that the name means anything much at the box office, and, personally, I'd say that this is one that you can safely dodge, providing you can grab something more human to take its place.

GUARDIAN LOVING RAGGED PRINCESS JUNK DONE IN ROUTINE FASHION

House Peters and Louise Huff in

THE LONESOME CHAP

Pallas—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Edward J. Le Saint
AUTHOR	Emma Rochelle Williams
SCENARIO BY	Harvey Gates
CAMERAMAN	Allan N. Davey
AS A WHOLE	Obvious but fairly entertaining guardian-ward romance
STORY	Intrigue action start, with obvious romance finish which occupied much footage
DIRECTION	Registered some pretty atmosphere, but slender story caused superfluous continuity
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	Some good; others ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good; not distinctive
STARS	Personalities helped some
SUPPORT	Acceptable
EXTERIORS	A few very pretty shots in mountains
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Good; too much at times
TIME	Sixty minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED as a program offering this may prove acceptable because it is one of those light romances where the hero agrees to act as ward for the ingenue when she has her dresses up to her knees, only to discover when she grows up that he is very much in love with her, while he thinks that she has "fallen" for a young man. Of course, on the finish they get together, a good-looking dog being used in this instance so that each could tell the dog of their love—and, at the same time, the audience—"shero" telling the dog and the hero at the same time, toward the finish.

This started off with a lot of action. The "willun" ran away with the fiancee of the hero, but his elopement was spoiled when he met his wife at the train. Riding back to her home, the would-be-eloping-fiancee was startled when the willun was thrown from his horse and fell over a cliff. In trying to rescue him, they were both killed. This was rather well handled.

About the same time, the hero and an old miner were trying to rescue some other men from a mine, the rescue being successful, with the old miner dying, however, so that he might leave his daughter in charge of Friend Hero.

All of this preliminary action lasted about a reel and a half, with the rest of the five reels being taken up with what every one knew was coming—that is, the development of the miners daughter and the awakening of love in the heart of the hero guy who wandered around through a couple of reels being lonesome, in order to provide the title for the story.

It seems to me that this offering is based on entirely too slender a story thread, the final reels being carried with too little incident.

House Peters was a good type for the guy who had to wander around and do the pipe-and-dog-lonesome stuff, and Louise Huff was quite satisfactory as the miner's daughter who had to grow up, but no audience is going to become very enthusiastic over this sort of thing, because there ain't nothin' to it.

The supporting cast was quite acceptable, but not unusual. In the cast were J. Parks Jones, John Burton, Senor Buzzi, Betty Johnson and Eugene Pallette.

The Box Office Angle.

You might get by with this for one night as a program release, but I can guarantee you that no one is going to do any more than say, "Yes, it was all right." It hasn't the essential elements to make your fans go out and talk about how good it was, and I certainly would not figure on it for more than one night.

If you figure on playing this, I would call attention to previous productions in which House Peters and Louise Huff have appeared in your town. You cannot very safely talk about the story, because if you do you are going to give away its ancient lineage.

You might dwell upon one point which really never has a very strong influence in the story, but may serve for advertising purposes. It can be covered by this line: "If a man had run away with your fiancee the night before you were to be married, and they were both killed accidentally—what would you do if, ten years later, his son was in love with another girl that you wanted to marry? Would you give the son a square deal? See 'The Lonesome Chap'."

SLENDER PLOT CENTERED ON RATHER UNPLEASANT CHARACTER

Kathlyn Williams and Theodore Roberts in

THE COST OF HATRED

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	George H. Melford
AUTHOR	Beulah M. Dix
CAMERAMAN	Percy Hilburn
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting, but not altogether entertaining
STORY	Rather slender; based on one situation
DIRECTION	Made central characterization so brutal offering lost human note; rather good atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	A few excellent; generally pleasing
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STARS	He, overdrawn characterization; she, pleasing
SUPPORT	Just good
EXTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Good, but too much brutality
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THERE was not much to this except the opportunity to present Theodore Roberts in the characterization of a man grown fearfully hard against the world because another man had run away with his wife. His characterization as pictured became so very brutal at times that it seemed overdrawn and rather repulsive. I would hardly say that the scenes in which he mistreated the son of the man who had loved his wife would be pleasing to the average fan, because they seemed unnecessarily brutal.

There wasn't much to the plot. It was simply the prologue registering the trouble Mr. Roberts had with his wife, which caused him to run away with their daughter, and then, after a lapse of time which presented Miss Williams as the daughter grown up, we found Tom Forman, as the son of the man, conveniently dropped off in a Mexican town near a ranch of Mr. Roberts. He was arrested, and, of course, Mr. Roberts was conveniently at hand to find him, with the result that he placed him on his farm as a servant, serving out his prison sentence in that way.

Mr. Roberts then proceeded to mistreat the boy by beating him with a whip and causing him to do distasteful work. This brutality aroused the sympathy of the daughter, who helped the young man to escape and she went away with him.

There was rather a long chase by the father, with a little gun-play on the finish, but all ended happily when cowboys who had joined in the chase with father learned the true state of affairs and took sides with the lovers.

Theodore Roberts is a capable character man and he did his best to give this offering strength by developing the only angle that seemed open to development, but I fear me that there was a bit too much stress laid upon this one point. The first fault was in picking this for a five-reel feature, because it is hardly what might be called entertainment and has no other justification. The one thought which comes out of it is that, after a display of brutality, Mr. Roberts is reminded that possibly his wife left him because she had seen the brute in him.

The general atmosphere of the offering was very good, there being some artistic lightings and some good exteriors, but I do not believe that there was enough beauty to the offering to justify the bad spots.

Kathlyn Williams as the mother and daughter was quite pleasing, although she had comparatively little to do, and Mr. Forman was rather good as the muchly abused boy.

Most of the action was centered upon Mr. Roberts, and he did his durndest to be a sure-enough mean cuss.

As a sample of the general thought of most of the scenes in this, I will quote you one title, spoken by Mr. Roberts to Mr. Forman. It reads as follows: "If I catch you speaking to her again, I'll cut your tongue out!" Sweet little notion—yes?

In the supporting cast were Jack Holt, Jack W. Johnston, Lucien Littlefield, H. B. Carpenter, Charles Ogle and Lillian Rosine.

The Box Office Angle.

I wouldn't figure this as a very good bet from an entertainment viewpoint, but if you feel that you can get by with the cruelty stuff and the slender story thread, I can tell you that the atmosphere is good enough to have it rank as a well-made offering.

In some communities Mr. Roberts is quite a favorite, although his pulling power at the box office is quite questionable, but I think you can bank on Miss Williams as being well liked and worth money at the ticket window.

Figured from the program release angle, you can probably use this one day and get by with it. I am afraid it would be unsafe to figure on it for a longer time, because your fans would hardly go out and suggest to their friends that they turn out to see this.

MYSTERY STORY THAT LACKED DISTINCTION; WILL JUST GET BY

Nance O'Neil in

MRS. BALFAME

Frank Powell—Mutual

DIRECTOR	Frank Powell
AUTHOR	Gertrude Atherton
SCENARIO BY	Clara S. Beranger
CAMERAMAN	Billy Wagner
AS A WHOLE	Mystery action melo that didn't impress
STORY	A lot happened, but sometimes incoherent, and never became gripping
DIRECTION	Failed to give distinctive atmosphere or make action human and truly impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY	Some good; some only fair; decidedly varied
LIGHTINGS	A few good; some poor; lacked distinctive class
CAMERA WORK	Same angle used too frequently; too many black velvet close-ups in courtroom which didn't match with long shots
STAR	Apparently camera-conscious and "acted" without conviction
SUPPORT	Rather ordinary; failed to impress
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; many unnecessary
INTERIORS	Some good; some very ordinary
DETAIL	Not perfectly clear and much superfluous continuity
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THIS was an action mystery-murder story in which a lot happened, but I don't think any one will care very much. The plot threads were twisted quite a bit, some of the action was incoherent, there was an awful lot of superfluous continuity and at no time did the various scenes impress sufficiently to make them really convince. The average audience may watch this and accept it as fairly interesting, but they'll never consider it a worth-while dramatic production.

The atmosphere lacked class and distinction, because, while a few of the sets were rather good and well lighted, most of them were ordinary. In many of the scenes the "extras" were decidedly camera-conscious and this gave a touch of artificiality to the offering which injured the effectiveness of all of the scenes.

Mystery stories, as a rule, are very desirable, and the fact that there is an element of mystery to be worked out in this is the only thing which gives it any possible interest.

Miss O'Neil is called upon to be quite dramatic at times and she "acted" quite some, but her scenes suffered from an apparent camera-consciousness which kept her emotions from registering in an effective manner.

The plot idea has to do with the wife of a politician who suffered from her husband's brutality, with the mystery coming from his being shot just outside their home. We knew that Miss O'Neil hadn't killed him and saw the shadow of the real murderer standing behind a tree.

We were made to suspect a young man, but on the finish learned that a woman friend of the wife shot the husband because she wanted to see the wife freed from his insults.

Of course, the woman who did the deed was dying and made her confession on her deathbed. For some reason it seems that they generally do that.

In the courtroom scene, which was presented as if it were a novelty—which it certainly isn't—we found an annoying number of close-ups of the jury, judge, the principals in the trial, etc., all of which were taken against black velvet drops in a manner which jarred badly when they were cut into the actual courtroom scene which was rather generously lighted.

Alfred Hickman, who is Miss O'Neil's husband, appeared as a reporter-detective, and he was quite busy on the case, with fortune favoring him, since the wind blew his hat off at just the right moment to carry it to the tree where a bullet fired accidentally by Miss O'Neil had lodged. This, of course, helped him secure additional circumstantial evidence and force the issue with the wife.

The general effect of the action would have been decidedly improved had the camera angles been changed more frequently.

There were many scenes that were entirely unnecessary, and intelligent editing would have helped a lot.

The Box Office Angle.

This may be accepted because of the mystery element in the story, but no one will ever be very much impressed with it. Surely they'll not enthuse to the extent of recommending it to any one.

Miss O'Neil's prestige may make it a good bet for a one-night showing, and it is quite possible that your audience will accept it without severe criticism, because, even with its faults, it is a bit more interesting than many of the ordinary obvious surface-action melodramas now being presented on the routine programs. This just misses being a good picture, but there are sufficient flaws in it to keep it from registering, so that it will hardly register as anything but fairly interesting "movie stuff."

I'd advise that you be cautious about promising too much concerning the merits of the production. It may be that this story by Gertrude Atherton is fairly well known in your community, and that might be worth playing up. At least the author's name is known and they can't blame you particularly if they don't like the story when they come, since it was written by one of their favorite authors.

HUMAN BITS HELP THIS OVER BAD DRAGGY SPOTS IN STORY

Ella Hall in

A JEWEL IN PAWN

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Jack Conway
AUTHORS	Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude
SCENARIO BY	Maie B. Havey
CAMERAMAN	Edward Kull
AS A WHOLE	Human touches save it despite some bad slumps
STORY	Obvious and had draggy spots, but afforded opportunity for some human scenes
DIRECTION	Registered some good individual scenes, but action was "spotty"
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; at times too contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Not many effects; sometimes too contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Generally good, but had occasional bad bits
STAR	Very appealing; pleasing personality
SUPPORT	Some fine types; some poor bits
EXTERIORS	Fitted contrasting atmosphere nicely
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Good, particularly Jewish wedding supper stuff
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH the story of this is quite obvious from the start, and seems to end about the fourth reel, with the action continuing in order to register a very human scene at the finish showing a wedding supper in the pawnshop, still the director has registered enough good audience-appeal touches to make this please any average audience, with some people considering it decidedly better than the ordinary offering.

Ella Hall has an appealing, pleasing personality and most of the action is centered upon her, and her friendship for an old pawn broker, played by Walter Belasco, and a young newsboy, played by Antrim Short.

The story opened with Miss Hall teaching some tenement kids in the gutter, and then we found her mother, destitute, pawning the slum teacher in order to get money to go to her father, who was wealthy, to ask his forgiveness for having married against his wishes.

Of course, father had moved and mother died, leaving Miss Hall with the pawn broker until, through a newspaper story, the grandfather conveniently discovered her. He then took her away, sent her to school and educated her. Then she found that she didn't care for society and returned to her old friends.

They finished it with a wedding supper in the back of the pawnshop, with a lot of funny types in attendance and Jewish customs being observed to the bewilderment of the young people, who were the center of all eyes. Grandfather came in to rescue his daughter, but was prevailed upon to stay and join in the festivities.

Since it took till about the fourth reel for grandfather to find Miss Hall in the pawnshop, most every one will figure that this is the end of the picture, so that when they sort of start all over again with the going-to-school stuff, it will seem like dragging out the finish, which every one has doped out to their own satisfaction. The only excuse for this extension of footage, that I can see, is to bring in the wedding supper incident, and I certainly believe the school and society stuff should have been eliminated or trimmed decidedly to get to the wedding supper quicker.

Ella Hall has a very large following because of the many successful pictures in which she has starred, and, while this is a very ordinary little story, plenty of opportunity has been provided for her to do the appealing little human things which she knows so well how to handle, and consequently I'd figure that most any audience is going to consider that this is at least entertaining. It isn't big enough to cause any one to recommend it enthusiastically, but I hardly think that you'll have any kick from your patrons when you play it.

Walter Belasco had a make-up as a pawn broker that was a bit artificial, but he gave such a pleasing characterization that after you get used to his crepe-hair beard you really enjoy his work.

Antrim Short as the "newsie" was very good, but several of the other characters were camera-conscious and inclined to "act." Occasionally, as in the case of Miss Hall's mother, make-up was quite visible, because the lightings were too contrasty.

Others in the cast were Jack Connolly, George Pearce and Marshall Mackaye.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe you can safely play this as a program release and promise that it is a human little story of a girl who was pawned, and, particularly if you have a community house, I believe that your fans will think this rather good entertainment.

In your advertising call particular attention to the other features in which Miss Hall has appeared, such as "The Love Girl," "Jewel" and "Polly Redhead."

Don't promise them too much on this, but emphasize the human note and call the story a "little story," which is, in a way, an alibi.

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

A Binder

for WID'S

$1.50 Prepaid Everywhere

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | APRIL 26, 1917. | NO. 17. | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York. N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York.N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

RED-BLOODED DRAMATIC MOMENTS MAKE THIS HIT HARD AND UNDERLYING TREATMENT OF RACE PROBLEM GIVES ORDINARY STORY REAL STRENGTH. VERY WELL HANDLED, BUT TOO LONG AT FIRST

Edgar Lewis' Production of

THE BAR SINISTER

Frank G. Hall—Abrams & Werner—State Rights

DIRECTOR ..... Edgar Lewis
AUTHOR ..... Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN ..... Edward C. Earle
AS A WHOLE....Racial problem beautifully treated with red-blooded punches; kept human; prologue decidedly too long
STORY....Surface plot elementary, but underlying motive made situations forceful and effective DIRECTION.....Made characters live and gave stirring swing to tempo of important moments; provided convincing atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally very good; some very effective exteriors
LIGHTINGS.....Generally very good; particularly backlighted exteriors and some effects
CAMERA WORK.....Generally very good; a number of excellent effects
STARS....Mitchell Lewis, Victor Sutherland, Hedda Nova and Jules Cowles
SUPPORT.....Many excellent types
EXTERIORS....Well chosen and some beautifully lighted
INTERIORS.....Good; fitted atmosphere
DETAIL.....Generally very good
TIME.....One hour and fifty minutes (8 parts)

IT is quite natural that any one should compare this offering with "The Barrier," because Edgar Lewis produced "The Barrier" and then took Mitchell Lewis, Victor Sutherland and some other players who appeared in that subject with him to make this one. It also happens that this story has in many ways the same elements that are contained in the plot of "The Barrier," although Mr. Kelly, who wrote this script told me that he had laid out the story under a commission from Producer Lewis before he had seen "The Barrier" or read the book. Those things can and do happen.

In making this comparison with "The Barrier," this second big special production from the hands of Edgar Lewis doesn't suffer in contrast, and if the prologue, which is now decidedly too long, is intelligently edited to about half the present footage, I believe that this offering will rank with "The Barrier" practically on even terms, as to compelling interest and stirring emotions by red-blooded, powerful situations.

The production is an exceptionally forceful treatment of race questions, with red-blooded dramatic moments that will stir audiences deeply. Certainly it is one of the few big pictures of the year.

It was unfortunate that at the first trade showing we had so much unnecessary footage in the first three or four reels. This was noticeable to anyone, and, because of the rather tedious development of the plot in the first half of the offering, the effect of the more important scenes in the last few reels was marred a bit by a sub-conscious weariness caused by having been forced to watch a draggy, early development.

Most of the production was made in exteriors, and, while some of these were not particularly beautiful as scenic bits, they all fitted the atmosphere of the story and certainly many of them were exceptionally beautiful because of artistic lighting. There weren't many interiors, but those which were used were quite satisfactory and none of them jarred.

Oddly enough, the plot is based on the "Barrier" thought of the white man in love with a girl who was thought to be a negress, although the audience knew her to be white, and the big sacrifice of the split-breed lover who was part white, part colored, and part Seminole Indian.

The prologue, which ran into such unnecessary footage, planted a scar on the baby's arm. Then, in after years, when the child was being reared by the colored mammy who had stolen her from the father, we found this girl so white that the hero thought her to be a white girl, while everyone else in the community, including the split-breed lover, thought her to be the daughter of the old negress. While it wasn't plainly stated that this was the white child grown up, there will be no question about this in the minds of any in the audience long before the scar is shown.

So far as the plot elements are concerned, I feel that they were all very elementary. It was decidedly old stuff and very much a case of moving the figures on the chessboard in order to work out the one logical solution. There was one big thought underlying the story, however, which was beautifully handled. That was, the argument that it is never the race which matters, but always the individual. We were shown good and bad black men, good and bad white men, and two men who had the mixture of black, red and white blood in their veins, one of whom was big and good, and the other, shriveled and bad. This contrast was effectively worked out with titles calling specific attention to these thoughts, and it is this underlying motive which made the action impressive and the story big.

For the first four or five reels the story is really just getting under way, with the racial contrast providing enough interest to hold fairly well. When the bad nigger evangelist, Buck Moe, gets into the action the story is lifted immediately and the tempo quickens. From this time on we get action, with dramatic situations that stir, and it was decidedly noticeable that the offering builded from that time right up to the finish, many of the scenes being big enough to stir anyone, with several of the physical battles decidedly thrilling.

One of the most effective scenes was the fight between Mr. Sutherland and Mr. Cowles in the nigger saloon, which reached a climax when the black bully attacked the hero with a razor. Another very dramatic moment was the scene between Mr. Sutherland and Miss Nova when he found her in the cabin of the colored mammy, whom she thought to be her mother.

Mitchell Lewis had a number of effective scenes similar to those in "The Barrier," where he registered his big sacrifice, and, while there were more of these scenes in this offering, I don't believe they were any more impressive than the one or two which came in "The Barrier" following his big fight.

In the early part of the story, after his introduction, we saw Mr. Lewis rather frequently, carrying a couple of turpentine buckets through the woods, with some incident developing to arouse his anger, with the result that he hurled the buckets to the ground and did a wild rush. The first couple of times he did this it was quite effective, but unfortunately he was permitted to do the same bit of business too often, and after a while it sort of appealed to your sense of humor instead of registering as dramatic.

There was a bit of a question as to the time period of the story, no statement covering this being made, and, because of the presence of negro laborers who were brutally treated by the father of the child, early in the picture, it was suggested that the first of it was supposed to be before the War. If this were true, the scenes which came later were not in keeping because of several details which would not jibe, and it seems to me that it would be advisable to in some way make it clear that the early scenes showed laborers on a comparatively modern plantation instead of slaves of before the War time.

From what I have heard, the incident of the negro camp meeting was entirely authentic, and certainly this brought something out of the ordinary to the picture which was quite interesting.

In the final scenes, where the negro mob was rushing about, it seemed to me that it might have been a bit more effective had there been more men in the mob.

Considered as a production, this is big and certainly worthy of registering as an evening's entertainment. I believe most decidedly that the offering is in need of editing in order to register to the best advantage, not only in taking out much unnecessary footage from the early scenes, but in eliminating a few bits here and there all through the production. I understand that the prologue is to be shortened, and certainly it is decidedly in need of it.

Hedda Nova, who is mentioned as a discovery of Producer Lewis, really registered as a "find." She was an excellent type, screened to splendid advantage in some of her more important close-ups and generally carried her big scenes very effectively.

Victor Sutherland gave a much better performance than he did in "The Barrier," had a bigger, more sympathetic part and a better chance to prove a real hero, since he was the sympathy figure in the biggest thrill scene of the offering—that of the fight in the saloon.

Mitchell Lewis, as the sacrificing lover, made his character big from the start. He will win the sympathy very readily and hold it to the end. His death after the terrific battle with the mob was well handled, since it came at a time that made it logical and eased off the tragedy of it because the hero and heroine had been rescued and were happy. It was his final greatest sacrifice.

Jules Cowles, as Buck Moe, made the part stand out. His characterization helped the production very decidedly.

There were many other excellent types all nicely handled so that they figured into the general scheme of things without appearing to be forced.

In the cast were Preston Rollow, Florence St. Leonard, George Dangerfield, J. R. Chamberlin, W. J. Gross, William A. Williams, Frank Reilly, Mary Doyle, William Anderson and Mack Wright.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the prestige connected with previous productions by Producer Lewis and the fact that Victor Sutherland and Mitchell Lewis of "The Barrier" appear in this, I believe that you can count on "The Bar Sinister" as a big money-getting film.

The fact that the film deals with the negro race question should be given some consideration, according to the particular community in which you live, but I can tell you that the race problem has been treated in such a manner that no intelligent person can, if he is not unduly prejudiced, take exception to the situations and underlying thoughts.

It is certain that you will have to make mention of "The Barrier" in offering this, because of the many facts which tie the two offerings together, and I believe that you can feel rather safe in promising that this is as stirring and interesting as that other big success.

I would inquire particularly before booking as to whether or not this has been edited, since it will be a much better film when reduced in footage by at least one or one and one-half reels.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN

Producer of

STATE RIGHTS FILMS

1482 Broadway, New York City

MELO SITUATIONS AND THRILLS IN FINE ATMOSPHERE, BUT OCCASIONALLY OVERPLAYED. IS VERY BADLY IN NEED OF PROPER TITLES TO PULL STORY TOGETHER.

June Elvidge, Irving Cummings and Alma Hanlon in

THE WHIP

Paragon Films—State Rights

DIRECTOR ..... Maurice Tourneur
AUTHORS ..... Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton
SCENARIO BY ..... Charles Everard Whittaker
CAMERAMEN ..... John v. d. Broek and Lucien Andriot
AS A WHOLE ..... Much wild melo rather artistically and effectively handled, but fearfully tied together, consequently becoming funny frequently
STORY ..... Old melodramatic ideas, with awful jumps that were not intelligently covered by titles
DIRECTION ..... Made thrills effective and gave some very artistic bits; but permitted overplaying and failed to make story run smoothly or hold it together
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally excellent, but slipped occasionally
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very beautiful; some very effective, but occasionally ordinary CAMERA WORK ..... Very good; at times exceptional
STARS ..... Rather actory because of melo situations, but at times quite pleasing SUPPORT ..... Many overdrawn characters, with wronged sister who acted all over the place
EXTERIORS ..... Some very beautiful bits; generally very good
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good; many decidedly distinctive DETAIL ..... Good, except story development, which was awful
TIME ..... One hour and thirty-five minutes (8 parts)

IF ever a film needed editing, this is it!

As an adaptation of the famous English melodrama we expected much that was wild and thrilly, but the way they pulled situation after situation without any evident attempt to bring the story threads together intelligently was simply awful!

They would go ahead with a sequence which you would think would make the hero and "shero" enemies forever, with the "willun" and "willuness" social outcasts, and then—blooey!—they would start all over again with another sequence, and no tangible reference would be made to what had gone before.

There was an utter lack of intelligent titling to bridge the jumps in the story development, and many of the titles which attempted to explain the relative positions of some of the characters in the plot at certain stages, surely failed to register the desired intent, because the situations certainly did not hang together.

Producer Tourneur gave us a lot of classy, distinctive sets, some truly beautiful exteriors and a general atmosphere of distinction that alone saved this from being classed as a piece of junk. There were some very interesting scenes showing a fox hunt, we got a splendid automobile smash-up, a real train wreck and a good horse race on the finish, with a lot of stuff showing interiors of what was supposed to be the Eden Musee brought in for an entire sequence, which had no particular bearing on the plot except that they wanted to provide some place to imprison Miss Hanlon and the wronged sister for a time.

All of these points and some very beautiful exterior shots, such as one bit shooting across a stretch of water and another very beautiful sunset with a train rushing through the foreground, helped to make this offering unusual and distinctive, but such things are all of no avail if the story itself fails to get over, as this one did.

I believe that film fans today insist upon a story first and then, though they may be willing to accept melodrama, that melodrama must be made at least halfway believable, and certainly it must be kept intelligent. This one ran wild so often, shooting off at a tangent, that it became quite funny in spots, and this effect, together with the curse of overacting of some of the players, will surely discount it for general consumption.

These bad spots in the story development are absolutely inexcusable, because, even with the situations as they stand, intelligently prepared titles and some good editing could put this in condition to make it run rather smoothly.

In the early part of the offering we had a good many scenes that were unnecessary, this superfluous continuity being covered up for the most part by changing camera angles, but still it delays the development of the story. Even though the fox hunt scenes were particularly pleasing, they were permitted to run too long at times to get the proper effect.

One of the funny things to me was the fact that Mr. Cummings was spoken of as "Master of the Hunt," and all during the hunt we saw him calmly riding through a wooded lane with Miss Hanlon paying no attention whatever to what was going on or whether the dogs were busy chasing "Mr. Fox."

They dragged in the "lost memory" stuff on us and pulled a mix-up where a check was forged, and Miss Elvidge claimed that she was to be Mr. Cummings' wife, but this stuff was so messed up in the titling that it never did get straightened out very clearly, and the production just jumped along from one melodramatic situation to another until they got to the horse race and then "The Whip" won; that settled all arguments.

Of course, for the horse race scene the willuns had the jockey arrested at the last minute, and Miss Hanlon had to do the jockey stuff to bring "The Whip" home the winner, but what I'd like to know is—if Mr. Cummings' bank account was wiped out and overdrawn by the forged check, as stated in a title, why should he be so calm when he visited the bookmaker, who told him, "I'm too busy to talk to you now. I'm going to drive an entry in the horse show today," and then a few scenes after go over to bet this same bookmaker $60,000 on the result of the horse race. I couldn't just exactly "get" Mr. Cummings' attitude towards this bookmaker, but possibly it was because he had that bump on the head which caused him to lose him memory. Even at that, I think that "I'm too busy" title is a bird!

The scenes showing the girls locked up in the Chamber of Horrors in the Eden Musee were rather interesting, and this sequence was well handled, the wax figure horror stuff being sufficiently gruesome to cause most any woman to squirm a bit, even though they realize that it is a lot of bum, wax models—or rather, as in some of the instances in this, only "extras" dressed up to represent wax models.

Most of the characters were quite acceptable, except for an occasional bit of acting, with Alma Hanlon and June Elvidge showing to splendid advantage at times, and Paul McAllister, as the willun, registering several little touches that were quite good. However, the awful spot in the cast was Jean Dumar, who "acted" so much as the wronged sister that she was positively a scream at times. How that goil did emote!

Others in the cast were Dion Titheradge and Warren Cook.

The scenes preceding the wreck where we found Mr. Cummings racing in an auto to catch the train, which was carrying the prize race horse "The Whip" to the big race meet, were decidedly well handled, and the tempo of the race worked up beautifully. What I want to know is, how did Mr. Cummings manage to figure out just exactly where the willun was going to uncouple the car carrying the race horse so that he could drive his auto to that exact spot and rescue the horse from the car just before it was hit by the fast train which was following. I fear me that most intelligent fans will ask this same question with rather a disconcerted feeling when it is not answered. Anyway, the train which hit the lone freight car which was standing on the track did a beautiful spill, and it is plain to see that the accident cost some money, because they did wreck an engine and a number of coaches. Unfortunately, the average film fan isn't impressed any more to the extent of raving about it afterwards when he sees an automobile smash-up or a train wreck.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the fact that this was a famous stage success as an English Drury Lane melodrama, you may be able to arouse quite a lot of interest in this adaptation. As the offering stands at the present time, I would be careful about playing it for any length of time, because the weak spots in the story development are going to keep anyone from enthusing over it. They'll undoubtedly be impressed by some of the thrills and the general atmosphere, but some of the story jumps will appeal to their sense of humor and cause them to say rude things about the offering as a whole.

If you play this, I'd center my advertising upon the melodramatic moments and talk about the beautiful scenes and the big sets, forgetting to refer to the story except to state that it is an adaptation of the famous stage melodramatic spectacle.

Irving Cummings, Alma Hanlon and June Elvidge are all well-known to film fans and their names may pull you some business.

UNDERLYING ALLEGORICAL THOUGHT LIFTS ORDINARY MODERN ACTION

Sheldon Lewis, Marie Shotwell, Charlotte Ives and Walter Hampden in

THE WARFARE OF THE FLESH

Edward Warren Production—State Rights

DIRECTOR	Edward Warren
AUTHOR	Edward Warren
SCENARIO BY	Lawrence Marston
CAMERAMAN	Henry Cronjager
AS A WHOLE	Underlying allegory made elementary modern situations rather effective
STORY	Old situation given good dream twist with allegory characters giving scenes added purpose
DIRECTION	Allegory development excellent, but modern scenes, old-school at times in groupings and compostion, with lack of close-ups, which marred effectiveness of some scenes
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good, with some fine and some poor lighting
LIGHTINGS	Some exteriors beautiful; others ordinary; a few interiors good, but generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Varied, with interiors lacking in angles, close-ups and proper lightings
STARS	Good types, although acted somewhat at times
SUPPORT	Acceptable, although some rather camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Allegory locations very good; others acceptable
INTERIORS	A few good; others rather setty
DETAIL	Generally good
TIME	One hour and thirty minutes (7 parts)

DESPITE the fact that, considered technically, this offering is open to considerable criticism, it has a money-getting title and the thoughts have been registered with a production that does not offend.

The technical flaws, for the most part, have to do with the fact that many of the interiors have been so uniformly lighted that they have a "setty" appearance, and there is a general lack of close-ups, which keeps many of the scenes from registering effectively, the grouping of the players at too great a distance from the camera tending to add to the artificiality of some of the situations.

The central thought of the modern story is a very old situation, having to do with the wife who had to have money for an operation to save her husband, with the result that she considered selling herself to a libertine, but the underlying motive back of this modern story lifted the offering out of the ordinary program-release field into the special class.

The presence of the allegorical characters in the modern story gave an added importance to all of the scenes and kept them from being just surface action. They became the exemplification of a moral thought.

The allegory scenes, particularly those used in the first of the offering, were well handled, with fine natural backgrounds which made them decidedly distinctive and certainly caused them to register much better than those we have seen recently in offerings which were made in studio sets.

In the treatment of the modern situations the story development provides a nice element of suspense, which is created by a dream which no one will suspect of being a dream, this resulting in an ending which finishes off with rather a great surprise for the twist at the finish.

In working out the plot the producer has taken us up to a certain point and then drifted into the dream in such a way that no one will think of it being a dream at the time, and yet they will readily realize that it was a dream when that revelation comes.

For the principal characters we find some well-chosen types, since Mr. Hampden, who plays the spirit of Good, has been well known on the speaking stage for his character of the "Servant" in "The Servant in the House." Theodore Friebus is certainly a truly Devilish-looking spirit of Evil. Sheldon Lewis, he who has done so many "willunous" things in the films, was a good type for the libertine, and Marie Shotwell looked the part of the vampire typifying Sin. Harry Benham, as the husband in the modern story, was a good type, but was inclined to act quite frequently, with the result that he seemed very camera-conscious and stiff in most of his scenes. Charlotte Ives, as the wife, was acceptable but didn't make any truly favorable impression.

Since the more important scenes were worked out in the conflict between Mr. Hampden on the one side and Mr. Friebus, Mr. Lewis and Miss Shotwell on the other, it wasn't altogether essential that Mr. Benham and Miss Ives make their characters stand out, although, of course, the offering would have been much more effective had these characters been more appealing.

In the early allegorical scenes Mary Moore was a very pretty flower-bedecked Eve. She had on her new Spring gown, evidently having discarded the much-talked-of fig leaf costume.

As the story developed, when we reached the point where the wife had decided to sacrifice herself in order to save her husband, we found an incident introduced where she and Mr. Lewis went to a film theatre together and there saw on the screen a story of the prehistoric times registering the origin of the present social laws which forced the recognition of the sanctity of the home. Since these scenes entered into the dream sequence, the exciting bit where the villain was mobbed in the picture theatre seemed entirely acceptable as what might have registered in the wife's mind while dreaming.

The introduction of a number of quotations from "Paradise Lost" in the prologue will help somewhat to impress the average audience, and I believe that the underlying thought will be sufficient to give the necessary strength to the modern scenes to make them register despite the technical weaknesses.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the title and the fact that the offering itself registers a moral point without offending, I believe that this can be played with satisfactory results. Technically it isn't what we would consider a good production save for the allegory scenes, but we must remember that the average audience isn't conscious of exactly what is wrong with a production when there are such technical flaws as lightings, groupings, a little overplaying and lack of close-ups, and, while they may realize that the offering hasn't the distinction that they would like to see, still if it has a thought forcibly presented, you can figure that most of them will be impressed.

I would say that you can very safely book this, and I believe that if you will bill it intelligently and be careful not to make any unnecessary promises about it being an artistic triumph, but will confine yourself to the fact that it presents a forcible thought, you will be able to get money and find your patrons considering it a worthwhile offering.

I would be careful in my advertising not to go too strong on the allegorical thought, because some people want to fight shy when you say "allegory." The production has enough of this to lift it out of the rut, but it has been so interwoven into the modern story that it doesn't become objectionably prominent.

VERY ORDINARY OBVIOUS STORY GIVEN TOO MUCH FOOTAGE

Norma Talmadge in

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION

Jos. Schenck—Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR.....Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden
AUTHOR.....Wilson Mizner
SCENARIO BY.....Edna G. Riley
CAMERAMAN.....John Urie
AS A WHOLE..Painfully draggy and monotonously drab, with tons of superfluous continuity
STORY.....Had no climax and was tiresomely obvious, with long narrative coming too late
DIRECTION....Failed to distinguish between time periods and gave poor story development; too long on one strain
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Excellent at times; generally satisfactory
LIGHTINGS.....Some excellent; others ordinary; too uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Varied, but generally excellent
STAR.....Badly handicapped; should never be asked to do old-woman characters
SUPPORT.....Acceptable, with some quite actory
EXTERIORS.....Ordinary but acceptable
INTERIORS.....Some very good; others ordinary
DETAIL.....Much too much, with time period lapse ignored
TIME.....One hour and thirty-five minutes; much too long; (6 parts)

SURELY this is about three reels too long. To begin with, the story never gets anywhere and is painfully obvious from the start, it being simply two ordinary stories of the serpent-in-the-home stuff with Miss Talmadge shown first as an innocent little boob who gets married and then falls for the advances of a song-plugger in the city, with this affair stopped by her father just before she makes a false move, and then much, much footage is devoted to father telling Norma about her mother, which narrative stuff was shown on the screen in harrowing detail, with Miss Talmadge also playing the mother, this narrative being simply another serpent-in-the-house thing telling how her father's partner had lured her mother from home and then had finally deserted her when she was ill and left her destitute in a charity ward of an hospital, where father found her just before she'd died.

Since, because of the very bad construction, we knew just exactly what the narrative stuff was going to be, the unnecessary detail which was given to it was absolutely painful. They showed us scads of stuff having to do with the details of the serpent's perfidy and the sufferings of the mother in the hospital, with the director playing all the time on the same plaintive strain, which was an appeal for sympathy and tears from the few women who think that such junk as this is so "beautifully sad."

As entertainment, I think this is awful! There is nothing approaching good development, and Frederick Esmelton, as Miss Talmadge's father, was so camera-conscious that he marred the possibility of most of the scenes registering as really human. It was also a serious mistake to have him play the husband in the scenes registering the narrative stuff, because he was so very much older than Miss Talmadge that it sort of killed off the possible sympathy. It would have been much better had they used another man in the narrative scenes.

Figured from the angle of technical construction, they have at least three reels of unnecessary scenes in this offering. Properly edited this would make a fair four-reeler or short five-reel subject, but even then there would be nothing of exceptional value to the production figured from any angle save the fact that Miss Talmadge is in it and she has been exploited as a star.

None of the players in support of Miss Talmadge were able to register anything that could be called a truly capable characterization, and the entire offering moved along the same groove, with so little relief from the drab monotony of the serpent-in-the-house stuff that I can't feel that any intelligent audience is ever going to enthuse over it.

Upon a number of occasions they gave us poetry for titles, and most ordinary ginks will think it very "mushy."

In the supporting cast were John Charles, Sally Crute, Robert Cummings, Chester Barnett, Fred G. Hearn, Mary Hay, Frank Dawson, Marie Reichart and Edwin Stanley.

The Box Office Angle.

Because this is supposed to be a special production, and because the fault is one which many will not be able to put their finger on immediately, possibly you can get by with this.

Any audience will realize that this is very, very slow, draggy and tiresome, but they will not just know exactly why it is, because most of them don't understand enough about dramatic construction to realize that about half the scenes are entirely unnecessary. It is a case of old-school development with bad detail and the effect is that the audience gets tired and dissatisfied and watches with sort of a resigned feeling, but when it is all over they are liable to say, "Yes, it was all right, although sort of sad at the end." This undue and unnecessary emphasis on the hospital scenes and the death stuff on the finish may possibly provoke a tear from some over-sensitive women, but, at the same time, it will antagonize about 80 per cent. of your patrons.

In its present form I would say that the safest thing to do is to forget this. Certainly I'd make no rash promises about it if I had to play it. I can't feel that this was a good part for Norma Talmadge, and certainly the impression she registers will not help her reputation particularly. Fans don't like to see their favorite young stars doing the dying mother stuff with much make-up on to register illness.

HEREDITY BABY VAMPIRE IDEA WITH GOOD PROLOGUE AND SNOW STUFF

Irene Fenwick, Clifford Bruce and Reine Davies in

THE SIN WOMAN

George Backer Production-M. H. Hoffman-State Rights

DIRECTORS	George W. Lederer and Harry Revier
AUTHORS	Herbert Hall Winslow and Edward Carbett
CAMERAMEN	H. E. Butler and Arthur Moses
AS A WHOLE	Will interest generally because of prologue, snow stuff and different vampire characterization
STORY	Allegory prologue helps make modern vampire plot impressive
DIRECTION	Allegory well done; modern story holds in good mountain village atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; had a few only-fair spots
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; frequently too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Varied from fine to fair
STARS	Personalities that helped offering
SUPPORT	Some good types, although several rather camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Some beautiful snow stuff
INTERIORS	Scenes preceding story incidents excellent; mountain village scenes fitted atmosphere; but some lighting too uniform
DETAIL	Good
TIME	One hour and twenty minutes (7 parts)

ASSURDEDLY if you can get any money with a vampire picture in your community, this title should pull em in, and, because of the fact that you have the additional advantage of playing up Irene Fenwick as the original baby vampire of the stage and screen, this should take on an added interest.

Miss Fenwick appeared in "The Song of Songs" on the stage as the vampire with the baby stare, and now in the films she has the same sort of part, with this offering taking considerable of the sting out of her characterization by a prologue which went back even to the time of Eve to register through the generations the strain of heredity which brought this sin woman into existence, the victim of influences over which she had no control.

The first part of this offering presents some excellent scenes depicting first the Garden of Eden, then Mary Magdalene, the court of Belshazzar, and on down through several generations of the ancestors of the modern vampire, with considerable footage devoted to a day in her life, which plants the sort of atmosphere in which this baby-stare sin woman lived. All of these early scenes were distinctive enough to give an impression which will be quite favorable.

The scene of the action is then transferred to a village in the mountains, where the vampire girl, fleeing from possible arrest, meets with an accident which places her as the guest of Clifford Bruce in a cabin at his deserted lumber camp. There are a number of scenes in which this woman of the city is shown to exert a strange influence over our powerful young hubby-hero, and we are told that for the first time she really knew the meaning of honest love, only to learn that another woman is this man's wife.

When the villagers rescued the pair from the cabin, where they had been snowed in for the night, there is a suggestion of scandal, but things are satisfactorily explained, and the baby vampire is brought to town, where she meets her last victim in the city, the son of the innkeeper, who has come home to die after spending all his money trying to live in the city.

The plot development then registers the growing infatuation of Mr. Bruce, the husband, for Miss Fenwick, there having been some nice sympathy contrasts provided showing the neglected wife and her child, Miss Davies being the wife.

Finally Mr. Bruce decided to run away with Miss Fenwick, and did so, coming back to tell his wife that he had decided to leave her. When the villagers learned of this there was quite some excitement, and then the son of the innkeeper told of his having been ruined by Miss Fenwick in the city, with the result that the villagers headed for the cabin in the woods, made it plain to the husband that he had been duped and took Miss Fenwick to a shed, where she was tarred and feathered, this rather dramatic finish coming as a contrast to the scene at home where Miss Davies, the wife, had forgiven her husband and placed him again as the happy father and real husband of a real home.

Most of the scenes were made in the mountain country, with many very beautiful snow exteriors, and I believe that this element will give an added interest to all of this action. Many of the situations were not only interesting, but rather dramatic, and, although there was a tendency on the part of some of the villagers to overact, and the son of the innkeeper was particularly actory, I believe that the dramatic moments generally will register quite effectively. Of course, after it gets under way it is a straight vampire story, with very little that is unusual except the fact that Miss Fenwick's characterization is decidedly different from that which we have come to expect of vampires, but I think the atmosphere is sufficiently different from the ordinary vampire tale to make this seem a bit more human, and the personalities of Miss Fenwick, Miss Davies and Mr. Bruce help many of the scenes very decidedly.

Because she has the main part in the offering, I would center most of my attention upon Miss Fenwick. But Miss Davies, as the wife, has an appealing, sympathetic character which she handles nicely, and since she is well known on the speaking stage, having been in "Canary Cottage" this season, you can make mention of her as a well-known Broadway star.

Clifford Bruce, as the husband, is a big, forceful type, and he handles his part very satisfactorily, particularly in the very important scene where he and Miss Fenwick are snowbound in the lumber camp cabin.

The Box Office Angle.

If your people are sore on vampire stuff, you possibly had better be careful of this one, because it's almost a straight vampire story, despite the prologue which justifies it by heredity and the fact that it is a different sort of characterization.

If you have been getting money with pictures of the vampire type, this title should bring you real business, and the fact that you can tie up this offering with Miss Fenwick's baby vampire work in "The Song of Songs," together with the presence of Reine Davies and Clifford Bruce, should make this a distinctive box office possibility.

You might stir up considerable discussion by starting an argument on the question as to whether or not vampire women are the unfortunate victims of heredity. There is room for "argufying" on that point. If the weather is pretty warm by the time this gets to you, the snow stuff should have a decided appeal. That point is worth taking into consideration.

ROMANTIC DAREDEVIL STUFF IN GOOD ATMOSPHERE IS ENTERTAINING

William Desmond in

PADDY O'HARA

Triangle—Kay Bee

DIRECTOR	Walter Edwards
AUTHOR	J. G. Hawks
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AS A WHOLE	War atmosphere romance that will interest and please
STORY	Doesn't convince, but is entertaining
DIRECTION	Provided excellent atmosphere and kept action interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally fine; some excellent bits
LIGHTINGS	A few very distinctive; generally very good
EXTERIORS	Many very beautiful; all effective as to atmosphere
INTERIORS	Many exceptionally fine sets; generally excellent
DETAIL	Good, because imaginary kingdom stuff can't be questioned
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERED as entertainment; I believe this will register as a very pleasing offering. It is one of those imaginary kindom war things, with the scene supposed to be laid in the Balkans, where two little kingdoms were having a mix-up, with many modern war appliances getting into the action. They used aeroplanes, mountain artillery and all that sort of junk with cavalry making daring dashes at the proper moments.

The general atmosphere was decidedly impressive, their being many big exterior sets used, with some exceptionally impressive interiors that gave the offering a very distinctive, classy background.

The story was a very elementary development of a romance between a wild Irishman, who was correspondent for a London paper, and the princess of one of these countries, whom he married in order to rescue her from the conquering enemy.

She married him under protest, because he had first appeared to her wearing the uniform of the enemy, but after he carried her away, saving her from the enemy, she decided that she sort of liked this guy.

Later, after Bob McKim, the wicked willun, had come up as her prospective husband and had stolen her away via aeroplanes, we found her uncle trying to locate O'Hara in London, in order to have the marriage annulled. The girl said she was willing if Paddy said he wanted it that way, but Paddy, he refused, he did, and when the girl heard that she beat it quickly. When Paddy came home that night there she was, the darlin', curled up in his arm-chair before the fire in a very fine lighting, all nicely provided by Bob Brunton, the master of the light effects of the Triangle-Kay Bee Studios.

Of course, this stuff is a lot of junk, so far as being human or convincing or anything like that, but, then, once in a while we like to see one of these romantic, impossible love stories visualized, and, as such, I think this will prove very entertaining. Giving Desmond an Irish brogue helped a lot, because they pulled some very good titles which sort of lifted the characterization out of the ordinary.

There was quite a lot of fighting, with some very effective camera angles that made it impressive, and we had a few thrills, one of which was a situation where Desmond was riding on horseback carrying dispatches, which had been intrusted to him by a friend who was killed in a duel by the willun, Bob McKim, with this willun spy. Mr. McKim, sailing above Mr. Desmond in an aeroplane. While Desmond was making his horse do his durndest, McKim was directing his assistant in the aeroplane in the dropping of bombs, trying to hit the hero on horseback. For about six scenes they dropped bomb after bomb, but, somehow, each one of them managed to land just about ten feet back of the flying hero. There must've been something wrong with the spy's velocity calculator, because he was awfully accurate about getting just the same distance back of the hero each time.

Upon several occasions our hero was shown to do a few athletic stunts, but in one place the director tried to slip something over, which I am afraid is going to get a laugh in most houses. It did the night I saw it, and I believe that most intelligent fans will be "next."

First we saw Mr. Desmond reaching up his hand and making a wild leap which landed him on top of a rather high wall, which was apparently done by reverse trick photography. Then we found our hero perched on top of a very high wall ready to leap to the back of a horse, quite some distance below—yes "quite" some! We saw him jump, and then we saw him land, but any fan's going to be willing to bet you a quarter or a box of Sweet Caporals that they tricked it in the camera. Not satisfied with this, they pulled the same stunt immediately after with the girl, showing her hesitating before the grand plunge, and then showing her landing on the horse's back.

Several times Mr. Desmond was given a chance to be a real honest-to-goodness hero, one of these occasions being where he permitted three ruffians to enter his room to search it, with an encounter following in which he covered the three of them with a rug from the floor, while he escaped by way of the door. Another time he had a mixup with about fifteen soldiers, who finally got the best of him, and then he pulled the good old stuff of putting out the light and crawling under the table while all the officers and the young army went outside to look for him, so that he could go up and get the gal and do a getaway from a window, which was followed by the aforementioned wild leap to the back of the horse.

Taken all in all, I believe this will register as one of the best things Mr. Desmond has done. Although a lady next to me spoke of him as "Desperate Desmond" after watching him do some of these things, still I think they'll like it pretty well.

Mary MacIvor, as the gal, was rather good, although she was really only a foil for Mr. Desmond in the scenes in which she figured.

Robert McKim was an accomplished willun, as always. Others in the cast were Joseph J. Dowling and Walt Whitman.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd say that for entertainment this should rank as quite a bit better than the average program release. It has atmosphere, quite a little good war stuff which no one can object to, and the romantic tendency of the plot keeps it registering as semi-comedy, this being helped by the brogue titles supplied for the hero.

I would book this and go to it rather strong as a comedy drama of the exciting experiences of an Irish war correspondent who got mixed up in a war between two small kingdoms in the Balkan Mountains. You can promise them fun, action, battles and romance.

As a catch-line, you might say—"Can you imagine what a real Irishman would do if he got turned loose in a war between two little kingdoms in the Balkan Mountains? See William Desmond as 'Paddy O'Hara.'"

LIGHT COMEDY WITH ENOUGH HUMAN BITS TO BE ENTERTAINING

Dorothy Gish in

HER OFFICIAL FATHERS

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTORS.....Elmer Clifton and Joseph Henabery
AUTHOR.....Hugh S. Miller
SCENARIO BY.....Roy Somerville
CAMERAMAN.....Carl Brown
AS A WHOLE.....Should register as very entertaining anywhere
STORY.....Filled with human touches and nicely handled comedy situations
DIRECTION.....Gave atmosphere of class and kept action human and interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Some very fine; generally good
CAMERA WORK.....“Shot” a lot from same angle where close-ups and angles might have helped, but action good enough to keep this from marring seriously
STAR.....Pleasing little personality with “pep” and appeal
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types
EXTERIORS.....Generally very good
INTERIORS.....Distinctive
DETAIL.....Many fine little human bits
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE that any audience anywhere will consider this entertaining and rather a relief from the unconvincing melodramatic movie stuff of the average routine program offering.

The story is built principally for purposes of comedy, and the thought of keeping it human is always in evidence, because there are hundreds of little touches that will register with any audience.

Dorothy Gish has an appealing personality, and in this she varies from the "peppy" young person to the appealing little lady, so sweetly that I believe she will register in this as well as, if not better than, in anything in which she has appeared.

The story deals with the effect of a banker having left his great fortune to his daughter, with the bank itself as the guardian. Two prominent directors of the bank were battling to have their opposite policies adopted. The controlling interest was held by this young lady.

After registering some delightful comedy growing ou of her early expenditures when the bank took charg of her affairs, we found one of the directors puttin forward his son to marry Miss Gish, while the othe director decided that he would marry her himself.

Apparently overwhelmed by these two proposals, sh agreed to marry them both on the day she was eighteer making each promise that the wedding would be ker very secret.

Meanwhile, Frank Bennett, a young clerk in the banl who had been sent to help Miss Gish in some of he wild shopping tours, had registered sufficiently with th young lady to make her want to marry him. That pr vided a situation which resulted in a lot of real actio on the eighteenth birthday, with the two bridegroom to-be present at the house in different rooms, and th bank clerk locked up in the bank, from which he e caped only to be made prisoner again by a detecti as he was reaching Miss Gish's home.

From her window the little heroine saw the man s really loved being taken away in an automobile, so s gave chase and finally returned to confront the su prised would-be bridegrooms with a muchly battered b happy, sure-enough bridegroom.

There is action in this, oodles of human stuff a several very good characterizations. It has distincti class as to atmosphere and should prove very pleasi anywhere.

In the supporting cast were F. A. Turner, Sam Grasse, Charles and Jennie Lee, Milton Schumann, I Wilson, Bessie Buskirk and Fred Warren.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that this can be figured a very good bit f entertainment. It will register a lot of laughs, it h some good action, it is classy as to atmosphere a you aren't exactly sure what is going to happen u the finish. It is certainly decidedly better than te average program release and would be comparativ safe figured for several days, because it is clean com that really entertains.

In advertising this I would particularly emphasize te fact that it is comedy, so that you bring out those wo like to laugh.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD
YORKE METRO
LESTER CUNE
Heavies

GOOD IDEA POORLY HANDLED; NEGLECTED FOR WAR STUFF. NAME A MISFIT

Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson in

THE BIRTH OF PATRIOTISM

Red Feather

DIRECTOR ..... E. M. Ingleton
AUTHOR ..... I. A. R. Wylie
SCENARIO BY ..... E. M. Ingleton
CAMERAMAN ..... Duke Hayward
AS A WHOLE ..... Actory spots marred drama and has too much war horror
STORY ..... Good underlying thought, but war padding made it drag
DIRECTION ..... Permitted, or caused, overacting; gave too much horror
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good; although occasionally varied badly
LIGHTINGS ..... A few excellent; many poor
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally acceptable
STAR ..... Nothing unusual
SUPPORTED ..... Acted too much
EXTERIORS ..... Mostly body-strewn battlefields
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable
DETAIL ..... Too much unpleasant stuff
TIME ..... Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

I HAVE a hunch, from what I've heard of the intentions of the War Department, that if this is not stopped it will certainly be cut up quite a bit, because they have a lot of battlefield scenes that show the harvest of war in a manner which is surely not pleasant nor liable to inspire rapid recruiting.

The story, as a story, really didn't call for so much emphasis on the war stuff, and it almost seems as if the excess footage of battlefields and fighting was tacked on in order to make this a five-reeler.

The English atmosphere of the offering was rather well registered, in fact, it was decidedly better registered than is generally the case with routine program releases. The important characters were played by English types, but they seemed a bit youthful.

In the dramatic moments throughout the story there was a decided tendency, particularly on the part of the wife, to act upon any and all occasions. This marred the possible effectiveness of the dramatic scenes.

The development of the story was slow and frequently it dragged decidedly. Because of this and the repetition of the battlefield stuff, the offering fails to impress.

The central thought of the story is based on the very good situation of proving that the fault-finding wife frequently learns how much she really loves the erring one when he is reported killed. In this instance we found the husband leaving the wife and going to live with another woman, only to find that he was unhappy, with the result that he answered the call of war.

The wife, after the baby came, was destitute, and she went to the "other woman" to demand money which she said belonged to her because her husband had earned it. The other woman bawled wifey out a bit and then took her to live with her because of the baby.

Finally word came that hubby wasn't dead but was returning, and the other woman moved out, leaving the wife and the happiness that was now appreciated.

There was a very good possibility here for some big moments, but the cast and the director failed to realize on them.

The solemn tragedy of some of the battlefield scenes were seriously marred by the fact that on two or three occasions, where soldiers went to pick up men supposed to be so badly wounded that they had been lying on the battlefield for hours, these men suddenly became sufficiently alive to almost rise of their own accord.

In the supporting cast were Ann Kronan, Ernie Shields, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Edward Brown and Frank Coffrey.

The Box Office Angle.

At the present time I can't figure that this is a very attractive offering. The mixing of the war stuff with the domestic troubles situation doesn't add to the value of either, and I am afraid that most audiences will fail to be very enthusiastic over this production. With better handling, the dramatic situations might have been developed into something rather impressive, but as we see them they'll hardly register with any punch.

There is no personality in this capable of drawing real money at the box office and I doubt very much if you can either get money with it or make good with it after showing it. It is a bit too drab and lacks the patriotic punch, since both of the men who really figure in the story went to war not because they were patriotic but because they were trying to get away from unpleasant things at home. That may be a human condition, but it is hardly the sort of film to show just now.

I believe I'd dodge it!

PLEASING KID STUFF ENTERTANING DESPITE SURFACE MELO ACTION

Baby Marie Osborne in

SUNSHINE AND GOLD

Balboa—Pathe

DIRECTOR ..... Henry King
AUTHOR ..... Will M. Ritchey
CAMERAMAN ..... Joseph Brotherton
AS A WHOLE ..... Kid makes it entertaining
STORY ..... A little melo and "reforming grouchy grandparents" stuff
DIRECTION ..... Rather ordinary except cute kid stuff
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Some very good; some ordinary
LIGHTINGS ..... Many splendid effects; sometimes too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied
STAR ..... Truly cute kiddie
SUPPORT ..... Acceptable; not remarkable
EXTERIORS ..... A few very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable
DETAIL ..... Had some slips
TIME ..... Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

LITTLE Mary Sunshine has won a real place in the hearts of film fans, and I believe that you can figure her stuff as entertaining and sure to please, even though the background is a bit crude. They seem to insist on putting melodrama in back of this charming little kiddie, the thought being probably that they need a certain amount of "action."

In this story, as in many others, Baby Marie becomes the savior of a grouch grandfather. After considerable melo, with gypsies kidnapping her, she wandered into the old guy's home in the woods where he had gone to live because he didn't like the way his son refused to follow orders.

There were some good scenes here in the cabin between the old man and the kid, there being one truly delightful bit which will get a big laugh anywhere. Baby Marie was saying her prayers kneeling at the feet of the old man, in her nightie, when the dog came over and licked the bottoms of her feet. That was a small bit but it will register.

The melodrama was not altogether convincing as shown, but it was sufficiently well done to hold the interest between the times when Little Marie was on the screen.

As a sample of some of the crudities in this production, we found a sign in front of the police sergeant's desk where the word "sergeant" was spelled as big as life—"S-a-r-g-e-n-t."

Henry King was guilty of pulling the old hand-to-ear stuff once when he was out in the woods chasing the lost kiddie. He should be spoken to gently for that.

In the supporting cast were Daniel Gilfether and Neil Hardin.

The Box Office Angle.

Personally, I think Little Mary Sunshine is a real bet to pull business if you know how to exploit her. Last week at the Rialto in this city they played her recent release, "Told at Twilight," and it seemed to go very big.

Figured for community houses, I'd say that her stuff is particularly good. She is a cute youngster and is always shown doing little human things in a story that centres about her reforming an old grouch by her kiddie optimism.

I would say that this should be a particularly pleasing film to bring out a big matinee audience, and if you would play hard for the children you should get a great turn-out. There is quite some melodrama, but none that could be called objectionable, and I should think that the average kid would enjoy it very much. It also has enough cute stuff to make it register for any average adult much better than the junky sex and vampire stuff which we have had too much of.

TOO MUCH STAR IN STORY THAT NEVER ARRIVED; STAR AS INGENUE POOR

Theda Bara in

HER GREATEST LOVE

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	J. Gordon Edwards
ADAPTED FROM	Ouida's "Moths"
SCENARIO BY	Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN	Philip E. Rosen
AS A WHOLE	Distinctive, but never convinced or appealed
STORY	Never impressed
DIRECTION	Held interest with close-ups and distinctive atmosphere, but missed human note
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent, although at times contrasty
LIGHTINGS	Many very fine; generally distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Doesn't appeal as ingenue; was a bit too much of her
SUPPORT	Rather good, although melodramatic at times
EXTERIORS	Some very good; big exterior sets good, but real locations could have been better
INTERIORS	Some excellent; generally good
DETAIL	Quite elaborate; generally satisfactory
TIME	Seventy-five minutes (6 parts)

THEY must have had in mind, in making and assembling this picture, that those who will come to see it are chiefly interested in Theda Bara. In any event, we find that the production is made up for the most part of close-ups of the star or scenes in which she is the central figure, with a title every now and then to bridge a jump. Of course, there were some scenes in which she was not in evidence, but they were decidedly in the minority.

The general atmosphere of the offering was quite classy, and many of the interiors and exteriors were sufficiently impressive to give this the general effect of being a comparatively big film, but the offering lacked the human note and was nothing but surface action built around the star.

Unfortunately, some one took a notion that Miss Bara should play a good "young innocent," and the early part of the film was devoted to our famous vampire star trotting around as a youthful ingenue, she appearing in some scenes in an outfit that was about like what Mary Pickford might wear. Miss Bara don't belong in that sort of a part! She can do straight stuff but not cute, innocent kid stuff.

The story told about how Theda's mother tricked her into a marriage with a guy she didn't like because mother wanted the advantage of being mother-in-law to this wealthy influential Russian. We knew the guy was Russian right away, because he had a big muff on. It's a funny thing, but I've never yet seen a Russian in pictures what didn't wear one of those funny beards.

After the Russian got sort 'uv rough with Theda, she told him that she didn't love him and explained why she'd married him, and then hubby, he told her that her mother had tricked her.

To sort 'uv get even, hubby sent her out to Siberia in sort of a semi-prison home, and, somehow—it wasn't just clear—we found a couple of her lovers floating out there during the latter part of the picture trying to get a peek at her, with one of them coming openly and the other one sneaking in, in disguise.

Of course, about the time they landed there comfortably, the willun, he showed up in a sleigh, he did, wearing a big fur coat and said, "Ha, ha! I've discovered you and your lovers!"

He then wanted to fight the guy that was supposed to be the favorite lover, played by Harry Hilliard, but hero looked him over and said he wouldn't fight—he was a gentleman! Since Walter Law, who was playing the willun, is a pretty big guy, many may sympathize with Harry's attitude.

Glen White, who was the other lover present, didn't take just the same view of the situation, and said he'd fight. So Glen and the willun went out in the street and shot at each other, with both dying, so that hero and Theda could be happy ever after. That's all there is—there isn't no more.

It's quite possible that your average fan who enjoys Theda Bara will like this stuff, and say, "Isn't she beautiful!" and think it's all right. Several of the girls wore L. & B. H. gowns, and there was quite some magnificence about a couple of the big sets, but I've a hunch that your discriminating, intelligent fan, particularly in a community house, will dope this out as stuff that isn't worth while.

Miss Bara, as before stated, had most of the film to herself and developed from the innocent ingenue to the pretty wise wife.

Harry Hilliard was as camera-consious as he has been in most offerings, and Walter Law, the guy wearing the muff, was so well concealed behind it that he was impressive as the willun.

Glen White fitted in all right as the "other guy," and the remainder of the cast were acceptable, despite the fact that some of them wanted to act a bit too much. This was particularly true of Theda Bara's mother, who was not only hard-looking but a hard "actress."

In the cast were Alice Gale, Grace Saum, Callie Terres and Marie Curtis.

The Box Office Angle.

You know better than I do just what Theda Bara can do for you in your own particular little bailiwick. This production has class but lacks the very important element of sincerity and human appeal, so that while it may be accepted it will never create much enthusiasm.

I wouldn't advise you to play it for more than one day, because I hardly think that any one will go out and suggest to their friends that they see it, since there ain't nothin' about it to enthuse over.

Certainly I wouldn't call it a big, special "De Luxe" production, or anything of that sort, because, despite the few big sets, it isn't De Luxe, since it lacks a De Luxe story. Close-ups of Miss Bara may interest her admirers, but I believe they will get tired of a feature production made up for the most part of aforesaid close-ups.

There's nothing about the story to justify any advertising from that angle. The only thing you can do is to talk Theda Bara and trust to luck, being sure not to play it too long, because, if you do, they'll "get next" to you.

DELIGHTFULLY HUMAN CHARACTERIZATION; WILL MAKE HIT ANYWHERE

Charles Ray in

THE PINCH HITTER

Triangle—Kay Bee

DIRECTOR	Victor L. Schertzinger
AUTHOR	C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN	Paul Eagler
AS A WHOLE	Delightful character story; sure hit anywhere
STORY	Simple, but full of human touches
DIRECTION	Kept action just short of overplaying and gave effective atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Very good
LIGHTINGS	Generally good; not many effects, but a few good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Truly delightful characterization
SUPPORT	Types very well handled
EXTERIORS	Good
INTERIORS	Quite satisfactory
DETAIL	Some fine little touches; many bits get laughs
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

YOU can go to this big. It is a human comedy that is going to register anywhere as real entertainment.

Charlie Ray has one of the best opportunities of his screen career and again he registers most effectively in the very difficult part of the awkward young man who goes to college and is ridiculed.

Charlie Ray stands alone as the most successful young man doing this sort of character portrayal. It is always a difficult sort of part to handle and keep free from overplaying, but I have seen Mr. Ray doing these characters time after time without hitting a false note.

In this latest offering, Mr. Ray registers scores of little movements, little turns of the head and body, which are certainly going to get a laugh. He handed me a dozen or more real ones and a lot of snickers, which is a better record than some of the Chaplin and "Doug" Fairbanks stuff.

This offering is a combination of comedy and pathos, and as such will register particularly well in community houses where they like to mix tears and smiles.

The story is certainly not new, and most every one will know what is going to happen, because of the title, and yet it has been so nicely handled that there is a genuine thrill in the big scene where Charlie finally lays against the leather for a home run over the fence in time to save his school team from defeat. To be true, it is old stuff, but then, again, the point is proved that as long as the situation has possibilities the most important question is how to handle it.

The aftermath following the big baseball climax was rather well handled, there being a couple of gulps and several smiles, and the change of heart on the part of Charlie's father and the clutch between Charlie and the girl who had given him the proper confidence in himself to make his success possible, were given just the proper shading to register very effectively.

The early part of the offering was devoted to such incidents as Charlie finding a quarter and hurrying to the cream puff parlor to get the little girl in charge to take her out to buy her a soda water. His father had not given him any money and he had been in a pretty tough hole, because all the other boys had kidded him about being a tightwad.

When he asked the popular little waitress to go have a soda, one of the wise chaps pulled a faint and there was much similar commotion. They then decided to trail along, and did so, ordering expensible drinks and then walked out, informing the proprietress that Charlie would pay. There he was with the lone quarter and a check for ninety cents. It was funny, and yet it was pathetic.

Finally the girl realized Charlie's position and slipped him a dollar. Immediately afterward, taking him to her shop, she stood him up and said: "What you need is a trainer, and I'm going to be it! Don't look like a sheep! Look like a reg'lar Abraham Lincoln." From that time on Charlie began to be an "Abe."

Sylvia Bremer, as the boss of the cream puff parlor, was excellent. She screened very well, had a pleasing personality and handled her rather important scenes with the necessary authority without forgetting the human touch. The other members of the cast were rather well chosen as to type and filled in very nicely. They were Joseph J. Dowling, Jerry Storm, Darrel Foss and Louis Durham.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that you should get real money with this, because by referring to Charlie Ray's work in "The Coward," "Back of the Man" and scores of other Ince-Triangle productions you can rest assured that your patrons will remember him favorably.

You can safely promise that this is one of the most human characters Mr. Ray has ever done, and I would refer particularly to the fact that he appears as an awkward country lad up against the first battle of life in a small college.

Since the keynote of this story is "self-confidence," it has, in a way, something of the elements which made "Skinner's Dress Suit" such a tremendous success. I believe, in my advertising, I'd refer particularly to such thoughts as the following:

"Have you confidence in yourself? See 'The Pinch Hitter.'" "Do you realize the need of self-confidence if you wish to succeed? See 'The Pinch Hitter.'" "If you don't believe in yourself no one else will! See 'The Pinch Hitter.'"

Understand, this is not an elaborate nor an artistic triumph, but it is a very human character study with scads of good comedy and many little effective bits of pathos. It ought to register very big anywhere.

I would go to this strong!

CRUDE ORDINARY MELLER BADLY PLAYED, HANDICAPPING STAR

Alice Brady in

DARKEST RUSSIA

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Travers Vale
AUTHORS	H. Grattan Donnelly and Sidney R. Ellis
CAMERAMAN	Max Schneider
AS A WHOLE	Crude, mechanical, overplayed "penny-dreadful"
STORY	Wild Russian melo with all the old frills
DIRECTION	Very crude; bad groupings; permitted much overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied decidedly
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Same angle too long; became tiresome
STAR	A shame to put her in such junk
SUPPORT	Quite crude; very actory
EXTERIORS	Some good; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Lacked distinction; were rather setty
DETAIL	Quite convenient; didn't convince
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

IT seems to me to be rather a pity to place Alice Brady in this sort of a production. Miss Brady has a personality that would win her a very large following if she were given a chance by having the proper atmosphere for a background, some capable people in the supporting cast and intelligent direction.

This offering never has a chance, because it's the old Russian melodramatic junk which doesn't at any time convince. It is overplayed, mechanically produced and presented in an artificial atmosphere. The same old elements of anarchists and domineering officials enter into this with the aristocratic boy in love with the girl of the people, and the aristocratic girl in love with the brother of the girl of the people. They even had the final junk of the lovers being stood up to be shot, with father blowing in from nowhere in particular, just in time to stop the execution. Oh, boy!

From start to finish the groupings were all posey and crude, the "extras" being truly funny in their attempts to "act" whenever they landed in the foreground. The camera angles were seldom changed, and consequently became very tiresome, with most everybody coming down to the foreground to play to the camera.

In the first part of this, Miss Brady was supposed to be a violinist, and maybe Alice can play the violin, but to the ordinary gink watching the picture it will look like she is doing quite some stalling.

In the latter part of the offering they pulled the very convenient twist of having one of the governors fired with his regime to last until 12 o'clock midnight. It was ten minutes of twelve when the news came, and so he was just able to sentence the young man who wanted to marry Miss Brady, and Miss Brady, to ten years in Siberia doing this despite the pleadings of the young man's father. At 12 o'clock the young man's father became governor, and then the daughter of the former governor was brought in, she having been picked up at the same time in a nihilists' meeting, and she was also sentenced to ten years in Siberia. Why the new governor didn't pardon his son, I can't tell you. Eventually he did. Maybe they needed more footage.

There was a lot of "acting" in this, but I fear that most any audience will consider it more of a comedy than a drama. Some of the players were truly ridiculous because of the flourishes with which they tried to register their points.

In the supporting cast were Norbert Wicki, John Bowers, J. Herbert Frank, Boris Korlin, Herbert Barrington, Kate Lester, Lillian Cook and Frank De Vernon.

The Box Office Angle.

It is possible that Alice Brady's name may be worth money at the box office, but, since the story of this regime ters what might have been true of life in Russia in the past, it is questionable whether or not this is altogether good stuff at this moment. Of course, you have the opportunity of saying that it is a story of scenes in Russia such as caused the revolution.

However, if you will take my tip you will jump to or be very careful about planting an alibi that this is a melodrama dealing with the tyrannical methods of former Russian officials.

Hardly any one will think this convincing or really entertaining unless they enjoy it because of the laughs it provides. Miss Brady wasn't at her best and the entire supporting cast overacted in a truly painful manner.

FAIRLY INTERESTING ACTION MELO THAT NEVER REALLY REGISTERED

Wilfred Lucas in HANDS UP!

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Tod Browning
AUTHOR	Al Jennings
SCENARIO BY	Wilfred Lucas
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting because of handling and story twists
STORY	Had convenient twists but held interest
DIRECTION	Gave rather good action in fitting atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not many effects
LIGHTINGS	Good; not exceptional
CAMERA WORK	Generally good
STAR	Impressive; forceful
SUPPORT	Rather good types; well handled
EXTERIORS	A few very good
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Acceptable, but star's black tie jarred
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WE find on the press matter that this is marked "'Hands Up!' featuring Wilfred Lucas." I believe that this change is due to Triangle discovering, along with several of the other companies, that it is pretty hard to get money on a picture which stars a character man. "Doug" Fairbanks, Bill Hart and Charlie Ray are all doing characters, but they are also heroes. Lasky has found Theodore Roberts to be rather a hard pull on money, and Triangle is having the same difficulty with Wilfred Lucas. I think Frank Keenan was worth money at the box office, but, as a rule, it's a pretty hard battle to try to get fans to enthuse over the possibilities of seeing just a character man.

This story was written by Al Jennings, ex-holdup man, and consequently we think the details of the bandits' methods were all right. In any case, it must be said that the story holds the interest despite the fact that several very, very convenient twists are resorted to, which carry you to a certain point believing one thing only to turn you around after a certain situation has been gained and show you that something else happened. That sort of construction is good for holding the interest, but it leaves somewhat of a feeling with an audience that they have been tricked.

The story started off with the robbery of an express train to which the special car of the president of the road was attached. The youthful leader of the bandits made a hit with the president's daughter, and instead of robbing her he traded rings with her. Later he obligingly stopped at the same hotel where she was living, in the city. They recognized one another by the rings and began to meet in secret.

Very soon her father discovered that the ring the bandit had given his daughter was one he had given his first wife years before. Then the two kids eloped and father went in wild pursuit to keep brother and sister from marrying. The bandit carried the girl away to his mountain retreat, and here he got surt 'uv rough and the willun streak came out again.

He slapped his former sweetheart a bit and then started to attack the girl who had eloped with him, but the members of his gang interfered.

Now, in the cut-back scenes showing the father's vision in reference to the ring, we had discovered that father, in his youthful days, had hung out at the same cabin in the mountains now occupied by the youth and his bandits. When father arrived he kicked the door in, in Bill Hart fashion, and held up the whole gang. He then bowed all out but the boy leader and the owner of the hut. He was just asking the boy why he had failed to go straight as he had promised, when the boy's former sweetheart shot the bandit from the window just as he was getting ready to kill the railroad president by shooting him from behind.

The railroad president then pulled a pathetic scene about "his boy," but a second later we found that it wasn't his boy after all, the owner of the cabin explaining that his first wife had gone away and come back with a Mexican, the bandit-leader youth being a half-breed greaser.

Mr. Lucas, who was the railroad president, then took daughter back home, a wiser young lady.

While this can be figured as an offering that will prove rather interesting and even above the average program release as to satisfactory production, still I fear that it lacks the very important essential—money-getting value. It is also true that many fans fail to enthuse over this sort of an offering because there is no real young hero and beautiful "shero" carrying the dominant thread of the story to a happy finale.

Mr. Lucas was forceful and impressive and kept his playing nicely within bounds at all times, suggesting strength without acting all over the place.

Colleen Moore as Mr. Lucas' daughter, was quite pleasing, although a little thin.

Monte Blue, as the young bandit, gave a very nice bit of characterization, and Beatrice Van and Rhea Haines were pleasing ornaments as the sweethearts of Mr. Lucas and Mr. Blue respectively.

Bert Woodruff and Kate Toncray were the old folks who ran the cabin in the mountains.

The Box Office Angle.

You undoubtedly know by now whether or not you can get any money with an offering in which Wilfred Lucas appears. I have been told by a great many exhibitors that they find it very hard to make the fans turn out for Mr. Lucas, despite the fact that they, the exhibitors, like the offerings very much personally.

You have the additional advertising angle on this of the story having been written by Al Jennings, who had a very widely read series in The Saturday Evening Post called "Beating Back," and you can surely guarantee that the story will prove interesting all the way because of the splendid plot development.

If you have to take this in regular program routine I would plug the fact that Mr. Lucas appeared in "Acquitted," "Hell-to-Pay Austin," "The Rummy," "Jim Bludso," etc. You will probably find many who are particularly partial to his work.

CRUDELY DONE SURFACE MELO WITH MUCH ACTING MISSED FIRE

Violet Mersereau in

LITTLE MISS NOBODY

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Harry Millarde
AUTHORS	Alfred Solman and Robert F. Rodin
SCENARIO BY	John C. Brownell
CAMERAMAN	Harry Forbes
AS A WHOLE	Action "meller" with much actin'
STORY	Obvious and convenient; never impressed
DIRECTION	Permitted bad overplaying in fair atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Occasionally good; generally ordinary
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally too uniform; occasionally contrasty
CAMERA WORK	Varied decidedly
STAR	Pretty as ever, but allowed to "act" too much
SUPPORT	Very actory, particularly hero
EXTERIORS	A few good snow bits
INTERIORS	Some very good; others ordinary
DETAIL	Convenient but acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THE wild overplaying of most of the characters in this surface melodrama makes it impossible as entertainment. The story will be fairly interesting, although it is very obvious and convenient, but surely no one will ever enthuse over this or consider it worth recommending. As the action develops it becomes more melodramatic, until in the last two reels we have situation after situation where they act—oh, boy!—how they act!

Violet Mersereau is presented as a "Sis Hopkins" waif brought up in a lumber camp, where her chief duty seemed to be to slap the guys who wanted to kiss her when she served them with drinks.

Of course, about the second reel our hero was on hand for the knock-out stuff when the big bully wanted to embrace shero, and then she ran away and asked him to take care of her, with the result that the lumberman told him that he'd compromised her, and so the hero readily agreed to marry her.

We then had the very new (?) situation of some one insisting that she be sent to school before they began to live as man and wife, and, of course, the result was that our star came back the finished product of a boarding school—some chicken!

After a lapse of time, our hero was introduced to his wife at a house party and he seemed to like her quite much. In the year that had passed he'd been to Japan, according to one title, an interior that showed a lot of chop suey furniture and a news-weekly scenic exterior which he looked at (?) through a window.

The willuness, who wanted the hero, was trying to get another guy to make good with the hero's wife, and her progress had been fairly good until the time hero returned from Japan. Then Miss Mersereau overheard the willuness and her accomplice discussing their plans and realized that they'd been making a boob of her. She asked the willuness' assistant to meet her at the bridge at nine o'clock, and she left a note telling her hubby she'd run away with this guy and intended to stay with him that night at the lodge in the woods.

Of course, this brought hubby out there in a hurry, and he landed just in time to save his wife from the lumber camp bully, who had seen the light in the window and come in to call on the girl he used to try to kiss.

After whipping the big bully, hero turned to his Frau and asked her where "Billy" was, Billy being the guy she was supposed to run away with. She said, in the other room. Hero rushed in to find a dog that the heroine had named Billy just so they could pull this scene on the finish.

Meanwhile, Billy, poor cuss, was waiting at the bridge, just about froze to death. They quit there.

In the several situations which were supposed to be dramatic, everybody acted so much that it became rather funny. In one scene Sidney Mason, who was doing the hero hubby, was shown in "terrible mental anguish." He was trying to decide whether he wanted to continue to play with the willuness who had loved him before she married another guy who had more money. The way Sidney tore up her picture and then threw papers all over the cabin should be good for a laugh anywhere.

Unfortunately, Miss Mersereau seemed camera-conscious in most of her scenes, there being a rather noticeable effort to do cute things. Miss Mersereau has given us some very good work in past productions, and it must have been the atmosphere of this one which led her astray. She needs direction.

There was a close-up in one place supposed to be a book in which Miss Mersereau had been writing. It was shown in her hand in the long shot and then the close-up showed a thumb and finger holding the book. As is so often the case, unfortunately, the thumb and finger were about as black as if whoever had been holding the book had been shoveling coal. Those are little points, but they certainly should be given attention.

In the cast were Clara Beyers, Helen Lindroth, Dean Raymond, Willis Baker, Robert Clugston, John Mackin and James O'Neill.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe it would be advisable to dodge this, because it is surface "meller" that never convinces and most any one will think the overplaying is funny. Of course, if you are catering to audiences which like wild meller-drammer, they may think that some of this is "Jest grand!" In a five-cent house where your audiences aren't discriminating, this might please very much because you have the fightin' 'ero who whips the bully and saves the innocent ingenue.

I wouldn't figure that you should use this in a community house where your patrons know what good pictures are.

Violet Mersereau is now under the direction of Rex Ingram again, and it is quite possible that you will get some good stuff in the near future with her as star. It seems to me that it would be advisable to save her reputation in order to get the money on the better things which will probably be released soon.

"DOUBLE" CHARACTERIZATION MELO MADE JUST FAIRLY INTERESTING

Frederick Warde in

HINTON'S DOUBLE

Thanhouser—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Ernest Warde
AUTHOR	Lloyd Lonergan
CAMERAMAN	William M. Zollinger
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting "double" story
STORY	Holds, although convenient and like all "double" stories, questionable as to probabilities
DIRECTION	Permitted some "acting" but made situations rather interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally acceptable; sometimes very good
LIGHTINGS	A few excellent; generally acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Varied from fine to good
STAR	Made characterizations distinctive, but acted with flourishes
SUPPORT	Quite acceptable; a cute kid
EXTERIORS	Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS	Generally good
DETAIL	Acceptable; with a few bad spots
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WHENEVER we get one of those stories where they find a man's double, there is always an element of artificiality about the situations, because we are constantly reminded of the fact that one artist is playing two parts. This is particularly true where we have double exposures or scenes where some one fakes one part, the fault with such situations being that the audience is forcibly reminded of the mechanics of the production, which is bound to mar the effectiveness of the story values.

Mr. Warde is shown first as a faithful old clerk who is called a "private in the ranks of business life," and then as a get-rich-quick promoter. The clerk was fired when he asked for a raise, and then he was conveniently found by the lawyer of the get-rich-quick man who was about to be sentenced to term in prison.

On an agreement which was to give him a large salary a month, the clerk consented to go to prison in place of the other man, providing the money was paid over to his daughter and her baby.

The clerk went to prison, but the daughter never got the money. In prison the clerk became a trusty and saved the life of a detective who was attacked by a newly arrested roughneck. The detective then proceeded to secure a pardon for the clerk, thinking he was the get-rich-quick man, with the result that the get-rich-quick man hunted up the clerk, put him out on a farm with his daughter and grandchild living in comfort on a salary, so that the promoter could open offices again under his own name.

The convict who had tried to kill the detectives escaped —rather easily, by the way—and went to the office of the get-rich-quick promoter, where he attempted to kill him, thinking he had been the man who had stopped him in his first attempt to escape. This was done in order to plant a scar on the real promoter's arms, which point will be painfully evident to any one.

When again in danger of arrest, the promoter sent word to the police that he could be found on the farm in New Jersey where he'd sent his double, and the detective was sent there to arrest him. Meanwhile the detective had fallen in love with the daughter, and when he arrived to arrest her father he, of course, discovered that father wasn't the right guy after all, because he didn't have the scar on his arm. All ended happily with the capture of the real crook.

This sort of a story is always rather interesting, even though it doesn't convince, and I believe that you can figure this as a very satisfactory program release.

Mr. Warde was inclined to put a few flourishes on his acting in some of the scenes, but, taken as a whole, the production will get by as a very satisfactory one.

There was a very cute kiddie who had a number of delightful scenes with Mr. Warde.

Upon several occasions they handed us rather melodramatically worded titles which jarred a bit. If the titles had been more intelligently prepared to harmonize with the action more smoothly it would have helped the story.

In the supporting cast were Wayne Arey, Eldean Stuart and Kathlyn Adams.

The Box Office Angle.

Frederick Warde has been in several productions now, but I fear that he hasn't built up any considerable following, and I would suggest that you centre your attention upon making it plain that he has an opportunity here to give two distinctive characterizations—one of them a delightful old clerk who has worn himself out in the service of an ungrateful employer, and the other, a successful get-rich-quick promoter who has lived off the fat of the land by using his wits. Most every one who knows anything about Mr. Warde will be quite interested in seeing him in such characterizations, and the chances are that you can get some business on that angle.

This can hardly be considered anything more than just a good program release, because I doubt if it has any big box office value, even though you plug Mr. Warde in your advertising. However, I think it will satisfy generally and register as an interesting little bit of entertainment.

FAIRLY INTERESTING THEORY AND PRACTICE IDEA——TOO MUCH ACTING

Crane Wilbur in

THE SINGLE CODE

Horsley—Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Thomas Ricketts
AUTHOR ..... Crane Wilbur
AS A WHOLE ..... Action melo on morals in theory and practice
STORY ..... Wandered a lot, with much unnecessary stuff
DIRECTION ..... Permitted overplaying, gave rather good atmosphere, but unnecessary continuity
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Varied at times; generally poor
LIGHTINGS ..... Generally good; no attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good
STAR ..... "Acted" quite a bit, appearing camera-conscious
SUPPORT ..... Generally camera-conscious and actory
EXTERIORS ..... Some very pretty; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Generally good
DETAIL ..... Convenient but acceptable
TIME ..... Sixty minutes (5 parts)

THIS was rather a slowly developed story registering an argument in favor of the single code of morality, which gave the human touch of the difference between preaching and practice, with the man who had preached it refusing to practice it until a doctor pleaded with him to be fair.

A great portion of the first two or three reels was devoted to registering the manner in which the girl had slipped and the man's affair with a "vamp" who had trimmed him for a settlement, with the assistance of a crook attorney.

The man began issuing a magazine in which he wrote beautiful editorials that made all the old hens make a fuss over him, and at one of these tea party things where he made a speech, the girl who had erred "fell hard" for him because he professed his belief in the single standard.

With a couple of scenes and a few titles they jumped us into a marriage, and when they showed the "vamp" getting busy on hubby and the jealous girl friend who knew about the wife's early error getting busy on the wife.

We had the blow-up where it was explained to wifey that hubby had lived with the "vamp." and wifey forgave him. Then came the scene where hubby learned that his wife had slipped, and he wanted to rave around the place and say that, in her case, it was different—"she was his wife."

In the offing all through the production there was a doctor chap who blew in whenever necessary to straighten things out, and he "just happened" to come for a visit about the time the big scene was at its height. He took hubby off in a corner and showed him that he was all wrong, and we finished with happiness again.

This would have been much better if there had not been such a decided tendency on the part of most every one to act "with gestures." Even the servants had to slip in occasionally with a gesture to prove that they were entering into the spirit of the thing.

There were many close-ups of the star and quite frequently—in fact, a bit too frequently—the scene ended with the cameraman irising down on Mr. Wilbur's face. It is a mistake, to my mind, to centre too much attention upon a straight hero. It antagonizes many who would otherwise feel favorably inclined towards the guy what was making a hit with the "wimmin." Mr. Wilbur also seemed to be rather conscious of the fact that the camera was out front, and in many of his close-ups he seemed to act to his audience too much. One reason for this was that a great many of his scenes showed him thinking alone, and, instead of doing some natural business, he looked out front and "thought" to the audience.

All the women in this wanted to act, with the girl who played Mr. Wilbur's wife pulling several little bits, particularly a scene at the piano, which was quite funny.

Considered as a whole, I'd say that this may possibly be accepted as a fairly interesting action melo because of the "single standard" thought. Certainly no one is ever going to enthuse about it or recommend it to their friends.

In the cast were Ernesto Garcia, J. A. Johnson, Harrish Ingraham, Florence Printy, Nan Christy and John Oaker.

The Box Office Angle.

You know better than I can tell you what Mr. Wilbur can do for you at the box office in your own particular community. In many ways, principally because of the story thought, this is better than some of his other offerings, but it still has the bad spots, with too much acting.

Certainly this is not a film that you should enthuse over or make any particular effort to get, and I wouldn't advise showing it for more than one day. If you play it, I'd dwell almost entirely upon the "single code" thought, asking such questions as these:

"Do you believe in the single or double standard of morality? What would you do if it came to a question in your own family? See 'The Single Code.'" "Do you practice what you preach? See 'The Single Code.'"

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

In order that it be clearly understood that 'Wid's" has always been and is controlled by me personally, I want to explain that I own 57 per cent. of the common stock issued to date, John Harvey owns 24 per cent., and George Fickardt 9 per cent., and the remaining 10 per cent. is owned by Mrs. Gunning, Fred Desberg, Joe Brandt and Frank Seng.
Only $1,000 of preferred stock has been issued, this being owned by Fred Desberg and Frank J. Seng, both exhibitors.

Statement of the Ownership, Management, Circulation, etc., required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, of "Wid's," published weekly at New York, N. Y., for April 1, 1917. (State of New York, County of New York), ss. Before me, a Notary Public, Queens County, certificate filed N. Y. County, in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared F. C. ("Wid") Gunning, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Editor of the "Wid's" and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit: 1. That the names and address of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, "Wid's" Films & Film Folk, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.; Editor, F. C. ("Wid") Gunning, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.; Managing Editor, None; Business Manager, G. H. Fickardt, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y. 2. That the owners are: "Wid's Films & Film Folk," Inc., 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.; F. C. ("Wid") Gunning, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.; John Harvey, 117 W. 45th Street, New York, N. Y.; G. H. Fickardt, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.; F. J. Seng, 1450 Dayton Street, Chicago, Ill.; Fred Desberg, 322 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.; Joe Brandt, 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y. 3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent. or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: None. 4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him. 5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date shown above is..... (This information is required from daily publications only.) (Signed) F. C. "Wid" Gunning, editor. Sworn to and subscribed before me this 4th day of April, 1917. Frank S. Stanley, [seal] Notary Public, Queens County. (My commission expires March 30th, 1918.)

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. NEW YORK, MAY 3, 1917. NO. 18 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same percentage, we have placed the one with the higher percentage of repeats first.

Reports	Features	Company	% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeats
6	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith Special	100	100	5
6	Easy Street	Mutual Chap.	98	100	6
10	The Floorwalker	Mutual Chap.	97	100	2
10	The Americano	Triangle	99	97	7
7	The Rink	Mutual Chap.	96	99	6
11	Truthful Tulliver	Triangle	98	96	8
10	Mister Forty-four	Metro	88	93	4
5	The Goose Girl	Paramount	95	95	4
16	Snow White	Paramount	95	95	10
35	Hulda from Holland	Paramount	95	94	22
11	The Matrimaniac	Triangle	94	95	5
12	Miss George Washington	Paramount	94	94	9
8	The Ne'er-Do-Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
5	Behind the Screen	Mutual Chap.	94	93	4
22	Peggy	Triangle	95	91	15
24	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	92	16
10	Still Waters	Paramount	95	91	6
5	Cinderella	Paramount	88	98	3
5	The Eternal City	Paramt. Spec.	90	95	3
13	The Devil's Double	Triangle	92	93	7
21	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	94	91	11
6	The Serpent	Fox	92	92	1
10	The Iron Claw	Serial	93	92
14	Bought and Paid For	World	92	91	9
9	Rags	Paramount	91	92	5
18	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	93	89	11
7	The Shielding Shadow	Serial	91	91
12	American Aristocracy	Triangle	92	88	7
16	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	89	91	6
5	Destruction	Fox	86	94	1
9	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	90	89	3
5	Graustark	K. E. S. E.	88	90	4
11	The Sin Ye Do	Triangle	96	82	7
12	The Habit of Happiness	Triangle	92	85	5
7	Prince and the Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
7	Back of the Man	Triangle	94	82	2
12	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	91	84	6
6	My Official Wife	Vitagraph	91	84	3
17	Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	88	87	6
5	Green Stockings	Vitagraph	87	88	2
24	Little Lady Eileen	Paramount	86	89	9
12	The Battle Cry of Peace	Vitgraph Sp.	95	80	4
22	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	80	7
18	The Cheat	Paramount	94	80	12
22	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	16
15	The Count	Mutual Chap.	88	85	8
20	East Lynne	Fox	87	86	9
10	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	87	86	4
16	Fifty-Fifty	Triangle	90	83	6
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
10	Old Homestead	Paramount	88	84	7
27	Flirting with Fate	Triangle	87	85	10
15	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	87	85	6
10	The Weaker Sex	Triangle	89	83	4
13	Her Double Life	Fox	84	88	3
12	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	87	84	6
19	Home	Triangle	91	80	9
23	Reggie Mixexs In	Triangle	92	79	10
10	The White Raven	Metro	85	86	4
11	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	84	87	4
14	The Common Law	Selznick	82	89	4
9	Molly Make-Believe	Paramount	87	83	5
12	The Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	3
15	The Good Bad-Man	Triangle	89	81	4
21	Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	88	82	7
5	Patria	Serial	89	81
16	The Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	81	8
6	Bella Donna	Paramount	91	77	3
9	God's Country and Woman	Vitagraph	81	87	1
5	Shadows and Sunshine	Pathe	94	75	2
5	The Virginian	Paramount	90	78	1
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	1
8	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	78	1
7	Undine	Bluebird	80	87	3
5	The Dawn of a Tomorrow	Paramount	82	85	1
7	Island of Regeneration	Vitagraph	85	81	1
11	The Rise of Susan	World	81	85	6
6	Mice and Men	Paramount	84	82	3
6	Man In His Soul	Metro	83	83	2
7	Camille	World	86	79	3
17	His Picture in the Papers	Triangle	89	76	5
11	Carmen	Paramount	82	83	3
17	Plain Jane	Triangle	87	78	4
5	David Harum	Paramount	87	78	1
14	The Combat	Vitagraph	81	84	1
5	Little Girl Next Door	Special	77	87	3
7	Wildflower	Paramount	88	76	4
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	Paramount	88	76	2
5	A Hungry Heart	World	86	78	2
5	What Will People Say?	Metro	80	84
8	Gentleman from Indiana	Paramount	86	78
15	The River of Romance	Metro	87	76	7
20	The Social Secretary	Triangle	90	73	7
6	Excuse Me	Pathe	90	73	2
12	Trail of Lonesome Pine	Paramount	75	88	3
8	Where Are My Children?	Univ. Special	79	84	2
7	Helene of the North	Paramount	85	78	1
15	Stepping Stones	Triangle	87	76	2
6	Kindling	Paramount	81	82
6	Madame X	Pathe	71	91	3
5	Alice in Wonderland	Special	76	86	1
17	Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	82	80	2
8	The Silent Battle	Bluebird	78	84
6	The Libertine	Mammoth	83	78	4
5	The Soul Market	Metro	84	77	2
17	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	79	4
5	The Soul of Broadway	Fox	83	78	1
5	Chimmie Fadden	Paramount	90	70	2
5	The Man from Mexico	Paramount	90	70	2
18	Honor Thy Name	Triangle	88	72	4
14	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	85	75	3
5	Pretty Sister Jose	Paramount	82	78	1
8	The Wall Between	Metro	78	82	1

BIG PREACHMENT MADE ENTERTAINING BY SPLENDID HANDLING WITH EXCEPTIONAL CHARACTERIZATIONS, MUCH HUMAN STUFF AND SWINGING, STIRRING ACTION

THE HONOR SYSTEM

William Fox Special Feature

DIRECTOR.....Raoul A. Walsh
AUTHOR.....Henry Christeen Warnack
SCENARIO BY.....Raoul A. Walsh
TITLES BY.....Hettie Gray Baker
CAMERAMAN.....Georges Benoit
AS A WHOLE....Forceful preachment very humanly done with virile, swinging action and tender bits of pathos effectively handled
STORY.....Romance built about prison reform problem; principally propaganda, but kept interesting
DIRECTION.....Made big and little scenes register; had excellent atmosphere and exceptionally effective tempo; missed fire rarely
PHOTOGRAPHY....Generally excellent; frequently very artistic and effective
LIGHTINGS..Generally very good; frequently exceptional
CAMERA WORK.....Very fine
PLAYING.....Wonderful characterizations finely drawn by excellent types
EXTERIORS.....Very good atmosphere, with many effective long shots
INTERIORS.....Well done; atmosphere nicely maintained
DETAIL.....Generally excellent; many fine little touches
TIME.....Two hours and five minutes (3 parts—9 reels)

RAOUL A. WALSH has definitely and forcefully placed himself among the very few big directors of distinctive feature films capable of being considered an evening's entertainment. "The Honor System" provided a big subject as propaganda, and it meant that Mr. Walsh had to treat the subject very carefully to keep it from being objectionably heavy as preachment. The result is very gratifying from the viewpoint of the offering being a human one, but it must be confessed that, as entertainment, the production slumps in the third part due to the fact that the preachment dominates at the end. The effect was as if the producer and author had builded and builded to big climaxes until he hit the highest point in the second part of his production and then found it impossible to go any higher or get down gracefully.

To be true, the interest is held right up to the finish, but the final scenes are plainly melodrama, a bit forced at times and certainly obvious, with the result that the effect upon an audience is decidedly that of a slump.

"The Honor System" is a big picture, carries a forceful arraignment of prison conditions and is also a delightfully human bit of entertainment. Producer Walsh has combined hundreds of little human incidents with swinging action that stirs, so that the first hour is truly absorbing.

Early in the production we get an effectively handled raid on a border town suggesting the well-remembered Columbus, N. M., outrage, and then at intervals through the offering we had other swinging action which was very, very well handled, the final bit being a free-for-all fight in a slum resort which was broken up by a squad of motorcycle cops who swept down on the place in the same dramatic manner as the cowboys rode to the rescue of the border town.

Producer Walsh must be given particular credit for his work in keeping the atmosphere well-nigh perfect. His selection of types was most commendable and these players gave characterizations that stood out in such a manner that it certainly seemed as if here was a conclusive proof of the fact that the story centered on a star is bad for the general effect.

Milton Sills did by far the best work he has ever shown on the screen, making the character of the falsely accused inventor who was afterward instrumental in having the Honor System installed, one which will be remembered forever by any who see him in the part. His characterization was manly, human and always held nicely within bounds, so that it convinced and impressed.

Gladys Brockwell had a big part in the early reels of the offering, and she gave a splendid performance. She made you understand the inner thoughts of this temptress of the dance-hall.

Miriam Cooper, as the sheriff's daughter, had one of the best opportunities ever offered her on the screen. She created a mystic something about this girl that was part characterization and part personality, the result being that you couldn't help but appreciate the appeal of her face, and she seemed perfectly human, and yet there was a sort of halo about this character of "The Lady of the Flowers."

James A. Marcus, as Governor Hunter, looked the part and played it so well that you almost thought he was not an actual official working in this production. At times Mr. Marcus seemed a bit camera-conscious, but he acted so nearly as a governor would have, had he been appearing in such a big drama, that you unconsciously appreciated the way he was doing it.

Of course, every one will, without knowing it, be thinking of the two separate sides to this production. That is, they will enjoy the thrill of the action and the pathos of the story, and yet at the same time they will feel that, after all, it is just a play to prove a point. That is true because prison reform applies to every State, and we know all through that this is a situation where we are watching a hypothetical case presented to register a point.

Charles Clary, as a politician, gave a heavy characterization which was nicely handled and never allowed to become "heavy." He was sufficiently "willunous" without overstepping.

Arthur Mackley was ideal for the sheriff. Because of the fact that Mr. Mackley has played the part of the Western sheriff in many more films than some of our best known players have ever appeared in, in all their characters, I believe that Producer Walsh was decidedly wise in choosing him for this part. There is something about Mr. Mackley which instinctively suggests the character of the Western sheriff as we generally picture him. His playing in all of the important scenes was truly human.

George Walsh had a minor part in the early scenes, but he made it stand out, and his death was quite dramatic.

P. J. Cannon, as the warden of the penitentiary, gave another of the characterizations which have made him generally acknowledge as one of our sure-fire character men.

Roy Rice was a wonderful type for Miss Brockwell's lover friend, and Johnny Reese as "Mugsy," surely looked and acted the part.

From start to finish Mr. Walsh provided relief from the tense drama and the rushing action, by slipping in kid and animal stuff. He did not overdo it, and the bits which were used were brought into the action intelligently, so that they helped the offering without at any time jarring.

Certainly with the present situation of war in the land the rush of the cowboys to the rescue in the Mexican border raid scenes is going to register with a bang.

Frequently we had a bit of pathos that was well enough handled to bring a tear, and I want to mention Mrs. Florence Drew as a perfect type of the little mother who waited and waited for word from her boy. One of the dramatic moments which will certainly bring tears to almost any one's eyes was the situation where Mr. Sills broke down and cried after being taken from the snake-hole dungeon of the prison.

As a preachment for prison reform, this hits hard and registers the desired points from a human angle, presenting specific conditions. Occasionally it was a bit rough and brutal, but that was absolutely essential to secure the proper impression.

Figuring this as a dramatic story or as entertainment, I believe it went up and up, ringing true every minute and scoring effectively until we turned to the scenes registering the methods used after the Honor System had been adopted. From this point on, as drama, it slumped.

The introduction of the episode where Mr. Sills was permitted to leave the prison on parole, with the result that the willuns planned different ways to keep him from returning again, made it ordinary melodrama at the end. Most every one will immediately figure, that although he is going to have a lot of trouble doing it, Mr. Sills is certainly going to get back to the prison, and I believe the director has overstepped in providing suspense.

There is one incident which certainly should come out at once, and intelligent cutting will do this without any difficulty whatever. That is the bit where Mr. Sills, after the terrific battle in the resort escapes and starts for his train, but stops to go back to his hotel to pay his board bill. That hit me right between the eyes, and I'm sure that it will jar badly with every one, making them want to laugh It's all wrong, it's unnecessary and entirely unreasonable. This incident is used now in order that "Mugsy" might pick up Mr. Sills again, but this can be done just the same without having him go back to the hotel, and if this is eliminated the fight on the freight train, which follows, will register much better, because it won't be just another of those "added suspense" things.

The scenes where Mr. Sills is running through the night in order to reach the prison in time have been worked up with a nice tempo, so that they were quite effective. There is absolutely no need for him to return to pay his hotel bill, because it would have been a very simple matter for him to have sent the money from the prison after he had arrived there. He could have missed his train because of the delay due to the fight in the resort and the action would have been much more logical.

We had, also, one very short flash of a "horned" gentleman who appeared to Mr. Sills in a nightmare. We could do without him very nicely.

Upon several occasions Producer Walsh moved his camera while a scene was in progress, which is never advisable, because it brings to mind "mechanics."

I want to commend the producer particularly for his effective exterior shots taken from a height and at great distance, because these were all very well chosen.

The Box Office Angle.

"The Honor System" should be a financial clean-up anywhere if intelligently exploited and played for a reasonable length of time, because it is a film that has sufficient stirring action, enough human incidents and the proper balance of pathos and comedy to make folks recommend it to their friends.

I understand that it is to be offered on a booking basis to the film theatres instead of attempting to present it as a road show, and, while it is quite long, I would say that you can feel safe in playing it, particularly if in your State there has been any question whatever raised as to prison reform.

Many people may not feel that this production really proves anything very definite, but to the average audience it will be decidedly impressive and thoroughly convincing. As entertainment it is far superior to the ordinary offering, and you can safely class it as one of the very, very few truly big films.

PADDED ETERNAL TRIANGLE SITUATION THAT BECOMES TIRESOME

Earle Williams in

THE HAWK

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Paul Scardon
AUTHOR	Garfield Thompson
CAMERAMAN	Robert A. Stuart
AS A WHOLE	Tiresome because of very slow development
STORY	Eternal triangle plot lacking in incident and padded with meaningless scenes
DIRECTION	Shifted camera often to cover unnecessary footage, but couldn't save offering from tiresome monotony of padding
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; generally good
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Had too much footage with too little to do
SUPPORT	Good, but "extras" very camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Generally good, except too uniformly lighted
DETAIL	Acceptable, although cheating at cards a bit too plain
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 part)

THE chief fault with this offering is that it moves entirely too slowly and has too little incident for the amount of footage. There are scores of unnecessary scenes, which become draggy, and the effect upon any audience will be to make them impatient for something to happen.

Unfortunately, many of the "extras" used in several of the scenes were decidedly camera-conscious and quite apparently doing something to be sure that they'd be noticed in the picture. The result is that these little bits tend to cheapen the impression made by the entire offering.

The story is a simple eternal triangle plot, with a friend trying to horn in on domestic happiness.

We found a Hungarian gambler, known as "The Hawk," apparently very much in love with his wife, although he made her help him cheat at cards in order to keep their income up to what he needed to supply her with luxuries. After listening quite some to the tempting pleadings of the serpent in the house, the wife decided that she couldn't go on with this cheating stuff to help hubby, and so she got ready to depart with her affinity.

Hubby discovered this "friendship" at the psychological moment and pulled a scene, with the final decision to walk out and leave the wife to her fate. He went out and became a bum, having lost his daring at card playing and his incentive to win on his nerve.

Then we found the wife and her lover figuring on getting hubby to agree to a divorce so that they might go on and be happy, and hubby was brought in to be paid for signing the agreement. He said he would agree if the wife asked him to, and then he pulled one of those sympathy faint things, which, of course, brought wifey to his side with a glass of water, and they finished it with her saying that she didn't want to leave him after all.

That's about all there was to it, and it certainly was not worth five reels. As presented, it became very draggy because of the scenes of people in and out of the many bits where the players tried to be dramatic putting on and taking off their coats.

In the "sassiety" scenes there were a number of L. and B. H. gowns, and on one occasion the hero was stopped by a young lady who asked him why he wasn't dressed, which was a very child-like title to insert into a drama, it being done in order to provide the reply from him that he thought he was about as muchly "dressed" as she was.

In the cast were Julia Swayne Gordon, Ethel Gray Terry, Denton Vane, Mario Majerone and Katherine Lewis.

The Box Office Angle.

If Earle Williams gets you money, this may go over as an acceptable offering for one night if you have been playing the ordinary program junk, but certainly it lacks the essentials to make anybody become enthusiastic and there is very little relief from the monotony of the straight obvious intent of the entire story development. The many unnecessary scenes slow up the action so that any audience will become impatient, whether they realize it or not.

"The Hawk" is rather a good name to bring those who are curious, and since mystery-detective melodramas are popular and this sounds like one, you may be able to get some business with it.

However, be careful that you don't register anything in your billing that is going to mislead your patrons into thinking that this is a mystery story, because, believe me, there is no mystery about it. You might say that Mr. Williams appears as one of the most famous gamblers of Europe, known as "The Hawk." That sounds interesting and doesn't tip off in any way that your story is the ordinary eternal triangle stuff.

ATMOSPHERE, LIGHTINGS AND HANDLING OF HUMAN STUFF LIFTS STORY

Vivian Martin and Jack Pickford in

THE GIRL AT HOME

Lasky-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Mashall A. Neilson
AUTHOR	George Middleton
SCENARIO BY	Beulah Marie Dix
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Atmosphere and human touches make slender story very entertaining
STORY	Slender and done before, but director has made it distinctive
DIRECTION	Gave artistic lightings, many human bits and splendid characterizations which put offering over beautifully
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Splendid
STARS	Played humanly and registered points nicely
SUPPORT	Very good; Olga Grey excellent
EXTERIORS	Distinctive; fine compositions; beautiful snow stuff
INTERIORS	Radiated class and distinction
DETAIL	Many nice little touches, but method of raising check not explained
TIME	Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

HERE is a splendid example of what can be done by a real director with a very slender little story that provides a few human moments.

Vivian Martin and Jack Pickford in this offering show up as well as they ever have in anything, simply because the producer has kept them perfectly human at all times and has provided an atmosphere and supporting characterizations which maintained the quality of the offering all the way.

The story was quite elementary and has been done before. It has to do with the young man whose mother couldn't send him to college at the last minute because of financial trouble, with the result that his sweetheart, who had been living at their home, secretly arranged to pay his expenses at school out of the estate which she had just come into on her birthday.

At school the young man, as most freshmen do, slipped for a vampiring dame who worked in the cabaret at one of the students hang-outs.

As things developed, the freshman fell pretty hard which stuff was handled very humanly, and then he slipped Thanksgiving Eve, went to dinner with some friends, missed his train and got "stewed."

At home we had the disappointment of mother and sweetheart, and at school we found the "vamp" getting a check for twenty-five from the youth, which was promptly raised to one houndred and fifty, she thinking the kid got a hundred a week from home. Since the kid got only a hundred a month, and this was the first month the bank wouldn't honor the check, and a detective arrived to gather in the youth just as his folks landed for a visit.

We all know that this is very convenient stuff and an elementary story, but Producer Neilan gave it enough of the human touch to make you like it.

Pulling the upstage stuff about going away and waiting until they were ready to treat him as a man, the boy walked out on his folks, and then the little sweetheart looked at his check book and discovered that he had been tricked by the check being raised by the wicked vampire.

We then saw the kid unable to make good as a freight handler, with the detective, who had meanwhile gathered in the vamp as the real crook, discovering him on the day before Christmas very much down and out. There was a nice human bit where the emphatic gumshoe takes the kid for some food and change, and then we had the happy home-coming of the boy, who promptly and willingly wanted to do all the work around the place, from carrying in the wood to washing the dishes.

Even up to the finish this was kept interesting by little touches, despite the fact that we knew exactly what was going to happen. That is real direction—and, believe me, the sooner producers learn that they must hire directors—real ones—in order to get results, the better it will be for the industry, and in most cases they'd better let the directors alone and put it up to them to deliver or not, since interference has spoiled more pictures than it has made. It is so ridiculous for a fifty-dollar-a-week guy to try to tell a real director how he should make his picture that in no other business in the world would it be permitted.

And it is just as ridiculous for the thousand-dollar-a-week business executive to try to tell the real director, as it would be for a contractor putting up a beautiful home to attempt to tell an artist how he should paint a beautiful painting that was to go into the home. Too much organization is much worse than putting it up to the one man who knows his job and asking him to make or break himself.

"Mickey" Neilan has made good. A number of other directors have made good. If you will check over all the really fine pictures you will find that they are made by a few directors. The answer is—Don't try to make good pictures without good directors!

But, to get back to this particular picture, I want to mention the work of Olga Grey. As the vampire of the college cabaret she had almost as much to do as Miss Martin, and she handled it beautifully.

Billy Elmer as the emphatic gumshoe made a small part distinctive, and the cast was generally very pleasing.

Jack Pickford gave us one of the best characterizations he has put over, and Miss Martin was human and pleasing all the time.

James Neill and Edythe Chapman, as the older lovers, kept nicely in their characters.

The Box Office Angle

I believe this will register as excellent entertainment. The story is quite slender and elementary, but the handling makes it very pleasing.

There was one point which you should be advised of, in case there is some question about it, that being the failure to show anything as to the method of the raising of the check. This is a minor technicality, but some may ask how it was done. If they do, simply tell them that the censors do not permit the showing of such details. That's your alibi.

As a program release, I would say that this is decidedly above the average, because it is distinctive and human, don't expect too much on this, but you can feel very sure that it will please generally because of the intelligent handling.

RATHER ENTERTAINING, BUT LACKS FINISH—WILL GET BY

Jack Devereux in

THE MAN WHO MADE GOOD

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Arthus Rosson
SUPERVISED BY.....Allan Dwan
AUTHOR.....Robert Shirley
CAMERAMAN.....Roy Overbaugh
AS A WHOLE.....Registers good thought; entertainingly done, with good and bad spots in handling
STORY.....“Necessity of confidence in fighting business battle” idea registered by example
DIRECTION.....Some few scenes excellent; generally acceptable, but occasionally lacked smoothness and finish
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good
LIGHTINGS.....Ordinary; few effects
CAMERA WORK.....Generally good; could have been better
STAR.....Pleasing personality
SUPPORT.....Some good types, but played unevenly at times
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere; a few pretty, but generally ordinary
INTERIORS.....All right for atmosphere, but not effectively lighted
DETAIL.....Generally good
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THIS offering is based on the thought that a young man in business may bump into the idea which will lead to his success in a small town as well as in a city.

The story started off as if they intended to make it a demonstration of the need of confidence in registering business success, but they sort of slipped on that lead, brought the hero's career around to a point where he accidentally stumped into an idea which he could successfully develop, with the result that he gained in confidence, not because of any inner strength but because of his aptitude for the work which he stumbled into making him understand that he was good.

The production has been kept interesting, with a nice balance of human touches, but occasionally the title writer over-reached in an attempt to be funny. Some of the human bits will register big, but in other places the points miss fire and seem a little crude, with the result that the offering sort of lacked the smoothness and finish which it should have had to have made a truly big, successful offering.

Jack Devereux has a pleasing personality. He gives a natural characterization of the young feller from the small town who was encouraged to get out of the rut by his young wife, with the result that he quit his job and then starved for a while before he jumped into the idea of demonstrating groceries to promote sales, which resulted in his securing such orders that his salary jumped from the one-time twenty a week, on which he had quit, to the more pleasing figure of one hundred and fifty a week as a salesman.

As a contrast for our hero, we had the noisy, flashily-dressed salesman, played by Henry P. Dixon, and of course there was the employer and the old clerk who had worn himself out in the company's employ.

Winifred Allen as the wife was quite pleasing, although she had little to do except smile and be an “innocent young thing.”

Primarily, this was comedy, and because of that the melodramatic touches which entered will never jar and the few little crudities will be overlooked. As a whole, the production lacked distinctive class as to atmosphere, but it was entirely satisfactory for program release quality.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can get some business on this, and I have a hunch that it will prove quite satisfactory as a whole. The action registers quite a number of little bits of business which will please the average audience and it has an underlying thought which lifts it out of the ordinary rut.

If you found that your people liked Jack Devereux in “Her Father's Keeper” I would make a particular mention of that production in billing this. I would use lines of this kind in my advertising.

“Are you working in a rut hoping that some day somebody will hand you something? Why don't you dig around and find just what you are best fitted for? See ‘The Man Who Made Good.’”

By playing up that angle in your billing you can undoubtedly arouse a lot of interest in this offering. Most of your patrons would rather see something which has a thought back of it and is still entertaining, than be forced to look at the old chessboard melodramatic junk.

FAIRLY INTERESTING TWIN SISTER ACTION MELO; JUST GOOD

Bessie Barriscale in

THE SNARL

Triangle—Kay Bee

DIRECTOR.....Raymond B. West
AUTHOR.....Leona Hutton
SCENARIO BY.....Lambert Hillyer
ART DIRECTOR.....Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN.....Charles Stumar
AS A WHOLE....Not very convincing but interesting melo
STORY.....“Twin sister” stuff, with much melo and good fake blindness twist at end
DIRECTION..Handled mechanics nicely; gave right good atmosphere; but permitted acting, and melo overbalanced human element
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; lacked distinction secured in other of director's releases
LIGHTINGS.....A few fine; generally ordinary; not much attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK.....Very good, except lightings
STAR.....Pleasing personality with nice shading of characterizations
SUPPORT.....Generally very good, although occasionally too much acting with gestures
EXTERIORS.....Many excellent; generally good
INTERIORS.....Generally excellent, although not well lighted at times
DETAIL.....Double character stuff made mechanics noticeable, but was well handled
TIME.....Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE this will register as an entertaining bit of unconvincing melodrama, because the interest is held right well, despite the fact that we guess about what is going to happen before they get to it. The personality of the star helped quite a lot, and the fact that the director gave us considerable action tends to keep the interest aroused.

Whenever we find a “twin sister” story, the possibilities of it being convincing are immediately discounted very decidedly. In this case we had some excellent double exposures and substitution scenes which were perfectly timed, early in the offering, and these will be appreciated as good trick stuff, but they don't advance the story value particularly because they immediately give you a feeling that it is all artificial.

The action which develops later is comparatively obvious, but they bring in enough additional excitement to keep you wondering what they are liable to pull next, and, as a consequence, an average audience will watch this, enjoy it fairly well and consider it a very acceptable bit of romantic melo.

Bessie Barriscale was presented as “twin sisters.” One could sing; the other couldn't. The singer was promptly crippled by the hero's auto so that there would be a difference between the two, and then the one who couldn't sing took the singer's place in the opera, acting on the stage while the crippled one sang from behind the scenes.

The hero married the uncrippled non-singer, thinking that he was marrying the singer, this marriage being pulled after a wild party at which every one got “stewed.”

Then they transferred the action to the hero's yacht, with some obliging guy—probably we must blame it onto the scenario writer—deciding that the other sister must go along also. We had a little footage of “stew” stuff aboard the yacht before they got to the next point, which was hero being blinded by accident, which made it possible for the plot to thicken.

Of course, by now the hero's wife, whom you will remember was the non-singer, had fallen in love with another gink, and, with the hero blind, she entertained her lover while the crippled singer, who, oddly enough, had a voice similar to her sister, entertained the blind husband. Of course, these two unfortunates then fell in love.

The husband recovered his sight after an operation, he having overheard a conversation between the lovers which made him suspicious, but he arranged that it should be thought he was still blind after the bandages were removed.

With this very convenient situation, he discovered his wife and her lover robbing his safe, preparatory to departing in haste. He walked in on 'em, made the wife who thought he was blind, lie to him, and then he dramatically informed her that he thought her gown was quite becoming—which proved, by heck! that he could see! This was a climax, but, just to prove that they could go beyond that, they pulled a convenient fire aboard the yacht and hubby was spared the trouble of shootin' the willun by the panic which followed.

Of course, in the mad rushing hither and thither over the burning yacht the willun and the wife were drowned in trying to escape before the others, and the rest of the passengers started away, leaving the crippled girl in the cabin. Of course, our hero bravely returned to the rescue, and—there yer are.

The producer's ability to register rather good tempo in dramatic moments and the fact that Miss Barriscale, Mr. Hickman and Charles Gunn held the dramatic situations fairly well, will get this over. It falls far short, however, of some of the better things which Mr. West has done.

In the supporting cast were Thomas Guise, Aggie Herring and J. Barney Sherry.

The Box Office Angle.

As a program release, if you frankly bill this as a “twin sister” melodrama of action and surprising developments, I believe your regulars will consider it worth while. To be sure, it is better than the average program junk, and while it isn't nearly so good as we would like to have had it, it should get by.

In your advertising I would start an argument about the old-time question of whether or not it is possible to distinguish between twins. In this case, at least, you have the better of it, because they make the characters twins rather than some one who was picked up some place as a double.

I can't figure that “The Snarl” means anything from an advertising angle, and I question the advisability of your making very much fuss about this, because if you tell them it has been produced by Raymond B. West, who has done so many good things, the chances are that they will be very much disappointed when they see it.

If you are running routine Triangle program stuff I would play this quietly and let it slide over, although really it's a pity that you have to do such a thing when you can make so much more money by having a good picture which may cost you more, but which will certainly bring you more money when you can plug it strong.

DOUG IN WILD FARCE THAT GETS LAUGHS ALL RIGHT

Douglas Fairbanks in

IN AGAIN—OUT AGAIN

Fairbanks—Artcraft

DIRECTOR	John Emerson
AUTHOR	Anita Loos
CAMERAMAN	Victor Fleming
ART DIRECTOR	Eric von Stroheim
AS A WHOLE	Is certainly funny, has action and some situations that will surely register
STORY	"Nut" stuff, but gets laughs—and that's what it's made for
DIRECTION	Kept it moving; made every scene count and had some good little touches
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
LIGHTINGS	Good; little attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK	Excellent; particularly vignetting and close-ups
STAR	SOME boy! Nobody else can do it just his way
SUPPORT	Some good types and all fitted in
EXTERIORS	Good for action
INTERIORS	Some classy; others good for laughs; all well done
DETAIL	Lots of funny little bits; titles excellent
TIME	Sixty-six minutes (5 parts)

JUST because this is an Artcraft and "Doug's" own company you mustn't think that he has tried to make a "Birth of a Nation." But I can tell you that he has incorporated a lot of corking good stuff into the action, has a story that provides situations which are really humorous on their own account, and added to g these values we have "Doug's" own personality—like which there is none other—and many very clever titles written by that "Champion Bantamweight," Anita Loos.

The basic idea of this was centered around the thought that "Doug" was a wild Indian and landed in jail, with the result that the sheriff's daughter made his cell so "homey" and delightful that he spent the rest of his time trying to get back into jail, which provided many exciting and humorous adventures.

There was a "defective," who also wanted to marry the "goil," and on "Doug's" first visit with the sheriff, this "defective" got him pardoned to break up the joy sessions of the pet prisoner, who was being lulled to sleep too regularly by the ukelele of the sheriff's daughter.

I don't know when I've ever seen anything that struck me funnier than the stunt where "Doug" drove up to a traffic cop, asked him if he was a traffic cop, to make sure, and then backed away for a good start so that he could go past the cop speeding some, to make sure of arrest. In that particular instance he got over into the next county before the cop grabbed him, and so had to spend ten days in the wrong jug, which was only one of the several misadventures which he had in trying to get back to his sweetheart jail songstress.

All through the offering we heard about the mysterious bearded stranger who was blowing up the munitions plants, and we saw several of these done in miniature, blown to bits. I think most wise fans will know that they are miniatures, but that doesn't matter much for the purposes of the story.

Finally, to be sure of arrest after having failed as a burglar and as a disturber of a peace meeting, "Doug" determined to pretend that he was the bomb-fiend. After sending due notification to the sheriff that the gink who was guilty could be caught at a certain time, he proceeded to the spot wearing a beard and awaited arrest.

When the "defective" learned whom he'd caught, however, he was sorry that he made the arrest, although he figured that he would now get rid of "Doug" for sure, telling him that he always knew that he was a desperate criminal.

A mob of neighbors who had been disturbed "severial" times by having shells dropped in on them while asleep peacefully at night, as a result of the explosions, decided to lynch the guilty guy. A prizefighter pal, who had been a cellmate of "Doug," happened to be visiting him and stuck along with him when the mob took him out. They did a getaway and managed to reach the cheese factory, which was to be blown up by the bomb-fiend, who "Doug" now knew to be a peace propagandist, because his prizefighter pal had found a "poiper" in this guy's desk when they had tried to burgle the house, aforesaid "poiper" containing a list of past explosions and those to come.

There was a good chase of the typical Fairbanks kind after "Doug's" escape from the mob and then some good action when they arrived at the cheese factory, just in time to catch the "wicious willun," who really looked like the pacifist he was supposed to be.

Five-reel comedies are mighty hard to make, even with "Doug" Fairbanks as the central figure. I think this one gets more than the required quota of laughs, and there are a few spots that are sure for yells. I think one of these incidents was the automobile escapade, before mentioned, and the other was where the prizefighter burglar took from under his toupee the "poiper" which he was bringing in to "Doug" in jail. There was another good laugh on the finish when "Doug" was getting married and the prizefighter was best man, because he had to search himself to find the ring, and every bit of burglar equipment which he brought forth from his splendid array of store clothes should get a laugh, unless you have a mighty "hard" audience.

In the supporting cast were Arline Pretty, Ada Gilman, Helen Greene, Walter Walker, Betty Tyrel, Albert Parker, Arnold Lucy, Homer Hunt, Bull Montana, Frank Lalor and "Spike" Robinson.

The Box Office Angle.

I don't have to tell you anything about what you can do with "Doug" Fairbanks today because he is probably about the biggest money-getter in the game at this moment.

You can go to this with a feeling in your heart that it is going to deliver, because if your patrons don't get their money's worth out of this production they're sore on the world or have come to expect "Doug" to keep them yelling every second for an hour—which no one can do. We get the required amount of little Fairbanks tricks, plenty of good titles, several real situations, good action and some acrobatics, so I think it is a very good bet for a feature comedy.

Go to it and get the money!

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO
Heavies
YORKE METRO

PAINFUL FRENCH ARTIST MESS—"POOR BUTTERFLY" FOR SURE

Douglas Gerrard in

THE ETERNAL LOVE

Butterfly Universal

DIRECTOR	Douglas Gerrard
AUTHOR	E. Magnus Ingleton
CAMERAMAN	Mr. McKenzie
AS A WHOLE	Crude; actory; awful
STORY	Never registered; certainly not unusual
DIRECTION	Very bad
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally poor; sometimes fair and better
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally very poor
CAMERA WORK	Poor; contrasty photo and not enough angles
STAR	Bad
SUPPORT	Very crude
EXTERIORS	A few good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Registered as sets
DETAIL	Messy
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THERE can be no question as to the proper music to accompany this. In the past few months a selection sung at the Hippodrome has become very popular. I fear me, if this is a criterion of what the new "Butterfly" brand of Universal is to be, that the song "Poor Butterfly" will become even more widely sung, particularly among film folk.

Honestly, this was awful!

The story was one of those French-artist-poor-peasant-girl things, with the artist forgetting the peasant girl when he landed in the city again, and then we saw her walk all the way to Paris because she thought he had been hurt in an automobile accident, only to find him in the arms of another, and the poor young thing wore out her wooden shoes on the trip. Too bad!

All the time the poor thing was walking to Paris we had much footage devoted to the director's conception of wild life among artists. Oh, boy!—how they did rave! They chased in and out, danced around, made gestures to prove they were "French," and kissed one another, and they always called for "more wine." Had they pulled this once, they might have been forgiven, but they did it so many times that it commenced to be truly funny.

After we had been made so sick of this stuff that the picture was definitely classed as impossible, they then pulled the old sympathy gag of the hero who had slipped, becoming ill, which gave a reason for heroine coming back to nurse him. The title which registered his illness because of his having lost his inspiration to do good work read like this: "When one doesn't wish to live, pneumonia is very convenient."

Well, there were a lot of things in this script that were convenient, but I didn't think they'd have the nerve to label it so in the title. But the worst blow came when we got a look at the director-star after the "pneumonia" thing had hit him. Gosh, what a make-up! His face was splotched with white and black in one of the funniest attempts at make-up that I think I've ever seen before the camera. It'll get a laugh anywhere.

There is nothing to redeem this offering, figured from any angle. The story never gets anywhere, the acting is awful, the atmosphere is poor and the producer has made practically all of his scenes in each set from practically the same angle, forcing the players to come down to foreground and "act" to the camera. Truly, "Poor Butterfly" has a new meaning after seeing this!

There was no intention that this should be funny, but I believe the average audience will have rather a good time laughing at the crudities of it all.

In the cast were Dan Duffy, George Gebhart, Edward Clark, Ruth Clifford, Miss Marvin and Myrtle Reeves.

The Box Office Angle

The only thing I can tell you about this is to forget it, unless you want to book it and play it as a drama that is so funny that you want to offer it as a comedy. Under those conditions, with an intelligent audience, you might amuse them.

Certainly you will insult their intelligence if you present this as a serious offering.

CHARACTERIZATION SWAMPED BY OBVIOUS MELO ACTION MAKES THIS FAIR

Robert Harron in

AN OLD-FASHIONED YOUNG MAN

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Lloyd Livingston
AUTHOR	Frank E. Woods
AS A WHOLE	Rather obvious, convenient melo, just fairly interesting
STORY	Had twists, but was much too convenient
DIRECTION	Kept it fairly classy, but material was weak
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good, although varied to bad at times
LIGHTINGS	A few fine; generally good and some poor
CAMERA WORK	Varied, but generally good
STAR	Human, but asked to do rather odd things
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not distinctive
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; travelogue in spots
INTERIORS	Generally good; vignetting helped
DETAIL	Convenient; had one assembling slip; generally acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

OUTSIDE of the fact that Bobby Harron was presented as a young man who had been brought up to act under what were called old-fashioned notions of a proper respect for the fair sex, which character gave him an opportunity to do some of the awkward chivalrous stuff, there was nothing to justify this offering, because the story was surface melodrama that was quite obvious and convenient, despite the attempt to make it a mystery plot.

We found a woman running for mayor, with the political boss uncovering from her past the fact that her husband had left her, taking their son, because he had refused to believe her story about a girl she had adopted.

Bobby Harron was in the employ of the political boss, but quit after a fight in which he defended the name of the woman candidate for mayor. Meantime, he was falling in love with the candidate's adopted daughter.

Then the candidate wanted to find a doctor who had been witness when she adopted the baby girl, and so Bobby appealed to her as a woman—which was very, very unconvincing—and finally we found the boss' henchman arriving in New York ahead of our hero to secure "the poipers" which would clear the woman candidate's name. Now comes the "wery," "wery" bad spot.

Instead of destroying this evidence, as a trusted henchman would naturally do, the gink carried it all the way back to the home town, with the result that Bobby arrived in time to see him, bat him one in the eye and secure the precious record.

Meanwhile, we had discovered that Bobby's father was the missing husband, and they tried to give us a little added suspense when father refused to allow Bobby to think of marrying the adopted daughter until proof of her adoption was secured. Of course, this came before Bobby saw the gink what had the important "poipers," and the recovery of these settled both the political boss and his blackmailing plot and the question of why the two kids shouldn't marry.

Sam De Grasse, as the political boss, was very good, as he always is, and Winifred Westover made her little bit stand out as the girl who swiped some "poipers" from the candidate's home, but the other members of the cast weren't particularly impressive.

There was an error in assembling where Miss Westover secured the papers from the secret drawer of the desk in the candidate's bedroom, because she was seen to hand them through the window to an accomplice before she had stole nthem, and then after stealing them she went back and the ngave us a repeat on the scene of handing them through the window. This may have been only in the one print, but you should look for it.

During Bobby's efforts to secure the lost documents, we had a few flashes of New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington and New York, thereby making this something of a travelogue.

In the cast were Loyola O'Connor, Colleen Moore, Adele Clifton, Charles Lee, Wilbur Higby and Bert Hadley.

The Box Office Angle.

Considered on the program release standard this may get by, but it fails to register as anything more than movie stuff, because the characterization idea is lost in the development of the melo action, which fails to remain a mystery, because your wise fans will all jump to the conclusion that Bobby is the son of the mean husband long before that fact is brought out in the plot development.

You can figure that this is fairly interesting—that's about all. Some of the lightings and the fact that most of the interiors were intelligently vignetted gives a certain amount of distinction to the atmosphere, but not enough to offset the fact that i is only an ordinary movie plot.

In advertising this you might attract a little attention by the name, suggesting that it would be better if we had more "Old-Fashioned Young Men."

You might use the query—"Are you a 'new' or an 'old-fashioned' young man? See Bobby Harron! He's the old-fashioned young man in this Triangle release!"

MESSY MELLER RATHER POORLY DONE AND THEN PATCHED TOGETHER

Genevieve Hamper, Robert B. Mantell and Stuart Holmes in TANGLED LIVES

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	J. Gordon Edwards
AUTHOR	Wilkie Collins
SCENARIO BY	Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN	Philip E. Rosen
AS A WHOLE	Messy surface "meller" that never registers
STORY	Much plot and wild "meller"; lacks human note or love interest
DIRECTION	Evidently made under difficulties, with poor atmosphere and bad overplaying
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to very poor
LIGHTINGS	A few good; generally poor
CAMERA WORK	Sometimes good; sometimes bad; occasionally out of focus
STARS	Miss Hamper has distinctive personality, but "acted" and make-up showed; Holmes a "wicious" willun; Mantell quite "ravey"
SUPPORT	Ordinary; Lee Kids make two scenes bright
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Poor
DETAIL	Fair at times
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

UERY evidently this was a bad boy that someone has worked pretty hard on trying to doctor it with titles. To the average public, the doctoring will prove fairly successful so far as smoothing out the very tangled threads of the story, which lives up to its name, but still, the titles can't kill off the terrible acting which loomed up all too frequently, and the very messy tragic atmosphere of the story will make most anyone say that they think this is a bunch of junk.

As an interesting sidelight on the fact that some of our speaking stage stars fail to even make a dent when they land on the screen, it is decidedly noticeable that the Fox Company are billing Genevieve Hamper in this without mentioning the fact that her illustrious husband, Robert Mantell, is also in the offering. I presume that the reason for this is that Mr. Mantell has proven rather a "flivver" as a drawing card in his Fox pictures, because most of them were pretty punk, and the Fox offices decided to kid the public into believing that this was a new picture with Miss Hamper starred, instead of one of the old ones made at the same time that the former series was produced.

Most any intelligent fan will be able to dope out that this was made when the others were ground out, because some of the same players were used in this, and it is decidedly noticeable that the sets were certainly not such as we find in Fox productions made in their regular studios now.

It was painfully jarring and almost funny to note that they had a lot of three-cent wall-paper with abominable figures in it slathered over the walls of what was supposed to be the home of an heiress. They also showed us a very cheap iron bed in this same home. I presume Director Edwards had quite some difficulty in getting what he wanted in Jamaica, where this series of films was made, to represent a classy home, but, then, those facts can't be diagrammed on the screen, and the fans are going to feel sort'uv peeved over seeing such sets as loom up in this.

The story was one of those things where the star played her own half-sister, with the willun, "Stu," trying to marry one sister in order to gain possession of the estate. He was aided and abetted by Mr. Mantell, with indications pointing to the Fox Company having cut the Hon. Robert out of about all the film they could, and when the other sister who had been kept a prisoner in a "dopey" condition until her mind was weakened, got "next" to what the willuns were up to, we had some melodrama wherein she was kidnapped and poked away in a sanitarium while the willunous "Stu" completed arrangements for his marriage to the heiress sister.

By means of a title this weak-minded sister escaped from the sanitarium—how, we know not—and then they did some more "shinannigan," with the final result that they exchanged sisters and put the wife in the sanitarium while the dopey sister conveniently died, so that they could bury her as the heiress wife.

This time they showed us how the escape was pulled, although I can't understand how an inmate who was being guarded as this female was supposed to be guarded would be allowed to send out a letter, as she did, in which she requested a friend to assist her in making an escape. Anyway, the letter got out and the friend was on the job to assist in the getaway.

The aforesaid friend was Claire Whitney, and, after greeting the escaped wife, Claire started for home and arrived there wearing another hat, not the one she had left the previous scene with. Those things will happen when you are making pictures in a far-away land.

They finished this off with a couple more deaths, both the willuns cashing in towards the end while Walter Miller, who had been hanging around in the offing, as the artist in love with the wife, appeared in a final scene as the happy husband, with Little Janey Lee as the daughter who had come to bless their home.

They pulled one scene which was bad enough to be pretty sure of a laugh most anywhere. There had been some discussion about a Society of the Sons of Italian Freedom or the Sons of Italian Liberty, who had been doing some plotting, and we saw Mr. Mantell as the traitor who was going to put the police "wise" to the guys. They were supposed to be holding a secret meeting in a small room and had just sworn "death to all traitors," when the Hon. Robert got up and walked over to the window about three feet from the table, opened the shutters wide and waved a big handkerchief two or three times. It may have been that the ginks who were facing him were blind and the rest of them thought that he was flirting with a passing "chicken," but, anyway, no one seemed to pay any attention to him until the police rushed in and gathered them into the fold.

Others in the cast were Henry Leone and Genevieve Blinn.

The Box Office Angle.

Personally, I think that you should dodge this sort of junk, because it is cheap "meller" that has no excuse for being and certainly no one will take this messy sort of stuff seriously or consider it entertaining. There is no real thread of heart interest and never at any time do the actions of the players seem human or convincing. The doctoring of the titles, in a way, smooths over some of the bumps of the story development, but the situations are so impossible as drama that I can't believe anyone will consider them enjoyable.

If, by any chance, you happened to do some business when you had Mantell and his wife and Stuart Holmes in the series in which this trio appeared, you might play one more and get by with it, because some of the others were almost as bad as this one. But, from what I have heard of the fate of the ones which have gone before, I'd say that you will be very wise if you immediately forget that Fox ever released this one.

PAINFULLY ORDINARY SURFACE

Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt in

BUILDERS OF CASTLES

Edison—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR ..... Ben Turbett
AUTHOR ..... Henry Albert Phillips
CAMERAMAN ..... Fred S. Brace
AS A WHOLE ..... Ordinary surface-action stuff never impressed
STORY ..... Was chessboard hero-willun-suffering-heroine stuff
DIRECTION ..... Made players camera-conscious, had poor composition, bad groupings and generally ordinary atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Too uniform; occasionally good effects
CAMERA WORK ..... Good straight stuff; few effects or camera angles
STARS ..... Routine wicked he-wampire and helpless shero
SUPPORT ..... Very camera-conscious and actory
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIOR ..... Rather setty
DETAIL ..... Acceptable; rather convenient
TIME ..... Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THERE is nothing about this to justify any one considering it worth while.

The story is one of those chessboard melodramas with the willun who runs away with the coin of an "Investment Co." and the sacficing hero who says he did it, which puts shero in bad because she believes the he-wampire-willun.

A lot happens in this, but nobody will care. It just wanders along with incident after incident having to do with how bad the willun was and how good the hero, who had sacrificed his home, reputation and everything else, was.

MELLER THAT NEVER ARRIVED

The he-wampire even forced shero to become his mistress, which, of course, led to interesting developments later on, because we knew that sooner or later she was going to "get" this guy, and she finally did by tipping off the police at the psychological moment.

Some one—possibly the scenario editor—told Marc to inform his mistress that he would be back for her at midnight, when he was going to do his getaway, because that gave her time to get the cops and beat him to the coin and also get him with the goods.

Of course, on the finish the hero, who had sacrificed himself, came home to his folks happy, and all was lovely.

There was a minister guy in this who was trying to decide whether he loved the willun's mistress or not before she became a mistress. You see, foxy old willun had to put an article in the paper stating that the minister was out of town, when, as a matter of fact, he had the guy hit on the head with a blackjack and sent to a hospital. It was certainly obliging of the newspaper to print this article about Friend Minister going away, because it made the lady feel that she just simply had to go live with this willun, because there wasn't anything else to do, since the newspaper had said that the man she had expected to marry had gone out of town to marry some one else.

If you figure that you can afford to play this ordinary surface-action stuff I can tell you definitely that that is all this is. There's nothing about it that is distinctive.

Marc MacDermott led the league in acting, and in several places he did certainly act, but all the other members of the cast tried to do their share, and certainly they didn't forget for a minute that they were right in front of that camera and that the bloomin' thing was turning and that they had to act or they wouldn't be seen.

In the cast were Robert Brower, Simon Gillies, Florence Stover, Miriam Nesbitt, Jessie Stevens, William Wadsworth and Edward Longman.

The Box Office Angle.

I don't believe that you want to play this sort of stuff if you are any place where they check you up. It is ordinary, figured from any angle, and while an audience may look at it, try to wonder whether the story is going to get anywhere and think that they are all acting too much, they may come out and not ask for your scalp, but, believe me, they're not going to rush down to your place the next time they decide that they want to go to the theatre, without looking up to find out what is being shown.

You must remember that there is a large percentage who go to one theatre or another on faith. Of course, we all know that the percentage of those who "shop" to find out just exactly what is to be shown is growing larger every day, but in communities there are hundreds, even thousands of people who go to certain theatres because they feel that at those theatres they will find good pictures.

Now, if you hand 'em this sort of stuff very often, it is a "long shot" better that they're going to take a chance on the other feller, and if he is any better "picker" than you are they'll forget you. Think it over!

"Builders of Castles" doesn't mean anything as a title. In fact, it is about as near to meaning nothing as it could get. You may have some fans who like Marc MacDermott, but if they like him very much I believe it'd be advisable for you to keep them from seeing him in such stuff as this.

CRUDELY DONE, POORLY PLAYED LIGHT ROMANCE THAT MISSES BADLY

Marie Doro in

HEART'S DESIRE

Famous Players-Paramount

DIRECTOR	Francis J. Grandon
AUTHOR	Shannon Fife
SCENARIO BY	Eve Unsell
CAMERAMAN	Lawrence E. Williams
AS A WHOLE	Awful junk burdened with worse titles
STORY	Inane attempt at romance that was pitiful
DIRECTION	Atmosphere lacked class; characters acted and "extras" were camera-conscious; development of incidents poor
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good and poor; lacked distinction
LIGHTINGS	Generally ordinary; one or two effects, but never classy
CAMERA WORK	Too much of same angle, with bad composition
STAR	Pretty but wasted
SUPPORT	Bad
EXTERIORS	A few good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Rather setty; lacked distinction
DETAIL	Much too much
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WE have had several "bad boys" on the Paramount program lately, but certainly it seems criminal for a concern which is supposed to be one of our best to offer such a release as this alongside of better things, with the same price for all.

Miss Doro is a pretty thing and has had one or two good production, which proves that, properly handled, she is all right.

I would certainly advice you to dodge this, and if you have to play it I would plainly state that it misses fire, if you have any respect at all for the opinion of your patrons.

To begin with, the story is an inane attempt at romance in the costume setting of a French village, with some incidents that are absolutely awful, and much footage devoted to mushy stuff that can't appeal to anything save the sense of humor of your patrons.

The story devoted a lot of attention to such incidents as the hero shooting the heroine's cow because he thought it was a deer and then giving her another, which she thought came from the saints, with this acquaintance developing to the extent that he brought her a book which told the "language of the flowers." Then they showed us several pages in this book, proving that the rose means "love," etc., etc—Oh, boy!—and they expect real human being to pay good money for this stuff and be pleased with it!

It is possible that some exceptional director could have taken this fanciful little romance and, by wonderfully artistic atmosphere and delightful human touches, have developed it into an offering that might have been accepted because of its beauty. But, unfortunately, in this case we have atmosphere that is painfully ordinary, actors that rave all over the place and a lot of "extras" that stand around in very badly grouped scenes with that same evident camera-conscious nervousness which you have seen people register who are having their pictures taken in news-weekly scenes when they are trying to register that they "don't know their picture is being taken."

The "extrees" were awful!—and surely there was no need for the gang hanging around at all, so far as I could see, except that every now and then they didn't have anything to cut to, and so they showed a flash of this bunch of five-dollar-a-day people.

They even pulled the old Keystone stuff of having a kid put a piece of pie on a chair, so that the wrathful, overacting landlord could sit down on it. Poor Paramount—you have come to this! It was evident that some money had been spent on the production to attempt to register atmosphere by costumes and scenes showing villagers, but at no time does this get to you and register as anything except a lot of people having their picture taken.

The titles were terrible! The story was bad enough with so much attention given to unimportant points and so much footage devoted to arguments about paying the rent, but some of the titles were about as bad as anything I've ever bumped into.

As a sample of how they ran all through the picture, they pulled these two when the hero shot the heroine's cow, thinking it was a deer:—which only proved that he was some boob. She said: Oh! why did you shoot? He replied: "I am sorry; I thought it was a deer." Since it had already been planted that he was going out hunting for deer I certainly consider those two, beautiful examples of what titles should not be. There were many other as bad, and some worse.

In the cast were Albert Roscoe, Helen Dahl, Harry Lee, Marie Majerone, Gertrude Norman and Jean Gauthier.

The Box Office Angle

Forget it!

If you have to play it, tell them the truth about it being bad, or else sneak it through like a submarine.

BEAUTIFUL SNOW STUFF LIFTED ORDINARY SURFACE MELLER

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in

THE PAGE MYSTERY

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	Harley Knoles
AUTHOR	Frank R. Adams
CAMERAMAN	Arthur Edeson
AS A WHOLE	Fairly interesting surface melo
STORY	Ordinary, with mystery very short-lived
DIRECTION	Gave some beautiful atmosphere, but didn't make action convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Many beautiful bits; generally good
LIGHTINGS	Some quite effective, particularly exteriors; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STARS	Good, but melo made action unconvincing
SUPPORT	"Acted" quite a little
EXTERIORS	Some beautiful snow stuff; generally very good
INTERIORS	Rather setty, with some lighting too uniform
DETAIL	Quite acceptable
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

WHILE there are some beautiful snow scenes in this which have been nicely photographed, with several of them having excellent lightings, the story is one of those surface melodrama things with a coincidence that hits you in the eye and no mystery to justify the title until you get almost to the finish, where three people who have just cause to murder the willun all shoot at once, apparently, and the question arises as to which one succeeded in doing the "doity" deed. All three confessed, each believing in their own guilt, but finally the woman who had been the willun's "friend" insisted that she had done it, took "pizen" and cashed in, with the result that everybody agreed that maybe she did and let it go at that.

This story had to do with a wealthy willun who was wicked with the "wampires," and we found June Elvidge forced to marry this gink because father got into a financial jam—of course, that's a new (?) situation—and the development led up to the point where, after she had left him, we found her befriended by Carlyle Blackwell, the son of good family, working to make an honest living, who had taken a job as her husband's caretaker for the lodge in the country.

The wicked husband called himself "Colonel Page" when he lived in the woods, so that his wife knew not whom she was working for when she was summoned to act as maid for one of her husband's guests.

When she discovered how Hubby was behaving, she wanted to kill him. One of Hubby's new friends being jealous of another new friend wanted to kill him. The backwoods gink wanted to kill him because he'd ruined his daughter. They all had the impulse at the same moment, and the muchly-to-be-shot-at willun walked out to his death, with three weapons pointed at his heart from different directions.

After Arthur Ashley, who was playing the part of the willun, had done a dramatic "die" in the snow, we had the guests assembled, with the three aforementioned "aimers" all confessing. Of course, we finished off with a love clutch between Miss Elvidge, the ex-wife, and Mr. Blackwell, the hero son of aristocrats.

Miss Elvidge was good looking, as she always is, and registered better than anyone else in the cast.

Mr. Blackwell was an acceptable hero, and Mr. Ashley was a willunous willun, although his make-up was not very good and he "acted" quite a bit.

The remainder of the cast were just ordinary. In the cast were Frank Goldsmith, Alec B. Francis, Charles Duncan, Pinna Nesbit and Albert Hart.

The Box Office Angle.

The best thing about this picture is the beautiful snow stuff. As a program release it will undoubtedly go over all right, but certainly I wouldn't enthuse over it, because no one else will.

It is possible that Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge have a following, and I can understand Miss Elvidge having admirers, but from the stereotyped hero stuff that Mr. Blackwell walks through I can't figure out why anyone should rave very much over seeing him in a film.

Possibly when it gets real hot you can play this and put enough emphasis on the snow stuff to make 'em enjoy it, because it looks cool. I can't see any other angle that justifies any particular emphasis.

SPLENDIDLY PRODUCED AND PLAYED DRAMATIC STORY THAT HOLDS

Harry T. Morey and Alice Joyce in

HER SECRET

Greater Vitigraph

DIRECTOR	Perry N. Vekroff
AUTHOR	Perry N. Vekroff
CAMERAMAN	Arthur T. Quinn
AS A WHOLE	Splendid dramatic situation beautifully developed, play and handled
STORY	Coincidence provided situation, but was naturally and effectively worked out
DIRECTION	Gave splendid atmosphere, excellent tempo and effective dramatic values
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective bits; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STARS	He, forceful and human; she, very appealing
SUPPORT	Excellent types; played smoothly
EXTERIORS	Good; very few
INTERIORS	Well handled; not exceptional, but fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Little touches very well done
TIME	Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

UNUSUAL credit must go to the producer and author, Perry Vekroff, for this offering. He has built the story around a coincidence, but he has developed it smoothly, without making it obvious, and when the big situation comes it is decidedly effective and perfectly natural, without the coincidence itself marring the force of the dramatic moments.

The story combines action, pathos, real heart interest of the sort that makes you swallow hard once or twice, and we get a logical happy ending after several very dramatic moments wherein we face the problem of the double moral standard, with the husband astounded at a revelation concerning his wife, at first, and then the wife shocked even more by discovering something concerning her husband.

I am not going to tell you the plot, because I believe you will enjoy the story more when you see it, but I will give you an idea as to the character of the story, which I can tell you is clean and not objectionable because of the manner in which it has been handled even though the entire story is built upon a scene in a Western dance hall hotel where an innocent school teacher is attacked by a drunkard in her bedroom, who mistakes her room for that of one of the dance hall girls.

After these dance hall scenes, which have been exceptionally well handled so that they would not be too rough, and, at the same time, carry the atmosphere perfectly, the scene moves to the East, where it carries through almost the entire remaining footage dealing with the home life of Mr. Morey and Miss Joyce and charming Little Kittens Reichert, who is Miss Joyce's daughter, adopted by her without her husband knowing that she was the mother of the child.

Both Mr. Morey and Miss Joyce do some splendid work in the dramatic moments, and Producer Vekroff has held the scenes to a tempo which made them very effective.

In passing, I want to comment upon the fact that this production is a forceful demonstration of the need of giving more time and attention to the scenarios which are to be put on the screen. It happens that Producer Vekroff mentioned this story to me some months ago, so that I know that he has had it in his heart for a long time. That means that he has had an opportunity to develop it intelligently, and consequently he has been able to give us a decidedly worth while production. The old method of writing them tonight and going to work on them tomorrow is all wrong, and always will be.

Patsy De Forrest, who did a bit in the dance hall scene, certainly made it stand out. She was dressed a la Vamp—and, boy—she did look like a million dollars! She had only a few scenes, but they certainly registered.

Mother Maurice had a chance to register several little pathetic touches in the part of Miss Joyce's aunt.

Others in the cast were George Cooper and Robert Kelley.

The Box Office Angle

I would go to this pretty strong, promising that it is an exceptionally well-done dramatic story of human situations and you can surely, by giving them something of a personal guarantee, get them in by playing up the presence of Harry Morey and Alice Joyce.

This is far above the average program release, and, while, of course, it isn't a tremendously big production, it is certainly an intelligently developed dramatic story, very well played and handled.

You might arouse particular interest in this story by advertising along these lines:

"Have you a secret from your husband? See Harry T. Morey and Alice Joyce in 'Her Secret.'" "Should young people tell their past before they are married? See 'Her Secret.'"

ENOUGH HUMOR IN CHARACTERIZATION TO MAKE THIS ENTERTAIN

Jackie Saunders in

THE WILDCAT

Balboa—Mutual

DIRECTOR	Sherwood Macdonald
SCENARIO BY	Daniel Frederic Whitcomb
CAMERAMAN	William Beckway
AS A WHOLE	Light comedy rather entertaining
STORY	Very, very slender; end was combination of "Taming of Shrew" and "Misleading Lady"
DIRECTION	Registered many human bits, but let action slump towards end
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; sometimes fair
LIGHTINGS	Some very fine; many ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Personality pleases
SUPPORT	Good, except funny attempt to disguise girl as man
EXTERIORS	Beautiful snow bits; generally good
INTERIORS	Very setty; lacked distinction
DETAIL	Girls' make-up bad; comedy element disarms criticism
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED from the viewpoint of entertainment and classing this as a program release, I would say that your fans will probably enjoy this and feel that it is much better than the general run.

There was just one truly weak spot in the entire development, that being the disguising of the hero's sister as a man by putting her in an old suit and a funny slouch hat, with a fake mustache adorning her upper lip. Anyone, at a glance, will know that she is a girl and will marvel at the heroine's inability to realize this fact. Had this disguise been better handled, or a girl chosen for this character who could have been made up to more nearly resemble a man, there would have been a surprise in this twist and it would have helped the story instead of hurting it.

The first three of four reels are devoted to many little incidents of no particular value to the story, but of decided entertainment value because of the comedy touches and the human note. This footage, for the most part, was used to plant two or three thoughts. First, that Jackie Saunders was a wild Indian who refused to be a society "goil," and insisted upon being just a plain human being.

We found her having a good time in association with a little nigger kid, pushing a society man into a fountain, chasing a chauffeur up a tree, etc., and then, on the other hand, we saw her give her money to a nursery as a fund to care for the children of mothers who were unable to pay the small fee.

There was no willun or "wampire" in this, for which we thank the author.

The hero was planted as rather a hard successful business man who held the heroine's father in his power, and then we found almost immediately that the heroine's father had befriended the hero when he was a boy, and consequently the hero had been laying plans all these years to be of real assistance to this old man when he would need it.

From that point on the story became a combination of "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Misleading Lady." Miss Saunders got some good comedy out of an incident where she came down dressed as Sis Hopkins to meet the wealthy hero at dinner because she had an idea that he was there as a wife-hunter.

Finally the hero, through a plan which was plainly a frame-up on the part of the hero and the girl's family, kidnapped her and carried her away to a cabin in the hills, where he looked mean and pulled the caveman stuff until finally, after she had been handed a few good scares, she pleaded with him to protect her and marry her. Since that was the desired finale, they quit.

Miss Saunders made her most favorable impression by her personality. At times she screened to advantage but frequently her make-up was quite in evidence and then it was only her pep and sense of comedy values that kept her registering favorably.

The remainder of the cast were quite satisfactory, except for the make-up of the hero's sister as a man.

The general atmosphere of the offering was good, with some particularly pleasing exteriors. Unfortunately, the interiors lacked the artistic distinction necessary to make them seem proper for the elaborate exteriors shown, and in several places the interior sets had a decided "setty" appearance.

Considered as a whole, however, the atmosphere was satisfactory and surely the production will entertain.

In the cast were Daniel Gilfether, Mollie McConnell, Arthur Shirley and Nell Hoffman.

The Box Office Angle

I believe that you can safely play this, providing you don't promise too much as to the merits of the production. Confine your advertising to the statement that it is pleasing entertainment. Those who did like Jackie Saunders will undoubtedly enjoy her work in this.

The story idea has enough good stuff to hold the interest, and it is chiefly to be commended for the fact that it hasn't a lot of bad stuff. Its merits are more in what has been left out than in what has been put in.

I believe the title is rather a good one coupled with the name of Jackie Saunders, and I would see to it that the impression created is plainly that she is "The Wildcat."

You might say : "Have you any daughters who act like 'Wildcats'? What would you figure would be the proper method to tame a girl who acted like a 'Wildcat'?"

ORDINARY SURFACE MELO OF POOR STORY PLAYED TOO FAR FROM CAMERA

Marjorie Rambeau in

THE DEBT

Frank Powell—Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Powell
SCENARIO BY ..... Clara S. Beranger
CAMERAMAN ..... Billy Wagner
AS A WHOLE ..... Ordinary surface action never convinced; generally played too far from camera
STORY ..... Lacked human element, heart interest and interesting development DIRECTION ..... Photographed sets rather than people; gave too few closeups; failed to make action register as human PHOTOGRAPHY ..... General effect good; sometimes out of focus
LIGHTINGS ..... Much spot-lighting; frequently quite bad
CAMERA WORK ..... Very bad because same angle too much; too much foreground
STAR ..... Beautiful if lighted intelligently; has poise and real personality
SUPPORT ..... Very ordinary; some very actory
EXTERIORS ..... A few very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Some good; others very setty
DETAIL ..... Many things unexplained
TIME ..... Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

I CERTAINLY would not consider this an offering that would please.

The chief faults with this are that the lightings fail to show the players to proper advantage, this being particularly true of Miss Rambeau, and throughout the offering the director used too much foreground in all of his scenes, playing every one far from the camera. He persisted in photographing sets rather than people, there being a very objectionable lack of close-ups which would bring the characters in sufficiently intimate touch with the audience to make their thoughts and actions intelligible.

The story was very ordinary and really never registered at any time. It started off with a lot of business about father contracting a moral obligation because of some mining property, with the daughter saying that she would pay "The Debt." We then had much footage of daughter marrying a guy who was supposed to make a sacrifice in doing so, the two going to America where they slaved for years, according to a title, to pay "The Debt."

The willun, who had refused to marry the daughter when the scandal broke about "The Debt," afterwards decided he would like to make her his'n without marrying her, so he chased off to America and found her immediately, with the result that her husband's mother misunderstood when she found the willun embracing his wife, and so she was chased out of the house and made to work in a factory in order to earn a living.

The willun knew right where to find her when he got ready again, and this time he planted her in a beautiful home, where Hubby finally picked her up when their child became ill and wanted mother.

Of course, the real wife of the willun showed up at the right time, she having found the apartment where Miss Rambeau was living, very easily, and when she told about the willun having deserted her, of course, Miss Rambeau decided to walk out on the willun, and just then Hubby blew in so that there could be an encounter between him and the willun. This resulted in both men being shot, and they died, with the husband stating as he cashed in: "The debt is paid. You can go back now." Since we had forgotten all about the debt, it was nice of them to remind us at this time, because it provided an excuse for the title of the picture.

There were several struggles, most of which were very badly done, with the result that they became sort of funny. The chief weakness of this offering, however, after remembering that the story is poor, was the failure of the director to bring his characters within a sufficiently intimate distance of the camera to allow an audience to know what they were doing and thinking.

An attempt had evidently been made to get good lighting all the way through this, but frequently the photography was out of focus and some of the lighting on the faces of the various characters was truly awful!

Miss Rambeau is a very beautiful woman, as proved by a few short flashes which gave her intelligent lighting, and consequently the many scenes where she was so abnominably lighted seemed to be all the more criminal.

The mother of Miss Rambeau's husband acted upon any and all occasions. She certainly did emote "with gestures" in a painful manner!

The story was utterly lacking in heart interest, because there was no development of a real love story. The suggestion that the willun had provided Miss Rambeau with the beautiful home simply because they intended to get married was very evidently a situation which had been titled for the censor's benefit, because, according to the action, it would surely seem that the star had decided to take the easiest way with the willun.

The Box Office Angle

I don't think that you are justified in offering intelligent patrons this sort of a production, because it lacks so many of the essentials that they will certainly not be pleased with it. If you are playing ordinary program stuff this may possibly get by, without serious kicks, but certainly it isn't the sort of film that anyone would ever really enjoy or enthuse over, and I can't see the percentage of playing this sort of thing, no matter how cheap you get it, because everyone of these that you show your patrons just does that much more towards making then think—"What's the use of going any more—you so seldom see anything that you really like."

EXCEPTIONAL CHARACTERIZATION IN FAST, FINE TEMPO MELO; WILL GO BIG

Stuart Holmes in

THE DERELICT

Fox Film

DIRECTOR ..... Carl Harbaugh
AUTHOR ..... Carl Harbaugh
CAMERAMAN ..... Georges Benoit
AS A WHOLE..... Exceptionally well-done combination of characterization, pathos and effective gripping melodrama
STORY..Had one convenient spot, but affords exceptional characterization opportunities, convincing action and good climaxes
DIRECTION..... Made atmosphere distinctive; had wonderful tempo and developed situations to climaxes beautifully
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Distinctive and effective
LIGHTINGS..... Many artistic and exceptionally effective
CAMERA WORK..... Excellent, with some very fine "doubles" and visions; close-ups and composition very fine
STAR..... Gave wonderful characterization; forceful; human; pathetic
SUPPORT... Some splendid types; Wanda Petit beautiful
EXTERIORS..... Well chosen and splendid composition
INTERIORS ..... Very good
DETAIL..... Some fine little bits
TIME..... Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

THIS is one of the best Fox Films in many, many weeks.

Stuart Holmes has the best opportunity for real characterization that I can remember since the days of "Should a Mother Tell?"

The story was not wonderful as a script, but it has been developed with a swinging tempo and exceptionally human characterization so that it had a compelling grip that held you perfectly, with several climaxes that hit hard.

Mr. Holmes appeared in a sympathy heavy part which started him off as a "rotter" who realized his unworthiness, with the result that he became a bum, having sacrificed himself so that the woman he loved might be happy.

After he had hit the depths of the down-and-outers, by a convenient twist we found his daughter in the hands of a roue who had slipped her into a disreputable house, and there was some beautifully handled rushing action leading up to the climax where the derelict entered this home by climbing over the veranda and killed the old roue, while his daughter escaped.

The girl was apprehended and put through the third degree, while we saw the bum in the saloon tortured by his guilty conscience, with an exceptionally effective vision where the saloon, filled with loafers, was transformed into a court-room where he was being tried, the judge of which court sat drinking beer from a pitcher while other characters were curious combinations of saloon bums and court-room officials.

Driven to desperation by this vision, the derelict rushed out to police headquarters, where he gave himself up and confessed, this being kept very dramatic all the way, with the producer doing the very difficult stunt of bringing a vision into this confession without halting the tempo of the action for a second. This was done by the splendid work of Mr. Holmes and the unusual camera effect secured.

From start to finish this picture belonged to the star. He dominated the action at all times and certainly gave a forceful bit of work.

There were some splendid types in the supporting cast, and Wanda Petit, who played Mr. Holmes' daughter, was a particularly beautiful youngster.

Mary Martin was excellent, as she almost always is.

In the cast were Dan Mason, Carl Eckstrom, June Daye and Olive Trevor.

The Box Office Angle.

This should be a very, very good production for any house where they like action and gripping melodrama. There is enough good characterization to make it certain that most any audience should enjoy it very much, but it will particularly please where they like fast, compelling melodrama.

There is a chance here for you to get some money—real money—because Stuart Holmes is very well known throughout the country because of his having appeared in so many big Fox productions. While he has only been starred alone recently, he, personally, has been known for many months—even years—and his name has been known to most fans at least a year. I would play this up, making particular mention of the fact that Mr. Holmes has a chance in this to do a sympathy character part which is exceptionally human and very dramatic.

You can safely promise that this is far superior to the average program release.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN

Producer of

STATE RIGHTS FILMS

1482 Broadway, New York City

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID'S Is Read Not Skinned

Send Me

Your Reports

It Means Better Pictures, Better Business

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE
THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM
WID'S
INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1917. NO. 19 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

IT'S UP TO YOU!

Make a real Howl for Help!

TO anyone who is NOT familiar with the inside workings of big film organizations as they have always been constituted, it seems absolutely ridiculous to size up the advertising helps and general run of advertising matter prepared for the use of the exhibitor.

The reason for all this, in a very few words, is just this:

The big executives who might know better never give this any attention, and never have, and the men who are hired to do this sort of work either don't know, which is the case in the larger percentage of instances, or else they've landed in a rut and as a consequence grind out junk without rhyme or reason.

Any intelligent exhibitor knows more about what the lithographs should be, what sort of heralds he ought to have, what sort of slides he would like to have, the proper subject matter for cuts, and the usable sort of press matter than does the average press agent who is employed to do this thing.

I have on many occasions howled about this point. I was a press agent once myself and quit for the very good reason that they didn't pay press agents any money to speak of, and there seemed to be no inclination or tendency to ever do so. I can't say accurately as to how much money any of them are getting now, but, boy!—I know about what most of 'em deserve.

The trouble with the present condition is that the men who really know what sort of material to put out fail to get off in a corner and look at their work often enough to realize whether they are hitting the mark or not. They go along in the same rut month after month and year after year like a lot of sheep. Because one concern has always used scenes from the film, on their lithographs, all the rest of them do the same thing. And, regrettably enough, when some of the intelligent boys want to get away from this routine, the big boss who should be making buttonholes, says: "Oh, no—you can't do that! Give 'em the same stuff they've been getting. It has been good enough in the past." Well, it hasn't been good enough in the past, and you fellers who are running theatres know it! But, unfortunately, you don't yell loud enough and often enough, and so nothing is done.

There are several very, very important reforms that are needed. One of these is for paper that will really sell your seats—paper that will be distinctive, different, classy and carry a sales talk. The next is the lobby display stuff, which, instead of being the routine junk of twelve assorted still photographs that generally mean nothing, should have the same seat-selling sales value.

When it comes to slides with which you are to make your preliminary announcements, you get the cheapest of the cheap, for which you pay 25 cents, while the manufacturer pays 7 or 8 cents. Make them give you better slides. They're made.

Now, I appreciate the fact that the manufacturer must make a good profit on most of his advertising material, because, unfortunately, there is always a lot of this left on hand, so that unless he makes a very good profit on what he does sell, the advertising department shows a big deficit.

Personally, I have always been very much in favor of the manufacturer giving free with his film a certain amount of advertising, this to be figured as sufficient to properly and intelligently sell the picture.

To my mind, this would result in better business, which would make it possible for the exhibitor to pay a larger film rental, and, because of the very elastic condition of film rentals, I believe that the cost of all advertising matter can be tacked on to the film rental and the exhibitor would pay it much more readily than he does in the present system.

As it stands now, many exhibitors are short-sighted on advertising. They count the cost of the different necessary adjuncts and stint themselves on their orders, with the result that it mars the possible seat-selling value of what is used.

However, to get back to the main point, which is one reason why they don't buy more stuff—most of it is rotten. No other word is expressive enough.

For instance, take the newspaper cuts which are provided by most companies for exhibitor use. You will find in the trade papers elaborate plates which have cost real money, and frequently are well done. On this same picture the exhibitor is handed a lot of impossible junk. Here is an instance of the assinine methods of many companies. In a very large percentage of cases where a star appears in a production, you will find that the newspaper cuts show a scene in which the star isn't present, and I insist that there is nothing that really means less for real advertising value than the ordinary still picture from a film.

By all means give them pictures of the star or of the essential advertising points of the production. As, for instance, in the case of a play which has a great reputation, give them a picture of the author; or in case the producer is the man that has the box office value, give them a picture of the producer, or preferably the producer in action.

Another very essential point is this: The story of any production should never be told in synopsis form in any advertising matter.

Of all the boob tricks in the world, none is greater than to print in synopsis form on a herald or in press matter the story of the picture. Of what earthly use is it for a director to work to secure a certain dramatic development carrying suspense, when the advertising matter elaborately explains just how the story finishes. It's all wrong, Hezekiah!

The same thing applies to still pictures. Never should any scene be shown in any advertising matter which deals with a situation which would give away the important, essential suspense elements of the story.

When it comes to press matter which is handed out to the exhibitors to be used in newspapers, there is another real yell coming.

Most exhibitors have to pay real Honest-to-Jerry "coin of the realm" to get into the newspaper columns. Why in the world do the press agents evolve these marvelous quarter-column, half-column and full column stories about nothing in particular, instead of giving short, snappy readers that really contain a sales talk.

Now, emphasize that point, "Sales Talk." Every one of these little paragraphs should have at least one specific reason why the man or woman you are trying to reach should see this picture, instead of pet dog and fancy pajama pipe dreams.

I can rave on here for another hour or two about this pathetic situation, but I'm not going to. You boys who are running theatres know just how right I am.

Now, what I am going to yell about the hardest is just this:

Make some noise! Write some letters! Take this up with the boss and mark your letters "Personal." Insist upon an answer. State specific instances. You can take any of your recent productions and find one good-sized kick. Now, go to it!

No one can do these things for you like you can do them for yourself. Most of the big fellers will read this and it'll maybe make a dent. He'll probably call in his press agent and advertising man and start an argument, and then two weeks from now it'll all be forgotten in the mad rush of New York routine, which keeps them going in the daytime and entertains them at night with the bright lights and restaurant stuff. These fellers here can't help it if they get into a rut. It's an awful battle to keep out of one. It's up to you boys who are sitting out in the open, facing the public, to tell these men who, for the most part, want to give you what you want, what you actually do want.

Tell him forcibly—don't mince words about it! Let him know you mean it. That may get you some action!

Most of the men who are now working on the advertising and press agent jobs are capable enough. They simply have to be guided instead of being lulled to sleep with the boss' expression of satisfaction because they got a certain amount of space in the "House Organ" trade journals which are seen each week by the boss.

It is an unfortunate condition that our big executives don't take the trouble to go out and check up the advertising matter issued on each picture, but they are busy with what they consider more important items, and it is up to you boys who are affected to make them realize that there is hardly anything of more actual importance at the present moment than the providing of intelligent seat-selling ad. helps for exhibitors.

Don't let 'em kid you about this, because any one of 'em will come back and tell you that they have the greatest stuff in the world and are doing everything in their power to intelligently co-operate with the exhibitor.

State specific instances. Send in the dope. Show them just what you are kicking about. Then you will get action.

It will do you no good whatever to argue on general principles. You might as well "sing" to the Woolworth Building.

A Binder

for WID'S

$1.50 Prepaid Everywhere

Romaine Fielding

THE LAMBS

[Engaged]

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States

Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.

T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

DELIGHTFUL HUMAN BITS, BUT DRIFTED INTO AN OLD STORY

Mary Miles Minter in

ENVIRONMENT

American—Mutual

DIRECTOR.....James Kirkwood
AUTHOR.....James Kirkwood
AS A WHOLE.....Rather human small-town stuff, but central story situation very ancient STORY.....Girl sacrifice to shield friend stuff, made interesting by little touches
DIRECTION.....Gave splendid village atmosphere with many human bits, but couldn't make old situations impress
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally very good; some excellent effects
LIGHTINGS.....A few quite effective; generally good
CAMERA WORK.....Good
SCENAR.....Screens beautifully; pleasing personality
SUPPORT.....Some very good types; a few camera-conscious
INTERIORS.....Fitted village atmosphere
EXTERIORS.....Good; particularly commencement set
DETAIL.....Some good little bits
TIME.....Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THIS started off as if it were going to be an exceptional little film, because it was human from the start with some excellent village atmosphere and an evident attempt to place characterization above action.

Unfortunately, after all of the characters had been nicely planted and the atmosphere clearly understood, they started into the action. Blooey!—it was the good old misunderstood situation, with the shero defending her girl friend who had done in wrong, taking the blame of the other's error upon herself in such a way that her sweetheart, who was the minister, thought it was all wrong.

Of course, in due time, when they got to the fifth reel, the minister overheard a conversation between the shero, who had been sacrificing herself, and the girl friend who had been shielded, with the result that the hero knew it was all right now, and we had a clutch for the finish and such is life—in scenarios.

In this offering Mary Miles Minter had a chance to register her pleasing personality to rather good advantage, because she appeared as the daughter of a village drunkard, and in the early part of the film we had several very pathetic little bits where she was fighting her battle to hold her position with the other children in the school so that she would make as good an appearance on commencement day as the others.

We saw Mary working on her own graduation gown, and the scenes showing the commencement exercises were well handled and will undoubtedly appeal particularly in the small towns where they appreciate the importance locally of such an occasion.

There were a number of inserts where the little star wrote in a diary to her dead mother. Several of these were good for a gulp.

Following the commencement exercises. the entire gathering came out into a very bad storm, which was effectively shown, and we saw the little star's father staggering down the street, with a child in the crowd calling out to his father: "Oh, look at the funny drunken man!" There was a kick in that little title and in the scene which followed, and, as I say, up to that point the production had shown promise of being distinctive because of the human touches and the atmosphere.

From that time on, however, the action quickly turned to the love stuff between the daughter of the wealthy man of the town and a he-wampire, which was busted in on by our shero, who pulled the sacrifice, and consequently got in so bad that the villagers planned to send her to an institution.

Of course, when the truth came out, the minister did the grand heroics and arose in his pulpit to announce that he was handing in his resignation, and that he intended to marry the daughter of the drunkard on such and such a date. Inasmuch as he did not ask the young lady, this was quite a bit of nerve—but, then, they do this in the movies.

George Fisher, as the minister, was a bit better than any juvenile I've seen with Miss Minter to date, and while George isn't a marvel as a juvenile, he was quite a bit more than satisfactory.

Certainly I believe as much as ever in the possibilities of Mary Miles Minter if she is properly handled, and it seems a pity to me that she isn't given better opportunities.

Playing the part of the self-willed little daughter of the wealthy gink of the village was Miss Minter's sister, Margaret Shelby. She handled this part beautifully, getting over without exaggeration the flippant mannerisms of the youngster in the small town who feels that she is better than the others because her dad has a little coin.

Others in the cast were George Periolat, Harvey Clark, Emma Kluge, Arthur Howard, Al Vosburg, Lucille Ward and Jack Vosburgh.

The Box Office Angle.

Despite the fact that this is a very ancient tale when it gets down to real story, I believe there is enough human stuff in it to make it quite worthy of booking, and I would say that Mary Miles Minter, despite the fact that she has had some bad pictures, is still a good bet at the box office.

You can safely take a chance on this, figured as a program release, and I should think it would prove rather good entertainment.

It is to be regretted that these obvious, ancient story ideas are "wished" into otherwise good productions, because this film, for instance, would have been much better had they continued along the atmosphere-characterization lines without ever arriving anywhere in particular as to story action, because, after all, people want to see human things. They don't want to see action which, the moment a certain incident starts, is perfectly obvious to them for two or three reels to come.

Concentrate your attention on the star, in your advertising, and don't say too much about the picture itself unless you play up the one point that it is a human story of small-town life with several effective bits of pathos interwoven with a bit of romance.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD LESTER CUNEO
Heavies
YORKE METRO

DELIGHTFUL LITTLE HUMAN BITS, BUT LOVE STUFF MADE IT SLUMP

Marguerite Clark in

THE VALENTINE GIRL

Famous Players—Paramount

DIRECTOR	J. Searle Dawley
AUTHOR	Laura Sawyer
CAMERAMAN	H. Lyman Broening
AS A WHOLE	Delightfully entertaining until father arrested, finish slumped badly
STORY	Very slender and hardly good, except provided whimsical touches of contrast at first
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere and registered plenty of little human bits
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK	Excellent; many fine close-ups
STAR	Delightful personality; appeals most as child
SUPPORT	Very good, except for juvenile who didn't register
EXTERIORS	A few very good
INTERIORS	Distinctive and nicely handled
DETAIL	Story a bit hazy, but little touches and atmosphere good
TIME	Sixty-seven minutes (5 parts)

AFTER stopping to analyze why the last of this absolutely failed to register and seemed to be a decided slump, the thing which struck me most forcibly is just this: I don't believe we like to see Marguerite Clark grow up when she has played most of the film as a kiddie. That doesn't mean that Miss Clark can't do love scenes delightfully and doesn't make a charming little sweetheart for any hero, but I believe the trouble lies here.—She is so convincing as a kid that I believe that when she has a kid story she should be kept a kid. If she is to do love stuff, I think she should be started off at an age that won't make too much of a jump.

This production went along wonderfully for about three reels and a half, and we were just having a grand time with "Marg" and her kid stunts contrasted against the grim life of her father, who was by profession a gambler, and by instinct a gentleman.

Then, all of a sudden—Bang! They arrested father, "wished" charming little "Marg" into a kid party in a church, and pulled a juvenile on us wearing knickerbockers, when—Bless Pete!—he was big enough to be driving a truck!

From that point they jumped five years and sent this juvenile back into the story, saved from a wreck, and the rest of it was occupied with him trying to make good with our beautiful little kiddie, who somehow didn't seem "grown-up" to us yet. Of course, she was afraid of her past because she'd been telling a lie about her identity in order that the kind minister would keep her in his home, and so father had to finish his term in prison and come to the house so that she might tell whom she was.

When she pulled the fact that father was an ex-convict, this juvenile, the minister and his wife all threw up their hands in holy horror and turned away from both this charming youngster and her father. We wanted them both to get up and walk out on this gang, but they didn't do it, which made us sore again.

Then father said: "But I wasn't guilty—I was falsely accused"—and, Good night!—the whole bunch immediately turned around, shook him by the hand, told him he was a grand feller and the young boob said, all right—he'd marry the girl. That guy couldn't have h any daughter of mine, whether I was guilty or n guilty, after he'd pulled such a "bone!"

In other words, there was no question about the cor plete illusion in the early part of this film as to Mi Clark registering as a youngster. We all loved her f the cute kid things she did, and the action was very i teresting. But, unless I'm sadly mistaken—and I do believe I am on this point—this offering is going slump badly on the finish for everyone.

Frank Losee, who is a mighty capable actor, appear as Miss Clark's father, and these two carried the fi of the story beautifully. There had been a mother w had left Mr. Losee, or else she had died, this never bei exactly cleared up, but, anyway, this father and daught had some mighty good scenes for both comedy a pathos in the first three and one-half reels.

It is surely too bad that some simple little hum development couldn't have been used to have carri this through to the finish, with Miss Clark still a kid and father brought out to have a decent chance.

As is too often the case in Famous Players prod tions, we had a number of bad titles. In one place had a title which said that Miss Clark "made history h playmate." It seems to me that this would be pretty ha to do. She might make historical characters her pl mates, but the statement that she had made hist her playmate will certainly jar anyone and make th stop to figure out what is meant, which is always pr of a bad title.

When Mr. Losee came home from prison and sou out the old man who had been his friend and his dau ter's friend, they pulled an awful title on him. He h come in to the little novelty store and taken a seat, a the title registered: "I have served my sentenc where is my child?" Oh, boy!—Whoever wrote t title knew that those two points were to be got over—First, that he had not escaped from prison, had served his sentence; and the other, that he wo naturally inquire about his child, but, believe me—e would not have said it in that way.

In the scene where the juvenile and the minister his wife had turned him down when they found was an ex-convict and then suddenly took him to th arms, they had hardly acknowledged him, when minister walked over to the door and said: "Good-b and good luck." It was sort'uv a "kick in the ey because it sounded like one of those "Here's your ha what's your hurry?" things.

There were a number of good sets, with the gambl house scenes well handled, and the entire offering car an artistic distinction which gave it a register of cl

In the cast were Kathryn Adams, Richard Bart mess, Maggie Holloway Fisher, Adolph Menjou Edith Campbell Walker.

The Box Office Angle.

Marguerite Clark is a sure-fire box office proposit and she has enough good stuff in this offering for to have no fear as to it proving more than satisfact However, I fear that most of your fans will sort of that the production lets down on the finish, and mos them will not know exactly why, because they will o stop to realize the theory which I advanced in the view—that we don't like to see her "grow up" so denly. For that reason I doubt if you'll have any criticism from your patrons. They'll all admit tha is very good entertainment, and there is enough plea stuff that most of them will be willing to recommen

Certainly this is decidedly better than the Param average.

BEAUTIFULLY DEVELOPED MYSTERY ROMANCE WELL DONE; SLUMPS AT END

Dorothy Phillips in

THE FLASHLIGHT

Bluebird.

DIRECTOR ..... Ida May Park
AUTHOR ..... Albert M. Treynore
SCENARIO BY ..... Ida May Park
CAMERAMAN ..... King D. Gray
AS A WHOLE ..... Interestingly developed in pleasing atmosphere until very end, when slumped a bit with vision stuff
STORY ..... Murder mystery romance nicely handled
DIRECTION ..... Kept action interesting; gave splendid plot development in pleasing exterior atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Many distinctive and effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Very good
STAR ..... Forceful personality; rather pleasing
SUPPORT ..... Very good
EXTERIORS ..... Well chosen; mostly mountain and forest stuff
INTERIORS ..... Good except vision scenes at end, which were setty
DETAIL ..... Nicely handled, except leaving scarf in cabin, which was forced
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED on the average basis, I would say that this will register as an excellent film in any community where they have been getting Bluebirds regularly.

This is the first production from Ida May Park as director, and since she also wrote the scenario full credit must go to her for the intelligent development of this murder mystery romance. Without question, she can, on this picture one, take her place among the worth-while producers.

The plot isn't tremendous, but is a simple murder mystery situation with a novelty touch added by the introduction of a young hero who was hunting animals for ashlight photographs instead of using a gun to kill em.

After setting his camera one night, the flash was suddenly discharged and then two shots rang out. Hero ook his camera to his cabin thinking he had secured e photograph of a fox, or some other animal, but found the plate the picture of a girl. The next morning he arned that an old hermit had been murdered in his abin.

Because hero had visited the cabin the day before and s footprint was found, the sheriff arrested him for the urder. He denied that his gun had been discharged, ot knowing that his valet had used it, and that made e circumstantial evidence against him rather strong.

In the night he did a get-away, escaping by canoe down e river, only to be wrecked and found the next morng by the girl of the photograph, who mysteriously eaded with him to help her get out of the woods.

The two then had an exciting escape from a pursuing posse, which ended after several days of wandering, with their discovering that they were back at the scene of the crime. Here the girl went to the authorities and accused the hero of the murder, with the result that he was placed on trial, and we had a very dramatic backwoods trial with the audience nicely twisted as to the intent of the heroine and the result of the situation, until finally, when placed upon the stand, the heroine was caught in cross-examination by the introduction of her scarf as evidence. It had been left by her in the cabin where the murdered man was found.

The hero, by the introduction of the photograph, had endeavored to prove that she was leaving the cabin instead of going to it before the shots were heard, but the fact that she wore the scarf in the photograph proved that the picture had been taken before the murder.

Just at this point, where everybody will be wondering as to how it is all going to end, they pulled the real surprise by introducing the hermit, who wasn't dead at all. It was his half-brother, who looked exactly like him, and then we had a vision explaining why this man had come to kill the hermit, who had in turn killed him, and the explanation proved that it had been self-defense, so that everything was lovely.

The moment the "twin brother" stuff was pulled the production slumped, and the vision stuff, which is always hard to register at such a point in the story, lacked distinction as to settings, and thereby let the production down a bit as to general tone. Since this came very late in the offering, however, the favorable impression will have been so thoroughly registered that I am sure most any one will consider this an entertaining offering.

Dorothy Phillips, as the heroine, did very pleasing work, she having a forceful personality that dominates and still appeals.

William Stowell was a very pleasing six-foot hero.

Lon Chaney, as the hermit, had rather a bum beard, but was very satisfactory.

A number of good types were introduced as mountaineers.

Others in the cast were Alfred Allen and George Berrill.

The Box Office Angle.

Playing this up as a mystsery romance, I believe it will register very satisfactorily in communities where they are accustomed to the average program quality. The story development for the first four reels is excellent, and surely it will hold the interest of any one. The woodland and mountain stream exteriors were good locations, and the photography made the general impression very pleasing up to the finish.

I would emphasize the name of this and the fact that it is a mystery story, with the additional note that it has been produced by a woman. That angle will interest many, because women like to feel that their sex can do things as well as, if not better than, the men. You might center your attention upon the fact that Miss Park has been a successful scenario writer and that now she has proven her ability to direct as well.

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General
of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
e Benjamin Chapin Studios
d Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York City

TREATMENT, CLOSEUPS, PLAYERS MAKE UNCONVINCING ACTION INTERES

Gladys Brockwell in

HER TEMPTATION

Fox Film.

DIRECTOR ..... Richard Stanton
AUTHOR ..... Norris Shannon
SCENARIO BY ..... Ben Cohn
CAMERAMAN ..... J. D. Jennings
AS A WHOLE ..... Unconvincing melo made distinctive by camera work, lightings and close-ups
STORY ..... Lacked human note of conviction, but treatment helped it DIRECTION ..... Gave excellent tempo to individual scenes, although cameraman and editor responsible for much of this PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent, although occasionally make-up of star was noticeable
LIGHTINGS ..... Many very artistic and truly effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Splendid close-ups, with effective vignetting all the way
STAR ..... Dominant personality with emotional power; particularly effective in close-ups; displayed figger at times
SUPPORT ..... Willun had poise and authority but would look at camera; others good
EXTERIORS ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Generally distinctive and well handled
DETAIL ..... Good; although hypnotism incidents unconvincing
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

ANYWHERE that program stuff is accepted this should register as a very good film, because the treatment has made an unconvincing melodrama rather effective. We get excellent lightings, a distinctive atmosphere, and find most of the action played in close-ups, with the individual scenes so cut as to give a splendid tempo. This moves along in such a manner as to hold your interest, even though the story itself never registers.

The plot has to do with hypnotism, it being one of those things where a willun hypnotizes a wealthy man's widow and then afterwards works on her sister, becau she is a bit more youthful and attractive and he fin that the money will eventually go to her.

The climax comes where a doctor friend of the wido who loves sister, goes to the church where willun a sister are to be married and hypnotizes the groom the altar, with the result that he forces him to confe to having murdered the wealthy man, whose widow afterwards convinced that she had committed the crim

After the confession, when he was aroused from h hypnotic condition, the willun rushed to the belfry the church and jumped to his death, which is very mu "movie meller."

Of course, the doctor and sister were reunited, and t widow, who had really learned to love the willun, w left weeping over the corpse.

Gladys Brockwell had much to do in this and did quite well. Most of her scenes were played in close-u and she held the attention by her playing. Unfortuna ly, in a few places the lighting was such as to regist her make-up too noticeably, but this happened or occasionally.

Bertram Grassby, as the willun hypnotist, was ve good except for his insisting upon looking at the came every once in a while—which is always bad stuff.

James Cruze, as the doctor, was used as the domina will to overcome the willun hypnotist.

Beatrice Burnham as the younger sister was rath pleasing as a contrasting personality to Miss Brockw

Ralph Lewis, as the wealthy "wictim," was very go

The Box-Office Angle.

If you are playing regular Fox releases, I believe th will hold the interest and satisfy generally because the manner in which it has been done. I wouldn't pro ise anything very specific regarding the production, l cause many may not like it, since the story fails to co vince. I would center my advertising upon Miss Bro well, who has done a number of very good things late and if you want another point for exploitation purpos talk about the power of hypnotism.

Don't promise too much, but figure that it will regis as a good program offering.

OLD STORY JUNK BADLY PLAYED AND POORLY PRODUCED

Jean Sothern in

A MOTHER'S ORDEAL

Van Dyke—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR ..... Will S. Davis
AUTHOR ..... Will S. Davis
CAMERAMAN ..... William Black
AS A WHOLE ..... Cheap surface mellerdrammer mostly junk
STORY ..... Very old stuff that never registered
DIRECTION ..... Bad grouping, poor tempo, permitted overacting and never impressed
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Acceptable
LIGHTINGS ..... Ordinary
CAMERA WORK ..... Fair
STAR ..... Isn't one
SUPPORT ..... Bad, amateurish and camera-conscious
EXTERIORS ..... Ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Setty
DETAIL ..... Convenient
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

IF you are playing cheap program stuff possibly you can get this sort of surface melodrama junk by, but, for my part, I say "No!"

This is the old story about the woman wo was wronged by her husband and decided o commit suicide and afterwards changed h mind, with the result that when she grew p she wanted to get even with this one-time h band of hers, who had now become the district attorn and married again, this resulting in her kidnapping adopted daughter and pulling a little white slave sti all of which action led up to the psychological mom when a "defective," who was the young hero, pulle rescue and the woman learned that this child was h own daughter. Ha, ha!—SOME junk!

This hasn't been done more than six hundred a eighty-three times to my recollection, and surely e excuse for it, in this case, isn't that it has been wl done.

The hero was awful, the father, when appearing a father, was funny, because his make-up didn't m him look old, and on the whole the production was g erally "Blaa!"

I can't see any particular reason for starring Jean Sothern, because she lacks the dominant personality needed for a star, and certainly she should not be put out in this sort of a mellerdrammer with much emoting to do, because she can't put the stuff over.

The "rescue" scene was truly funny. The "defective" stood outside across the street in a set position, looking up at the window, apparently watching for a signal. The persecuted female, Jean Sothern, ran to the window, made a lot of noise, and then we had a lot of struggling in the room. When they cut back to the "defective," he was still standing in exactly the same position we'd left him in. Then it became time for him to do a wild rush, and he turned and ran for a few feet to where several "extras," supposed to be his plain-clothes men, were standing on the curb, all set ready to do a wild leap across the street, and if there was ever bad grouping, this was it! If this doesn't get a laugh, it is simply because your patrons have no sense of humor or don't know good stuff when they see it.

The general atmosphere of the offering was ordinary, in that there was nothing distinctive about the sets, the lighting, the camera work, or any of the technical requirements, and the cast certainly didn't lift the tone of the production.

Among those who appeared in the cast were Arthur Housman, Walter Miller, Chas. Boyd and Alice May.

The Box Office Angle.

If you haven't much respect for the opinions of your patrons and want to play cheap stuff that you can sneak by, dodging them when they come out to tell you about it, possibly this will go over as routine stuff. But, take it from me—if you expect to stay in business and want to keep your patrons thinking that you know anything at all about pictures, you'd better start to picking good ones and laying off on this stuff.

I can see no particular advertising angle in Jean Sothern or "A Mother's Ordeal." Neither one means anything in the average patron's young life. Certainly there is nothing about the picture worthy of recommendation, and if you did tell them anything about the story, they would say: "I saw that last week"—or last month—either one—because the chances are that they saw it both times.

FINE SNOW STUFF CANNOT SAVE SERIAL MELLER AND FUNNY FINISH

H. B. Warner in

THE DANGER TRAIL

Selig—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR	Frederick A. Thompson
AUTHOR	James Oliver Curwood
AS A WHOLE	Wild, unconvincing "meller" with funny finish
STORY	Ridiculous as screened
DIRECTION	Registered good snow scenes, but made action too "melo"; gave fearful plot development
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not truly distinctive
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Personality helped otherwise ordinary scenes
SUPPORT	Acceptable—nothing more
EXTERIORS	Much beautiful snow stuff
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Several slips
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

OF all the assinine plots for the screen that I have seen in a long time, this just about draws the prize.

We find two bush-bearing brothers of the snowbound North trying, through five reels, to kill a young engineer who has come to that country to work, with the sister of the brothers always assisting in his rescue. The reason for this desire to murder was held a profound secret until the last of the fifth reel, when we suddenly learned that they were after this gink because his father had trifled with their mother, and then they learned that he was the wrong man and simply bore the same name. Good night! Can you imagine anything more ridiculous than five reels of attempted murder with a sudden twist on the finish where these murderous willuns walked in and offered to shake hands with the persecuted hero?

There was a lot of very pretty snow stuff, and Mr. Warner's personality kept it fairly interesting until the mystery got to be entirely too dense, but at no time did it register as big, because it was simply a continuous performance of attempted murder and we knew that they couldn't kill Mr. Warner, since if they did they wouldn't have any star for the rest of the film.

In one place they had "our hero" bound hand and foot lying next to a few hundred tons of dynamite, with the fuse burning. Instead of rolling over on top of this fuse and thus smothering it, hero was forced by the scenario to take out a revolver and shoot the fuse in two. This was, of course, much more "intrickut." After doing that, he calmly unloosed the bonds which had been holding him.

The action of the various murder incidents came to be very much like "serial stuff," and the picture lost its grip before the third reel, since it was such a plain repetition of willunous workings.

Violet Heming, as the girl, walked into many scenes, registered a smile or a sigh and walked out. She screened rather well, but was quite camera-conscious. The general impression which she registered will be quite acceptable, however, because, after all, there was nothing much to this except scenes between Mr. Warner and Miss Heming and the humorous side of the wild meller.

Others in the cast were W. Lawson Butt, Richard Thornton, Arthur Donaldson, Arthur Cozine, William Cooper and H. Howard.

The Box-Office Angle.

Certainly if you play this you are going to be at a disadvantage, because the finish will send them out with a sort of peeved feeling, since the ending is so ridiculous. After an audience has sat through five reels watching the brave hero meet death face to face time and again, each time refusing to speak to it, they are worked up to a stage where they want to see something happen other than to have the willuns come in and say, "We're sorry, but you aren't the guy we wanted to kill." That's absolutely Keystone Komedy stuff. I can figure Charlie Chaplin working in such a script, but I can't conceive how it was possible for a real producer to take such a story seriously for the screen.

If you are willing to chance the "kick in the eye" on the finish, there is enough melo to hold the interest and the snow exteriors make it rather beautiful, so that it will get by as acceptable program stuff save for the flop at the end.

SPLENDID COMEDY IDEA MARRED BY STAR'S ACTING, BUT INTERESTING

Lionel Barrymore in

THE MILLIONAIRE'S DOUBLE

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	Harry Davenport
AUTHOR	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	John M. Bauman
AS A WHOLE	Good comedy idea that will get by nicely
STORY	Becomes obvious, but will hold interest
DIRECTION	Satisfactory atmosphere, but permitted star to act
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	Just good
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Camera-conscious and tried to be funny, with result that missed fire
SUPPORT	Acceptable; not distinctive
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Satisfactory
DETAIL	Satisfactory
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THERE was a comedy situation in this which "Doug" Fairbanks could have had a wonderful time with. Unfortunately, Mr. Barrymore has been permitted to act in an attempt to be funny through facial expression, this resulting in making him camera-conscious, and he seemed to be doing an imitation of Eddie Foy rather than giving a human characterization.

The general treatment and atmosphere was quite satisfactory, but the star's forced grimaces reduced the laughs to about one-tenth of the possibilities.

The idea of this had to do with a millionaire who started for Japan only to learn in Frisco that he was thought to be dead because a crook had robbed his house and had in turn been robbed, with the result that the yeggs who blackjacked him thought they'd killed the real millionaire.

A confidence man forced a young lady to pose as the millionaire's widow because he threatened to put her father, an escaped convict-forger, back into prison, and when the real millionaire, Mr. Barrymore, read of the widow thing, he decided to come back and investigate.

Shaving his mustache, he sought the hotel of the confidence man, and, as expected, was immediately picked up as a "double" who might pose as the supposedly dead millionaire, thereby making the collection of the estate much easier and safer. This was a good situation, although, of course, we immediately knew that the finish would be exposure for the crook with hero keeping the persecuted heroine as his honest-to-goodness wife.

It took a couple of reels to get to this finish, but the situations would have been quite funny had not Mr. Barrymore insisted on making faces all the time. That stopped the fun. There's nothing more un-funny on the screen than a palpable attempt to be funny.

While the sets were all right and the players satisfactory, there was nothing about this to lift it out of the ordinary routine. The story idea will get it by, but no one will enthuse over it as a production.

In the supporting cast were Evelyn Brent, Harry S. Northrup, H. H. Patee, John Smiley, Jack Raymond and Louis Wolheim.

The Box Office Angle.

I would go easy on this because they won't rave over it. Centre your advertising upon the story idea of a man playing the part of his own double, rather than upon Lionel Barrymore himself, because I think his work in this isn't nearly so good as what he has given us in other productions.

As a program release it will be accepted—that's about all. It never really gets below the surface and Mr. Barrymore's "acting" hurt more than it helped.

TIRESOME, TECHNICALLY CRUDE TWO EPISODE PLOT DRAGS BADLY AND NEVER HITS TRULY BIG MOMENTS

James Morrison, Rita Jolivet, Leah Baird and Vincent Serrano in

ONE LAW FOR BOTH

Ivan Film—State Rights.

DIRECTOR	Ivan Abramson
AUTHOR	Ivan Abramson
CAMERAMAN	Marcel A. Le Picard
AS A WHOLE	Crude, overplayed, tiresome Russian melo and divorce problem story tied together
STORY	Looked like two separate pictures tied together; very tiresome and laborious; lacked human note
DIRECTION	Technically crude; never developed impressive tempo
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; frequently too much foreground, and same angle too often
STARS	Acted "with gestures"
SUPPORT	Very camera-conscious
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; not distinctive
INTERIORS	Ordinary; lacked class
DETAIL	Some bad bits; one awful newspaper insert
TIME	One hour fifty minutes (8 parts)

I COULD write a couple of pages about what's wrong with this—but what's the use? It just isn't "there" as an evening's entertainment.

Technically this production is crude in many, many ways, such as overplaying, scores of unnecessary scenes, too much "people in and out," the same camera angle too frequently, bad composition and groupings of "extras," too much foreground and painfully tiresome plot development.

The first half of this eight-part offering has to do with some characters in Russia who go through the usual routine of revolutionists and persecuting noblemen, with Miss Jolivet as the heroine who sacrifices herself to the willunous noble so that her friends might be released from prison.

The last part of the production has nothing whatever to do with the first part, nor has the first part anything to do with the last. We find Miss Jolivet and Mr. Morrison escaping to America, and then we get into a divorce problem situation bringing up the well-worn question as to whether there should be a double morality standard or one law for both.

Since, in order to bring Jimmie Morrison out of this Russian atmosphere into the American, they performed rather an unusual tonsorial operation, I have a decided hunch that this was two different pictures which have been tied together by titles, assembling and one or two scenes. If this is not true, then, at least, I must say that the construction for an eight-part production is absolutely awful!

The aforementioned tonsorial operation was this: In the Russian story, Jimmie had been wearing a wig which showed him with rather short hair, particularly in front. One of his friends was supposed to give him a haircut, with the result that the wig was removed and we had those long locks of Jimmie's, which, believe me, no barber in the world could develop from the sort of wig he was wearing in the Russian stuff, no matter how good a hair-trimmer said barber might be.

There were some awful titles in this, some being so crude they were ridiculous, with others registering as a very apparent appeal to the gallery.

There was one newspaper insert which reminded me of the good old days of four or five years ago. It certainly was awful! It was supposed to describe an important social affair, and the heading was—THE SEASON'S EVENT, and this was printed in type much larger than the rest of the articles and was plainly pasted across the sheet of newspaper. Awful!

As a sample of the sort of titles which they pulled, I'll give you this one—from husband to wife after she had forgiven him for his offense, and then, later on, he had found that she had erred. He said: "How dare you come in to my home with a past so dark and vile! Leave my home at once!" Oh, boy!

They had a lot of people in this cast who with intelligent direction can do good work; but certainly they didn't register satisfactorily under the guidance of Producer Abramson.

The offering is heralded as containing an all-star cast. A number of the players have been starred in various things, at various times, but they didn't register as stars in this.

In the cast were Rita Jolivet, Leah Baird, Margaret Greene, Helen Arnold, James Morrison, Vincent Serrano, Pedro De Cordoba, Paul Capellani, Anders Randolf, Hassan Musseli and Walter Gould.

The Box-Office Angle.

In its present form, I can't see this at all.

It is absolutely impossible as an evening's entertainment, although the producer may, by the expenditure of considerable money in advertising the Russian revolution angle and the double standard of morals, manage to draw a little business from the curious of New York.

You might be able to do the same thing, but I wouldn't advise you to, because the production isn't "there" and can't give satisfaction in its present form.

As two separate five-reel offerings, this would register as "fair" program stuff. There are a lot of names in the cast which have advertising value in some communities, but I believe, so far as the general public is concerned, that the entire group lacks the pulling power of any one dominant personality such as the fifteen or twenty real stars who are now getting the money at the box office because of their own personal following.

CINDERELLA STUFF WITH HUMAN COMEDY ATMOSPHERE—WILL REGISTER

Marian Swayne in

LITTLE MISS FORTUNE

Erbograph—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR ..... Joseph Levering
AUTHOR ..... Rev. Clarence J. Harris
CAMERAMAN ..... James Robertson
AS A WHOLE ..... Fairly entertaining because of village amateur theatricals and actors' boarding-house atmosphere
STORY ..... Cinderella stuff that entertains without convincing
DIRECTION ..... Will be accepted, but lacked finish
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent straight stuff
LIGHTINGS ..... Ordinary; generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... No vignetting, but clean-cut, with good close-ups
STAR ..... Easy to look at, but forced a bit; will please generally
SUPPORT ..... Some good types; many camera-conscious
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Good for atmosphere; ordinarily lighted
DETAIL ..... Some good bits; some crudities
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

FOR an Art Dramas production this was very good. As a matter of fact, it is probably the most satisfying Art Dramas offering that has been made to date.

The story was the old Cinderella stuff, which was quite obvious, and most audiences will be ahead of the plot development, but the situations were planted in two bits of atmosphere that will help a bit. One of these was an amateur theatrical entertainment in a village, and the other was an actors' boarding-house in the city. There was a chance to play for laughs in both places, and quite a number will be registered.

The plot idea was the old Cinderella routine of the poor girl who wanted to go on the stage. After she ran away we found her in a theatrical boarding-house in the city, from which she graduated very sudden-like into a star, because hero had taught her the leading lady's part while he was rehearing his play in his room. This is another one of those things that they do only in the "movies."

Throughout the production the possibilities were big and were only partly realized. Many little crudities jarred and kept the action from being truly human.

At first Miss Swayne was supposed to be an inmate of a "poor farm." We saw only four people on this farm, however, one being a grouchy overseer, one lady that I guessed to be the woman in charge, Miss Swayne and an old lady whom she called "Granny." So far as the audience is shown, Miss Swayne and "Granny" were the only two poor folk on the poor farm.

The worst blow of the entire story was the discovery on the finish that the hero was the long-lost son of "Granny." Why will they do these things? It was entirely unnecessary for the purposes of the plot, and it will get a groan from all of your regulars.

Of course, at first the other young people who took part in the church entertainment refused to have anything to do with the poor-farm girl, and on the finish we found her triumphant as the star of the play. Too much attention was given to Miss Swayne causing the curtain to descend quite suddenly on the instructor about four times, while he was trying to sing at the entertainment, and as a sample of the attention given to unconvincing detail, I can tell you that, where she landed the job of the peevish leading lady, the stage director was shown to engage her without even trying her out to see if she knew her lines. Now, remember, they were going to open that night and the stage director had only seen her rush into one scene and act like she meant it. when he said, "You can have the part." Any one, no matter how unfamiliar they are with stage procedure, will realize that he should have at least found out whether she knew her lines in the play.

The attention is centred upon Miss Swayne all through this offering and we are given many, many close-ups of this young lady. She photographs very well and you'd never think she was the same girl who was so miserably lighted in "The Deemster."

As a sample of the sort of thing they pulled on us in the actors' boarding-house, we had our old friend about the "thumbs in the soup," which she said was all right because the soup wasn't hot, and I presume that this will probably get laughs, no matter if it is old.

They pulled a little melodrama about the willunous cheap actor who stole the leading lady's jewelry and blamed it on to the Cinderella kid, with a flower which she had left in the room, proving that he was the guilty one, and this will interest the average audience but will not convince them.

The theatre scenes would have gone over very satisfactorily if the producer had made his audience start to go home on the final curtain. Instead of doing that, he showed them applauding and applauding through a half dozen flashes, not one of them making a move to put a hat or coat on. Believe me, they don't do that in America—anywhere!

Another little thing which will be noticed is the fact that old "Granny" was planted in a stage-box right in the midst of a lot of people, supposed to be sure-enough "sassiety" folk, and nobody even noticed that this old lady from the poor-farm had landed in their midst escorted by a kid who had been dishwasher in the theatrical boarding-house. It is such little things as these which give the impression of crude production. The work lacked the finish and distinction which a real producer can give to such situations.

Hugh Thompson, as the hero, was rather pleasing. He was more nearly human than any of the other players.

In the cast were Lucille Dorrington, Anna Day Perry, Charles MacDonald and Bradley Barker.

The Box Office Angle.

If you have been playing Art Dramas and getting by with them, I'd say that this should go very well. There is enough good stuff about it to get it by as entertainment, even though the plot is elementary, and the atmosphere and treatment lacks the distinctive touch which could have made it very good.

I would not, in my advertising, play this up too strong, if you are in the habit of showing them really worthwhile stuff, but you can safely book it as a "filler," resting assured that it is decidedly better on the whole than what Art Dramas have offered to date.

For the average audience which has no knowledge of technical possibilities and figures only from an entertainment angle, this may register very satisfactorily. Frequently it is quite human.

ANCIENT OBVIOUS IDEAS MADE PLEASING BY TREATMENT

Blanche Sweet and Thomas Meighan in

THE SILENT PARTNER

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHOR	Edmund Goulding
SCENARIO BY	George Du Bois Proctor
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Girl sacrificing savings and name to protect loved employer; Formula No. 736
DIRECTION	Distinctive; too good for story
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Splendid, with good vignetting
STARS	Personalities helped situations
SUPPORT	Quite satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Well chosen; some good angles
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Some nice little touches; too much 'phoning
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WHILE Producer Neilan has given us a very distinctive atmosphere, has chosen some nice locations and "shot" this from intelligent angles, even with all this and the personalities of Thomas Meighan and Blanche Sweet, which certainly register in a pleasing manner in this offering, the story is so painfully obvious and so decidedly ancient and familiar that most any audience will be about three reels ahead all the time, with a feeling of "Why don't they get to it and get it over with!"

The development of this old-time story moved along nicely without a lot of unnecessary continuity, except that we had entirely too many telephone conversations which were planted to give the various characters speech titles to explain the progress of the stock battle development.

Miss Sweet was Mr. Meighan's secretary, and, in fact, almost ran the business. Early in the film we discovered that she had saved almost ten thousand dollars, with which she intended to buy a home for herself and mother. "Immejately" we knew that sooner or later she was going to have to dig up that ten "thou" and save the firm.

It took about three reels to get to it, but—by heck!—just as mother was about to sign the deed for the house, in rushed Blanche to get the coin! Hero's former partner, who was the willun, had been trifling with the hero's wife, who had married him only for his coin. Of course, the stock battle, which had been transacted by telephone—as they do those things in the films—had progressed to the point where wifey thought that hero was "broke" and departed to willun's apartment.

We then had our other "old friend"—that situation of faithful secretary rushing to willun's apartment to save wifey, with hubby hero coming in to "misunderstand" the situation. Oh, boy!—how often have you done faithful service!

In this instance they didn't prolong the agony, however, because it was getting now towards the required amount of footage, and hubby discovered wifey's traveling bag, which had been nicely planted by "props" in the scene, thus getting a quick explanation.

Hubby was going to shoot himself, thinking he was "busted," but when he arrived at the office the next day he discovered that faithful ole "sec," pretty Blanche, had saved the day with her ten "thou," and, overnight, the stock which had been bought by telephone had become a "war bride," this information being conveyed by a newspaper headline, which enlightened the audience to the extent of making it clear that hubby was saved and faithful "sec" had made much money by her investment for the firm. Surely—they do it in the movies!

They had a little office boy in this who wore long trousers and pulled some cute stuff, and despite the fact that he was allowed to overdo it every once in a while, he will be good for a few laughs.

Even though it was old stuff, it was well done. That may save it.—It's pretty hard to tell.

In the supporting cast were Mayme Kelso, Ernest Joy, George Hebert, Florence Smythe and Mabel Van Buren.

The Box Office Angle.

Blanche Sweet has a chance to register in this as well as she has in anything in a long time. If she is worth anything at the ticket window for you, her personality and that of Thomas Meighan, who in this registers rather pleasingly, together with Producer Neilan's intelligent treatment, may make this an acceptable offering.

The story is so old, however, that I believe you should be cautious about going after it too strongly, because there was no chance for truly distinctive characterization; it had to be more or less routine in development.

If you've been playing Paramount stuff regularly, I believe the treatment will justify you in considering th worth while, but I would go easy about plugging i It would seem to me that one of your best angles f advertising here would be to mention the fact th Marshall Neilan directed the offering, making it cle that he has produced such offerings as "The Girl Home," "The Prince Chap," for Selig and others. Y might also mention in your advertising that he has be selected to make a Mary Pickford production for Ar craft.

It would seem that this was made "per script" b cause the development was almost mechanical in i smoothness. I don't think that Mr. Neilan, if permitte the proper latitude, would take this sort of a story t make a picture from, and if he did and was given th opportunity, I believe he could have done something t it to have made the development less obvious.

WHIMSICAL, TRULY FUNNY SITUATION REGISTERS SOME GOOD FUN

Enid Bennett in

HAPPINESS

Triangle—Kay Bee

DIRECTOR	Reginald Barker
AUTHOR	C. Gardner Sullivan
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
CAMERAMAN	Robert Newhard
AS A WHOLE	Human touches put it over as comedy
STORY	Slender, but provided delightful situations
DIRECTION	Kept it human, burlesqued a bit at times, but got laughs
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent; not many effects
LIGHTINGS	Sometimes too uniform, but generally satisfactory
CAMERA WORK	Very good;excellent close-ups
STAR	Sweet, appealing personality
SUPPORT	Very good; a few types overdrawn, but funny
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; very few
INTERIORS	Good
DETAIL	Some nice little touches
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THIS entertainment I believe this will register anywhere. It is built upon a good idea, is comedy from start to finish, and, although burlesqued at times, has enough of the light intimate touch to keep it really delightful.

The attention was centered upon Enid Bennett all the way, with little Thelma Salter, the charming blonde kiddie, stealing many scenes by her cute, natural actions, she being perfectly handled by Producer Barker in this subject.

There were two or three types, such as the old maid who was instructor for Miss Bennett, and the blue-blooded boob who decided that he would honor her with his attentions at school, who were rather overdrawn, but these characters were so handled that we accepted their overdrawn touches, laughed at them and generally enjoyed the situations.

The story, what there was of it, was built around the simple, yet truly humorous, idea of planting a blue-blooded heiress in a co-ed college, where the students decided that they would beat her to the snobbishness for which she had been given much publicity in the newspapers, and the result was that this young lady, who really wanted to be human, but was kept from such tendencies by her guardian, was received at the school with the icy stare.

Her first friend was little Thelma Salter, who was soliciting washing to be done by a young student who was working his way through school by secretly doin washing. Can you imagine the genuine humor in a situ ation where this young man, who had shown a decide interest in this ostracized young heiress, having her li gerie to wash, with the kid having solicited it wit out knowing that the young people had any interest i one another.

Miss Bennett, after becoming friends with littl Thelma, insisted upon accompanying her home, and dis covered Mr. Gunn, who was the student "washerwoman, hard at work on one of her nightgowns, which he wa putting through soap suds like the veteran that he wa

I give Friend Sullivan credit for thinking out at leas a different basic situation. It will register with a "bang anywhere.

Of course, the young lady was much shocked at firs but she got over this and insisted upon being huma and joining the "soapsuds trust."

Of course, the rest of the film was devoted to thei friendship and the scandal aroused by her secret visit which brought the family to the school in great hast and I must say that they get everything there is ou of this situation by the use of some wonderful title and a little bit of the Keystone touch here and there

There was no attempt to make this anything but fanciful comedy, designed to get laughs and pass pleasant hour, and I feel pretty sure that it will regis ter anywhere.

Miss Bennett was given many close-ups and she i rather pretty, with a decided appeal in her personality

Little Miss Salter crowded the star for personal recog nition, and Charles Gunn was quite natural and ver satisfactory as the student "washerwoman."

The other types, though drawn a bit broadly, wi certainly appeal to the sense of humor of most audi ences, and I believe this is a very safe bet figured a entertainment.

I must say that Producer Barker missed just a bi on the group of college students when he permitte one young lady to get into the foreground quite fre quently, wearing high-heel shoes and carrying a tenni racquet. They can't play tennis in high-heel shoes. An other of the college men had a slouch hat turned u in front as no college man ever wore a hat—except i pictures.

There was one title that will get a scream anywhere It was a remark from a "shady" dame to the blue blooded boy whom she had tried to "pick up" at on time when she saw him with the old maid instructo She says: "Say, kid—you're a bum picker; a bur picker." All of the titles were exceptionally wel worded. They will get many laughs and generally hel the action in almost every scene.

In the cast were Gertrude Claire, Andrew Arbuckle, Adele Belgrade, Jack Gilbert.

The Box Office Angle.

It may sound naughty, but I would go to the big advertising angle on this strong enough to arouse interest. Hammer this point: "Can't you see the humor of a situation where the hero, to earn his way through college, was doing washing which included the heroine's lingerie?"

After hammering that thought, register this one: "Are snobs born that way, or trained that way? See 'Happiness.'"

If Enid Bennett has made good with you in any of her other pictures, talk about her being an Australian beauty recently acquired by Mr. Ince for his Triangle pictures.

You can certainly make a fuss about little Thelma Salter, generally using her picture, because some may not remember her name but will the face, and you might call attention to her work in "The Crab" with Frank Keenan, if you played that production. If you missed that, however, all you need do is use a cut of this kiddie, because her face is very well known to film fans. She has been in the game a good many years and has done some wonderful bits. The other members of the cast mean nothing in particular.

LITTLE HUMAN BITS MAKE YOUTHFUL ROMANCE WORTH WHILE

Gladys Hulette in

THE CANDY GIRL

Thanhouser—Pathe.

DIRECTOR	W. Eugene Moore
AUTHOR	Philip Lonergan
CAMERAMAN	George Webber
AS A WHOLE	Pleasing as program release
STORY	Slender, but had human elements
DIRECTION	Made little incidents register
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not distinctive
STAR	Pleasing ingenue
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

WHILE this is a long way from being an exceptional offering or one which will cause any one to enthuse to any great extent, still it is certainly a pleasing little bit of entertainment that registers a thought, at the same time providing occasional bits of fun. The introduction of a number of human touches keeps the interest aroused and we get a bit of pathos now and then to properly contrast with the comedy situations.

The star and her leading man are both very youthful, but this story was written for young folks of their age, and consequently the action was rather convincing.

The story told of a girl who made such good candy that she decided to sell it in the city to make a living for her dependent family. Of course, she had difficulties in attracting trade, encountered a willun, and a hero, the son of an indulgent father, eventually married her.

We then found that the young husband was a dope fiend, and there were a few dramatic moments before he managed to conquer the drug, with the assistance of the brave little wife who helped in the fight.

Miss Hulette is a pleasing youngster and her personality registers rather well in this.

William Parke, Jr., as the wealthy man's son who became hubby, gave a splendid performance, it being probably the best bit of acting that he has registered on the screen.

The general atmosphere was rather ordinary, with nothing distinctive from a technical angle, but it will be acceptable to those who are impressed by the story.

Others in the cast were Helen Badgley, Thomas A. Curran and J. H. Gilmour.

The Box-Office Angle.

Figured as a program release, I would say that this is a good bet because it has enough human stuff to make it register as pleasing entertainment. It isn't a big picture and it lacks distinctive, classy atmosphere and big dramatic situations, but for the program house I would say that the average community audience would accept this as worth while.

Whatever you do, don't promise too much on this one, because it is just "good"—that's about all. You can safely say that it is human, which means much these days.

MECHANICAL ORDINARY OBVIOUS SURFACE ACTION THAT DRAGS

Viola Dana in

GOD'S LAW AND MAN'S

Columbia—Metro

DIRECTOR	John H. Collins
AUTHOR	Paul Trent
SCENARIO BY	John H. Collins
CAMERAMAN	John Arnold
AS A WHOLE	Painfully obvious surface stuff
STORY	Never convinces or hits human note
DIRECTION	Rather mechanical
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Failed to impress
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Lacked distinction
DETAIL	Acceptable; didn't convince
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THIS is an ordinary surface story that is very, very obvious from the start, and as a result it wanders through the five reels without at any time arousing any real interest. There is nothing distinctive about the atmosphere, the action or the treatment. The players have no big human situations to give them real opportunities, and since we know perfectly well just what is going to happen some reels in advance, certainly no one will ever enthuse over this from any angle.

The plot tells of a young Englishman who takes under his protecting wing, as a native wife, a Hindoo girl who tells how her mother had been deserted by an English soldier who had gone back home, leaving her a ring.

At about the same time in the story we found the boy's father talking to the father of the girl he was supposed to marry back home, and since he was introduced as an English officer who had served in India, we immediately knew that the Hindoo girl was also his child and that it was only a question of time until the native girl would blow in at the English home, be recognized and accepted as the Englishman's daughter, so the lovers could be happy and the loveless marriage would be unnecessary.

To make the development more simple, we found the girl whom the parents wanted to marry to the hero in love with the hero's friend in India, and so it was a simple matter for the friend to bring the Hindoo kid on to England, and then all they had to do on the finish was to trade around, and everybody was happy.

Unfortunately, however, for the romantic value of this, they made the hero a painful cad. When his father told him that he should marry the English girl instead of the native girl, he decided that that was what he should do, and when the native girl blew in he refused to welcome her, and, in fact, said that he was awfully sorry she had come. She even put on her native costume, which was of "double-exposure" design, in an effort to reawaken his love, but this guy was "cold." Because of these scenes, we do not feel any sympathy for him, and when the inevitable clutch comes at the finish nobody cares very much. It's just another five reel of footage finished.

There was nothing distinctive about this from any ar gle. It is just ordinary obvious surface-action.

In the cast were Augustus Phillips, Frank Currier Robert Walker, Floyd Brickley, George Wright, Mari Adell and Henry Hallam.

The Box-Office Angle.

Figuring this as routine stuff, it may be that you ca play it if your patrons accept most program junk with out any serious complaint; but personally I can't see an entertainment value in this. It lacks the human essen tials, it fails to convince, and there is nothing about i to lift it out of the rut.

The title doesn't mean anything in particular from a advertising viewpoint, and certainly you cannot safel promise that the production has real merit. If they lik Viola Dana in your community, then you may get this by but certainly I'd go easy on it. If you can get anythin that is human, forget this and book something you patrons will enjoy.

SMALL KINGDOM WAR STUFF WITH STAR MISSING IN FIRE DUAL ROLE

Margaret Illington in

SACRIFICE

Lasky—Paramount.

DIRECTOR	Frank Reicher
AUTHOR	Charles Kenyon
SCENARIO BY	Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun
CAMERAMAN	Dent Gilbert
AS A WHOLE	Mechanical small-kingdom-"poipers"-twin-sister meller
STORY	Convenient; obvious; mechanical
DIRECTION	Theatric; lacked human note
PHOTOGRAPHY	Occasionally excellent; generally ordinary
LIGHTINGS	A few very fine; generally only fair
CAMERA WORK	Not enough angles; generally just acceptable
STAR	Hard to photograph to advantage; was poorly lighted and permitted to "act"; she doesn't register
SUPPORT	Just good; a bit theatric
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; very few
INTERIORS	A bit setty; too much of same angle
DETAIL	Convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

HERE is another stage star who has landed on the screen at a disadvantage, and in this instance I would say that it is not altogether Miss Illington's fault, because there were one or two flashes which registered very well, the inference being that had she been carefully handled the impression would have been much more pleasing. Undoubtedly she has features —particularly her eyes—which do not screen well unless lighted to perfect advantage, and she would be hard for any producer to handle because of the necessity of always keeping in mind the lighting problem. Aside from this point, however, this story fails to register because it is one of those tried-and-true small-kingdom-about-ready-to-go-to-war things, with the heroine carrying the "poipers" across the frontier to save her native land.

We found Miss Illington playing sister parts, and although she was only an half-sister to herself, of course the resemblance was remarkable.

They gave us the usual number of double exposure scenes, but one of these was painfully and unnecessarily long, it being a scene where she stood on either side of a table and talked to herself through quite some consid erable footage.

The action of this never convinces, and I can't figur that any community audience is going to enthuse over it

The story tells how Miss Illington, as a notorious dancer, learned from her protector about the "poipers," with the result that she swiped them and carried them to her father in her native land.

Previously, father had planted Miss Illington's half sister in the enemy's country while he was there trying to get some information, and, of course, there was a love affair with a young officer, who afterward got mixed up because of the resemblance between the sisters Then we found the dancer sister returning to sacrific herself in place of the good sister, who had been ar rested and sentenced to death for stealing the "poipers." They even pulled the good old stuff of "Don't put the bandage over my eyes" when they got ready to shoo the sacrificing sister.

The titles in this were very bad. They were trite abstract statements that jarred because of their abrupt ness. It sort of looked as if this was made "as was," with the director under instructions to produce accord ing to script. Certainly whoever is responsible for these titles should be shown the error of his ways so that it won't happen again.

Jack Holt, as the young officer, was quite pleasing The others in the cast were quite satisfactory—and that's all. They were Winter Hall and Noah Berry.

The Box-Office Angle.

Without Miss Illington, this would be junk.

With her name to use for advertising purposes the production isn't bettered any, but the possibilities of getting a little money on it are.

Your patrons won't like this, if I am any kind of a guesser, and they won't care much for Miss Illington either. But since she will not stick on the screen very long if she is going to have this sort of thing handed to her, you might as well get what you can out of her pres ence, providing her name means anything in your town and let it go at that.

If you are doubtful as to whether or not your rea fans know whom Margaret Illington is—and, to my mind, it's quite possible that they don't in many sec tions—then you'd better forget this.

In any case, don't make any rash promises whatever regarding the merits of the production.

MUCH BATTLE STUFF AND STIRRING SWINGING TEMPO WITH MELO FINISH

Allen J. Holubar in

TREASON

Bluebird.

DIRECTOR.....Allen J. Holubar
AUTHOR.....Robert Lee Weigert
CAMERAMAN.....Roy H. Klaffki
AS A WHOLE.....Bing-bang action with three or four reels of battle stuff
STORY.....Very little to it—and that little, unconvincing
DIRECTION.....Fine war atmosphere and effective tempo to rushing action, but failed to register enough human story incidents
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent, with some very effective bits
LIGHTINGS.....Generally artistic and distinctive CAMERA WORK.....Distinctive
STAR.....Hard-working hero
SUPPORT.....Acceptable; unconvincing "meller" types
EXTERIORS.....Good battle shots
INTERIORS.....Good atmosphere
DETAIL.....Well handled
TIME.....Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY they have oodles of action in this, and in the first three or four reels they forget all about the story and concentrate the attention upon battle stuff in which they use up enough powder to fight a sure-enough mix-up, with smoke pots working all over the place.

As battle stuff it was all right, but unfortunately there had not been enough story developed to give the movements of these troops any special significance, and consequently the first three or four reels were interesting only from the viewpoint of registering much action."

When, toward the finish, the story finally started, it developed into a very ordinary situation of willun making hero think his heroic services were unappreciated by his country, with the result that hero stole some "poipers" containing the secret of the new code.

We then had a wild automobile chase, with traitors trying to carry these "poipers" across the frontier, and of course the two automobiles crashed over a cliff as a finish to the chase.

However, hero was "some" guy, because he recovered from this auto crash just as in the battle stuff he'd been the only survivor of the shelling of a bomb-proof telegraph station which apparently had been blown to bits.

The very weak spot of this story incident is the fact that they labeled these "poipers"—"The Key to the New Code." Any poor boob knows that it would have been a very simple matter to have written another code key as soon as it was discovered that this one had been stolen, and consequently the wild chase to recover the stolen code was quite ridiculous, because, even if the "poipers" were recovered, they had no way of telling whether the enemy had copied the key. If these "poipers" were made the plans of all the fortresses or some such junk as could be done very simply by changing one or two titles, there would be a little bit of sense to these final scenes. As they stand, they're all wrong.

As a matter of fact, however, the class of audience which will appreciate this offering won't care very much as to the "why" and "wherefore." It will simply be a case of enjoying the swinging tempo of the action and never stopping to worry about what it's all about. Those small kingdom wars never do convince very much, anyway.

If any decided action is taken by the Government to censor productions which show scenes that would tend to discourage recruiting, this film may come under the ban because it registers the horrors of war and the wholesale murder as well as it does the heroism of the one gink.

Mr. Holubar was quite satisfactory as the hero except that he had a funny little mustache that was probably supposed to prove that he was foreign.

Lois Wilson, as the heroine who appreciated the hero and did a clutch with him on the finish, was rather a pretty little thing and quite satisfactory.

The rest of the cast fitted in, but they didn't impress.

In the cast were Dorothy Davenport, Leo Pierson, Burton Law, L. M. Wells, Joseph Girard, Edward Hearn and George Pearce.

The Box-Office Angle.

At this time the name of this should attract some business, but it is a question as to whether or not they want to see so much battle stuff now.

This is nothing except three or four reels of battle scenes with a finish of unconvincing meller. However, in certain communities they want action rather than sto ryor characterization, and for that reason this may go over very well.

I must leave it up to you to decide whether or not it will fit in with your patrons.

HUMAN TOUCHES MAKE THIS ENTERTAINING—A GOOD FOLLOW UP

Bryant Washburn in

SKINNER'S BUBBLE

Essanay—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR.....Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR.....Harry Beaumont
AS A WHOLE.....Very human and will please generally
STORY.....Had good underlying thought and held nicely, but lacked big punch of "Dress Suit"
DIRECTION.....Registered human touches deftly and kept action interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally very good; not much attempt for effects
LIGHTINGS.....Good; occasionally too uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Very good
STAR.....Very human characterization
SUPPORT.....Some splendid types well handled
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atomsphere
INTERIORS.....Very good
DETAIL.....Some good little touches
TIME.....Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

AS a sequel to "Skinner's Dress Suit" you can bank on this as proving a pleasing offering, particularly to those who saw and liked the first film.

There is a good little idea in this, although it isn't as big as the one in the "Dress Suit" offering, which was something that would appeal to every one with particular force.

Producer Beaumont has made the action of this carry beautifully, however, by keeping it perfectly human, giving us plenty of good close-ups and registering scores of little touches that will appeal particularly to those who like the "plain folk" type of production.

The underlying thought in this is that life in a cottage on a moderate income is generally much better than the "big league" stuff in the city, where there are many servants to take the joy out of life by constantly insisting upon ministering when they're not wanted.

We also get some effective incidents dealing with the value of a good bluff in business, and, to my mind, it would have been much more effective if Friend Skinner could have been able on the finish to have collected quite a substantial sum from his partners when he went back to them, instead of just going back as one of the firm.

There is no question about the truth of the value of bluff in New York, and a good many New Yorkers, successful business men, know it only too well. Those who don't know it from personal experience love to think that the other feller succeeds or has appeared to succeed because of his being a good bluffer, and consequently that thought should have been given as much prominence as the comparison between the cottage life and the big city servant stuff. I believe that by changing one title, which will give Skinner something more than his old place in the firm, this point can be registered very satisfactorily, and I want to suggest particularly to the Essanay Co. that they do this.

Naturally most every one will compare this with "Skinner's Dress Suit," which has been a tremendous success, I am glad to note, and while it may not register as just as big as the first one, with most of your people, because the first story of this type always has the bulge, still I feel sure that every one will consider it a splendid follow-up and be rather pleased with it as a bit of entertainment.

The bluff put up by Skinner in his own office is going to get a lot of real laughs, and we have scores of delightful little human touches all through the film, some of the bits where the moving men take out Skinner's belongings from the little cottage being particularly good.

When Skinner left his cottage for the city, he had just a few too many bundles to be sure-enough human, and I am afraid that the idea of riding to Meadville through force of habit was just a bit overdrawn.

Most of the titles were excellent, and the cast was delightful. Many of the same characters, particularly the wife and partners, were the same as in the "Dress Suit" film. They were Hazel Daly, U. K. Houpt and James C. Carroll, with Marion Skinner as the wife of one of the partners.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe that you can go to this pretty strong in your advertising as a sequel to the "Dress Suit" picture, get a lot of money with it and give general satisfaction. Of course, if you haven't played "Skinner's Dress Suit" as yet, by all means play it first and then follow with this a little later.

As a sequel, this is very good, and if Mr. Beaumont and Mr. Washburn can continue to give us productions as human as this in carrying out the "Skinner" series, it is going to be some whale of a box office draw.

People do want human productions. The instantaneous success of the "Dress Suit" offering proves this beyond any possible question.

CHARACTERIZATIONS, ATMOSPHERE AND TREATMENT MAKE OLD IDEA ENTERTAINING

George Beban in

THE MARCELLINI MILLIONS

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Donald Crisp
AUTHOR	Edith Kennedy
SCENARIO BY	Edith Kennedy and George Beban
CAMERAMAN	J. O. Taylor
AS A WHOLE	Old stuff made very entertaining by atmosphere, characterization and treatment
STORY	Boob inheriting fortune only to learn happier when poor; Formula No. 837
DIRECTION	Made it distinctive, gave good little touches and kept it interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Very good; generally pleasing
CAMERA WORK	Excellent
STAR	Delightful characterization; always convincing
SUPPORT	Helen Eddy excellent; others very good
EXTERIORS	Not many, but very good
INTERIORS	Excellent; quite distinctive
DETAIL	Good little touches
TIME	Fifty-nine minutes (5 parts)

BETTER proof of the ability of a director and star to make an old idea entertaining by atmosphere, treatment and characterization could hardly be found.

I doubt if there is any plot more familiar to film fans than the boob-inheriting-fortune stuff which finishes with his discovering that the money was not his and the fact that he is happier without it.

In this case, this idea has been made to seem almost new, because it has been so thoroughly clothed in distinctive atmosphere and so well played by capable people.

I don't have to tell you what George Beban can do with the character of an Italian truck gardener. Just picture him coming into possession of millions, with his beloved wife taken in tow by a couple of crooks, who tried to break her into the society stuff. The pathos of his losing her because he was failing to climb, didn't get you as some of the other Beban pathos touches have in other films, because you somehow felt that she would certainly wake up at the right moment and the comedy element seemed to dominate. Nevertheless, there is sufficient contrast here to hold the interest and give the comedy scenes the right shading to make them truly effective, and I believe that any audience will enjoy this and certainly consider it very much better than the average program release.

Basically, it is only a chance for Mr. Beban to characterize, because the plot idea is known. He is so good, so human and so convincing in his work that it becomes a distinctive film.

Helen Jerome Eddy has done a number of splendid things in Morosco productions, and with Mr. Beban she has registered several times. This is one of the best opportunities she has had and certainly she puts her work over. The remainder of the cast were very satisfactory, but they were really just a frame for Mr. Beban and Miss Eddy.

The sets in this were truly impressive. They seemed to have a solidity which convinced you and made this artificial situation seem more like something which might happen.

The director, in his treatemnt, has given us action and atmosphere, and the players have provided personality.

In the supporting cast were Pietro Sosso, Henry Wood-

(Continued on next page)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

JAMES YOUNG

WID'S Is Read Not Skinned

(Continued from page 303)

ward, Fred Huntley, Mae Gaston, W. H. Bainbridge, Eugene Pallette and Adele Farrington.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that your possible success at the box-office with this will depend to a certain extent upon how much your patrons think of George Beban. If they like him, go to this strong, because as entertainment it will register.

I would freely state this much about the story in my advertising, because they will guess it, anyway. Ask this question: "Can you imagine George Beban as an Italian truck gardener coming into a fortune of many millions, and do you remember Helen Eddy? She is his wife. Come and laugh and cry with these delightful personalities as you see them battle with the problem of disposing of 'The Marcellini Millions.'"

Certainly this is much better than the average program release, has been intelligently done and has no crudities other than the very ancient story itself. It has the well-known finish of the gardener back home, happy with his wife and glad to be rid of the money, but I wouldn't tell them that in my advertising.

You might say: "What would you do if you inherited several millions of dollars? See what George Beban does as an Italian truck gardener in 'The Marcellini Millions.'"

IN FORM A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1917. NO. 20 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

TABULATED PERCENTAGE REPORTS FROM EXHIBITORS

THE BATTING AVERAGES

These are the averages of the companies having 200 reports or more.

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
626	Fox	72.9	70.0	85
497	Metro	79.8	67.2	49
390	Greater Vitagraph	68.3	65.4	73
1691	Triangle	69.3	63.5	348
439	World	78.9	62.2	40
1930	Paramount	68.3	62.7	326
213	Bluebird	62.1	62.0	18

THE NUMBER BEFORE THE NAME OF THE FEATURE INDICATES THE NUMBER OF REPORTS RECEIVED AND TABULATED ON THAT FILM.

THE FIRST COLUMN CARRIES THE PERCENTAGE OF PLEASED PATRONS.

THE SECOND COLUMN SHOWS THE BOX OFFICE PERCENTAGE.

FIGURES IN THE THIRD COLUMN INDICATE THAT MANY REPORTED THE FILM WORTH A RETURN DATE.

All reports in this percentage tabulation have been marked on this scale:

EXCEPTIONAL	100%
EXCELLENT	80%
GOOD	60%
FAIR	40%
POOR	20%
BAD	0%

PARAMOUNT

Reports		% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeat
1930	Paramount	68.3	62.7	326
3	In Bishop's Carriage	85	93
1	The Lost Paradise	50	85
5	The Virginian	90	78	1
1	Such a Little Queen	80	80	1
2	Where Trail Divides	100	100	1
7	Wildflower	88	76	4
1	The County Chairman	80	80
1	What's His Name	75	100
3	Behind the Scenes	92	84
5	Man from Mexico	90	70	2
1	Circus Man	94	95
1	Rose of the Rancho	87	80
3	The Bargain	83	83	2
1	Ghost Breakers	60	60
4	The Crucible	94	92	1
4	The Sign of the Cross	89	91
1	Cameo Kirby	80	65
5	Cinderella	88	98	2
1	The Million	70	90
3	Girl of the Golden West	93	87	2
2	The Dancing Girl	71	68
3	The Italian	77	62	1
1	No Laughing Matter	90	85
1	Morals of Marcus	60	50
5	The Goose Girl	95	95	4
1	After Five	82	80
1	Mistress Nell	88	95
1	Buckshot John	90	90
3	Her Triumph	60	74	1
3	The Warrens of Virginia	70	71	1
1	Country Boy	60	60
5	David Harum	86	78	1
1	A Gentleman of Leisure	80	70
1	The Caprices of Kitty	95	90
1	Love Route	60	60
1	Sunshine Molly	40	20
1	The Governor's Lady	97	85
3	Gretna Green	100	100	2
3	Are You a Mason?	78	84
1	Pretty Mrs. Smith	65	90
1	The Unafraid	80	75
1	When We Were 21	75	63
4	Snobs	64	52
5	Captain Courtesy	84	66	1
5	Captive	82	67
2	Niobe	75	55	1
3	Help Wanted	80	75
5	The Woman	86	59	1
5	House of Lost Court	82	54	1
3	Fanchon the Cricket	86	89	2
3	Betty in Search of Thrill	83	87
5	Stolen Goods	78	75
2	Wild-Goose Chase	60	55	1
5	Pretty Sister Jose	82	78	1
5	Jim the Penman	82	85	1
5	Dawn of a To-morrow	89	88	2
5	Arab	75	80
1	Thurissa	45	45
2	The Dictator	82	69
5	Wild Olive	90	71
5	Chimmie Fadden	64	65
2	The Little Pal	70	70
4	Rugmaker's Daughter	40	50
2	The Clue	74	88
6	Kindling	81	82
1	The Running Fight	67	70
3	The Fighting Hope	77	80
5	Kilmeny	75	73
4	Seven Sisters	91	90
3	Puppet Crown	83	85
9	Rags	91	92	5
2	Sold	83	72
6	The Secret Orchid	79	74
5	Nearly a Lady	65	75
6	The Marriage of Kitty	76	64
3	Poor Schmaltz	63	37
7	Helene of the North	85	78	1
3	The Majesty of the Law	56	60
3	Heart of Jennifer	68	55
2	Incorrigible Dukane	75	55
4	Esmeralda	89	89	2
2	The Case of Becky	65	65
1	Out of Darkness	60	40
1	Peer Gynt	82	100
4	The Explorers	72	61
4	'Twas Ever Thus	53	63
2	Voice in the Fog	75	67
5	Fatal Card	66	61
4	Zaza	91	67	2
4	Girl of Yesterday	86	83	1
7	White Pearl	71	75
4	Blackbirds	57	58
7	Chorus Lady	73	68
5	Secret Sin	69	76	1
7	Yankee Girl	52	57
6	Masqueraders	56	56
11	Carmen	82	83	3
10	Still Waters	95	91	3
7	Madame Butterfly	80	88	1
7	Mummy and Humming Bird	64	58
6	Bella Donna	91	77	3
8	Armstrong's Wife	79	65
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	88	76	2
8	A Gentleman From Indiana	86	78
7	Prince and Pauper	91	86	3
10	Mr. Grex from Monte Carlo	84	69	1
9	Jane	75	51
9	The Unknown	76	67	1
18	The Cheat	94	80	12
9	The Reform Candidate	80	54	1
9	The Immigrant	73	62
10	The Old Homestead	88	84	7
8	Lydia Gilmore	82	61	2
10	Temptation	82	77	2
8	The Foundling	76	76	1
5	Tongues of Men	82	58	1
6	Mice and Men	81	82	3
6	The Golden Chance	80	68	2
1	My Lady Incog	40	40
4	Ragamuffins	77	57
4	Call of Cumberlands	77	72
6	The Spider	87	68	2
8	Pudd'nhead Wilson	83	63	3
8	Tennessee's Pardner	65	59
7	Madame Le Presidente	21	48
8	Nearly King	52	53	1
12	Trail of Lonesome Pine	75	88	3
7	Fell in Love with Wife	56	52	1
7	Blacklist	61	53	1
9	Out of the Drifts	90	89	3
8	Diplomacy	58	56	1
12	Poor Little Peppina	87	84	4
15	To Have and To Hold	75	72	4
11	Ben Blair	72	65
8	For the Defense	67	64	1
6	The Code of Marcia Gray	70	66	2
7	Lost Bridegroom	78	61	2
6	Saleslady	75	66	1
13	Audrey	75	74	3
8	The Sowers	65	60
10	The Heart of Paula	72	57	1

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
10 The Race	70	64
7 The Eternal Grind	71	82	3
8 The Love Mask	59	53	2
9 Molly Make-Believe	87	83	5
7 The Red Widow	62	55	2
11 The Heart of Nora Flynn	70	57	4
7 The Moment Before	50	65	1
10 David Garrick	63	43
5 The Innocent Lie	54	51
15 Maria Rosa	79	78	4
12 Alien Souls	69	67	1
12 The Feud Girl	62	57
16 Pasquale	78	53	3
14 Sweet Kitty Bellairs	71	60	2
13 Saints and Sinners	54	49
11 Thousand-Dollar Husband	69	62	4
11 Gutter Magdalene	61	53	1
10 Evil Thereof	44	44
14 Making of Maddalena	63	55	3
22 Silks and Satins	86	88	16
14 Destiny's Toy	60	51
19 The Clown	79	54	3
13 Susie Snowflake	67	58	2
13 World's Great Snare	72	78	4
19 The American Beauty	61	61	3
11 The Dupe	60	60	1
11 The Smugglers	53	50	1
26 The Selfish Woman	72	68	4
10 Davy Crockett	67	62
16 Dream Girl	69	64	3
20 Under Cover	79	75	5
27 International Marriage	55	51	1
27 Common Ground	64	64	1
35 Hulda from Holland	95	94	23
15 House of Golden Windows	73	63	3
22 A Woman in the Case	72	72	3
24 Little Lady Eileen	86	89	9
16 The Stronger Love	53	52
21 Public Opinion	82	72	4
20 Rolling Stones	67	62	2
20 The Honorable Friend	65	60	1
18 Victory of Conscience	59	60	2
18 Each Pearl a Tear	75	71	2
20 The Parson of Panamint	77	68	6
12 The Big Sister	46	56
12 The Reward of Patience	66	54
12 The House of Lies	76	67	1
13 The Daughter of MacGregor	55	46
15 Ashes of Embers	87	83	6
15 The Quest of Life	58	72
14 Anton, the Terrible	46	45
14 The Lash	57	55
11 The Storm	73	72	1
16 The Intrigue	80	57	1
14 Her Father's Son	73	59	2
11 Witchcraft	52	55
12 The Kiss	71	67	1
13 The Rainbow Princess	80	72	3
12 Seventeen	85	72	2
12 Miss George Washington	94	94	9
15 The Heir to the Hoorah	82	69	5
13 The Soul of Kura San	80	72	1
9 A Son of Erin	77	68
8 Unprotected	53	55	1
8 Years of a Locust	46	49
9 The Plow Girl	75	57
7 The Yellow Pawn	61	57	1
8 Nanette of the Wilds	48	57	2
4 Martyrdom of Phillip Strong	58	49	1
6 A Coney Island Princess	60	67	1
8 Road to Love	79	55	1
10 Oliver Twist	85	65	4
8 The Victoria Cross	51	54	1
11 The Traveling Salesman	74	54	3
14 The Right Direction	78	59	2
16 Snow White	95	95	10
11 Redeeming Love	60	54	1
13 The Slave Market	77	69	5
11 The Evil Eye	27	39	1
10 Great Expectations	77	51
10 Happiness of Three Women	76	56	1
7 Betty to the Rescue	32	37
10 A Girl Like That	49	42
7 Lost and Won	59	40
8 The Golden Fetter	52	56
8 His Sweetheart	77	43
8 The Wax Model	71	62
8 Each to His Kind	47	46
8 Her Own People	70	55
7 The Black Wolf	34	40
8 The American Consul	39	41

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
8 The Fortunes of Fifi	63	63	2
8 On Record	61	52	1
6 Winning of Sally Temple	33	32
7 Those Without Sin	50	51	1
5 Castles For Two	40	39
5 Out of the Wreck	32	30
4 Sapho	75	88	3
5 The Prison Without Walls	49	47
5 The Dummy	57	56
1 The Spirit of Romance	40	20
1 As Men Love	80	25
5 The Bottle Imp	97	78	1
1 The Bond Between	40	20
1 A School for Husbands	60	40

TRIANGLE

1691 Triangle	69.3	63.5	348
9 The Iron Strain	81	65	2
8 The Lamb	85	73	3
9 Old Heidelberg	72	63	1
10 The Coward	83	66	1
7 Martyrs of the Alamo	66	56	2
13 The Disciple	84	75	2
7 Matrimony	81	74	2
8 Sable Lorcha	64	53
6 The Golden Claw	61	72
9 Double Trouble	64	64	2
7 Aloha Oe	63	65	1
5 Lily and Rose	61	53
7 Jordan is a Hard Road	58	54
6 Winged Idol	53	52
8 Penitents	28	32
11 The Edge of the Abyss	67	61
8 Submarine Pirate	85	78	1
5 Cross Currents	48	45
11 Between Men	72	70	1
14 Let Katy Do It	87	66	6
5 The Corner	56	47
5 The Missing Link	55	43	1
3 Beckoning Flame	65	48
9 The Wood Nymph	54	50	1
8 The Conqueror	71	70
9 Price of Power	55	51
9 Green Swamp	79	78	1
11 Acquitted	67	50
6 D'Artagnan	59	54
17 His Picture in the Papers	89	76	5
12 Honor's Altar	78	69	2
13 Betty of Greystone	76	66	2
22 Peggy	95	91	15
7 Don Quixote	57	56
9 The Last Act	79	78	1
11 Daphne and the Pirate	71	57	1
18 Hell's Hinges	93	89	11
16 Flying Torpedo	88	81	8
14 Bullets and Brown Eyes	85	75	3
14 Martha's Vindication	79	72	2
14 Moral Fabric	75	62	1
15 Hoodoo Ann	68	65	1
15 The Raiders	79	70
14 The Habit of Happiness	92	85	5
8 Waifs	70	59	1
8 Little Meena's Romance	64	60	1
17 The Aryan	59	80	6
9 Sold For Marriage	68	70	1
15 Stepping Stones	87	76	2
10 Sunshine Dad	36	46
9 Civilzation's Child	68	64	1
12 Children in the House	79	64	2
10 Beggar of Cawnpore	58	49
17 The Good Bad-Man	89	81	4
12 The No-Good Guy	74	60	3
13 Susan Rocks the Boat	73	64
17 Not My Sister	82	79	4
16 Child of Paris Streets	63	62
20 The Primal Lure	81	76	6
8 Mr. Goode, the Samaritan	53	53
19 Market of Vain Desire	82	66	5
18 Going Straight	80	77	3
22 Bugle Call	95	80	7
23 Reggie Mixes In	92	79	10
14 Sorrows of Love	67	72	1
18 An Innocent Magdalene	68	68	1
16 The Dividend	68	65	1
20 A Wild Girl of the Sierras	42	50
21 The Apostle of Vengeance	88	82	3
17 Casey at the Bat	44	49
25 The Phantom	84	71	7
27 Flirting with Fate	87	85	10

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
28 The Deserter	82	69	10
22 Little School Ma'am	72	65	2
24 The Eye of the Night	75	58	4
16 Stranded	64	56
25 The Captive God	68	69	2
20 The Half-breed	73	77	2
20 The Payment	81	70	3
16 Marriage of Molly O	48	47
18 Honor Thy Name	88	72	4
19 The Devil's Needle	63	63	1
22 Shell "43"!	90	68	6
25 Hell-to-Pay Austin	83	65	6
14 Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.	68	64
14 Pillars of Society	56	55	1
19 Home	91	80	9
15 Gretchen the Greenhorn	63	62	1
18 The Patriot	77	78	5
20 The Social Secretary	90	73	7
14 The Thoroughbred	80	71	1
16 The Little Liar	67	56
16 The Wolf Woman	89	91	6
13 The Dawnmaker	53	77	2
14 Diane of the Follies	73	74	2
21 Manhattan Madness	94	91	11
17 Plain Jane	87	78	4
14 Old Folks at Home	85	70	2
14 The Jungle Child	57	58	1
13 The Rummy	68	51	1
17 The Return of Draw Egan	88	87	6
16 The Vagabond Prince	75	70	3
16 Somewhere in France	77	67	1
12 A Corner in Colleens	91	84	6
9 Sister of Six	71	61	1
16 Fifty-Fifty	90	83	6
4 War's Women	61	48
11 Atta Boy's Last Race	54	54
12 American Aristocracy	92	88
9 The Microscope Mystery	46	39
11 The Hon. Algy	78	69	1
13 Jim Grimsby's Boy	66	60
13 The Devil's Double	92	93
11 The Children Pay	73	63
10 Childre nof the Feud	55	53
8 The Criminal	49	45
7 The Gamble in Souls	76	72
12 The Wharf Rat	46	46
11 The Matrimaniac	94	95
11 The Sin Ye Do	96	82
10 The Heiress at Coffee Dan's	56	47
17 Tree of Many	54	44
7 The House Built Upon Sand	79	66
5 Nina, the Flower Girl	38	35
7 The Female of the Species	79	76
11 Truthful Tulliver	98	96
10 The Weaker Sex	89	83
5 The Little Yank	32	45
7 The Bride of Hate	76	65
7 The Iced Bullet	55	39
10 The Americano	99	97
6 Chicken Casey	75	47
8 Jim Bludso	68	38
8 The Crab	79	59
6 Girl of the Timber Claims	37	36
9 The Gun-Fighter	66	77
5 The Bad Boy	65	33
5 Princess of the Dark	17	28
3 Stage-Struck	38	40
5 The Last of the Ingrams	50	47
3 Blood Will Tell	62	53
2 A Love Sublime	23	23
3 The Little Brother	28	28
7 Back of the Man	94	82
3 Betsy's Burglar	40	42
3 The Square-Deal Man	100	100
3 The Dark Road	53	67
1 A Daughter of the Poor	35	38
2 A Woman's Awakening	40	25
1 Her Father's Keeper	30	50

WORLD

439 World	67.8	62.2	4
1 Hearts Afire	65	65
1 Daughter of the Sea	60	50
2 The Warning	88	48
2 The Little Dutch Girl	80	85
1 The Price of Her Silence	80	90
2 The Master of the House	68	53

Reports	% P. P.	% B.O.	Repeat
1 The Dragon	60	30
1 The Price	80	55
1 Love's Cross Roads	55	50
1 Better Woman	75	65
1 By Whose Hand	60	55
1 Her Great Hour	60	40
1 When it Strikes Home	60	65
2 Circus Romance	65	55
1 Old Dutch	75	50
2 Ballet Girl	82	62
3 Marrying Money	79	63
1 Wishing Ring	64	60
2 The Dollar Mark	55	42
1 Gentleman from Mississippi	60	40
1 As Ye Saw	100	45
1 Stolen Voice	60	50
1 Face in the Moonlight	80	60
1 Women and Wine	80	40
2 Blue Grass	75	68
1 Fruits of Desire	40	50
1 Alias Jimmy Valentine	80	60
6 Trilby	81	69	1
1 Idols	40	40
2 Master Hand	86	80
3 Devil's Toy	57	73
5 Salvation Nell	60	47
3 Family Cupboard	50	57	1
4 Heart of Blue Ridge	84	73	1
1 Butterfly on Wheel	80	70
2 Hearts of Men	80	52
1 Body and Soul	40	45
2 The Ransom	63	43
4 The Labyrinth	66	65
3 Should a Wife Forgive?	90	90
1 The Senator	75	60
3 Sins of Society	76	55
7 Camille	86	79	2
3 The Rack	89	69
1 Fine Feathers	70	40
1 The Clarion	60	75
2 Women in 47	76	50
4 Yellow Passport	82	55	1
2 Price of Happiness	52	60
2 A Woman's Power	45	50
1 Cowardly Way	60	60
1 Passersby	60	60
3 Man and His Angel	62	45
2 Supreme Sacrifice	77	63
2 The Struggle	60	60
2 Hand of Peril	72	60
4 Then I'll Come Back to You	83	73	1
4 The Reapers	75	65
2 The Shadow of Doubt	78	65
2 Social Highwaymen	75	48
3 Closed Road	87	81	1
7 The Feast of Life	61	73
0 Her Maternal Rights	56	73
6 Sudden Riches	76	71
1 Twin Triangles	80	50
6 Tangled Fates	57	63
8 Fate's Boomerang	42	53
5 His Brother's Wife	83	74	1
10 Perils of Divorce	61	63
12 La vie de Boheme	48	50
2 What Happened at 22	82	80
5 Crucial Test	59	58
7 The Weakness of Man	61	68
12 Sally in Our Alley	68	66
14 Paying the Price	70	70	1
12 Miss Petticoats	50	61
14 Woman's Way	75	74	4
13 The Summer Girl	56	57
12 Rail Rider	68	60
10 Husband and Wife	75	63	2
8 Almighty Dollar	76	72	1
11 Velvet Paw	73	66	1
8 Friday, the Thirteenth	72	70
11 Dark Silence	77	79	2
4 The Revolt	66	63
7 The Gilded Cage	75	70
6 Hidden Scar	77	67
6 The Scarlet Oath	60	62
7 Man Who Stood Still	71	63
7 The Heart of a Hero	58	48
8 Without a Soul	80	90
14 Bought and Paid for	92	91	11
10 The Madness of Helen	57	54
8 Men She Married	58	55
4 The Deep Purple	81	75
9 All Man	61	61	2
7 Broken Chains	50	43
11 The Rise of Susan	81	85	6
5 The World Against Him	48	48
8 Woman Alone	71	68	1
6 On Dangerous Ground	61	61
7 The Man Who Forgot	65	61	1
4 Marriage a la Carte	73	73	1
1 The Unpardonable Sin	40	55
5 The Bondage of Fear	65	63
5 Tillie Wakes Up	82	76	1
0 The Hungry Heart	86	78	2
4 The Square Deal	76	79
1 A Girl's Folly	80	100
2 The Red Woman	58	55
1 The Web of Desire	90	80

METRO

497 Metro	70.8	67.2	49
1 Her Reckoning	60	40
1 Satan Sanderson	70	70
1 Cowboy and Lady	80	55
1 Heart of a Painted Lady	85	75
1 High Road	80	80
3 Shooting of Dan McGraw	81	78
1 Middleman	90	80
1 My Best Girl	60	60
1 Right of Way	70	65
2 Second in Command	77	80
1 The Vampire	80	90
6 Soul of a Woman	93	80	1
2 Silent Voice	77	87
1 An Enemy of Society	60	40
2 Song of Wage Slave	75	70
1 Emmy of Stork's Nest	70	60
2 Final Judgment	80	85
2 Pennington's Choice	92	90
4 Woman Pays	78	52
2 One Million Dollars	78	70
3 Barbara Frietchie	82	73
5 The Yellow Streak	85	64
3 House of Tears	80	65
4 Rosemary for Remembrance	73	68
3 Black Fear	73	57
5 What'll People Say?	80	84
4 The Turmoil	70	55
8 Lure of Heart's Desire	56	56
5 Her Debt of Honor	49	50
6 A Man and His Soul	83	83	2
3 The Upstart	68	72
3 Dimples	52	58
4 Corner in Cotton	64	58
5 The Price of Malice	66	65
5 Soul Market	84	77	2
2 Blindness of Love	80	85	1
3 Lovely Mary	67	83
1 My Madonna	80	85
5 Her Great Price	80	71	1
8 The Wall Between	78	82	1
5 The Kiss of Hate	60	74
6 Half Million Bribe	69	49
8 Playing with Fire	78	75
11 The Come-Back	75	74	1
8 Snow Birds	80	77
8 A Million a Minute	72	84	1
4 The Spell of the Yukon	79	71
6 His Great Triumph	49	43
10 The Scarlet Woman	73	84	1
10 Dorian's Divorce	74	68
8 Masked Rider	69	68
6 Flower of No Man's Land	58	75
8 The Purple Lady	82	63
10 The Eternal Question	76	83	1
11 The Quitter	69	73
15 The River of Romance	87	76	7
7 Child of Destiny	49	57
12 The Devil at His Elbow	63	59	1
13 God's Half Acre	71	62	1
14 The Weakness of Strength	68	54
11 The Pretender	80	72	1
7 The Upheaval	57	63
9 The Light of Happiness	67	61	1
10 Mister 44	88	93	4
8 The Wheel of the Law	77	66	1
9 Dawn of Love	65	59
6 Iron Woman	41	56
5 Life's Shadows	66	60
12 In the Diplomatic Service	67	83	4
8 The Brand of Cowardice	64	52
11 The Gates of Eden	69	49
11 Extravagance	69	82	3
9 The Wager	79	64
1 My Madonna	80	85
6 The Sunbeam	44	36
10 Big Tremaine	74	82	5
8 The Black Butterfly	70	79	4
6 Stolen Triumph	53	49
6 Awakening of Helena Richie	63	64
7 Pidgin Island	64	71
9 Vanity	61	53
10 The White Raven	85	86	4
6 A Wife by Proxy	43	39
7 Threads of Fate	39	38
7 Bridges Burned	39	59
5 The End of the Tour	33	30
2 One of Many	75	40
4 The Secret of Eve	18	59	1
4 The Promise	84	84	1
1 The Barricade	40	20
1 The Hidden Children	20	10
1 The Mortal Sin	70	60

FOX

626 Fox	72.9	70.0	55
1 Girl I Left Behind Me	0	25
2 St. Elmo	52	50
4 Fool There Was	82	90	5
2 Dr. Rameau	90	87	1
2 Kreutzer Sonata	90	85
2 The Idler	55	65
2 Celebrated Scandal	70	70
2 Clemenceau Case	87	81	1
2 Walls of Jericho	40	55
1 Woman's Resurrection	80	45
2 Anna Kerinina	67	65
2 Life's Shop Window	85	87
2 The Nigger	100	70
4 The Gilded Fool	70	75
2 Devil's Daughter	77	95
6 Should a Mother Tell?	85	86
1 Wormwood	80	80
1 Lady Audley's Secret	90	65
1 Princess Romanoff	60	60
1 Valley of the Missing	50	40
1 Children of the Ghetto	75	40
1 Samson	80	50
1 The Thief	90	40
9 Two Orphans	84	86	3
2 The Song of Hate	92	82
7 Regeneration	77	72	4
5 Wonwerful Adventure	75	77
5 Sin	62	82
2 Little Gypsy	80	74
5 Soul of Broadway	83	78	1
2 The Family Stain	87	64
3 Carmen	82	83	2
3 Blindness of Devotion	56	53
4 Woman's Past	63	43
9 Broken Law	82	56	1
8 Galley Slave	76	75	1
3 Unfaithful Wife	73	61
3 Her Mother's Secret	73	57
3 A Soldier's Oath	82	70
5 Destruction	86	94	1
3 Green-Eyed Monster	53	74
3 Parisian Romance	65	61
2 Fourth Estate	80	68
6 Serpent	92	93	1
5 Ruling Passion	53	59
5 Merely Mary Ann	52	45
7 Fool's Revenge	45	49
9 Fighting Blood	74	69
4 The Witch	63	59
4 Marble Heart	41	60
10 Gold and the Woman	65	86	1
9 The Bondman	79	62	1
5 A Wife's Sacrifice	55	56
10 Blue Blood and Red	84	80
6 Slander	80	70
10 A Modern Thelma	59	49	1
9 Man of Sorrow	63	64	1
9 Blazing Love	70	68
11 The Eternal Sapho	84	87	4
12 Sins of Men	76	61	1
14 Battle of Hearts	63	61
10 The Spider and the Fly	67	72	1
11 Hypocrisy	76	68
10 A Woman's Honor	69	71
20 East Lynne	87	86	3

Reports	% P.	% B.O.	Repeat
15 Ambition	71	67
17 Man From Bitter Roots	82	80	2
18 Caprice of the Mountains	68	64	1
15 Tortured Heart	71	67
21 The Beast	87	66	6
24 Under Two Flags	94	92	16
17 The End of the Trail	65	79
18 Sporting Blood	61	57	1
16 Little Miss Happiness	77	71
18 Daredevil Kate	78	76	2
13 Unwelcome Mother	65	68
13 Her Double Life	84	88	3
9 Where Love Leads	69	61
13 Fires of Conscience	61	70	1
11 The Straight Way	68	73
8 The Ragged Princess	77	70
13 The War Bride's Secret	76	58	3
10 Romeo and Juliet	87	86	4
5 Love and Hate	66	60
4 The Mischief-Maker	69	69	1
5 Jealousy	72	82
4 The Mediator	71	70
4 Sins of Parents	91	78	3
3 The Battle of Life	71	60
4 The Vixen	63	71
3 The Love Thief	83	83
2 The Primitive Call	70	78
2 The Island of Desire	77	65
1 The Price of Silence	85	100
2 The Bitter Truth	83	80	1
5 The Darling of Paris	60	67
2 One Touch of Sin	83	85
2 A New York Peacock	93	90
1 The Scarlet Letter	90	85
2 The Tiger Woman	80	80	1
2 Sister Against Sister	55	60
2 A Tale of Two Cities	90	90	1
2 The Victim	69	65
2 Love's Law	15	20
1 The Blue Streak	40	40

MUTUAL

129 Mutual	72.3	70.6	14
1 Buzzard's Shadow	85	80
1 Death Lock	98	85
1 On the Night Stage	75	46
1 The Mating	80	70
1 Enoch Arden	100	100
1 Girl from His Town	65	70
1 Ghosts	80	65
1 Cup of Life	85	40
1 His Wife	70	25
1 House of Scandal	90	75
1 Infatuation	60	55
3 Miracle of Life	83	50	1
4 Inner Struggle	40	20
1 Mill of Floss	75	00
2 The Painted Soul	82	55
1 End of the Road	90	100
1 Father and Son	75	75
1 The Reward	80	50
2 Bird of Prey	85	87
2 Inspiration	70	100	1
2 As a Woman Sows	80	82
1 The Decoy	50	88
1 The Drifter	75	50
1 Life's Blind Alley	50	75
1 Silas Marner	100	100	1
3 The Craving	69	67
1 Law Unto Himself	40	50
1 Heart of Tara	75	75
1 According to Law	65	52
1 Overalls	75	90
1 My Partner	50	50
3 The Bruiser	78	65	1
1 Hidden Law	100	90	1
1 Love Liar	72	82	1
1 Revelations	50	50
1 The Net	90	100	1
1 The Haunted Manor	52	58
1 Feathertop	85	90
1 Lying Lips	60	70
1 Dust	80	80
1 Other People's Money	85	68
3 Isle of Love	80	85	1
4 Whispering Smith	59	67
6 Soul Mates	69	63
2 Wasted Years	76	81
2 Far from Madding Crowd	70	67
4 Medicine Bend	74	81
4 Highest Bid	64	66	1
2 Her American Prince	62	65
5 Doorsteps	65	60	1
2 House of Mirrors	77	75
2 Wall Street Tragedy	65	80
5 Youth's Endearing Charms	77	75	1
2 Strength, Donald Mackenzie	75	72
1 Million for Mary	90	90	1
5 Judith of the Cumberlands	68	68
2 A Welsh Singer	60	53
1 Man Who Would Not Die	85	75
1 Three Pals	80	86
3 Manager of the B. & A.	68	70
6 The Pearl of Paradise	73	72	1
2 Dulcie's Adventure	81	73
4 Faith	70	59
2 Miss Jackie of the Navy	92	85	1
1 A Dream or Two Ago	75	60
2 Innocence of Lizette	100	85
1 The Butterfly Girl	70	70
1 The House of Scandal	0	10
1 The Man From Oregon	95	75
1 The Girl From Rector's	40	40
1 The Greater Woman	60	60
1 Where Love Is	40	40
2 The Gentle Intruder	60	60
1 Damaged Goods	40	100
1 Philip Holden—Waster	77	75
1 Redeemed	50	40
1 The Love Hermit	78	78

MUTUAL-CHAPLIN

1 A Night in the Show	100	90	1
4 The Fireman	75	88
4 The Vagabond	55	88
5 The Floorwalker	97	100
1 The Wolf Man	50	50
1 Bluff	85	80
8 One A. M.	63	81	1
15 The Count	88	85	8
3 The Pawnshop	70	72	2
5 Behind the Scenes	94	93	4
7 The Rink	96	99	6
6 Easy Street	98	100	6

PATHE

131 Pathe	67.8	68.6	13
1 Last Volunteer	80	80
1 The Spender	80	80
3 At Bay	78	81
1 The Galloper	40	90
1 Closing Net	60	50
3 Nedra	55	45
1 Affair of Three Nations	75	80
3 The Beloved Vagabond	76	67
2 Greater Will	50	55
6 Excuse Me!	90	73	2
3 King's Game	56	62
6 Madame X	71	91	3
3 Love Trail	38	52
3 Hazel Kirk	60	55
1 Simon the Jester	60	35
3 New York	80	74	1
2 Precious Packet	67	45
4 Shrine of Happiness	78	72
6 Woman's Law	68	65
10 Big Jim Garrity	69	55	1
6 Girl with the Green Eyes	65	72
3 Matrimonial Martyr	63	73	1
7 Shadow of Her Past	34	81
4 The Fugitive	75	63
3 Little Mary Sunshine	90	78	1
1 Divorce and the Daughter	78	75
1 The World and the Woman	85	90
6 The Shine Girl	72	74
2 Fear of Poverty	45	95
2 The Test	60	48
3 Saint, Devil and Woman	44	57
3 Light That Failed	69	69	1
5 Shadows and Sunshine	94	75	2
2 Prudence, the Pirate	58	73
3 Arms and the Woman	70	53	1
3 The Challenge	73	65
4 Joy and the Dragon	79	73
2 The Romantic Journey	78	68
3 Her New York	78	60
3 Kick In	75	83

BLUEBIRD

213 Bluebird	62.1	62.0	18
2 Jeanne Dore	27	45
2 The Secret Love	38	40
2 Hop, the Devil's Brew	40	43
7 Undine	80	87	3
4 Wrong Door	75	95
1 Grip of Jealousy	75	85
2 Rupert of Hentzau	51	60
2 Strength of the Weak	76	75
1 The Yaqui	42	58
3 The Flirt	15	74
1 Tangled Hearts	48	52
1 John Meehan's Double	53	58
2 The Great Profiteer	70	66
4 Gaylord Waring	51	50
5 Crippled Hand	58	69	1
3 Gilded Spider	46	64
1 Elusive Isabel	48	46
3 The Measure of a Man	63	65
2 Love Never Dies	65	48
4 Son of the Immortals	64	71
5 Eye of God	64	80	1
3 Bobbie of the Ballet	67	79
3 Evil Women Do	60	62
9 Three Godfathers	68	74	1
14 Shoes	72	77	3
10 Broken Fetters	63	54	1
8 The Love Girl	63	64	1
4 The Grasp of Greed	71	76	1
8 The Silent Battle	78	84
8 Secret of the Swamp	71	56	2
4 Love's Lariat	58	60
7 Bettina Loved a Soldier	70	72
7 Wanted—A Home	75	69
3 The Chalice of Sorrow	72	65
3 Little Eve Edgarton	58	61	1
4 The Girl of Lost Lake	65	60
6 The Unattainable	51	48
11 Saving the Family Name	80	55	1
8 Behind the Lines	63	63
3 Social Buccaneers	72	60
4 Gloriana	69	70
5 Stranger from Somewhere	68	63
4 The Price of Silence	88	86
1 End of Rainbow	65	40
5 The Honor of Mary Blake	56	54
1 The Right to be Happy	50	40
3 Black Orchids	73	80	1
2 Her Soul's Inspiration	55	39
2 God's Crucible	83	75	1
1 The Piper's Price	40	20
4 The Bugler of Algiers	82	69	1
3 The Sign of the Poppy	65	63
1 Mutiny	60	60
1 The Mysterious Mrs. M	60	40	1

UNIVERSAL

1 Little Brother of the Rich	60	68
1 Business is Business	50	65
1 Father and the Boys	20	80
1 The Frame-up	40	45
1 Judge Not	70	70
1 Long Chance	85	80
1 Man of Shame	50	55
1 My Old Dutch	20	55
1 Nature Man	95	60
1 Under Southern Skies	90	75
2 Langdon's Legacy	66	60
2 Love's Pilgrimage	73	70
2 College Orphan	70	63
1 Colorado	90	100
2 The Campbells Are Coming	84	83	1

RED FEATHER

72 Red Feather	64.9	60.2	2
1 It Happened in Honolulu	80	80
1 The Madcap	70	70
1 Soul Enslaved	60	80
1 Knight of the Range	50	4
2 Beckoning Trail	88	71
2 Man From Nowhere	75	90	1
2 Path of Happiness	85	65
2 The Sphinx	50	50
2 Pool of Flame	70	75
1 Lords of High Decision	60	40
2 Black Sheep of Fame	60	62

Reports	% P.P.	% B.O.	Repeat
2 Autumn	65	67
3 Her Bitter Cup	72	71
1 The Yoke of Gold	45	64
1 Heritage of Hate	90	85
1 Thrown to the Lions	60	20
3 Huntress of Men	49	55
3 The Youth of Fortune	69	63	1
2 What Love Can Do	50	80
3 Half a Rogue	78	60
1 Sons of Satan	60	40
2 Two Men of Sandy Bar	72	67
1 Folly of Desire	20	40
1 Brigadier Gerard	50	40
2 Romance of Billy Goat Hill	75	55
4 The Target	76	46
2 Whirlpool of Destiny	62	65
2 Narrow Path	82	60
2 Drugged Waters	57	52
3 If My Country Should Call	58	62
2 Black Friday	60	62
2 The Place Beyond the Wind	80	73
1 The Isle of Life	60	65
2 The Mainspring	72	62
1 Morals of Hilda	80	80
2 Mixed Blood	70	55
1 The Child of Mystery	45	15
2 Polly Put the Kettle On	43	45
3 Fighting for Love	70	65
1 The Double Room Mystery	60	20
1 Heart Strings	65	40
1 Love Aflame	90	80
1 The Terror	70	60
1 The Devil's Bondwoman	40	20

GREATER VITAGRAPH

390 Greater Vitagraph	68.3	65.4	73
12 Battle Cry of Peace	95	80	4
5 Juggernaut	74	77	2
7 Island of Regeneration	85	81	4
1 Sporting Duchess	40	30
8 Sins of the Mothers	87	87	1
3 Crooky	70	69	2
1 Playing Dead	75	75
4 Dust of Egypt	69	55	2
2 The Rights of Men	74	85
3 Turn of the Road	82	78
3 The Cave Man	74	60
3 Heights of Hazard	75	44
2 A Nation's Peril	86	76
1 The Man's Making	60	78
2 Price of Folly	95	95	2
6 The Great Divide	83	73	2
1 Souls in Bondage	100	80	1
2 Thou Art the Man	72	57
5 Green Stockings	87	88	2
1 Milady's Slipper	90	90
3 Island of Surprise	87	85
5 Gods of Fate	62	62
8 Night Out	80	76	1
1 The Crown Prince's Double	75	60
2 The Writing on the Wall	70	40
4 Kennedy Square	88	66	1
2 For a Woman's Fair Name	80	85
5 Hunted Woman	74	54	1
4 Hero of Submarine D-2	74	71
3 Dollars and the Woman	78	55	1
1 Supreme Temptation	60	60
3 The Two-Edged Sword	70	32
2 Vital Question	80	55
1 Flames of Johannis	40	40
7 Salvation Joan	78	59
9 God's Country and Woman	81	87	4
1 Love's Toll	60	80
9 The Law Decides	80	70	4
8 The Ne'er-Do-Well	94	94	6
4 Ordeal of Elizabeth	58	50
9 The Suspect	79	76	2
3 Lights of New York	70	78
7 The Destroyers	68	57	1
2 Redemption of Dave Darcey	90	80
4 Man Behind the Curtain	85	76
9 The Shop Girl	78	79	1
3 The Conflict	67	47
7 Fathers of Men	71	67
10 The Tarantula	83	74	3
13 The Daring of Diana	61	79
4 Hesper of the Mountains	57	64
11 The Light at Dusk	85	72	4
8 The Alibi	69	69
1 The Dawn of Freedom	0	50
4 Footlights of Fate	58	80
14 The Combat	81	84	1
4 The Kid	61	60
2 Phantom Fortunes	42	62
5 His Wife's Good Name	64	76
11 Through the Wall	79	63	1
14 The Chattel	72	83	3
8 Prince in a Pawnshop	64	67	1
5 Blue Envelope Mystery	59	62
3 Firm of Girdlestone	35	45
10 The Last Man	81	69
5 The Devil's Prize	46	58
5 The Price of Fame	42	45
4 Dollars and the Law	45	71
7 The Enemy to the King	61	68	2
7 Rose of the South	76	66
9 Whom the Gods Destroy	59	73	3
6 Ninety and Nine	76	70	1
4 Indiscretion	59	61	1
5 A Man of Mystery	63	65	1
6 My Official Wife	91	84	1
5 The Glory of Yolanda	74	72	3
1 The Enemy	60	60
5 The Girl Philippa	70	79	2
4 The Courage of Silence	61	55	2
4 Money Magic	53	68
3 Blind Justice	53	48
2 Arsene Lupin	73	53
1 Intrigue	20	20
3 Kitty Mackay	37	38
1 Aladdin From Broadway	40	60	1
1 The Money Mill	40	25
1 Her Right to Live	40	20
1 Babette	80	80
1 The More Excellent Way	80	40

KEYS

106 K. E. S. E.	69.6	66.3	22
1 The Bank	90	90	1
1 The Woman	60	75
1 Work	75	75
2 Thou Shalt Not Covet	78	52
1 Vultures of Society	80	60
1 Between Savages and Tigers	90	100
1 Quo Vadis	60	40
1 The Spendthrift	80	60
1 Officer 666	25	40
1 When Love is King	20	25
1 The Magic Skin	80	75
1 Woman Next Door	60	90
1 The Havoc	5	20
1 Sentimental Lady	65	40
2 The Scarlet Road	70	55
2 Destroying Angel	80	87
1 Musty Suffer	80	80
1 Devil's Prayer Book	50	60
1 Children of Evil	70	65
1 Green Cloak	70	60
2 The Spoilers	92	95
5 Graustark	88	90	4
3 The Slim Princess	77	94	1
3 The Rosary	80	55	1
2 A Texas Steer	72	65
1 House of Thousand Candles	40	30
2 The Raven	87	20
2 The Alster Case	75	60
2 Daughter of the City	60	70
3 Misleading Lady	73	50	1
2 Cycle of Fate	62	75
8 Carmen (Chaplin)	50	93	2
2 Shepherd of Bargain Row	65	55
1 Sherlock Holmes	75	50
3 Into the Primitive	52	60
3 That Sort	70	45	1
4 Valiants of Virginia	85	75
4 The Prince Chap	46	41
8 The Return of Eve	75	73	2
8 The Country God Forgot	74	66
4 Chaplin Revue	63	79
1 The Innocence of Ruth	60	81
1 At Piney Ridge	60	60
2 The Heart of the Hills	63	60
3 The Prince of Graustark	83	82	1
5 The Cossack Whip	87	61
2 Message to Garcia	75	73
2 The Last Sentence	55	70
3 The Truant Soul	78	68	1
1 Little Shoes	80	70
1 Adventures of Buffalo Bill	65	100
1 Skinner's Dress Suit	100	80	1

ART DRAMAS

1 Whoso Taketh A Wife	90	90
1 Lash of Destiny	80	50
1 A God of Little Children	80	83
1 Infidelity	75	80
1 The Rainbow	85	87
1 Rosie O'Grady	82	80
1 Her Good Name	85	86

SELZNICK

14 The Common Law	82	89	4
6 Vera, the Medium	61	59	2
7 The Foolish Virgin	34	61
13 War Brides	73	59	8
7 Panthea	80	76	4
5 The Price She Paid	78	72	2
1 The Argyle Case	95	75	1

Mc CLURE

1 Pride	20	40
3 Envy	27	53

ARTCRAFT

15 Less Than the Dust	59	77	5
14 The Pride of the Clan	71	71	7
3 The Poor Little Rich Girl	98	100	2
1 Broadway Jones	100	85	1

SELIG SPEC.

2 The Crisis	70	58

FROHMAN

3 The Witching Hour	53	53	1

UNIV. SPEC.

1 Scandal	80	72
1 Robinson Crusoe	65	70
5 20,000 Leagues Under Sea	63	98	4
9 Dumb Girl of Portici	48	62
2 Diana the Huntress	58	75	1
8 Where Are My Children?	79	84	2
2 Jewel	83	65
4 Idle Wives	55	100	4
3 The Eagle's Wings	79	69

FOX SPEC.

1 Neptune's Daughter	80	80	1
2 A Daughter of the Gods	70	50

METRO SPEC.

12 Romeo and Juliet	79	60	3

PARAMOUNT SPEC.

5 The Christian	81	78	1
2 Tess of the Storm Country	100	85	2
2 The Typhoon	88	78	1
5 Eternal City	90	95	3

IVAN

1 Her Surrender	85	70
2 Her Husband's Wife	90	95
2 Flower of Faith	50	25
4 Jaffery	63	55
2 Faded Flower	82	74	1

B. S. MOSS

1 The Power of Evil	87	70
1 One Day	85	80

SERIALS

5 Patria	89	81
14 Gloria's Romance	76	83
3 The Crimson Stain	61	65
4 Mysteries of Myra	80	80
2 The Yellow Menace	40	40
8 Liberty	88	92
3 Grip of Evil	73	67
3 Who's Guilty	78	78
10 The Iron Claw	93	92
3 The Diamond Runners	66	82
7 The Shielding Shadow	91	91
6 Secret of Submarine	73	79
4 Peg o' the Ring	50	80
8 Scarlet Runner	67	64
4 Lass of Lumber Lands	55	54
1 Girl and the Game	73	45
2 The Great Secret	25	45
1 Pearl of the Army	98	98
1 The Secret Kingdom	20	0

UNSYMPATHETIC PLOT WITH BIG SCENES MISSING FIRE IN GOOD ATMOSPHERE

Clara Kimball Young in

THE EASIEST WAY

Clara Kimball Young Corp.—Selznick Pictures

DIRECTOR.....Albert Capellani
AUTHOR.....Eugene Walter
SCENARIO BY.....Frederic Chapin and Albert Capellani
CAMERAMEN.....Hal Young and Jacques Monteran
AS A WHOLE.....Interesting action in good atmosphere, but doesn't reach the heart; finish bad
STORY.....Too much detail given to certain sequences, with jumps between not clearly covered by titles; author's finish changed
DIRECTION.....Gave very interesting atmosphere, with good types, but action failed to grip; construction frequently lagged and at times jumped PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good, but varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS.....Some very good effects, but occasionally were rather poor
CAMERA WORK.....Varied from fine to fair
STAR.....Central figure throughout; generally very attractive, although occasionally badly lighted
SUPPORT.....Very good
EXTERIORS.....Acceptable; not unusual
INTERIORS.....Generally very good, although frequently too much furniture
DETAIL.....Several story points not covered
TIME.....One hour and fifty minutes (7 parts)

ANY audience anywhere will consider this decidedly interesting, and quite worth while on that account, even though they feel a bit disappointed because the story never at any time really convinces or impresses.

The finish, as it stands, is a sad mistake. The author in the play was wise; he quit when he was through. The film, instead of doing that, wanders along through much footage and does not accomplish anything whatever except to change the intent of the author by killing off the heroine instead of allowing the audience to imagine her punishment through trying to find happiness "the easiest way."

Again I want to insist that you can do much more by suggestion than by showing actual events. Certainly that applies in this case. The suggested Hell that she was going to, following her final speech after the big scene in the bedroom, is much more realistic to any audience than the showing of a series of scenes which landed her in the river and then in an hospital, to die before our eyes.

Of course, from start to finish this was centered about Miss Young, as most productions are which feature stars. In a way, this is quite unfortunate, because it makes the story construction very episodical.

In developing this adaptation of Eugene Walter's play, we find that many sequences were worked out with much continuity that was certainly superfluous, and then there were sudden jumps from one sequence to another, with a short title which failed utterly to bridge the gap or to intelligently explain the new conditions, or even the bare facts of the new situations.

It is quite possible that many will think this is too long, and certainly it could be, and should be, trimmed to shorter footage, because there are many scenes that could be shortened and quite a number that could be eliminated to advantage.

Some of the sets were very good, but in a few places painted drops were very much in evidence. The one drop with the waterfall in action was rather good, and it will fool the average fan, registering as an "exterior."

In a few places, such as the hallroom of the theatrical boarding-house and the hotel scenes in the first of the film, which were supposed to be at 2 A. M., the lighting was very bad, being entirely too uniform and rather contrasty on the faces of the characters. There were a great many effects, however, which were good, and as a whole the atmosphere will be the chief recommendation of this offering to the non-critical fan.

As a play, Mr. Walter's lines made some of the situations very, very dramatic, but unfortunately the basic idea of whether a woman should be kept or not has been used very often in the films, and consequently it has lost much of its strength. There was one letter tacked on to the finish which I think was decidedly poor judgment. It said: "What chance has a woman who has fallen, to rise? " Surely, that's a bum argument! They have every chance in the world.

A goodly portion of the film was devoted to close-ups of Miss Young, which will certainly please those who pay to see the star, and her work was quite satisfactory.

Rockliffe Fellowes, as the newspaper reporter-lover, was particularly pleasing in many scenes, and I was glad to note that his make-up was very much better than it has ever been in any other production, principally because it was not noticeable. He was still a wee bit camera-conscious in important moments, but, on the whole, his personality registered very favorably.

Joseph Kilgour, as the man who financed Miss Young and afterwards rescued her from the tenement where she was waiting for the reporter, played with authority and dignity all the way and made a splendid impression. He was made to walk in and take off his fur overcoat too often, with the result that when this very dramatic entrance came at the finish, it got a laugh from some people, who said: "He sure does love to take off that fur overcoat and put it on again."

The other characters were very well chosen as to type and were generally quite satisfactory.

Among the points which were not clearly covered in the plot construction were such items as these: We were never told just whom Mrs. Williams was, at whose home Miss Young visited after we saw her playing in Denver; we didn't have the fact registered that her play had finished its tour, nor did we know exactly how Fellowes landed at the home at this time. Afterwards, the gold discovery by our hero was done very much a la Movies—which will get a laugh—and at the same time it was not clearly explained that Miss Young was in New York, awaiting his return, this point being rather hazy, until, after considerable footage, we saw his letters.

The last very serious detail error was this: Miss Young had moved from her tenement address to the hotel without writing to the reporter in the West, and yet he wired to her at the hotel. I would like to know how he knew she was at the hotel, since the telegram had been addressed to the hotel and not to her former address, and had not been forwarded.

The chief fault with the development of the big dramatic moments was that they came too abruptly; the tempo was not good. In such scenes as Brockton's sacrifice at the home of Mrs. Williams near Denver, and the final big scene in the bedroom, where he explained to the reporter that he had not broken faith, but the girl had, the action was jumped into these dramatic moments without the necessary development to lead up to the punch. Because of this failure to provide a proper tempo and development, the situations failed to convince and register impressively.

As a sample of the lighting errors that occasionally slipped in, we had Miss Young in a bedroom lighting a candle, with a light coming on very suddenly which threw a heavy shadow on the wall to the left of her, although the candle was immediately in front. This was so noticeable that anyone will get it.

The dramatic moments were marred by the fact that we had no comedy relief bits to provide contrast. The drama ran straight through with a bit too much of a monotone, and there were a number of places where a little comedy would have lifted the offering very much. The fact that it was not in evidence will tend to bring laughs frequently where they're not wanted, because an audience rarely sits through two hours of film without wanting to laugh a few times.

On one or two occasions the producer used the moving camera idea too much. In one situation he followed Miss Young all the way through a large set—which will make everybody comment on the mechanics, but will hardly impress from any other angle.

In the cast were Louise Bates, Cleo Desmond, Frank Kingdon and George Stevens.

The Box Office Angle.

Clara Kimball Young is certainly a good bet at the box office, and I'd say that you can figure that her name and the prestige of this being an adaptation of a very successful play should guarantee excellent business on this production. You must also remember that, while "The Price She Paid" probably suffered because "The Foolish Virgin" was bad, "The Price She Paid" took the curse off the preceding production, so that this offering, following a good C. K. Y. film, should benefit decidedly, and as a result pull big business.

This film doesn't grip at the heart, but it is a big production as to situations and atmosphere, and, while an audience may not rave over it when they come out, they'll feel that it is at least decidedly bigger than "program" stuff, and consequently feel that they have had a fair evening's entertainment.

Should they tell you that they don't like the story, your alibi is—It was one of the most successful plays Broadway has known. The fact that this is known may keep them from fussing about it if they don't like the plot as developed.

STRONG MAN STUNTS AS COMEDY IN MELO SETTING

Elmo Lincoln in

MIGHT AND THE MAN

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Edward Dillon
AUTHOR	F. M. Pearson
CAMERAMAN	Albert G. Gosden
AS A WHOLE	Got comedy out of strong man stuff
STORY	Melo burlesqued a bit for laughs
DIRECTION	Kept things moving and registered some good fun
PHOTOGRAPHY	Quite acceptable; not unusual
LIGHTINGS	Rather ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STAR	Some hefty guy
SUPPORT	Quite satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Acceptable; nothing unusual
DETAIL	Some funny bits
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THEY hit upon an idea here which I believe is good for at least one production and might possibly be followed up for others. They have taken the "Doug" Fairbanks tip and have given us strength stunts instead of acrobatics, tied into a melodrama for purposes of fun-making.

In a way this offering suggests the European production, "The Marvelous Maciste," which featured The Giant of Cabiria, because in this we have a lot of melodrama which is plainly planted for purposes of giving the kind gink a chance to perform, with most of his stunts being pulled for laughs.

Of course, there is the thread of a story with lovers, the spy trying to steal the poipers, etc., but this has been planted so that we realize that it isn't to be taken seriously, but only to be considered as a groundwork for the fun-making.

The strong man at first decides that he wants to marry the shero, but the minute he sees the cook, that settles it—it was love at first sight.

The last reel and a half was fast action melo with some chase stuff and a lot of strength stunts—as, for instance, where the strong man came to the patent medicine plant where they had shero's father imprisoned, and we saw him first lift the tremendous stone from a hatchway that had him captivated in a dungeon, with his head, this coming immediately after he had broken a very strong chain that bound him in shackles, with stunt following stunt, until we saw him tear the boards from a shed and rip big timbers from a tank of water, thereby releasing the imprisoned victim, who was about to be drowned by the willuns.

The titles helped this along in spots, and, taken as a whole, I believe it will be considered quite entertaining. It is sufficiently different from the average program release stuff that it has an advertising angle, and I should think that most fans would feel relieved to get a chance to laugh and see action at the same time.

In the supporting cast were Wilbur Higby, Carmel Myers, Lillian Langdon, Carl Stockdale and Clyde Hopkins.

The Box Office Angle.

There is a good chance to go after this along these lines. Most every community has had, or knows of, the sanitariums or private instructors who build up citizens physically. That has become rather a popular fad in the past few years, and I would dwell particularly upon this thought: "Are you fit physically to whip a willun? See 'Might and the Man,' with Elmo Lincoln, the giant who whips 'em by the dozen."

If you have played "Marvelous Maciste" with any degree of success, you can mention the fact that this is an American giant in action in a melodrama which provides fun and furiously fast-moving incident. Make it plain, however, that this is sort of a burlesque rather than an ordinary movie melo. Emphasize the "comedy" angle.

PLAY'S EXCEPTIONAL POSSIBILITIES BEAUTIFULLY DEVELOPED ON SCREEN

Harry T. Morey and Alice Joyce in

WITHIN THE LAW

Greater Vitagraph Special

DIRECTOR.....William P. S. Earle
PRODUCED UNDER SUPERVISION OF
Commodore J. Stuart Blackton
AUTHOR.....Bayard Veiller
SCENARIO BY.....Eugene Mullen
CAMERAMAN.....Clark R. Nickerson
EDITED BY.....Violet Mallory
SCENIC SETTINGS BY.....Ferdinand Earle
AS A WHOLE.....Made very effective by personalities, characterizations and treatment
STORY.....Detail of situations made them big; has been stolen frequently, but never so effectively done
DIRECTION.....Made atmosphere convince, kept action impressive and developed situations nicely
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; a few nice effects; but not exceptional or distinctive LIGHTINGS.....Sometimes too uniform, but many good bits
CAMERA WORK.....Good; not exceptional
STARS.....He, forceful and dominating; she, appealing and very pleasing
SUPPORT.....Good types; very nicely balanced
EXTERIORS.....Good; not unusual
INTERIORS.....Good; not distinctive
DETAIL.....Good; title backgrounds awful
TIME.....One hour and fifty-two minutes (8 parts)

THIS big production is conclusive proof of the fact that big dramatic situations, worked out with good detail, can be made very effective on the screen, no matter if the basic idea has been used before.

Many of the points covered in "Within the Law" have been used in dozens of screen stories, but, nevertheless, when we see these situations intelligently treated as to atmosphere and action, with pleasing personalities giving human characterizations, the effect is decidedly dramatic and consequently very entertaining.

Even with those who know this play by heart, I believe the screen production will prove decidedly worth while, because the well-known big moments have been put over with true force and many of the gaps have been nicely filled by the possibilities of screen dramatization which gives the producer more leeway than the stage.

Fortunately, the author of this very successful melodrama provided a nice bit of comedy, and the character of Aggie sticks out on the screen just as it did in the play, because of the use of many bright lines spoken in slang.

The choice of Harry Morey for the part of Joe Garson, the crook who makes the big sacrifice on the finish, was certainly a happy one, since Mr. Morey has the necessary physical dominance, with a suggestion of mental power to make his scenes hit hard and convince.

Alice Joyce, as Mary Turner, was delightful. She has the necessary appearance of refinement to make her near-criminal activities seem human, and, while she showed real emotional strength when needed, there is a decided appeal about Miss Joyce's personality which will guarantee the sympathy of any audience.

Walter McGrail, as the hero, had a very pleasing personality, and fitted into the part of the happy-go-lucky son of the wealthy willun very nicely. He turned this characterization into that of the sincere lover with just the proper shading to make the ending balance nicely where Mr. Morey made the big sacrifice.

Adele De Garde, as Aggie, had a "fat" part because of the many speech titles which were given to her, some of these registering with a "bang."

Eugene O'Rourke made the part of Inspector Burke register effectively, and the other members of the cast were quite satisfactory.

If you are not familiar with the plot, I can tell you that it deals with a girl clerk in a department store, who was falsely accused of theft, and who, after serving her term in prison, decided to take advantage of the law by securing money in various ways, through "bending the law without breaking it."

Several crooks allied themselves with her, and the big climax came when a stool-pigeon, under instructions from the police, tempted one of her friends into a frame-up robbery, which resulted in the stool-pigeon being murdered when his treachery was discovered by the crooks.

The final scenes had to do with an attempt to ascertain who had killed the pet stool-pigeon of the police, with the confession of the murderer coming as a climax when he thought that the girl was to be held for the shooting.

To those who have any doubt as to possibilities for the screen giving out, I would suggest that they make a careful analysis of this offering. Here are situations that, in a way, are obvious and certainly rather well-known. Yet, by intelligent characterization and careful treatment to realize the full value of the dramatic moments, we find the very detail of these old emotional points holding our attention. One of the most important thoughts in this connection is the fact that these characters have been made to seem human to us. We have been introduced to them in such a way as to make us seem to know them. The result is that, when we come to the climaxes, they hit, where the situations would miss fire badly if we had been rushed to them through a series of unconvincing melodramatic action without any attempt at human characterization.

As to lighting and general atmosphere, this production was satisfactory but not distinctive. The attention seemed to have been centered upon the players and the dramatic values.

Certainly, whoever was responsible for the presumably considered "happy thought" of using wallpaper backgrounds for the titles should be promptly shot at sunrise. As few of these, where the background suggested soft, rich tapestries, were very good. But when we began to wander into the dining-room, the kitchen, and, finally, the bedroom for our wallpaper backgrounds, with a few journies into the tenements, when we considered the apparent crudeness of design. I feel that the "happy thought" was being converted into a tragedy. Certainly these terrible title backgrounds marred some of the good moments of the film very decidedly, since they jarred to the extent of taking your mind away from the story, to mentally note the fearful taste of whoever had selected them.

Because of the story construction, it would be possible to reduce this production in footage without seriously marring the desired effect. It can be truthfully said, however, that the film as it stands does not seem to drag badly at any time, nor will it seem padded to the average fan. Every incident fits in, in some way, with the big plot development, although, for purposes of getting this down to the footage required by the smaller theatres, it would be comparatively easy to reduce this to less footage without injuring the big dramatic moments.

Others in the cast were Anders Randolf, Robert Gaillard, Miss Bunce, Billie Billings, Joe Donohue, Bernard Randall and Bernard Seigel.

The Box Office Angle.

Figured as a special production for an evening's entertainment, with the prestige of this having been one of the most successful melodramas ever produced, I believe you can bank on this as a big money-getter, and certainly it has been well enough done to more than please any audience.

I think the treatment, personalities and the characterizations will put this over even where people are perfectly familiar with the story, which means that the suspense element, otherwise rather strong, has been destroyed.

Harry Morey and Alice Joyce have big parts—as big as anything they've ever done on the screen—and certainly both have real followings.

This could be reduced in footage by editing, for theatres that want less than a two-hour show, without decidedly injuring the production, but as it stands it ranks as a very much worth-while two-hour show.

PLAYERS PERSONALITIES LIFT STORY THAT FLOPPED AFTER FINE START

Henry B. Walthall and Mary Charleson in

THE SAINT'S ADVENTURE

Essanay—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR	Arthur Berthelet
AUTHOR	James Campbell
SCENARIO BY	Willis Brown
AS A WHOLE	Characterizations made very convenient plot entertaining
STORY	Started with big thought, but became painfully convenient and rather ordinary
DIRECTION	Gave good atmosphere at times and made some situations effective by treatment
PHOTOGRAPHY	Just good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	A few good effects; generally a bit too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Good at times; generally satisfactory
STARS	Personalities helped situations decidedly
SUPPORT	Some good types
EXTERIORS	Generally acceptable; not unusual
INTERIORS	Fitted atmosphere; not distinctive
DETAIL	Some very convenient spots
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

At first it looked as if they were going to give us an unusual study of church and charity conditions, but almost immediately this production jumped into the painfully convenient situation of the "double" who stole the hero's clothes and was promptly killed, with the result that he was buried in the hero's place. We had this same situation in a Metro film this week, but I will say that the Essanay Company must be given credit for having supplied a "double," whereas Metro supplied only the clothes and a letter.

Our hero, after reading of his own death, then hurried home, only to meet, as soon as he stepped off the boat, a newsboy who needed defending—and, by heck! —this was the son of the double who'd stolen his clothes and had been killed! That was a real jar.

The rest of the film was devoted to the effect upon the neighbors and the community as a whole of this remarkable change on the part of "Joe Farley," the tenement bum, now become a reform leader.

Of course, there was a wife, and Miss Charleson and Mr. Walthall made the scenes between wife and thought-to-be husband very much worth while, because they played them quietly, with good dramatic pauses.

At the first of the film Mr. Walthall's father, a minister, died rather suddenly, leaving him in charge of the church. This death-bed scene was beautifully handled until they moved the camera, which was unnecessary. Before the camera started to travel, the scene was almost like a painting.

After becoming the church head, Mr. Walthall tried to accomplish some real good in a charity way, but found it impossible. After returning to the city in the place of his double, he headed a reform fight, which accomplished this betterment of tenement conditions.

The final scenes were a bit spotty and jumpy as to story construction, but will be generally accepted because they get over the intended happy finale without wasting too much film.

Mr. Walthall had considerable opportunity to register with the dramatic pauses which he knows so well how to time, and Miss Charleson, as the wife, got over without exaggeration the gradual development of this character from the uncouth tenement dweller to the ambitious housewife.

In the supporting cast were Frankie Raymond, Bert Weston, Patrick Calhoun and Ellis Paul.

The Box Office Angle.

Despite the fact that this story has these very convenient spots which jar with intelligent fans, I believe the playing of many of the scenes will redeem this offering to the extent of having it register as quite worth while. There are a number of good little underlying thoughts which should have been given more prominence, but as they stand they stick out often enough to lift the production out of the ordinary surface-action routine.

The personalities of Henry Walthall and Mary Charleson should be worth money at the box office to you because they have had several good films together and, while this is not the best thing they have done, it is a production which will undoubtedly register as entertaining.

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

EDWARD WARREN

Producer of

STATE RIGHTS FILMS

1482 Broadway, New York City

BURLESQUING IT MAKES ORDINARY MELO VERY ENTERTAINING

Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott in

THE SIXTEENTH WIFE?

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	Charles J. Brabin
AUTHOR	Molly Elliott Seawell
SCENARIO BY	A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN	Clark R. Nickerson
AS A WHOLE	Burlesque melo truly funny at times
STORY	Unusual coincidence stuff burlesqued for fun
DIRECTION	Gave beauty spots, nice atmosphere touches and made overplaying humorous
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; some bits excellent
LIGHTINGS	A few very effective; others varied from good to fair
CAMERA WORK	Generally very good
STARS	She, shown to advantage; he, an excellent burlesque willun
SUPPORT	Coon, great; others very good for burlesque
EXTERIORS	Some good atmosphere
INTERIORS	A few very effective; some good; some quite setty
DETAIL	Didn't count, because titles labeled it as burlesque
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

SOMEONE—I think the director—deserves a lot of credit for having sense enough to make a burlesque out of this.

Even though the titles were written in a burlesque humor vein from the very first, it struck me that it was quite possible that this had been made as straight melodrama and then turned into a burlesque when finished, by the titles.

After watching very carefully with this point in mind, however, I saw that in several places the director registered scenes which were undoubtedly played for burlesque, and so the only thing I can figure is that the director decided that the production couldn't get by as a "meller," and therefore decided to overstep in spots and make the whole thing a laugh-getter rather than a groan-getter.

As it stands, this is truly funny at times because of the serious playing of scenes which have been labeled with titles that "kid" the action. The production, in that way, becomes a combination of this sort of thing and an elaborate exposition of Peggy Hyland's beauty clothed in many different gowns and effectively planted in good lightings and distinctive, unusual sets.

They started this off and sort of finished up with a lot of theatre stuff, in which Miss Hyland was shown as a famous dancer, and I must give Producer Brabin a lot of credit for getting this stuff over in a very effective manner. I couldn't swear as to whether Miss Hyland is a real good dancer or not, but if she didn't do any of the dancing, Mr. Brabin certainly did get away with it so well that no ordinary human is going to be able to figure out which is the double and which is Peggy. Of course, we have a hunch about those things, but he did it well enough to keep you from knowing, and the average audience is going to feel sure that she does all of it.

As contrasted with the sad manner in which Anita Stewart was handled in the same sort of scenes in "The Glory of Yolanda," Producer Brabin's work here was masterly, indeed.

The story had to do with a famous dancer who had a press agent what worked overtime thinking up queer stunts which would furnish newspaper space, and one of the mixups into which she wandered was, being planted in a Turkish gink's harem.

Due to the fortunate fact that the Mohammedans all get down on their little prayer rugs at a certain time in the afternoon, it was possible for Peggy to escape, walking over the back of one of these humble souls, while she did her wild leap to the waiting carriage.

Then came the arrival in New York, with reporters galore, and one of them was a kid from the old home town. Following the recognition, we had small-town hero saving Peggy from the Turkish willun right up to the finish.

There were a couple of visions of the small-town life, and we had quite a little fun out of the melodramatic rescues, since, for instance, the Turkish willun's assistants were labeled Hassan, Mecca and Pall Mall, this being in line with all the titles, which were so worded as to deliberately make fun of the scenes which were to follow.

They pulled such stuff as having Miss Hyland pose in her boudoir in mourning costume, with servants and dog to match; and at another time in a costume of white, with everything—servants and dog—save the coon's features, in white, the idea being that this soulful creature had varying moods and changed not only her clothes, but the entire furnishings of her home, to bring perfect harmony between her surroundings and her temperament.

This was rather an interesting study for one sufficiently familiar with pictures to know what happens in studios at times, because I would almost gamble that some of the scenes were played seriously, with others burlesqued after the director had "seen the light." Surely the fact that some of the titles were plainly devised to poke fun at the apparently serious action which was to follow, would indicate to the wise ones that someone was covering up his tracks. Anyway, the final result is most satisfactory—and that's what counts!

Peggy Hyland showed to better advantage than in anything she has done, principally because she had more opportunity to wear pretty clothes and pose in good lightings, and I believe she had the center of the stage much oftener in this than in any other feature in which she has appeared. She "acted" just as everybody else did—"with gestures" on occasions.

The grandiloquent manner of Marc MacDermott fitted into the burlesque-willun part without Marc going so very far beyond what he generally pulls. The assistance of a bum beard helped somewhat.

Templar Saxe, as the funny bald-headed press agent, had a chance to act a lot and he will register as rather good.

George J. Forth, as the hero reporter, had rather a pleasing personality, figuring that you were making allowances for what were supposed to be serious scenes. Can tell more about Mr. Forth's real ability after seeing him in something where he has to deliver without laughs to rescue him from the bad spots.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe you can go to this and clean up if you will advertise intelligently. Understand, it must be figured as a program release, but certainly if you will make it plain that it is a burlesque melodrama with a lot of fun, you should make the fans who accept your routine program stuff consider it very much worth-while as a bit of entertainment.

Of course, your attitude is to be that this was intended as a burlesque all the way—never drop any thought as to anything else—and I would bill it as a comedy of peculiar type, dealing with the wild adventures of a small-town girl who became a famous ballet dancer and almost got caught in a Turkish harem as the sixteenth wife.

Lay the emphasis on the comedy end of this, and you should bring in even those who have been disappointed in some of the recent productions in which Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott have figured.

OBVIOUS, MECHANICAL SURFACE MELLER THAT DOESN'T IMPRESS

William Courtenay in

THE RECOIL

Astra—Pathe

DIRECTOR ..... George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR ..... Anthony P. Kelly
CAMERAMAN ..... Arthur C. Miller
AS A WHOLE ..... Cheap mechanical melo; suggested "serial stuff"
STORY ..... Never impressed; quite convenient and obvious
DIRECTION ..... Atmosphere not distinctive; permitted much overplaying, with situations failing to register
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good straight stuff; lacked distinction
LIGHTINGS ..... Generally too uniform; a few fine bits
CAMERA WORK ..... Acceptable, but lacked artistic touch
STAR ..... Meller hero of serial type; didn't convince SUPPORT ..... Quite actory, particularly girl; most of them camera-conscious
EXTERIORS ..... One or two fine shots; generally ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable, but setty
DETAIL ..... Many story bits very obvious
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

I DON'T believe that any one will be impressed by this, because it is surface-action meller that is painfully convenient and decidedly obvious. Things happened just when needed, with a smoothness of dovetailing to the plot that sort of jarred, and when they came to the finish with the accidents adding to the suspense, it was awful!

The general atmosphere was that of an ordinary serial, since the lightings were not distinctive, and the sets were a bit "setty," and the fact that most of the characters acted all over the place likened it even more to the average serial meller.

William Courtenay, as the hero, was 'ansome, all right, but at no time did he impress or convince.

Lillian Greuze, as the shero, was awful! She acted upon any and every occasion, sometimes going the limit, and frequently she looked out front to find out what the director was saying to her before she went on to follow instructions.

The story had to do with that well-known situation of the husband who went away on a train which was wrecked, with the result that they thought he was dead. Wifey married the second time, under protest, with Hubby No. 1 returning, this causing a scene. Wifey went and busted a statue over the head of Hubby No. 2, very much a la Chaplin, this being the turning point of the plot.

The surviving hubby was a Secret Service man—the audience being well aware of this while the other characters were not—and so he had to go to Europe without telling his wife why. They then conveniently brought the character of the wife's brother into the action, so that he could steal the watch of the murdered man and be accused of the crime. Other than that, there was no reason for his presence in the film.

While the surviving hubby was trying to get home from Europe, wifey's brother was sentenced to death, and he told sister he would be all right because the doctor had it figured out that he would die three days before his appointed execution. This sort 'uv eased "sis's" mind until she saw "doc" and he told her that the boy was lying.

Then came the wild rush to Albany to save the sacrificing brother's life, and we saw hubby on the boat trying to send a message to wifey on what was called the "Albany Express"—although it was nothing but a small engine and three cars which looked very much like a "hick" local.

The boat got into a storm and a flood took away a bridge, delaying the train—the bridge wash-out, of course, coming from news weekly stuff—and then, to "add to the suspense," the telephone got out of order. Oh, boy!—how they will pull these things!

When wifey finally arrived, she thought she was too late—but nay, nay! Our trusty hero had sent word to good old "guv," and, "for reasons of State," the boy had been pardoned. That settled it.

In the cast were Cora Mills Adams and William Raymond.

The Box Office Angle.

If they are willing to stand for this serial meller stuff of international spies and hero locked in a cellar where he can grow a beard until needed in the story again, when the guard, of course, gets drunk so that he can escapes, etc., etc., then this has some action and may interest 'em.

Personally, I think the fans who go to see features like to have more intelligently thought-out stories and more artistically produced productions.

For a moderate price feature to show to transient business or those who love melo, this will prove very satisfactory. I would keep it out of a community house where they check up stuff carefully.

William Courtenay may have a box office value, but I would try to test this before banking very much on it. He is a 'ansome 'ero type, but he's not had many things which would give him the right sort of a following.

Author and Adaptor of Recognized Successes.

EVE UNSELL

Man from Mexico (Honor).
Wildflower (Honor Roll).
Dawn of Tomorrow (Honor).
The Morals of Marcus.
The Warning.
The Ransom (Author).
The Reapers (Author).

Coming Releases.

Forbidden Paths (Author).
Crystal-Gazer (Co-Author).
Fortunes of Fifi.
Tides of Barnegat.
Hearts Desire.
The Dummy.

Coming Releases.

The Long Trail.
The Brother of Beppo.
At First Sight.
Barbary Sheep.
The Honeymoon, etc.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD

LESTER CUNEO
Heavies

YORKE METRO

RATHER WELL HANDLED MELO, BUT STORY SLUMPED AT END

Hayward Mack and Mignon Anderson in

THE PHANTOM'S SECRET

Butterfly—Universal

DIRECTOR	Charles Swickard
AUTHOR	J. Grubb Alexander
CAMERAMAN	Harry Maguire
AS A WHOLE	Except for convenient plot, was interesting, well-done mystery melo
STORY	Started fine, but convenient development made it slump badly
DIRECTION	Gave some fine lightings, snappy action at times and kept it rather interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good; some fine; some poor
LIGHTINGS	Frequently excellent; generally very good; Southern home interiors too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Varied from fine to fair
STARS	Good; although "acted" at times
SUPPORT	Some good types, but acted too much
EXTERIORS	Generally good
INTERIORS	Quite distinctive, except Southern home sets
DETAIL	Quite convenient
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THIS got away to a fine start with a mystery plot development that held nicely, but very soon convenient things began to happen, with the result that they will bring mental groans to any audience, and consequently let the offering down with rather a sickening thud.

At first we had a willunous servant forcing a dying crook to allow him to marry his daughter from a convent, who didn't know father was a crook, this early action being interpersed with the well-known pajama girls in boarding-school stuff, and then after the scene shifted to America, we found the wife landing in a school friend's home on one of her first burglary jobs. This was rather a shock—and then they pulled the good old situation of the two girls journeying South with the train landing in a wreck and the heroine changing clothes with the dead girl, thereby taking over her identity.

Since the Southern family had never seen the expected niece, the crook's wife got away with it until, by another convenient twist, he landed in this particular home and discovered Friend Wife. It seems too bad that he should have picked, out of all the South, that one home!

There had been a very mean-looking crook hanging around through the entire story and we couldn't figure why until the end, when it was disclosed that it was his job to kill off the willun on the finish, which he did nicely, thus leaving Friend Wife to marry her new found love in the southern home.

There were many exceptionally good lightings and considerable action having to do with robberies and raids on the crooks' quarters. The tunnel wreck scene was nicely done, and if this story hadn't been so painfully convenient and so well known as to incident, I believe the production would register very well.

Hayward Mack is well fitted for this sort of crook character, and Mignon Anderson was very satisfactory as the persecuted wife. Some of the other members of the cast acted quite a lot at times. In the cast were L. C. Shumway, Nellie Allen, Fred Church and Dan Leighton.

The Box Office Angle.

If you played the first "Poor Butterfly," I believe I would put my emphasis on this being "The Phantom's Secret" without even so much as whispering that it is a Butterfly. That name sounds interesting enough to possibly get some business, and despite the convenient angles of the plot, those who like melodramas may think that this is a very good film.

Of course, Hayward Mack and Mignon Anderson have no particular box office value—at least, not enough to pull any noticeable amount of business.

I would say that this is just a "good" program release—nothing to figure as fair competition to an exceptional program offering or any special feature. The plot is too familiar to permit of anyone becoming enthusiastic about the offering as a whole.

VERY ORDINARY OBVIOUS SURFACE PLOT NEVER REGISTERS

Pauline Frederick in

HER BETTER SELF

Famous Players—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Robert G. Vignola
AUTHOR	Margaret Turnbull
CAMERAMAN	Ned Van Buren
AS A WHOLE	Very artificial surface meller that never registers
STORY	Mechanical misunderstood-situation stuff; a fair half-reel
DIRECTION	Atmosphere lacked distinction and action didn't convince
PHOTOGRAPHY	Good straight stuff
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform; never distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not artistic
STAR	Badly handicapped by material
SUPPORT	Just acceptable
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Some court reproductions good; but all sets lacked distinction
DETAIL	A few real slips
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

IT seems a pity to put Pauline Frederick, who is a good bet when properly handled, in such junk as this.

This story lacks all the elements of worth-while stuff, being a mechanical misunderstood situation plot that never gets anywhere. The atmosphere is satisfactory, but not distinctive, and any audience is going to feel that they have wasted their time in seeing this.

The story told of a young heiress who became interested in a doctor, and consequently didn't want to marry a "simp" nobleman being recommended by her parents.

Shero went to hero's sanitarium to help him in his work of charity, and there she met a street walker who had known the doctor years before and had kept his picture in her locket. She told of her early disgrace, very conveniently omitting the detail of explaining that the doctor wasn't responsible for it, and, of course, this sent shero away in a huff.

Shero came back later, but this time we had the convenient "plant" of doctor trying to soothe street walker's nerves so that shero could again misunderstand and depart, only after seeing the street walker "goil" commit suicide.

We then saw shero going to the country, very ill, with our hero on trial for street walker's murder. We saw twelve reporters at this trial; yet the newspaper insert showed us two sticks, with a 12 pt. head—two sticks being about four inches of type, and twelve point the smallest head used.

Just as the jury was saying "Guilty," shero busted into the courtroom and said that the woman had committed suicide. They promptly said there would be a new trial. Now, what I want to know is—why would the testimony of this woman, who was apparently much in love with the doctor, have any more weight than what the doctor himself could have told. It certainly was cheap surface "meller." Anyway, they had a "clutch" on the finish and let it go at that.

Of course, while shero had been rushing to the courtroom in her orter'bile, we had a little "additional suspense" by means of a puncture—truly new stuff—and to think that they'd hand us this sort of thing in what is supposed to be a great program.

Miss Frederick and Mr. Meighan, who were shero and hero, respectively, were absolutely unable to lift the story from the depths. It isn't fair to fuss with them for the inability of this to register.

Others in the cast were Armand Cortez, Frank de Rheim, Alice Hollister and Maude Turner Gordon.

The Box Office Angle.

Undoubtedly, Pauline Frederick is worth some money at the box office, but if I were catering to intelligent fans I would dodge this sort of thing. Every one of these that you play injures Miss Frederick's ability to get you real money, and consequently you are simply cutting into your future business and at the same time running a production which will not really give satisfaction.

If Miss Frederick were not in this I would say that you might sneak it by as ordinary program junk to be used on a bad night. I think, however, that it is a serious mistake to injure the prestige of a worthwhile star by showing her in productions that can't satisfy.

EXCEPTIONALLY ARTISTIC LIGHTINGS IN QUAINT PLEASING FANTASY

Mae Murray in

THE PRIMROSE RING

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Robert Z. Leonard
AUTHOR	Ruth Sawyer
SCENARIO BY	Marian Fairfax
CAMERAMAN	Charles Rosher
AS A WHOLE	Very artistic fantasy combination of pathos and visualized fairy tales
STORY	Had human undercurrent which reached the heart and made action register
DIRECTION	Gave exceptionally artistic lightings, wonderfully timed trick photography and nice balance to production as a whole
PHOTOGRAPHY	Exceptionally artistic
LIGHTINGS	Distinctive and frequently quite unusual
CAMERA WORK	Very fine
STAR	Appealing little beauty
SUPPORT	Excellent
EXTERIORS	Very few; were satisfactory
INTERIORS	Good; lighting made them distinctive
DETAIL	Good
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

I BELIEVE that such a wonderful combination of artistic lightings and pathetic heart interest should prove excellent entertainment anywhere.

Producer Robert Leonard and Miss Murray have given us several distinctive features since they have been brought together in the Lasky Studios, but surely this is the most artistic and appealing of them all.

The story is a simple little fantasy which has a very slender plot threat, but the underlying thought is big and it gives the action added strength, making the pathetic incidents much more effective.

The plot centers about some crippled children in a hospital, Miss Murray being introduced first as one of the incurables. The presiding surgeon, by an operation, made it possible for her to walk, and she went to school to become a nurse, while Tom Moore, the surgeon's son, went to Paris to study surgery.

When Miss Murray took up her duties as nurse she spent most of her time in the incurable ward, telling the children fairy tales. Learning that Mr. Moore, the surgeon's son, was to return, she described him as a white knight who would release them from the grip of the ogre, Pain.

When Mr. Moore arrived, however, we found him so encased in his scientific shell that he had lost all the human elements of appreciation of the need of such things as fairy tales to brighten the lives of incurable children, and, in consequence, he and Miss Murray had several clashes over his efficiency methods.

Finally, as head surgeon, he recommended abolishing the incurable ward, the announcement of which caused Miss Murray to resign. In running after her he was hit by an automobile, which accident was exceptionally well handled by more trick camera work, and when he recovered, after many days in the hospital, he had seen the light.

A search located the little heroine, and she was brought to a country home where all the children were awaiting her arrival, with Friend Hero very much in evidence as the boss of the home.

Throughout this story we had scores of scenes where trick photography visualized the fairy tales, and with this trick photography done against black drops with the use of spotlighting, the distinctive atmosphere was maintained by giving most of the other scenes the same sort of treatment. That is, spotlighting was used almost all the way with dark backgrounds.

Miss Murray has a delicate sort of beauty, with a pair of dreamy eyes that seem to fit her perfectly for this sort of part, and I believe it will register as one of her best offerings to date.

In a few places the cutting caused tempo jumps that were a bit startling, but this was possibly due to something having happened to the film after it had left the producer's hands.

Tom Moore was very pleasing, particularly because he knows the value of doing nothing at the right time.

Others in the cast were Winter Hall and Little Billy Jacobs.

The Box Office Angle.

I would go to this rather strong, advertising particularly the fact that it is an exceptionally artistic production of a very human, pathetic little story.

You can bank on this as being an especially fine film for children to see, and it should be a production which you can figure for special matinees for several days.

The artistic excellence of this production should make it good for a run of several days anywhere, particularly if you will emphasize the fact that it is a human little story which registers a spirit of optimism worthy of any one's emulation.

"KEPT WOMAN" DISCUSSION WITH "BIG SCENE" RIDICULOUS

Naomi Childers in

THE AUCTION OF VIRTUE.

U. S. Amusement Corp.—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Herbert Blache
AUTHOR	Joseph Franklin Poland
CAMERAMAN	John G. Haas
AS A WHOLE	Cheap surface meller
STORY	"Should, or should not a woman be kept?"
DIRECTION	Never impressed with atmosphere or treatment
PHOTOGAPHY	Had hazy monotone, lacking definition; was just acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Mostly spotlightings, with dark backgrounds; frequently poor on characters' faces
CAMERA WORK	Varied from good to poor
STAR	Couldn't lift handicaps
SUPPORT	Surface meller types
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; not distinctive
INTERIORS	Ordinary; lacked class
DETAIL	A few incidents impossible
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THIS was considerable footage devoted to a pictorial discussion of whether or not a woman should be kept. After the usual struggles of the persecuted heroine, we had her make this statement in a title: "Yes, there is no doubt that if I want a rich man, he will not offer marriage." This title and the fact that the proposals of the would-be keepers were made in rather crude language, which was unnecessarily frank, marks this as a production which has not been intelligently handled.

As the story moves along we have the good old stuff of the hero artist going blind in his struggle for success, only to tear the bandages from his eyes as he rushes in to save the "goil" from the wicked willun married man, who wants to keep her. Of course, on the finish he retains his sight and the goil decides to camp with him, while the wicked wun comes in to buy some of hero's pictures.

They get the title for this from an awful scene. It was supposed to be an auction of the artist's curios to pay for the operation after hero had gone blind. Miss Childers was shown directing the auction, and after finishing, she offered herself, with all the men bidding various items, such as all their paintings, all their poems, a house on Riverside Drive, much money, much love, etc. This was one of the most impossible situations I've ever seen on the screen, and then—in came the blind hero with the statement that he would offer love and marriage. Then they tried to turn the whole thing off as a joke by having Miss Childers say: "Well, the joke has gone far enough." Believe me—that is "some" bum idea of a dramatic situation! I would like to know in what sort of "sassiety" such auctions have ever been pulled. I've a hunch that most of your patrons will say: "Good night!" after this scene and depart for the hay.

The titles throughout were very poor, and as a sample of the intelligence used in making this film, I will give you a title that they pulled when the hero walked over to a frying pan and inspected it. He said: " . . . Smells a bit fishy—but I should worry." Now, that may have been the case, but why in the world should anybody put such a scene or such a title in a film?

The general atmosphere of this offering was little more than ordinary, and none of the players stood out in a distinctive manner. Miss Childers was made the center of attraction, but she was fearfully handicapped by her surroundings and consequently didn't impress particularly.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say you should forget this unless you are catering to transient or roughneck audiences that would like this selling-women-at-auction stuff. There is nothing in the entire production that approaches good drama, it being for the most part a series of scenes between various men and various women talking over the possibilities of getting together on a kept-woman basis. I can't figure that as good stuff to offer for entertain-

Even though you can buy pictures like this cheap and make a little money, you must remember that there's another day coming. If you want to stick in the film business, you had better give considerable attention to playing pictures that are going to build your reputation rather than tear it down.

ARTISTIC ATMOSPHERE AND FANTASTIC TALE GIVES STAR REAL CHANCE

Valeska Suratt in

SHE

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Kenean Buel
AUTHOR	H. Rider Haggard
SCENARIO BY	Mary Murillo
CAMERAMAN	Frank C. Kugler
AS A WHOLE	Exceptionally artistic and distinctive photographically, with wild, imaginative, interesting action that holds nicely
STORY	Interesting despite impossible elements
DIRECTION	Gave splendid atmosphere, kept action impressive with timely comedy relief
PHOTOGRAPHY	Truly artistic and distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Exceptionally artistic and effective
CAMERA WORK	Very fine; excellent composition and vignetting
STAR	Greatest opportunity of screen career; her mannerisms fitted part perfectly
SUPPORT	Very good
EXTERIORS	Fine atmosphere; some beautiful bits
INTERIORS	Very good
DETAIL	Made atmosphere rather real
TIME	Seventy-five minutes (6 parts)

CERTAINLY Director Kenean Buel deserves a lot of credit for this production. Whoever picked Valeska Suratt to do this part has congratulations coming to him, because this is by far the best thing she has had since "The Soul of Broadway," and really there is more opportunity for her to impress with that Suratt "glide" with which she moves about and the majestic gestures which she loves to pull, in this than in the first Fox picture, "The Soul of Broadway," in which she made her screen debut.

Most every one knows something about this story. If they don't know the story, they do know that H. Rider Haggard was "some" wild boy with the pen. That is going to serve as your alibi when the first jolt of this plot hits the gink who hasn't been acquainted with the basic idea of this wild dream.

If this woman-who-could-never-die thing were pulled by some modern writer, we probably would yell murder. But, because Haggard wrote it as a book and millions have read it and pronounced it interesting, although weird, it stands as somewhat of a classic in the minds of those who love the wild meller stuff. That gets you by, so far as the wild story is concerned. Just make a noise about Haggard, and if anybody sets up a howl about the plot, look at him with one of those pathetic, wearying smiles.

This offering stands as one of the most artistic of the program features released in the past few months. The exteriors, particularly those in which there is water, have been beautifully lighted, with a fine eye for composition and general effect. The atmosphere of Africa has been nicely maintained, and even in the interior sets and costumes the illusion is held pretty well.

Planting Miss Suratt in the sort of silky, veiled costume was an effective bit of business, and, while it seems rather odd to say so, I believe that Valeska looked better with this veil wound tightly about her head and figger than she did without it—and in one or two places she was almost altogether "without." As a matter of fact, there was one short flash—which may even be shorter by the time it gets to you—where the imperishable star was trying to prove that the fire couldn't burn her, that looked very much like if she were altogether "without." Since this was rather reduced in size, however, with double exposure photography entering into it, I wouldn't be able to give definite testimony in the matter.

Figured as a whole, I think this will be considered a good bet. It is certainly unusual and it is quite artistic, and, although the story is wild and impossible, it is interesting, with many bits of comedy planted for relief, with some of them coming where they were quite welcome. Quite a lot of husky native coons and a number of pickaninnies figured in the action, and there were a few alligators, who served as Valeska's best enemy-disposal plant. When she wanted to get rid of anyone, she gave the command: "To the aligators with him!"

Miss Suratt had little to do except pose, show her figger and move her arms in the stately gestures of authority and command. That's where that gal lives!

Our young hero, Ben Taggart, was quite satisfactory, although he created no real stir.

Miriam Fouche, as the hero's native wife, had several good eomtional bits and was generally very satisfactory.

The other characters were good, with Martin Reagan as the butler, getting a number of laughs from carefully planted comedy situations.

Others in the cast were Wigney Percyval and Tom Burrough.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe you can go to this strong, promise that it is the best production which Valeska Suratt ever had and make a loud noise about it being an elaborate adaptation for the screen of this famous novel by the world's most imaginative writer, H. Rider Haggard.

Particularly emphasize the fact that this is a good Suratt picture, because she has had so many bad ones that you will have to plant your claim pretty strong to make 'em understand that this one is good. It is an excellent title and the author's prestige should help a lot in pulling business for you.

EXCEPTIONAL ATMOSPHERE AND TREATMENT MAKE OLD PLOT FINE

Mary Pickford in

A ROMANCE OF THE REDWOODS

Pickford—Artcraft

DIRECTOR	Cecil B. De Mille
SCENARIO BY	Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie Macpherson
CAMERAMAN	Alvin Wyckoff
ART DIRECTOR	Wilfred Buckland
AS A WHOLE	Exceptional proof of what director can do with star, treatment and lightings to make old story very entertaining
STORY	Combination of "Girl of Golden West" and "Salomy Jane"
DIRECTION	Gave perfect atmosphere, wonderful lighting and developed situations so that they registered despite age
PHOTOGRAPHY	Exceptionally artistic
LIGHTINGS	Many distinctive bits; generally exceptional
CAMERA WORK	Exceptionally fine
STAR	Beautifully lighted; was appealing as always
SUPPORT	Many splendid types; all excellent
EXTERIORS	Some very beautiful; excellent composition
INTERIORS	Held atmosphere perfectly, with nice detail
DETAIL	Exceptionally fine touches everywhere
TIME	One hour and twenty-eight minutes (7 parts)

TRULY, here is a sample of what a real director can do with a very old story when he has a big star, by intelligent lighting and treatment. I would say that every director in the business should study this picture from that angle. Certainly the treatment and lightings have saved this from being a very painful "flivver," and I should think that the average audience would enjoy this very much, principally because of the distinctive atmosphere and the manner in which many of the situations have been handled by close-ups and tempo.

I don't need to tell you that the star was appealing, beautiful and capable of holding the attention in all of her scenes, but I do want to mention the fact that she has been given some exceptionally fine lightings in this, some of them being truly unusual.

The supporting cast was a very strong one, with many excellent players, such as Tully Marshall and Raymond Hatton doing what are ordinarily considered "bits." Elliott Dexter gave what is to my mind one of the best performances he has ever registered, in the part of the hero road agent, and Charles Ogle, Walter Long and Winter Hall were very good in their respective parts.

It was a Pickford picture, however, from start to finish, with an unusual background that was interesting and artistic. Miss Pickford was in a majority of the scenes, and all of the action centered about the star.

The story was a very simple one, having to do with Miss Pickford's arrival in the West, from her New England home, only to find that in place of her uncle, who had been killed on the way, she was welcomed by a road agent who had assumed her uncle's identity.

Forced to live as this man's niece, she in time learned to love him and had him reformed when he took one "last" chance in order to get enough money to take her away from the wilds, it "happening" that she was an occupant of the stagecoach which he picked out for his last job.

Of course, they rounded up the highwayman and were about to hang him, when Little Mary pulled the baby clothes stuff, having taken the things from a doll, and she got away with it. After the posse had allowed the lovers to depart, the doll was discovered, but they, good-naturedly, decided that something had been "put over" on 'em and that they'd better let it go at that.

Now, you folks who've been hollering about stories

(Continued on page 320)

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

WM. DESMOND TAYLOR
DIRECTOR
Morosco and Pallas-Paramount.

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Ithaca New York.

JAMES YOUNG

(Continued from page 319)

will probably yell blue murder when you see this plot used as a basis for a ten-thousand-dollar-a-week star, with one of our biggest producers putting on the production. In a way, it does seem rather criminal, and yet the producer has made these time-honored situations entertain, by his treatment, and I believe the average fan will enjoy this very much.

The Box Office Angle.

You know what you can do with this. It is only a question as to how many seats your house holds and how many shows you can give. The thing for you to "alibi" yourself against is the possible howls about the story, and so I would plainly say that this is a simple love story of the great gold rush of '49 in California, reminding one somewhat of "The Girl of the Golden West," which has been most artistically produced by the man who directed "Joan the Woman."

If you will, in a quiet way, plant the thought that this is a simple story exceptionally well handled, before they come, there will be no chance of their having a sane kick when they leave.

Really, I believe it is good enough to more than satisfy, unless you have a lot of "crabs" who fuss particularly about the story angle.

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1917. | No. 21 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

TREATMENT MAKES SIMPLE PLOT RATHER PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in

FRECKLES

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHOR	Gene Stratton Porter
SCENARIO BY	Marian Fairfax
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Rather obvious story made distinctive by producer's treatment
STORY	Fairly interesting, with sympathy touches; but very obvious and rather mechanical and convenient
DIRECTION	By artistic lightings and excellent locations made atmosphere distinctive and gave action additional power through treatment
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; many very beautiful bits
LIGHTINGS	Some truly artistic; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STARS	Pleasing youngsters
SUPPORT	Good
EXTERIORS	Well chosen; some very beautiful; all good
INTERIORS	Good; some nice lightings
DETAIL	Several nice touches
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

ONCE again Producer Marshall Neilan has been handed a story which was rather ordinary so far as mechanics was concerned, and he has, by treatment, made it not only interesting but pleasing, because of the nice sympathy touches, the distinctive atmosphere and the few punches which have been registered by the tempo of the action in these particular scenes.

The story of this started with a one-armed orphan who was the butt of jokes because he didn't know how he'd lost his arm. He ran away, got a job in a lumber camp and eventually whipped the bully lumber thief, fell in love with the girl who was visiting in the mountains, with the climax coming where he shielded her from a falling tree and was hurried to a hospital, while attorneys searched for him to explain to him that he was heir to a title and an estate in Ireland. He didn't want to recover until the girl told him she loved him, and then, of course, he recovered, and also came into possession of the estate.

It isn't hard for you to figure what it is, with that dope on the story, your knowledge of the stars and the realization of the fact that Marshall Neilan produced it.

Figured as a program release, this is rather above the average because of the atmosphere and the fact that several of the more important scenes registered very satisfactorily.

The fight between the one-armed orphan and the bully thief was beautifully handled and made very convincing, which was something very hard to do, considering Mr. Pickford's juvenile appearance.

The falling of the tree was very well done, and the death of the willun through being bitten by a rattler was given just the right detail to make it register effectively. In other words, this is another instance where a real director has taken ordinary material and made a very much worth while production, figured on program standards.

Billy Elmer, as the lumber camp bully, was excellent; and Hobart Bosworth made a dignified, likeable owner of a lumber camp.

Others who appeared were Lillian Leighton and Guy Oliver.

The Box Office Angle.

This team of juvenile stars have had several rather pleasing Paramount pictures now, and I believe that, by playing up the fact that Marshall Neilan produced this, you will be able to do very decent business on it.

The name sounds very interesting, and with Jack Pickford as the star, most fans will figure that "Freckles" listens like an interesting subject. I surely feel that any fan who has been looking at routine program stuff will consider this time well spent, and you can safely promise that it is above the average.

I would center my advertising upon Producer Neilan, the two stars, the name of the film, and the fact that it is the story of a one-armed orphan in a big lumber camp. That should sound promising to most any of the faithful, and will probably interest most of those who only come once in a while.

HAD HUMAN COMEDY BIT AT FIRST WITH FINE STAR, BUT SLUMPED AT END

Anita Stewart in

CLOVER'S REBELLION

Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... Wilfrid North
AUTHOR ..... James Oliver Curwood
SCENARIO BY ..... A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN ..... Thomas F. Malloy
AS A WHOLE ..... Personalities helped poor story, but didn't save it
STORY ..... Had human stuff, but dragged at first; didn't convince when got faster at end
DIRECTION ..... Allowed overplaying in dramatic moments; made little human bits very pleasing, but didn't keep offering convincing or impressive
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Occasionally too harsh and often too uniform, but at times very good
CAMERA WORK ..... Good straight stuff
STAR ..... Very pleasing personality, but allowed to overplay occasionally
SUPPORT ..... Several distinctive personalities; generally good
EXTERIORS ..... A few very pretty, some just ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good; a few splendid shots
DETAIL ..... Too much of it, and sometimes unexplained; as, for instance, skeleton's presence
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THE first part of this was slow but quite entertaining, because it gradually developed into a situation where we saw a wealthy man and a titled willun being forced upon our heroine by her guardians, with a penniless young doctor bumping into the action—sort of accidental-like—with the result that he immediately became our heroine's hero.

Anita Stewart is a delightful personality and a very beautiful girl, and so she held the attention very nicely through these early scenes, with the situation where her big car became stalled only to be rescued by the doctor in his flivver, registering some sure-fire laughs that will make any one feel that they have been having a very good time up to the finish of that sequence.

Unfortunately the story then jumps into a lot of melodrama, with Eulalie Jensen, as the vampire sweetheart of the titled suitor, starting trouble, and Miss Stewart marching into a large assemblage to announce in a title: "I loathe the man, and I will not marry him. . . . You cannot force me to . . . you cannot!" Of course, this declaration caused quite some consternation, but Miss Stewart's aunt calmly said that it was "mere hysteria" and that everything would take place as arranged. Oh, boy!—if that don't get a laugh, then I'm a bum guesser!

Then Miss Jensen shot the willun, with an attempt to stir up some mystery over this falling pretty flat, because most any one will guess at once who did the "doity" deed.

Considerable footage had been devoted to planting the doctor-hero and the wealthy suitor in the garden so that both would be thought guilty of the crime, and, after the shooting, Miss Stewart ran away from the house, very nonchalantly, without any one attempting to guard the house to see that the guilty person did not escape.

We had seen the wealthy suitor approach the garden some time before with a gun, and it was very apparent that an effort was being made to plant one of those mystery things where several people are in an incriminating position which would make it easy to suspect any one of them.

Of course, hero encountered the vamp as she ran from the house and tore a bit of fur from her cloak, which made it easy for us to know that on the finish he was going to be able to prove that she'd "done done it."

We had an awful jolt at the end. Our hero got into his flivver and started for Georgia, where shero was supposed to have headed for, and he was seen stalled on a railroad crossing with a train approaching, this train carrying both shero and the vamp.

There was some good night photography used for the rest of the offering, but why in the world the hero should have allowed the flivver to stand on the tracks with him in it is more'n any one can figure out—unless it can be the author or director. Anybody can push a flivver—even push it uphill, let alone off a railroad crossing. Since only the author and director knew that the shero and vamp were on this train, I can't figure why he'd want to take a chance on having them refuse to stop the train.

Anyway, they came rushing out—as they naturally would not have done—and the detectives arrived at this psychological moment in an automobile, with the result that they pulled the whole finish right here, vamp being accused, followed by a confession, with hero and shero starting on a honeymoon.

All through the offering we had seen on frequent occasions a skeleton standing in the doctor-hero's closet—why, I can't figure! When he started for Georgia in his flivver, the poor nut put the skeleton in the flivver beside him, sitting up in the other seat. The only possible reason I can dope out why this skeleton was played up so prominently all through the offering was that, on the finish, when they got ready for the clutch, Miss Stewart was made to say that she wouldn't kiss hero until he put the other party out of the car. This resulted, of course, in "doc" promptly tossing the bones into the ditch—and they quit. Many things are seen in pictures that are hard to dope out, but certainly this was a sticker. I'd like to know who wished that skeleton into this offering.

Miss Stewart helped this quite a lot, but couldn't save it.

Rudolph Cameron was a pleasing juvenile as doctor-hero, and Eulalie Jensen made her part, that of the vamp, stand out, as she always does.

The other characters were quite satisfactory. They were Brinsley Shaw, Charles Stevenson, H. Weaver, Julia Swayne Gordon and William Dunn.

The Box Office Angle.

While this is a long way from being what any one might consider an excellent Anita Stewart offering, still it may get by because of the star's presence and the fact that the early scenes are rather entertaining because of the little comedy situation whre hero meet sshero in the country.

I believe that you can safely play it, providing you alibi yourself to a certain extent by announcing that it is Miss Stewart in a quaint little story of the adventures of a young heiress who preferred the company of a penniless doctor who owned a flivver, to marriage with either a nobleman or a no-account millionaire. Go pretty easy on promising anything as to the merit of this, because the finish lets it down pretty hard. If you haven't promised them much it may please, but I wouldn't take any gambler's chance on making them expect a lot, since many may not like it because of the unconvincing junk toward the end.

ORDINARY PLOT OVERPLAYED IN UNCONVINCING ATMOSPHERE

Fanny Ward in

UNCONQUERED

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Reicher
AUTHORS..... Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun
CAMERAMAN ..... Dent Gilbert
AS A WHOLE..... Ordinary, mechanical movie meller
STORY..... Never impressed or convinced
DIRECTION..... Made characters "act"; didn't keep atmosphere convincing
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Acceptable; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS.... Generally too uniform; a few good; some poor
CAMERA WORK..... Too few angles; just acceptable
STAR..... Made to "act"; didn't convince
SUPPORT..... Didn't ring true because of story and direction
EXTERIORS..... Some good, but generally lacked distinction
INTERIORS.... A few good; some poor; one awful back drop
DETAIL..... Acceptable; some titles bad
TIME..... Fifty-three minutes 5 parts)

THERE was one title in this which said, "I shouldn't burden you with this," and, boy—I have a hunch that most of your fans are going to say, "Yea, bo'!" when that goes on the screen. As a sample of some of the other bad titles, we find a kid, presumably about four or five years old, who calmly looks up at his mother, after some toy soldiers have been broken, and says, Well, mother . . . war is hell, anyhow." What can you expect of people who let such titles get by?

An additional crime which will give you an angle on this production was the use, not once but at least in twenty scenes, of a terrible painted back drop which stood outside a cabin door, and somehow they seemed to take great pleasure in leaving that door wide open so that the drop would monopolize all of your attention. It sort of looked to me as if the actors were peeved with this whole mess and figured that they would keep the door open so that every one would look at the drop and forget to look at them.

Here is another instance of a very bad story which has been produced in a mediocre, shilly-shally manner, with every one "acting" and raving around through mechanical rip-an'-tear situations, without any of it at any time ever registering as sure-enough, honest-to-Jerry happenings.

The first part of the offering was devoted to a lot of footage, most of which was unnecessary, building the time-honored situation of young girl who married the man who was too old, only to find that a designing widow had done stole him while the absent-minded author chap, who had been lurking in the offing, was winning wifie's heart because he liked her little son upon whom she had been lavishing all her love.

Now, of course, it was necessary for the brilliant author of this to cause trouble for the aforesaid son. This being essential, they provided a willun in the shape of a voodoo-crazed nigger. It may be that they thought the voodoo thing had never been used in the films, but that only proves that they haven't been in touch, because this thing has been utilized lo these many years.

Anyway, Tully Marshall was picked on to be the crazed nigger, and the menace which hung over the kid was Tully's desire to stick a knife in him.

Of course, when Tully was about ready to get away with this the first time, hero stopped him, and then we had the necessary complications of a planted frame-up to get wifey into a compromising position, which permitted hubby to get a divorce so that he might marry the widder.

Having arrived at this point, they tried to pull a big scene in the courtroom, following the divorce decision, with the mother telling the judge that he couldn't take her boy away from her, when she must've known all the time that that's what was going to happen. This missed fire very badly, and with many it may seem funny.

Now, there remained one necessary item: The boy must be returned to his mother. With this purpose, the crazy nigger was used again, he being allowed to escape from the asylum at the psychological moment, and once more he threatened to stick a knife in the kid.

Mother rushed in and said, "You don't want the child for a sacrifice . . . you want a white woman," and asked the coon to stick the knife into her; but, of course, all the neighbors came in at the eleventh hour and caught the upraised arm as the knife was about to descend into the fair flesh of our charming shero. And Hubby, though he'd been a mean gink all the way through this film—Hobart Bosworth doing his best to appear mean in this subject—promptly said to mother, "Take him—he is yours." Ta, ta, ta!

If most intelligent audiences don't think this is funny in spots, then I'll say that I'm underestimating their intelligence. Certainly it hasn't been handled well enough to make it appeal or convince, and, above all, I can't forgive 'em that terrible drop.

Miss Ward, Mr. Bosworth, Miss Van Buren, Mr. Dean, and Mr. Marshall have all done good things, and so I must decide that it was the story itself, the hackneyed situations and the director that caused them to overplay and work mechanically in this offering. Even Little Billy Jacobs seemed to know the camera was out in front and that nobody cared very much if this was a picture or not. Undoubtedly it has been such productions as this which finally convinced Mr. Lasky what good friends told him many months ago—that the hard-and-fast rule of "make a scenario whether you like it or not," is all wrong.

The Box Office Angle.

If you've found that you can get by with this surface meller stuff that runs along without ever getting under your shirt, then this may sneak through, because many of them know that Miss Ward has done good work and may feel that they are mistaken when they think she is not registering in this.

Personally, I'd say that it would be wise to forget this and wait for real things by Miss Ward, because I think every crude, mechanical melo of this type kills off a certain number of any star's following.

There is no new angle for you to play up, and my advice would be to forget it. If you have to play it for any reason, I certainly would go easy and keep the soft pedal on the advertising.

Romaine Fielding
THE LAMBS
[Engaged]

PERSONALITIES AND ATMOSPHERE LIFTED OLD LOVE TANGLES

House Peters and Myrtle Stedman in

AS MEN LOVE

Pallas—Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... E. Mason Hopper
AUTHOR ..... Lois Zellner
CAMERAMAN ..... Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE ..... Personalities and atmosphere make this interesting STORY ..... Marital mix-up, with well-known complications
DIRECTION ..... Gave rather distinctive atmosphere, and with assistance of personalities made situations register
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Some excellent; occasionally too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied, but generally good
STARS ..... Pleasing personalities who impress; made ancient situations convincing SUPPORT ..... Jack Johnston and Helen Eddy very good; others quite satisfactory
EXTERIORS ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Very good
DETAIL ..... A few little bits well handled
TIME ..... Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERING the fact that this was one of those stories where we have two pairs of lovers that get mixed up in one another's affairs, with tangles that seem to get more complicated as they tried to unravel them, only to suddenly smooth out with surprising freedom on the finish, I'd say that this has been made rather an interesting little program offering.

This isn't a picture that will make people hunt up their neighbors to send them to see it, because it lacks depth and distinctive purpose, but the personalities of Miss Stedman, Miss Eddy, Mr. Peters and Mr. Johnston were sufficiently forceful, impressive and human to make what they did convince and register as sufficiently real to lift the old, time-honored scenes out of the rut and make them fairly pleasing.

The atmosphere provided was rather good, because, as usual, we found sets which looked real, except in one or two places where the lighting was too uniform and the camera angles a little bad, and there were several bits of detail, such as one place where a letter was planted in a magazine and discovered in a nice, accidental manner instead of the usual tried and true fashion, which made this at least a bit different from the canned surface-action stuff that has been sending so many of our better fans away from the theatres with a feeling of wonderment that the producers are unable to provide a better percentage of worth while offerings.

The Box Office Angle.

Figured as a routine program release, I would say that this should rank as satisfactory entertainment. The personalities of the players and the satisfactory atmosphere helps the situations, and, while this is rather old stuff of misunderstood embraces, etc., still the tangle has been worked out with scenes that were played sufficiently well to hold the attention of the average fan without making him desirous of cussing a bit before departing for home.

I wouldn't make any fuss about this, because it isn't big, but if you have to play a certain number of Par amount program offerings, I would say that this will register satisfactorily—more so than a number they've shown recently, because at least it convinces in spots.

I would see to it that your fans know that Helen Eddy and Jack W. Johnston appear in this, because they both have many friends and should add to the business which the names of House Peters and Myrtle Stedman can undoubtedly pull. If you have found that these players don't bring you a satisfactory return, you might book something else if you know it to be big, because this offering doesn't really reach any great heights, despite the fact that it is agreeably satisfactory.

HUMAN TOUCHES AND STORY TWIST AT END GET THIS OVER

Muriel Ostriche in

MORAL COURAGE

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR ..... Romaine Fielding
AUTHOR ..... Stanley Dark
CAMERAMAN ..... Philip Hatkin
AS A WHOLE ..... Star, story twist and little touches made it entertaining
STORY ..... Old stuff until twist at finish, which very good
DIRECTION ..... Registered some excellent bits and helped effect by many close-ups and semi-close-ups
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally pleasing, but varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS ..... Some excellent; generally good; some only fair
CAMERA WORK ..... Rather good
STAR ..... Registered very pleasingly; one of her best chances
SUPPORT ..... Some good types
EXTERIORS ..... Good; not distinctive
INTERIORS ..... A feew very good; generally satisfactory
DETAIL ..... Several fine little bits
TIME ..... Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

WHILE this starts off with rather a routine set of characters doing comparatively well-known things, the director has helped it decidedly by many close-ups and a few little touches that made it seem human, and when we get toward the end the story takes a twist that puts it over a very satisfactory entertainment.

There was nothing big about the offering, but it will please generally, and certainly this is about the best opportunity Muriel Ostriche has had in a long time. She screens beautifully and handles her work in a most satisfactory manner all the way.

The plot leads off with the self-made man who has plans for his son, and the hard-working foreman who has a beautiful daughter, with son picking out daughter as his choice contradictory to father's desires.

Father, through an assistant, planned to compromise the poor shero by bringing on a city chap who lured her to a roadhouse, but she did a get-away and was secretly married to the boss's son.

When they announced their news, the boss offered Muriel a big chunk of coin if she would divorce his son. She agreed, much to the chagrin of aforesaid son, and promptly proceeded to get her divorce, returning to claim the coin. As soon as she received the wads of bills she strode leisurely into her former hubby's office and said, "Now come along. . . . We'll get married again."

Since the boss had threatened to disown his son and fire her father if she didn't divorce the boy, and he agreed to part with this coin if she did, most every one will agree that Muriel was a smart kid in journeying West to collect the coin from father before getting married again.

In the early part of this Miss Ostriche appeared in the well-known garb of the factory "goil," and then on the finish she had a chance to come in dressed like a million, and she did look quite classy.

They introduced one little bit in the early part of the story where a hard-working, penny-pinching swain wanted to marry Muriel, and it ought to go over with a bang anywhere. He came to see her and brought a bag of gumdrops, offering her one and then returning the bag to his pocket. When she decided not to eat it, he calmly took out the bag and put the gumdrop back with the others.

In the roadhouse scene we had the good old stuff of doping the drink, while shero looked on with the assistance of a mirror, and then, of course, she very adroitly switched the glasses, with the result that the willun was doped, while she climbed out of a window, showing her white stockings and chased along home.

There were several very good types in the supporting cast, with the country swain and the two fathers registering quite satisfactorily.

Arthur Ashley, the young hero, and Edmund Cobb, the hired willunous lover, were acceptable, but little more.

In the cast were Edward Elkas, Julia Stewart, Richard Turner, Clarence Elmer and Robert Forsyth.

The Box Office Angle.

Figured from the entertainment angle, I would say that this is decidedly above the World standard. It isn't a production which any one will ever rave over, but the first part of it has been helped by close-ups and little bits of business, with the end of the offering lifted by the story twist, so that, on the whole, the average fan will consider it a pleasing film.

Miss Ostriche has been a favorite of many for several years, and probably has a much larger following than you think. She was quite well known in the old Eclair days of five years ago, so that if you will announce this as one of her best opportunities, it may pull you some business and undoubtedly it will register as a very satisfactory offering with those who have been accepting the World films as they come.

You might, in your advertising, use lines like this: "Would you divorce your husband for $50,000? You should! See Muriel Ostriche in 'Moral Courage,' and learn why."

RATHER UNIMPRESSSIVE AT FIRST WITH WILD MELO FINISH

Alice Brady in

MATERNITY

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	John B. O'Brien
AUTHOR	Shannon Fife
CAMERAMAN	Harry B. Harris
AS A WHOLE	Story didn't impress, and melo finish missed fire
STORY	Mostly footage about would she or would she not be a mother, with cheap meller, fire and rescue on finish
DIRECTION	Took characters through motions in acceptable atmosphere, but action didn't convince, and it lacked all distinction
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; generally just acceptable
LIGHTINGS	A few good; many ordinary; some poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; some good close-ups
STAR	Worked hard, but story lacked definite dramatic moments
SUPPORT	Good; not remarkable
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Some good; others ordinary
DETAIL	Too much of it
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THE early part of this gave us considerable footage devoted to the fact that a young woman feared the possible fatal results of motherhood. This was dwelt upon with too much detail, since there was no straightforward dramatic thread which held the action together. Finally, after much mental stress, our heroine was hurled into a pandemonium of melodrama in the last reel or so, where she and her youngster were in an automobile accident, were hurried to a hospital, with the hospital immediately catching on fire and much excitement for about six hundred feet while shero was rescuing the child and being rescued by hero.

The wild finish was hung on to this in order to demonstrate to the young woman who feared the perils of motherhood that she was loved sufficiently to justify her taking the chance in order to bring happiness to her hubby.

Some of the close-ups were rather good, and gave the characters a chance, but the long shots weren't intelligently handled and quite frequently these were scenes which were unnecessary and poorly treated, with the result that they caused the story to slump badly. I fear that the average patron will not be impressed by the production, because at no time does the action register in a convincing manner, nor does it get under your shirt and seem human.

If, by any chance, any one were impressed by the first part of this, the wild melo on the finish would mark it as a cheap production.

Those who appeared in support of Miss Brady were Marie Chambers, John Bowers, David Powell, Herbert Barrington, Florence Crane, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Charles Duncan, Louis Grisel, Madge Evans, John Dugley and Julia Stewart.

The Box Office Angle.

The name of this may pull a little business, and of course Alice Brady is quite a drawing card; but I would go very easy on plugging it, because it never really arrives at any definite point, and the melodrama will mark it as ordinary, so far as your intelligent fan is concerned.

The point around which the story idea has been centered is a delicate one, and I can't see any particular advantage in making a fuss about this issue. Every one knows that there is always danger for the mother in maternity, but I'd hardly think that the average community audience will consider an offering which dwells upon that point at much length as good entertainment.

If you can book any human, worth-while offering in place of this, I would certainly forget "Maternity."

HAROLD LOCKWOOD
Yorke--Metro

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

CHARACTERIZATION CONTRAST RATHER INTERESTING—DOESN'T CONVINCE

Charles Ray in

THE MILLIONAIRE VAGRANT

Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR.....Victor L. Schertzinger
AUTHOR.....J. G. Hawks
CAMERAMAN.....Paul Eagler
AS A WHOLE.....Rather interesting combination of characterization and action STORY....Holds fairly well, but doesn't always convince DIRECTION.....Gave good action in spots, with some nice characterization touches
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS.....A few excellent, but varied; some only fair
CAMERA WORK.....Varied from fine to fair
STAR.....Personality lifted his scenes and held attention
SUPPORT.....Some good types, but lacked authority
EXTERIORS.....Fitted atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Acceptable; not unusual
DETAIL.....Satisfactory
TIME.....Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

BEING one of those wager things where a millionaire bet with a district attorney that he could live several weeks on $6 a week, with the result that he had many adventures when he landed in his own tenements, this was interesting, but didn't really convince, except that at times it became impressive because of good treatment of individual scenes.

As average program stuff this will register satisfactorily. The story provides a contrast between the life of the wealthy and the life of the very poor, with the plot working up to a scene in the courtroom, where the district attorney libertine was denounced by the heroine, who had permitted herself to be arrested as a street walker in order to trap the district attorney into releasing her with the request that she come to his apartment that night if she didn't want to be arrested again. The moment she had been released and received this note, she turned to the crowd in the courtroom and read the message, thereby disgracing the district attorney and putting him on the bum.

Our hero had successfully lived the five weeks on "six" per, and, of course, he was in the courtroom, with the time expiring—in a convenient manner—just before the girl pulled her dramatic speech. Hero came forward and told who he was, and then hero and shero were married, and that's all there is—there isn't any more.

Those who like Charlie Ray—and, believe me, I think they are quite some—will undoubtedly consider this worth while. It isn't big, but it has good moments and there is a lot of action which will hold the interest even though it doesn't impress. It is a safe bet as a program release.

In the cast were J. Barney Sherry, Sylvia Bremer, Dorcas Matthews, Aggie Herring, Josephine Headley, Walt Whitman, Carolyn Wagner and Elvira Weil.

The Box Office Angle.

Figuring this as action melodrama which exposes the methods of some political libertines, this will be a safe bet where they like action and are willing to stand for a story which is interesting rather than a plot of absolutely convincing heart interest.

I'd depend particularly on Charlie Ray's following, in booking this, and would have little to say about the production except that it is interesting melodrama contrasting the life of the millionaire against that of those who must live on "six per," with a sensational expose of why some girls are forced to continue the life of degradation after falling once.

GOOD LITTLE CHARACTER TOUCHES MAKE THIS "WORTH WHILE"

Mary Miles Minter in

ANNIE FOR SPITE

American—Mutual

DIRECTOR.....James Kirkwood
AUTHOR.....Fred Jackson
SCENARIO BY.....Julian Lamothe
AS A WHOLE.....Character sympathy stuff made this pleasing
STORY.....Rather mechanical and obvious, but entertaining
DIRECTION.....Had many pleasing little bits, with excellent atmosphere for Mutual
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; rather soft and frequently artistic LIGHTINGS..Varied decidedly; sometimes too uniform
CAMERA WORK....Varied; bad composition frequently; "doubles" beautifully timed
STAR.....Very pleasing
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types
EXTERIORS.....Acceptable; not distinctive
INTERIORS.....Rather good; fine for Mutual
DETAIL.....Good; although a bit forced at times
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

EXCEPT for the fact that the story was forced and mechanical, it being one of those obvious orphan - adopted - by-wealthy-lady-with-the-result-that-she-becomes-heiress tales that never at any time brings any really big moments, this was a very pleasing offering because, in treating the situations, Producer Kirkwood registered many effective little touches and centered his attention upon characterization rather than action.

Mary Miles Minter is a very charming little lady, and in the early part of this she appears almost as a different person, because she has pulled her hair straight back, with the result that she certainly looked the part of the lean, hungry shop-girl. Later on she got into the flossy rags and the hair came out in the well-known curls, providing a nice contrast.

The story told of a poor little shopgirl who wished and wished that some kind lady would adopt her, until—lo, and behold—one day she was adopted. The kind lady, however, had done this only so that she might spite her own daughter-in-law, who was waiting around for her to die, in order to make use of her fortune.

There were some good scenes in which this old lady figured and many splendid bits between Miss Minter and her benefactress. Of course, the old lady finally died, and then the daughter-in-law tried to break the will and placed her son in the household to spy upon the orphan heiress. Naturally it finished up with mother winning the suit and son calmly announcing that he intended to marry the deposed heiress.

The atmosphere was better than ordinary, because the lightings were soft and sometimes very good, and the sets were sufficiently distinctive to register pleasingly.

There was one point that sort of jarred with me, in the matter of composition, since it seemed to me that it would have been ever so much better had the old lady, when sitting in her big chair at the table, been kept constantly in the center of the picture, since the director insisted upon shooting straight at her for all of his scenes. Had he gone around to different camera angles, it would not have been so bad, but it sort of pulled things off center when she was planted first on one side and then on the other of the screen, her big chair and her chunky little figure being so important to the action that they naturally pulled the eye.

Somehow, I couldn't altogether agree with the orphan-heiress' idea of a beautiful room, which resulted from her being given complete control of the situation to have the living-room re-decorated—but, then, folks do have different tastes.

The chief charm of this was the registered effect of the optimistic little orphan who came to live with the pessimistic old grouch. The story suggested somewhat the production "Jewel," in which Ella Hall made such a hit some years ago, and I do want to mention that this little orphan must have been quite some reader, because she nonchalantly used words like "concentration," "tranquility," etc.

Gertrude Le Brandt, as the wealthy old grouch, gave a splendid characterization, and George Fisher was very satisfactory in a rather difficult role of weakling hero.

Others in the cast were Eugenie Forde, George Periolat, Robert Klein, Charles Lemon, Lucille Ward, Emma Kluge and Nellie Widen.

The Box Office Angle.

I would think that you can do very well with this, because Little Miss Minter has quite a following and here you get one of those offerings which has no vampire or seduced girl. It deals with an optimistic thought which should appeal to most any audience, and has enough of the little touches of contrast to make it register as entertainment.

You might use such thoughts as this in your advertising: "Do you believe that if you concentrate on wishing for something that you will get it? Annie did, and inherited millions. See Mary Miles Minter in 'Annie for Spite.'" "How would you like to be made an heiress to spite someone? Would it please you or not? See 'Annie for Spite.'"

I would call attention to the fact that James Kirkwood produced this and call it one of the new "Mary Miles Minter Series" made under his direction.

If you have been playing routine program releases, this should be a little more pleasing, because it has much to commend it and very little that is not satisfactory.

OLD ROUTINE SURFACE SITUATIONS THAT DIDN'T LAND

Wilfred Lucas and Lillian Gish in

SOULS TRIUMPHANT

Fine Arts—Triangle

DIRECTOR	John B. O'Brien
AUTHOR	Mary H. O'Connor
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary surface "vamp" and righteous wife routine stuff
STORY	Never impressed and didn't deserve footage
DIRECTION	Atmosphere rather cheap; action missed fire
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform; not distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Only fair
STARS	Worked hard, but badly handicapped
SUPPORT	Very ordinary
EXTERIORS	Lacked distinction
INTERIORS	Ordinary
DETAIL	Acceptable, although convenient
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THIS was one of our old friends, the story of the libertine and the vamp, with the libertine wedding a righteous young lady who reformed him, only to have the vamp come along and attempt to win him away from his home at a time when wifey had gone to her father's bedside, with the house burning up while he was away, through the assistance of our good old friend the candles in the window, which set fire to the curtains.

There was much running and pushing of mobs, backward and forward, in front of the burning house, and again we found the producer insisting upon showing us that the house had been completely burned down, by permitting us to see the last of the tottering frame fall to earth.

Hubby raved around outside because his child had been burned while he had been playing with the vamp, but—lo, and behold—we discovered immediately afterwards that the wife had come back and taken the child with her to father's bedside, because she didn't trust hubby after knowing that vamp was in town.

Wilfred Lucas and Lillian Gish tried hard in their individual ways to make this register, but they were hopelessly handicapped. The general atmosphere was very, very ordinary; the lightings were anything but distinctive, being too uniform in almost every instance, and it would seem to me that the best thing you could do about this is to forget that Triangle has made it.

Since this was produced by John B. O'Brien when he was on the Coast, and since he has been away some time, I have a hunch that this has been laying on the shelf, the Triangle people presumably feeling that they must get rid of everything since the Fine Arts Studio has been closed.

In the supporting cast were Spottiswoode Aitken and Louise Hamilton.

The Box Office Angle.

There is nothing about this to justify your playing it, and certainly if you have to play it, put on the soft pedal and go very easy. It may sneak by with those who are willing to accept whatever comes along as routine offerings, but if you expect to keep your patrons coming and keep up their enthusiasm for films as entertainment, it wouldn't be advisable to hand them this sort of thing. If you can get anything else, by all means do it. Vampire stories aren't popular any more, and in this instance the vamp is very, very ordinary and registers as a bit cheap.

Fire stuff is the only attempted action in this, and that savors so much of the old-time attempts at "big scenes" which we used to have three or four years ago, that I'm quite sure no one will consider it even interesting.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.
Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

ORDINARY SURFACE ACTION MOVIE THAT NEVER IMPRESSES

Alma Hanlon in

THE MYSTIC HOUR

Apollo—Art Dramas

DIRECTOR	Richard Ridgely
AUTHOR	Agnes Fletcher Bain
SCENARIO BY	Frederick Rath
CAMERAMAN	George W. Lane
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary surface-action villain-vamp-hero-shero movie
STORY	Never impressed or convinced
DIRECTION	Permitted overplaying, gave ordinary atmosphere and failed to strike human note
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable, but muddy at times
LIGHTINGS	Generally soft, but lacked definition
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not distinctive
STAR	Fairly pleasing; handicapped by surroundings
SUPPORT	Ordinary movie caliber
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Never impressed
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

THIS is only an ordinary surface-action movie of the willun-marries-shero-while-vamp-works-on-him, with hero-sympathizing-with-wife formula, and I can't feel that any intelligent audience is going to consider it worth while. There is nothing distinctive about the handling, Miss Hanlon is handicapped by the rather ordinary surroundings and the other players fail to stand out as distinctive personalities.

The plot runs along without at any time becoming very interesting, and most any of your regulars will have it doped out pretty well in advance, and, while they may not know exactly how it is going to be done, the treatment will keep them from caring a great deal.

Considerable footage was devoted to unnecessarily rough Bohemian parties, such as never happened except in the movies, in the homes of wives who have married hubbies with pasts.

An attempt to get a soft lighting in the interiors—and this was made up almost entirely of interiors—left the general atmosphere of the offering in rather a muddy, indistinct state which sort of marked the general impression that the offering itself made.

The Box Office Angle.

In some houses this may be accepted as interesting, but to my mind most fans anywhere have gotten beyond this stage of development and they don't consider such ordinary surface-action offerings as this worth while.

There's nothing about this offering to make it stand apart from the thousands of similar things which have been done in footage lengths of from one reel up to five in the past few years, and, while you may be able to get this at a reasonable rental, it seems to me that you will be wise to look a little further and find something which may cost more but which will send your bread-and-butter patrons out of your theatre with a feeling of having spent an hour or two to satisfying advantage.

You must remember that a large percentage of your fans consider their time much more than they do the price of admission. Possibly this is all right as five cent or ten cent entertainment, figured by the price, but the film fan of today is much more willing to pay twenty or twenty-five cents to see something worth while, than ten cents to see the ordinary routine stuff.

As a filler of routine caliber, this has some melodramatic spots that may impress those who accept the old methods. If you belong to the progressive class I would advise you to forget it.

CHEAP MELO THAT MISSES FIRE AND IS CRUDELY HANDLED

Ethel Clayton in

YANKEE PLUCK

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR	George Archainbaud
AUTHOR	Willard Mack
CAMERAMAN	Philip Hatkin
AS A WHOLE	Crude meller
STORY	Another Willard Mack mess
DIRECTION	Very ordinary; permitted "acting" and had cheap atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Some fair; many poor
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not good
STAR	Terribly handicapped
SUPPORT	Actory
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Unimpressive; frequently crude
DETAIL	Convenient; followed meller methods
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

AFTER Willard Mack had put over a story on World Film some months ago, an exhibitor friend of mine down South wrote in and said that Mr. Mack must know where Brady "buried the body."

There's sort 'uv a hunch in my mind that Mr. Mack must've used some hypnotic influence in putting over the stuff that he's sold to date for pictures, because most of it has been very poor, and, if not poor, certainly ordinary. This is cheap, crude "meller" without any redeeming feature.

It seems a pity to put Ethel Clayton in this sort of thing, because Miss Clayton, intelligently handled, is one of the most appealing personalities that the screen has seen. Her successes in human productions have proven her following, but if she has many more like this shoved on her shoulders, the fans of the country are going to commence to wonder whether they really like her or not, possibly not being able to place the blame properly on the story and production rather than upon the star.

This is one of those willun-wants-to-marry-daughter-and-poipers-must-be-stolen plots that has seen service lo these many years.

In order to keep the willun from marrying daughter, father tried to steal the poipers, which he was to sell to the wicked Jap willun. Of course, on the finish they straightened it out all right, with young hero and the girl doing a clutch.

At no time will any one take this seriously. It cannot be possible that intelligent audiences will be impressed, and, while you might run it in a shootin' gallery and get it by at five cents, I certainly would not advise you to put it on in a regular theatre where you can get real stuff.

They had a ballroom scene taken from very poor angles, with a lot of two and three-dollar-a-day extras bouncing around, trying to give a correct imitation of foreign diplomats and their ladies, and, while this might have been accepted as a "big scene" in a picture six years ago, it will hardly get anything but a laugh to-day.

A few of the types in this were truly funny when you stop to consider the class of society they were supposed to represent. Most everybody acted quite some, mostly "with gestures." Even Miss Clayton slipped occasionally, this undoubtedly being the result of the direction and the contagious atmosphere of the actory supporting players.

Montagu Love was presented as the Jap willun, in a make-up which made him look most ferocious. But, since every one will know that he is made up as a Jap instead of being a real Jap, the attention will be attracted to his make-up rather than to any scene in which he figures.

The lighting, as a whole, and the general atmosphere was decidedly ordinary, but a few attempts were made for light effects. There was one very funny bit where a coon servant reached for an electric switch, but the light-man beat him to it, with the result that the light changed in the room about a second or two before the hand reached the push-button. Any fan is going to get this, and the chances are that it will bring a laugh. This sort of thing is absolutely inexcusable, since it could have been eliminated by a re-take or by intelligent cutting. That one error marks the calibre of the entire offering. It is cheap "movie stuff."

In the supporting cast were Charles Bowser, Johnny Hines, Edward T. Langford, Eric Mayne and Isette Monroe.

The Box Office Angle.

I'd figure that you should dodge this if you are trying to establish yourself as an exhibitor who attempts to pick the better things. If you are playing to transient business that accepts cheap mellerdrammer, or if you figure that you can run cheap stuff in your house because they love the blood-an'-thunder without questioning the detail, then you can get this by.

I hope they head Willard Mack off before he sells any more of these wild mellers, and certainly when the market opens up—as it is going to this fall—such ordinary stuff as this won't stand a chance!

CUTE STUFF AND GOOD MOMENTS IN ORDINARY ATMOSPHERE

Gladys Leslie in

AN AMATEUR ORPHAN

Thanhouser—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Van Dyke Brooke
AUTHOR	Agnes Johnston
CAMERAMAN	George Webber
AS A WHOLE	Little human incidents helped, but treatment and forced cuteness marred effect
STORY	Had appealing basic idea, but action and atmosphere made it ordinary
DIRECTION	Registered a few good bits, but forced players too frequently in atmosphere that lacked distinction
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary, with a very few good bits
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform; occasionally good
CAMERA WORK	Only fair on long shots; had good close-ups
STAR	Screens well, has excellent possibilities, but very forced and camera-conscious at times
SUPPORT	Several good characterizations, with others ordinary
EXTERIORS	Acceptable; not artistic nor distinctive
INTERIORS	Some rather setty; generally ordinary
DETAIL	Many little bits very good
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

FIGURING this as a program release ,it may get by in many communities because it has some cute kid stuff and a lot of little human touches which had evidently been planted in the story, and consequently registered effectively despite the general cheap and ordinary touch which marked the atmosphere of the offering.

The plot told about a wealthy little girl who was being raised scientifically, with a tutor who suppressed all her natural inclinations. Seeing the kiddies in an orphanage having a glorious time one day, she decided to run away and become an "orphan," this being made possible by her folks going to Japan, while the tutor wanted her niece to have an education, the wealthy girl being planted in the orphanage while the tutor's niece was sent to the boarding school under the wealthy girl's name.

Later on, the wealthy little orphan, after having a grand and glorious time in the orphanage—which is hardly convincing—was adopted by a family in the country, where she reformed a grouchy old farmer and made him realize again the attractiveness of his wife, who had become more or less of a drudge.

Finally the parents came home and became very much excited over the disappearance of their child, with the result that they offered a reward for her return, which was collected by the son of the farm folk, who had, of course, fallen in love with our heroine.

We then had this youth brought to the city, with a few rather forced scenes leading up to his advance in business. Another young man who wanted to marry the niece of the tutor now established in heroine's home, appeared to want to marry the heroine herself.

The audience was tricked into believing that heroine was trying to make hero lose his position so that the other boy could have it because she loved the other boy, but we found that it was because she knew the other boy loved her friend, and she wanted the boy she loved to lose his job so that they could live in the country, she having all the wealth that was essential.

The introduction of the bit where heroine played chauffeur in order to delay the hero's arrival at his office was decidedly forced, and, in fact, the treatment of the entire offering, except in a few little spots, kept it from registering anything like as effectively as it could have, had it been very carefully handled.

In the supporting case were Isabel Vernon, Thomas A. Curran, Jean Armour, Ray Hallor, Chester Morris and Justus Barnes.

The Box Office Angle.

Of course, the name of Gladys Leslie at the present time means nothing in the life of your fans. You might say that she is another discovery of the Thanhouser Studios, who expect that she will become as popular as Gladys Hulette has in a few short months, and you can possibly arouse some interest by announcing that this is a story of a wealthy girl who chose to run away and become an orphan in order to have an opportunity to enjoy life free from the guardianship of her tutor.

While this has been done in a rather ordinary manner, it has enough human touches that the average fan will probably accept it as better entertainment than the vampire "mellerdrammers." There is quite a bit of cute stuff in it, and it might appeal particularly to a children's audience if you wanted to pick something that would get by satisfactorily on a light day when you play for a big matinee.

GREAT LION STUFF SURROUNDED BY ORDINARY MOVIE JUNK

Vivian Reed in

THE LAD AND THE LION

Selig—K-E-S-E.

DIRECTOR	Al Green
AUTHOR	Edgar Rice Burroughs
CAMERAMAN	Harry Neuman
AS A WHOLE	Lion's presence lifted it from rut
STORY	Movie melo with lion giving it novelty
DIRECTION	"Doubles" well handled and close-ups helped, but melo action was mechanical
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable straight stuff; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform, but acceptable
CAMERA WORK	Very good—particularly "doubles" and close-ups
STAR	Pleasing, but not impressive
SUPPORT	Miscellaneous melo characters
EXTERIORS	Fairly good atmosphere of desert
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Quite satisfactory
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THE presence of the lion saves this from being an ordinary movie melo that would become very tiresome. Since the story is centered about this shaggy maned beast, you can figure that most anyone will consider it interesting, and surely it is a little bit different, even though it does seem a pity that the atmosphere wasn't more distinctive. Certainly the treatment of the situations could have been made much more effective.

The story told about a gink who got caught on a derelict boat alone with a lion and made friends with the beast, so that when they were shipwrecked on an African shore they lived together for many months.

A love story developed between our rugged hero and the daughter of a sheik, with, of course, the usual assortment of willuns, other girls, other girls' fathers, etc. We knew that on the finish the hero and the sheik's daughter would get together, and the hero would recover his memory and learn that he was sufficiently well bred to marry the "goil."

Throughout the offering we found the hero playing nonchalantly with the lion. This was good stuff. They also brought other characters into the scene, by using double exposures which the average fan will never be able to detect, and in some instances they brought a second lion into the action, always using double exposures for this beast's appearance. The camera work was so good, however, that none save those technically informed will know that these scenes have been arranged by double exposure.

The use of quite a number of close-ups helped the action to a great extent, but the general handling of the supposedly dramatic situations was so mechanical that it will not impress. Many of the groupings were very poor, and the same camera angle and same location were used decidedly too often.

In the supporting cast were Charles LeMoyne, Lafayette McKee, Cecil Holland, Al W. Filson, Will Machin, Capt. Ricardo, Gertrude Oakman and Frank Clark.

The Box Office Angle.

Figuring this as a program release, I believe the novelty of the lion's presence will lift it out of the rut and make it register with the average fan as a production which is at least interesting and fairly entertaining.

I would dwell entirely upon the lion stuff, in my advertising, and register the fact that this is a story of a man who lived in a lion's cave and was befriended by the lion, who fought for him just as a friendly human would That at least sounds interesting, and if you will center their attention on this point, your fans will probably figure that they like it.

WENT WRONG BEFORE GOT TO IDEA—MAY BE INTERESTING

Emmy Wehlen in

SOWERS AND REAPERS

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	George D. Baker
AUTHOR	George D. Baker
CAMERAMAN	Joseph Schelderfer
AS A WHOLE	Had good idea, but got to it too late
STORY	Ordinary melo with novelty twist introducing film studio stuff, which came too late
DIRECTION	Permitted too much "acting," making offering ordinary melo which failed to impress
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Some effective, but frequently too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Not distinctive
STAR	Didn't impress; seemed camera-conscious
SUPPORT	"Acted" too much
EXTERIORS	Just good
INTERIORS	Some very good; others just acceptable
DETAIL	One or two bad slips; titles bad—too abrupt
TIME	Sixty-six minutes (5 parts)

THERE was a good idea uncovered in the latter part of this, but unfortunately the day was lost and the production condemned before we got that far, because the action was ordinary surface melodrama with characters who lacked personality, overplaying decidedly in situations that were hackneyed and shop-worn.

One of the worst blows came early in the development, where we found the heroine giving a dress to a friend, which was plainly a "plant" for the fire which followed immediately afterwards, and then we received the awful shock of being informed that the girl friend had been so badly burned in the fire that her body could not be identified, and yet they had found the dress containing a letter which proved that she was the heroine. I'd like to know just how they managed to burn this body so conveniently without burning the letter or the dress beyond recognition at the same time?

As another slip in the matter of detail, we found a newspaper insert in which the date of the paper was given as 1917, and we saw an item which told about Madero being shot. I don't know where the paper could've been printed, but some editor was quite a bit late in receiving the news!

After going through the details of finding wealthy man's son secretly marrying poor heroine, with father kidnapping son to bust up the marriage, and wife, to all intents and purposes, being declared dead by the fire substitution, we came to the real idea of the story.

We saw Producer Baker at work in the studio, and the suffering heroine's chee-ild was rushed in to serve in a picture, in an emergency. Of course, the heroine pulled a bit of dramatic emotion when someone started to abuse the chee-ild, with the result that she was engaged as a star. Now we know (?) how they find film stars.

It was only a short time—and this part we'll agree to—until the "discovery" became famous, and we had a scene where she told the managers where to get off at as regards a new contract. Undoubtedly the Metro folk had a lot of fun out of making this scene registering the independence of the star. Anyway, our "shero" was in a position to dictate regarding scenarios, and she wrote one which duplicated her life history. Since this plot which was supposed to be her life has been used about 1,438 times, I'd say that stars should not be allowed to select their own material if this is an instance of what might result.

At all events, they led up to the showing of the picture in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton, with Hubby and his father as honored guests. To add complications, Hubby had married again at father's request, this time to the girl father had picked out in the first place. But Wifey No. 2 had obligingly arranged to run away with another guy, and so when Hubby rose in his seat and said, "Annie, my dead wife, come from the grave," as he looked at the picture, we knew that they were going to get together pretty soon.

In real life our film star had bought the mortgages of the hero's home, and in the picture she demonstrated how she was going to turn the old gink and his son out because she'd been treated shamefully by them. She came to the house to pull this stuff in real life, the next day, but weakened, as we knew she would, and it finished with a clutch.

The titles were very bad throughout. They were all abrupt and frequently, because of this fault, they became funny. Here is a sample of one of the bad ones. Son said to father: "What a mess you have made of my life, oh, father!" Whoever wished the "Oh, father!" onto this should've been murdered! While looking at the picture, hero said: "My God!—she's the mortgagee!"

This had the basic idea for rather a good production, but the elementary melo which was used as the life of the heroine kept it from registering effectively, and the fact that they acted "all over the place" made it impossible for the situations to be taken very seriously.

Occasionally there was a good bit, and the film studio stuff was interesting without telling any secrets; but, considered as a whole, no one will have any inclination to recommend this to a friend.

Emmy Wehlen failed to impress as a personality to be raved about, and certainly the supporting cast acted too much to please, most of them being very camera-conscious.

Producer Baker was in evidence as the director in the studio scenes, and even George registered several times as overplaying a little which proved that even he knew the camera was out front.

In the supporting cast were George Stuart Christie, Frank Currier, Peggy Parr, Harry Davenport, Walter Horton, Kate Blancke, David Thompson, Grace Saums, Claire McCormack and Emmanuel Turner.

The Box Office Angle.

I can't figure that Emmy Wehlen is very much of a box office possibility, because she has never had any outstanding successes. Her personality is one which is pleasing in a way, and yet isn't particularly distinctive. The production is so much of the ordinary surface melo that the one distinctive idea will hardly redeem it, and I'd either forget it or go very easy on the basis of it being an average Metro program offering.

The fact that this shows some studio scenes and the story deals with a heroine who becomes a film star and then puts her life story on the screen will sound rather interesting in your advertising, but I would be cautious about promising anything very definite in reference to the merits of the offering itself. Say that it is interesting from the film-star-showing-her-own-story angle, but don't tell them that it is a vital human offering or any of that stuff, because it isn't.

If you can find something that is really worth-while you will never regret passing this one by.

STAR'S PERSONALITY AND AMERICANISM WILL SAVE OLD PLOT

William Farnum in AMERICAN METHODS

Fox Film

DIRECTOR	Frank Lloyd
ADAPTED FROM	Georges Ohnet's "Ironmaster"
SCENARIO BY	F. McGrew Willis
CAMERAMAN	Billy Foster
AS A WHOLE	Old basic, lightings and personalities treatment, lightings and personalities
STORY	Spite marriage and misunderstood situation stuff with character touches
DIRECTION	Made atmosphere distinctive and action impressive by treatment
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; occasionally fuzzy
LIGHTINGS	Many artistic and effective; some too uniform and just good
CAMERA WORK	Varied, but generally very good
STAR	Forceful, dominant personality; character written for him
SUPPORT	Some excellent types; generally very pleasing
EXTERIORS	Good; some could have been better
INTERIORS	Distinctive; well handled
DETAIL	Little touches helped offering
TIME	Seventy minutes (5 parts)

THERE was one underlying thought to this subject which helped it decidedly, particularly because the central character was one which seemed to have been written for Mr. Farnum. The American people love to feel a sense of superiority over those in foreign countries, and there are few heroes more popular than the virile American business man who does things in what is called the "American way" abroad.

Here we find William Farnum as the head of a big iron foundry in France, and any audience anywhere will certainly enjoy his treatment of the aristocrat who came in to chastise him because Mr. Farnum's factory whistle annoyed this blue-blooded gent.

The story had to do with some well-known situations, as, for instance, the girl who married the American in order to spite the nobleman who had jilted her, with a title-seeking American marrying the nobleman and misunderstood situations following, which brought complications.

We, of course, knew all along that it was only a question of time until the wife of Mr. Farnum would realize how much she loved him, and we also had it figured that Bill would have to beat up this "noble" gink in order to make it a good picture.

This climax came on the finish, where, in order to save her husband from fighting a duel with the willun, the wife chased over to the willun's home at night and was promptly attacked, without the willun even taking the trouble to pull down the blinds. This made it possible for Hero-Hubby Bill to rush in and kick the stuffin' out of our "noble" willun, and so all ended happily.

We had an additional conflict where the wife's brother wanted to marry Mr. Farnum's sister, with Bill refusing, because, as he said, one unhappy marriage was enough for the family. But, of course, they were properly mated when the blow-off came.

A production wherein Mr. Farnum has an opportunity to wear evening clothes, appear as a prosperous business man and at the same time pull a couple of almost-battles with fists as weapons, should prove more than sufficient to send any audience out thoroughly pleased.

Producer Lloyd has made the rather well-known situations register effectively by using many close-ups and some very good lightings in his treatment. The tempo of the more important action was good, and, considered as a whole, this is rather an entertaining offering, although it never becomes tremendous, since the story is one that will be guessed by most fans.

There was quite a bit of comedy injected as the story progressed, with several types being introduced and carried through the action for no other purpose than to provide an occasional laugh. This is a very good system, since it gives the necessary relief to make the dramatic action more effective.

Jewel Carmen, as the wife of Mr. Farnum, handled a rather difficult part with sufficient distinction to make it register properly. She has given us some nice work in the past, in various worth-while offerings, and looks like a good bet for leading support.

Florence Vidor, as Mr. Farnum's sister, was quite pretty and rather pleasing. She had the necessary "pep" to register effectively as a younger sister.

Alan Forrest, as the wife's brother, was very pleasing, because he made the characterization seem natural, registering his embarrassment in certain situations in a very human manner.

The cast as a whole was very well chosen. Others who appeared were Willard Louis, Josef Swickward, Marc Robbins, Bertram Grassby, Lillian West and Mortimer Jaffe.

The Box Office Angle.

With the name of this novel and the screen name to hammer—and it is an excellent name at this particular time—you should be able to make everyone believe that this Bill Farnum film is going to be decidedly worth while. Without question Mr. Farnum has a large folowing, and when they feel that he has a good vehicle it is a pretty safe bet that you are going to do real business.

I'd hammer at this thought: "Can you imagine Bill Farnum as the head of a big American industrial plant in France, where some of the nobility took objection to his 'American Methods'? See how Bill made them like it."

You might also mention the fact that, because of the insistent request from more than a million fans, the Fox Company has taken Mr. Farnum out of the blue-shirt Western stories temporarily to give him a chance to work in evening clothes and ordinary civilized garb.

INTELLIGENT TREATMENT AND CHARACTERIZATIONS MAKE "WORTH WHILE"

Kathlyn Williams and House Peters in

THE HIGHWAY OF HOPE

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Howard Estabrook
AUTHOR	Willard Mack
SCENARIO BY	Harvey Gates
CAMERAMAN	James Van Trees
AS A WHOLE	Intelligent treatment and handling made weak plot entertaining
STORY	Rather ordinary mechanics, with situations made interesting by little touches and detail
DIRECTION	Gave excellent atmosphere, splendid spots of good action, and by intelligent treatment kept development interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; a few fine bits
LIGHTINGS	A few excellent: some too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Generally good; varied somewhat
STARS	Made characters human and action convincing
SUPPORT	Well chosen
EXTERIORS	Very good atmosphere; some splendid shots
INTERIORS	Very good for atmosphere
DETAIL	Several splendid bits
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

I CAN think of no handicap that would seem worse than being offered a story by Willard Mack.

This production has been saved from the curse of the author's routine melodrama by treatment which smooths over the rough spots and develops the good moments by detail and human characterization, until we found that the offering was surprisingly entertaining, considering the fact that the basic story was far from being unusual.

Howard Estabrook, in this production, which is the first Lasky release directed by him, has demonstrated that he knows dramatic and atmosphere values sufficiently well to lift the ordinary offering out of the rut by treatment that is a bit different.

Starting off in the first reel, we found Miss Williams doing a dance hall slavey part, which is rather an unusual bit for her, and Mr. Peters was seen pulling the "souse" stuff, which he handles so naturally. There was a little rough stuff in the dance hall, which finished with the drunken hero marrying the slavey, to protect her, and this has all been handled very nicely.

The rest of the story deals with the hero taking his accidental wife into the wilds while he prospects for gold, with a very nice bit of character development brought out in the next reel or so which registered the gradual feeling of bitterness which engrossed both of these unfortunates.

Gold was discovered—and I must give the producer credit for doing this in a logical manner, instead of the ordinary "movie" stunt of swinging a pick once and following it with the joyous shout to announce to the world that gold had been discovered—and then hero decided that life was all wrong and started to drink a cup of poison.

Hero was interrupted in his attempt at suicide, and Miss Williams, discovering the cup, thought that he had intended to poison her. She pretended to have taken this, and fell in a huddled heap in the corner, apparently dead, with the result that hero left the mine, thinking himself free again. This situation was a hard one to be made convincing, but it was registered very satisfactorily.

The hero then drifted about as a bum while the mine was purchased, with the result that the wife became wealthy.

A meeting between the two in a restaurant was nicely handled, so that they didn't sit down and tell one another the story of their life, but simply recognized each other and then drifted apart again. Since the wife was in the restaurant as a guest, and the husband as a waiter, this treatment was very logical and decidedly different from the average "movie" idea.

Eventually hero drifted back to the mine, where the wife was in charge, and he happened in at the proper moment to rescue her from a willunous attack. This was also intelligently done, and we didn't have the usual explosions and strikes which fans have come to expect from "movie stuff" when they begin to see willuns lurking about a big mine.

The misunderstanding about the poison cup was then explained, and all was well.

Figured on the basis of program releases, I believe the treatment of this and the characterizations of Mr. Peters and Miss Williams have lifted the production above the Paramount average, and, while it isn't a big film because the convenient spots in the story handicapped it somewhat, certainly it is interesting and will register as very satisfactory entertainment.

In the supporting cast were Jim Farley and Harry De Vere.

The Box Office Angle.

If these stars have a following in your community, you can safely figure this as a better-than-average Paramount. The story is a bit convenient in spots, but has been so well handled that it is certainly interesting and will more than satisfy.

You might dwell upon this point in your advertising: "If you married a girl when you were drunk and didn't know what you were doing, what would you do when you became sober? See 'The Highway of Hope.'"

Howard Estabrook is very well known as a star, and it might add to the interest in this offering to register the fact that he has become a producer, following in the footsteps of several other stars, such as Marshall Neilan, who is now one of our successful producers, and I believe that many fans will be particularly anxious to see the first production directed by one of their favorites.

HUMAN BITS AND COMEDY WITH STIRRING FINISH THAT LIFTS IT

Seena Owen in

MADAME BO PEEP

Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR	Chester Withey
AUTHOR	O. Henry
SCENARIO BY	Chester Withey
AS A WHOLE	Human and interesting at first; last reel puts it over with a smash
STORY	Not exceptional, but has human angles
DIRECTION	Made scenes interesting by treatment and gave finish effective, swinging tempo
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	A few splendid; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Pleasing personality; some roughriding, swimming heroine at finish
SUPPORT	Good; well chosen types
EXTERIORS	A few beautiful shots; generally very good
INTERIORS	Quite satisfactory; a few very good
DETAIL	Some interesting bits
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

THE first of this offering was kept human by little touches and the injection of quite a lot of comedy having to do with several lovers who wanted to marry our heroine, with one young boob in particular who was carried through the entire offering always getting the worst of everything. He provided many laughs.

The story was elementary, being a simple little idea of the girl who married money, feeling that it would give her what she wanted in life, with the result that when old hubby died suddenly she found he had left nothing but a sheep ranch.

Previously hero, who loved shero, had gone West to manage this sheep ranch because shero wouldn't marry him, and because the old guy who wanted to marry shero took this means to get hero out of the way.

Now shero came to the ranch and began bossing hero around, with some interesting complications—both dramatic and humorous—and then we discovered that the old guy who had died had sold the sheep ranch before he'd cashed in. Since hero was wealthy and only working on the ranch because he was peeved at being unable to marry shero, he bought the ranch and secretly enjoyed being bossed by shero, who wasn't his boss at all.

The boob who wanted to marry the pretty widow came to the ranch for a visit and supplied more laughs, with the production swinging into a chase at the end where Miss Owen did some thrilling riding, with a fall that will stir anyone and finally a plunge into the lake on the back of her horse, followed by a nice bit of swimming with her clothes on—which is no easy stunt. This finale was bing-bing melodrama that swept along at a nice tempo, and, coming after the several reels of human business with comedy touches, it is going to put this over anywhere with a bang, making it register as very good entertainment.

Miss Owen's personality helped this all the way, and her athletic stunts, such as leaping to her horse's back, riding like the wind, etc., are going to plant her as a distinctive type of heroine who will surely become a real favorite. I believe that this is the best opportunity she has had to prove what she can do, and after this offering has had time to circulate, she should become a good box office bet.

A. D. Sears, as the wealthy hero who decided to go out and work on a sheep ranch, just like the little fellow who went out in the garden to eat worms, was a very pleasing personality, tall, handsome and human.

James Harrison, as the boob, earned a lot of good laughs and his business with good old Jennie Lee was quite funny.

Pauline Starke, as the Mexican girl who wanted to flirt a bit, made her few scenes stand out, and of course Sam De Grasse is a sure-fire willun.

Others in the cast were F. A. Turner and Kate Bruce.

The Box Office Angle.

I believe you can safely go after this as a very good program release, playing it up as an entertaining little story, dealing with the adventures of the many lovers of a typical American girl, who at first refused to marry but had a very good time with all her proposals and then found that marriage was no joke.

I would go after the advertising on this from the following angle: "Do you love a heroine who has personality, can ride, swim and do stunts? See Seena Owen in 'Madame Bo Peep.'" Or, you might say—"Do you like American girls with pep? See Seena Owen in 'Madame Bo Peep.'"

Don't figure this as a sensationally big offering or anything of that sort, but rest assured that it is a pleasing bit of entertainment and decidedly better than the average program stuff, from an audience viewpoint. There is enough heart interest and fun to the action, with a thrill or two on the finish to guarantee that most anyone will consider it worth while.

INTERESTING INDIAN SOLDIER WESTERN STUFF HELPED BY STARS

Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez in

SOUTHERN JUSTICE

Bluebird

DIRECTOR.....Lynn F. Reynolds
AUTHOR.....Lynn F. Reynolds
CAMERAMAN.....Clyde R. Cook
AS A WHOLE...Ordinary surface-action of obvious plot that never impressed
STORY.....Lacked big moments and genuine appeal; frequently didn't convince DIRECTION...Gave only acceptable atmosphere without making action or characterizations sufficiently distinctive PHOTOGRAPHY.....Ordinary; frequently fuzzy; some scenes printed too light
LIGHTINGS.....Acceptable; not distinctive
CAMERA WORK.....Just acceptable; not enough angles or close-ups
STARS.....Failed to stick out
SUPPORT.....Ordinary
EXTERIORS.....Varied; a few good; generally very ordinary
INTERIORS.....Just acceptable, with many bad because were setty
DETAIL.....Too much of it; didn't impress
TIME.....Sixty-six minutes (5 parts)

ITS chief fault is that at no time does the action really convince and none of the characters had sufficient personality to dominate or appeal, with the result that the scenes just moved along as so much routine action without at any time making the proper impression to arouse enough interest to hold the attention.

The story was obvious and the treatment failed to make it sufficiently different to register as worth while.

The atmosphere was not distinctive, many of the scenes being very ordinary, with an awful lot of unnecessary detail in the continuity, there being scores of scenes that meant nothing whatever to the progress of the story.

The willun in this must be figured as a pretty dumb gink, since his plot was uncovered through his having left the barrels with which he planted the oil in the swamp, where they could be conveniently discovered in time for the unmasking at the finish.

The average fan will look at this with sort of a bored expression, allowing it to run along without ever making a dent, and certainly no one is ever going to enthuse over it. The personalities of the players, and the atmosphere savored a bit too much of "movie stuff," because most of the exteriors were ordinary and many of the sets were very, very "setty."

Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez, who were starred, didn't stand out over the other players, and since the others were more or less routine characters, I can't figure that there is enough here for any one to concentrate on to make them consider it worth while.

In the supporting cast were Charles Hill Mailes, Jack Curtis, Fred Church, Jean Herscholt, Elwood Bredell, Maxfield Stanley and George Marsh.

The Box Office Angle.

If you can find something that has sufficient human interest to appeal, or some dominant personality to compel attention, I would certainly get it in preference to this. The fans have become pretty well peeved over having this routine junk thrust upon them continually, and it would seem to me that you should make a particular effort from now on to get films that are distinctive enough to make your patrons recommend them, holding these good things for longer runs rather than showing so many productions that never stir emotions.

There is no new angle about this to justify advertising, and it is nothing but ordinary "movies."

PERSONALITIES AND ATMOSPHERE MAKE OLD IDEA ENTERTAINING

Virginia Pearson in

A ROYAL ROMANCE

Fox Film

DIRECTOR.....James Vincent
AUTHOR.....Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN.....L. E. Taylor
AS A WHOLE.....Old idea made entertaining by personalities and atmosphere
STORY.....Prince and princess to be married, met incognito; Formula No. 932
DIRECTION.....Made exteriors classy by composition and lighting and gave distinction to interiors, keeping action interesting by close-ups and cutting
PHOTOGRAPHY....Exteriors very fine; interiors varied, with frequent fuzziness and halation
LIGHTINGS.....Exteriors fine; interiors varied
CAMERA WORK.....Varied, but generally very good
STAR.....Screened beautifully; has charming personality and sufficient poise and authority to dominate
SUPPPORT.....Cummings good prince; others good types
EXTERIORS.....Well chosen; good composition and lightings
INTERIORS.....Generally distinctive; classy enough to carry
DETAIL.....Fitted atmosphere
TIME.....Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

I AM afraid that your fans may groan a bit when this begins to get under way, because it is the old, old idea of prince and princess who were to be married for reasons of state, with the princess deciding that she wouldn't play.

When prince went to the mountains, incognito, princess did the same, pulling a meeting which resulted in romance, and then she stuck with prince until he said he wanted to marry her, without knowing that she was the girl who had been picked out for him all the time.

Certainly, as a basic idea for a film, it is an old friend. Fortunately, Producer Vincent has a rather intelligent idea as to what can be accomplished by treatment, and he has given us good atmosphere, with considerable class in the interiors and some effective, artistic exteriors.

Virginia Pearson has a very pleasnig personality and screens very beautifully, and Irving Cummings as the haughty prince who was humbled, was very likeable, so that the director's treatment and these personalities lifted our old friend out of the rut and made it rather acceptable enertainment.

Towards the finish they pulled a little melodrama, with the willun hiring a guy to stick a knife into the prince, but Miss Pearson, she was a regulation film shero and did the rescue thing, so that they got by that part all right.

The final "climax" where the princess, who had been masquerading, was "unmasked," was rather well handled in order to get a laugh, and I believe the average fan will decide that there is enough that is pleasing in this to justify its having been offered.

There was a decided variance between the lightings in the exteriors and those in the interiors, many of the exterior shots being very beautiful, while some of the interiors were a bit hazy, with occasional trouble from halation.

They had quite a lot of fun with an incident where the princess sent Mr. Cummings, the prince, out to milk a cow, and two characters, a suitor for the hand of the princess and her maid, were carried through the production for the sole purpose of providing comedy relief, which came in very acceptably at the proper moments to make this balance nicely.

In the supporting cast were Royce Coombs, Alex K. Shannon, Grace Henderson, Nora Cecil, Charles Craig, Nellie Slattery and Emil de Varney.

The Box Office Angle.

While this is far from being deep, it is fairly entertaining, and if Miss Pearson is a favorite you will probably find that your fans wll consider it rather a good film.

You can safely play up Miss Pearson's beauty, stating that this offers her an opportunity to wear beautiful gowns and look her prettiest, and it would seem to me that you can play up Mr. Cummings a bit, because he has been in the films for a long time and should be able to pull you some business at the box office.

The title "A Royal Romance" tells about as much of the story as you dare tell—unless you want them to know what an old friend it is—so I believe I would stick to the use of the star's name, that of Mr. Cummings and the name of the film, with the additional promise that there are many beautiful scenes made in the mountains and some distinctive sets and lightings. You really can't afford to talk about the story, but you might use a line like this: "Can you imagine a prince being sent out to milk a cow? Virginia Pearson makes one do it in 'A Royal Romance.'"

VERY ORDINARY MOVIE ROUTINE LACKED REAL PERSONALITIES

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno in

THE CAPTAIN OF THE GREY HORSE TROOP

Greater Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	William Wolbert
AUTHOR	Hamlin Garland
SCENARIO BY	A. Van Buren Powell
CAMERAMAN	Reginald E. Lyons
AS A WHOLE	Interesting action, personalities helping, but sometimes missed fire
STORY	Sympathy for Indian stuff with love interest and melo action
DIRECTION	Gave excellent Western atmosphere, but missed somewhat on interiors, with good dramatic moments, but slumps in between
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied; sometimes very good, but frequently fuzzy and lacking distinction
LIGHTINGS	Night stuff very good; interiors effective as pretty sets, but not best for characters
CAMERA WORK	Varied; didn't get best results for stars
STARS	Personalities helped offering
SUPPORT	Some very good types
EXTERIORS	Western stuff very good
INTERIORS	Good lighting helped at times
DETAIL	Quite satisfactory
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

AT the present time the name of this should arouse interest. and since Tony Moreno and Edith Storey both have pleasing personalities, I'd say that this is a good bet.

The production as screened is quite a bit short of being tremendous as drama, but certainly it is interesting and has several very good spots.

The chief fault with this offering is that the action is spotty, with some rather draggy slumps in between the more important moments. The plot construction and the tempo of the development mars the effectiveness of the better scenes, with the result that several of these miss fire. If it were not for the personalities of Mr. Moreno and Miss Storey many of the scenes would mean nothing. These two young people are interesting enough in themselves to hold the interest in scenes that otherwise have little or no meaning.

In a way, the story is a plea for the red man, which is always good sympathy stuff when properly handled, and the atmosphere provided herewith makes this sufficiently real to guarantee any audience leaving the house with the feeling that it has been at least worth while.

At no time does this hit such high spots that it thrills, and several of the scenes that should have been very dramatic failed to impress. However, there's oodles of action and quite a lot doing all the way, so that no one can complain of this being uninteresting.

You know the work of Mr. Moreno and Miss Storey too well for it to be necessary for me to tell you how well they would register in this sort of offering. Of course, Mr. Moreno was a soldier who protected the Indians against the cattlemen, and Miss Storey, as the daughter of the politician who was in with the cattlemen, appeared as the heroine who joined forces with the hero and refused to support her father's ideas.

At the finish there was quite a lot of bing-bing action taken at night, with a scrap in the street which registered rather well and a mob storming the jail to take out the Indian accused of murder. This final swinging action helps the general effect and will probably save the day for the offering.

The cast included some splendid types, and there is one sure-fire laugh where a big, bearded gink is handed a plate of sandwiches, with the result that he gobbles one whole, without batting an eye.

Among those in the cast were Mrs. Bradbury, Otto Lederer, Al Jennings, Robert Burns, Neola May and H. A. Barrows.

The Box Office Angle.

Since this offering has quite a number of speech titles, excerpts from the book, which make a plea in defense of the Indian, I would sort of concentrate on the thought that this is a story exposing reasons for the rapid decline of the great race of red men who formerly owned this country.

Naturally you want to hammer on the title, and if you get any cuts showing Tony Moreno in uniform, play them up prominently. Mr. Moreno and Miss Storey have been a popular team, and I think you can get a little better than average program business with this offering. I wouldn't promise that it is tremendous, but you can certainly say with safety that it is a very interesting action story telling of Mr. Moreno's fight as Uncle Sam's representative to keep a band of roughneck cattlemen from taking advantage of the one-time owners of this great country.

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

WM. DESMOND TAYLOR
DIRECTOR
Morosco and Pallas-Paramount.

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Ithaca New York.

JAMES YOUNG

AUTHORS

ANTHONY KELLY

EVE UNSELL
Famous Players—Lasky Corp.

CHARLES E. WHITTAKER
Adaptor of "THE WHIP" and
"THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN"
Address—Broadway Central Hotel.

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York City

YOU'LL REALIZE WHAT A BINDER
REALLY MEANS WHEN YOU CAN'T
FIND THAT "WID'S"

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE

THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM

WID'S

INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday | VOL. III. | THUHSDAY, MAY 31, 1917. | NO. 22 | 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

THE ROLL OF HONOR!!

These features have at least five reports, and all have a combined average for Pleased Patrons and Box Office of 80 per cent or more.

In the case of several Features having the same percentage, we have placed the one with the higher percentage of repeats first.

Reports	Features	Company	% P. P.	% B. O.	Repeats
7	The Birth of a Nation	Griffith Spec.	100	100	6
6	A Poor Little Rich Girl	Arteraft	99	100	5
7	East Street	Chaplin Mut.	97	100	7
5	The Floorwalker	Chaplin Mut.	97	100	2
11	The Americano	Triangle	99	97	8
7	The Rink	Chaplin Mut.	96	99	6
13	Truthful Tulliver	Triangle	98	95	8
7	The Square Deal Man	Triangle	96	97	4
18	Hell's Hinges	Triangle	93	89	11
17	Snow White	Paramount	96	95	10
5	The Goose Girl	Paramount	95	95	4
5	Destruction	Fox	86	94	1
35	Hulda from Holland	Paramount	95	94	23
7	The Eternal City	Para. Special.	93	96	4
12	The Matrimaniac	Triangle	94	95	5
12	Miss George Washington	Paramount	94	94	9
8	The Ne'er Do Well	Vitagraph	94	94	6
5	Behind the Scenes	Chaplin Mut.	94	93	4
10	Still Waters	Paramount.	95	91	6
5	Cinderella	Paramount.	88	98	2
25	Under Two Flags	Fox	94	91	17
23	Peggy	Triangle	94	91	15
13	The Devil's Double	Triangle	92	93	7
21	Manhattan Madness	Triangle	94	91	11
5	Seven Sisters	Paramount	93	92	1
6	The Serpent	Fox	92	93	1
10	The Iron Claw	Serial	93	92
19	Rags	Paramount	91	93	5
14	Bought and Paid For	World	92	91	9
7	The Shielding Shadow	Serial	91	91
10	Mister 44	Metro	88	93	4
12	American Aristocracy	Triangle	92	88	7
16	The Wolf Woman	Triangle	89	91	6
9	Out of the Drifts	Paramount	90	89	3
5	Graustark	K. E. S. E.	88	90	4
13	The Sin Ye Do	Triangle	94	84	8
14	The Habit of Happiness	Triangle	92	85	5
7	The Prince and the Pauper	Paramount	91	86	2
9	Wildflower	Paramount	90	86	6
23	The Bugle Call	Triangle	95	81	7
12	A Corner in Colleens	Triangle	91	84	6
6	My Official Wife	Vitagraph	91	84	3
5	Green Stockings	Vitagraph	87	88	2
24	Little Lady Eileen	Paramount	86	89	9
17	The Return of Draw Egan	Triangle	88	87	6
12	The Battle Cry of Peace	Vitagraph	95	80	4
22	Silks and Satins	Paramount	86	88	16
18	The Cheat	Paramount	94	80	12
15	The Count	Chaplin Mut.	88	85	8
20	East Lynne	Fox	87	86	9
10	Back of the Man	Triangle	92	81	3
10	Romeo and Juliet	Fox	87	86	4
16	Fifty-Fifty	Triangle	90	83	6
15	The Common Law	Selznick Pic.	83	90	5
6	The Soul of a Woman	Metro	93	80	1
10	Old Homestead	Paramount	88	84	7
27	Flirting with Fate	Triangle	87	85	10
13	Her Double Life	Fox	84	88	3
12	Poor Little Peppina	Paramount	87	84	6
19	Home	Triangle	91	80	9
23	Reggie Mixes In	Triangle	92	79	10
11	The White Raven	Metro	86	85	4
11	The Eternal Sapho	Fox	84	87	4
9	Molly Make-Believe	Paramount	87	83	5
15	Ashes of Embers	Paramount	87	83	6
8	The Two Orphans	Fox	84	86	3
11	The Weaker Sex	Triangle	87	83	4
17	The Good Bad	Triangle	89	81	4
21	An Apostle of Vengeance	Triangle	88	82	3
7	Bella Donna	Paramount	92	77	4
5	Shadows and Sunshine	Pathe	94	75	2
17	The Flying Torpedo	Triangle	88	80	5
9	God's Country and Woman	Vitagraph	81	87	4
8	Helene of the North	Paramount	87	81	2
7	Madame Butterfly	Paramount	80	88	1
8	Little Mary Sunshine	Pathe	90	78	1
7	Undine	Bluebird	80	87	3
5	Dawn of a Tomorrow	Paramount	82	85	1
7	Island of Regeneration	Vitagraph	85	81	4
6	Mice and Men	Paramount	84	82	5
11	The Rise of Susan	World	81	85	6
6	Pretty Sister of Jose	Paramount	84	82	2
6	A Man and His Soul	Metro	83	83	2
15	The Combat	Vitagraph	82	84	1
17	Plain Jane	Triangle	87	78	4
7	Camille	World	86	79	3
17	His Picture in the Papers	Triangle	89	76	5
11	Carmen	Paramount	82	83	3
5	David Harum	Paramount	87	78	1
7	The Promise	Metro	81	84	1
5	The Little Girl Next Door	Special	77	87	3
5	A Hungry Heart	World	86	78	2
5	Chimmie Fadden Out West	Paramount	88	76	2
5	The Virginian	Paramount	85	79	1
5	What'll People Say?	Metro	80	84
8	A Gentleman from Indiana	Paramount	86	78
15	The River of Romance	Metro	87	76	7
6	Excuse Me!	Pathe	90	73	2
20	The Social Secretary	Triangle	90	73	7
12	Trail of Lonesome Pine	Paramount	75	88	3
8	Where Are My Children?	Univ. Spec.	79	84	2
15	Stepping Stones	Triangle	87	76	2
18	Man From Bitter Roots	Fox	82	81	2
6	Kindling	Paramount	81	82
6	Madame X	Pathe	71	91	3
8	Sapho	Paramount	74	88	3
5	Alice in Wonderland	Special	76	86	1
5	20,000 Leagues Under Sea	Univ. Spec.	63	98	4
6	The Libertine	Mammoth	83	78	4
17	Not My Sister	Triangle	82	79	4
5	The Soul of Broadway	Fox	83	78	1
5	Chimmie Fadden	Paramount	90	71
6	Patria	Serial	84	77
16	Gloria's Romance	Serial	78	82
5	The Man From Mexico	Paramount	90	70	2
18	Honor Thy Name	Triangle	88	72	4
14	Bullets and Brown Eyes	Triangle	85	75	3
8	The Wall Between	Metro	78	82	1

Feature Films as Wid Sees Them

TOO MUCH WRONGED GIRL DETAIL, BUT ACTION FAIRLY INTERESTING

Frances Nelson in

THE BEAUTIFUL LIE

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR.....John H. Collins
AUTHOR.....Ella Wheeler Wilcox
SCENARIO BY.....June Mathis
CAMERAMAN.....Herbert O. Carleton
AS A WHOLE.....Wronged-girl-he-wampire surface melo that hit and missed in spots
STORY.....Went a long way around to reach point; nothing new in plot development
DIRECTION.....Gave some excellent lightings, but frequently permitted much acting and general treatment failed to impress
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS.....Many very fine, but others not good
CAMERA WORK.....Varied decidedly
STAR.....Beautiful at times; generally pleasing
SUPPORT.....Acceptable, although frequently overplayed
EXTERIORS.....Not unusual
INTERIORS.....Too much furniture and fixin's, but lighting made some good
DETAIL.....Acceptable, but too much of it
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THIS was one of those he-wampire things with the man who thought he had tricked an innocent country rose into a mock marriage, tiring of her very soon to pick up another toy who was afterwards discovered making way for another. This man's best line was, "I am through." He told several of the goils that during the course of the picture.

We wondered all along what "the beautiful lie" was, and learned on the finish that the he-wampire's fixer had so arranged things that the boss had been really married when he thought it had been faked. Since this was not uncovered until the he wampire hubby was dying from having been shot by one of his discarded flowers, it was of course all right, since then our hero could marry our shero, because, instead of being a discarded mistress, she was a sure-enough widow.

Apparently, intent had nothing to do with the matter, and the legal aspect was necessary to ease the conscience of shero, despite the fact that hero had said very forcefully that he wanted to marry her, anyway.

Throughout this offering we had many sets which were lighted rather well, and frequently Miss Nelson was shown in close-ups with good lighting, some of them making her very beautiful, although a few of the lightings were poor. The general atmosphere of the story was a bit too much along the line of detail regarding the one man's love affairs and the development of the love interest between hero and shero. In this case hero was a protege of the bad boy who loved too many girls, and he had picked out shero as a model for his painting, "The City Lorelei."

In showing the close-up of the finished masterpiece (?) they made a little slip, because it looked rather funny as screened and will very probably get a laugh. I saw this in a theatre and it got a real laugh the night I sat in. They have taken a photograph and daubed it over somewhat to get the effect of a painting, and on the screen it surely does not look like a masterpiece. A title which goes with it makes the hero say, "It's finished . . . and this is the happiest day of my life!" That, taken with the rather odd appearance of the painting, only added to the laugh.

During the course of the development they brought in the situation of the street walker who told the innocent girl who had been arrested when she wasn't guilty that the world was all wrong and that she should make the men pay. That thought has been preached quite a lot lately and many folks may not think it is altogether a good doctrine to spread too generously.

The hero's name in this was Paul Vivian. Truly, that was a sweet name to give an artist hero.

Miss Nelson's personality helped this in many of the slow spots because she is truly pretty and screens so well that one doesn't mind having to look at her.

Harry S. Northrup, in the part of the wicked he-wampire, wasn't so attractive that it became easy to understand why the women all fell for him, but he was very good for a willun, except when he acted too much—which was quite often.

Edward Earle did very well as the hero. In two or three of his more important scenes he overplayed a bit, but the general impression was quite satisfactory.

John Davidson made a small part stand out, because this young man, by his poise, quickly dominates a scene where he has anything to do.

Sally Crute was the sin woman who told the story of the street walker.

Others who appeared were Mrs. Allan Walker, Elsie McLeod and Emil Collins.

The Box Office Angle.

As program stuff goes, this may get by satisfactorily because of Miss Nelson's presence, even though the story is a little too much along the wronged-girl train of thought. There is a decided lack of comedy relief and the offering from start to finish gives a bit too much detail of the trials and tribulations of girls who fall victims to the wicked wrong-doing wreckers of homes.

If you have a community audience, I would try to get something which is a little bit lighter or more human. If you play to patrons who seem to like the sex thing this may go very well because some of the lightings are excellent and there is enough of the high life junk registered to please any lovers of this rather morbid line of thought.

It is pretty hard to figure advertising angles on this because there is nothing distinctive about the story or the treatment. You might go after it along this line: "Is the accepted law of civilization, which always makes the woman instead of the man pay, right? See 'The Beautiful Lie.'"

HAROLD LOCKWOOD
Yorke--Metro

ATMOSPHERE AND CHARACTERIZATION, GOOD LIGHT ENTERTAINMENT

Dorothy Dalton in

WILD WINSHIP'S WIDOW

Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR ..... Charles Miller
AUTHOR ..... John Lynch
CAMERAMAN ..... Clyde De Vinna
AS A WHOLE ..... Personalities and treatment made this entertaining
STORY ..... Incidents elementary, but characterizations interesting
DIRECTION ..... Provided distinctive lightings and atmosphere, and relieved production with frequent laughs well placed
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Many very effective and artistic
CAMERA WORK ..... Very fine
STAR ..... A very interesting personality
SUPPORT ..... Some excellent types well handled
EXTERIORS ..... Many beautiful shots, with fine composition
INTERIORS ..... Distinctive; classy
DETAIL ..... Some fine little touches
TIME ..... Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

HERE is a splendid instance of a producer taking an elementary theme and making it into a very delightful bit of entertainment by treatment in registering good characterizations in a distinctive atmosphere, with many delightful little bits of comedy to relieve at the proper moment.

From the very first this was marked as a classy offering, because it opened with one or two exterior shots that were certainly beautiful. The distinction as to composition, sets and lightings continued all the way, and this atmosphere of class lifted the offering out of the rut and made it register as worth while.

The story was the well-known and truly simple theme of the conflict between a young widow and her sweetheart of years standing, which resulted from her having refused him so many times that he finally took the advice of an old friend and began to pay attention to other girls, with the result that we had our good old situation of each trying to make the other jealous through much footage.

The finale came when our heroine, realizing that she loved her old sweetheart and that he loved her but was heaved over her actions, arranged so that she should be left alone on a mountain top with a poor boob of a poet in order that hero could rescue her from being compromised, which would prove that he did love her.

The situation where Miss Dalton sneaked away from the poet who was reading beautiful (?) verses to her, to go outside and chase the horses away, returning without the poet missing her, was very poorly handled, because, even though he was a boob, the poet would have noticed her departure.

There were a few other places in which the action was rather overdrawn, as, for instance, where Miss Dalton persisted in turning around to watch her sweetheart, while she was supposed to be handing out trophies at the hunt ball, but those items will probably be overlooked by the average audience, being forgiven as "picture license."

Certainly Producer Miller and Miss Dalton are deserving of real credit for making this so entertaining, because the story skeleton was a decided handicap to start with.

The character of the poet was very well handled, it being played in just the right manner to make most any red-blooded gink want to kick this feller on the shins. We also had a number of good laughs out of a character who was brought into several scenes, he being the minister needed for the final marriage, and I think that the bit where he lost his shoe in the mud when trying to reach the cabin on the mountain, through the storm, will get a yell out of any one. The little touch where the roof leaked on the minister's head was also good.

As proof of the fact that we should not tell the secrets of how pictures are made, I heard quite a discussion near me as this was being shown, on the difficulty of securing the storm scenes. These folks had it all figured out that it was necessary for the producer to wait until it rained real hard before he could go out and take any of these scenes. If they had ever heard of storm scenes being made in any other way, you can bet that this would not have appeared nearly so realistic and impressive to them. The lightning flash which felled the tree across the path of the rescuing party was well handled, and, in fact, Producer Miller is deserving of full credit for having made the entire offering very impressive by his treatment.

The bit of business having to do with the rescuing of Miss Dalton's glove from the edge of the precipice was well done, the danger being nicely developed by cutbacks of falling rocks hurtling down the side of the canyon.

Dorothy Dalton has a very pleasing personality and should become a great favorite if she is given a chance. I was indeed glad to see her come back in this sort of an offering after remembering her work in "The Dark Road," when she vamped all over the place. To be true, Miss Dalton is "some" vamp, but she is capable of better things and the public to-day is not in sympathy with vamp characters.

In the supporting cast were Rowland Lee, Joe King, Lillian Hayward and Alice Taaffe.

The Box-Office Angle

Figured as entertainment, I consider this a very pleasing offering. It has class, beauty, comparatively interesting action, love interest and a nice assortment of laughs. True, it isn't altogether convincing at all times, but it is good light entertainment in a pleasing atmosphere.

Certainly this is far superior to the average program offering which deals with willuns and the usual melodramatic mess, and for an intelligent community audience I would say that this will prove most satisfactory.

I would hammer particularly upon the fact that this is entertaining. Tell them that it has been presented in a distinctive, beautiful atmosphere and play up particularly Miss Dalton as one of the most pleasing personalities of the new stars of the films.

Miss Dalton has appeared in a number of very pleasing subjects, and I believe I would refer to those which showed the best results in your house, omitting the vampire thing in "The Dark Road."

Romaine Fielding

THE LAMBS

[Engaged]

FINE LIGHTINGS AND SPOTTY ACTION WITH PLOT SLUMPING TERRIBLY AT END

Robert Warwick in

THE SLIENT MASTER

Harry Rapf—Selznick—Pictures

DIRECTOR ..... Leonce Perret
AUTHOR ..... E. Phillips Oppenheim
SCENARIO BY ..... Leonce Perret
CAMERAMEN ..... Lucien Andriot and Andre Barlatier
AS A WHOLE ..... Star's impressive manner and atmosphere lifted this, but story flopped toward end
STORY ..... Fast action melo at first, but didn't quit when through; last reels slumped badly
DIRECTION ..... Registered many distinctive lightings and excellent French atmosphere, but permitted acting and was rather mechanical at times
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Varied from excellent to fair, with some fine lightings and others ordinary LIGHTINGS ..... Many unusual distinctive effects, but some scenes poorly handled
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good, but not enough close-ups of supporting characters
STAR ..... Impressive dignity dominated action and carried many scenes; was very satisfactory in character
SUPPORT ..... Generally good, but close-ups would have helped characters decidedly; some "acted" badly
EXTERIORS ..... Mostly studio; rather well done for sets
INTERIORS ..... Generally very good; a few excellent
DETAIL ..... Good
TIME ..... One hour and twenty minutes (7 parts)

STARTING off with some fast-moving melodrama in effectively lighted sets, having to do with a secret society which punished the offenders of morality standards, this story unfortunately slumped downhill all the way until it got to the last two reels, which were decidedly anti-climatical and certainly unnecessary.

Robert Warwick was presented as a wealthy man who employed Parisian apaches to apprehend offenders against the morality code, with a mysterious secret court trying and punishing these men, who were whipped by the masked judges, while their money was taken and donated to charity.

Mr. Warwick was perfectly fitted for this character of the hard, forceful, dominant man who secretly carried on this work, and from start to finish he carried this conception of the part with considerable dignity. At the very end he was brought in as a derelict in a sequence which was entirely unnecessary, and this, instead of providing sympathy, really marred the effectiveness of his other more important scenes.

Producer Perret, who recently came to this country from France, has given us some very good sets, but occasionally we had the touch of the French school, which didn't altogether register as particularly pleasing. It was noticeable that he gave studio exteriors, and while these were rather well done, nevertheless any film fan will know that they are studio sets. The absence of close-ups and cutting and flashing, according to the best American methods, was also noticeable.

When it came to the Parisian atmosphere, with the apaches and other typical French bits, the director w of course at home; but we did find that a number extras in these scenes were decidedly inclined to "act which tended to give a touch of artificiality to m ments that should have been dramatic.

Following the establishment of this court where t offenders were tried, we found the action centering abo a youth who couldn't resist the opportunity to enter in the life of the criminals, with the result that he g into serious trouble.

Mr. Warwick rescued him, but he slipped back in the mire. Then Mr. Warwick was suddenly transferr to America (by scenario) and the author immediate sent him out to rescue a beautiful lady from a runaw horse. That as an idea for meeting between hero a shero has been very much overdone in the films, a when they followed it soon after with these two e gaged to be married, and pulled the information th shero was a sister of the boy who had gotten into troul in Paris—Blooie!—it went kaflop!

From that time on it was just so much action. T heart had gone out of it, and wearily we watched t boy get into fresh trouble, with hero finally saving life by buying it with his entire fortune—and th when it was absolutely time to quit, they started in a long, long sequence of hero's wife refusing to f give her hubby and after five years we saw him as bum. The wife then sent her little girl to live w this bum, and still, after the bum had reformed the sake of the little girl, washed his face and eve thing, we found that wife wouldn't forgive.

Now, any fan that knows anything at all about p tures has had it all figured out for a long time t she was going to forgive him sooner or later, and all this junk failed to register.

Finally they sent hubby into an accidental meet with a French girl, who had loved him although had called her "Little Sister," and from this meet he went once more to his old home and there we fo wife and little daughter ready for the final clutch.

It was a serious mistake, in developing this st to pull all of that footage after the rescue of the from the paches. It is a great thing to know when quit.

While the general atmosphere of this offering excellent, there were a few scenes which were a fuzzy and seemed out of focus. In several of scenes where apaches figured we had extras who w very stiff and unnatural, being thoroughly convi that it was necessary for them to act all the time.

The decorations used on the titles were of so m kinds and assortments that they jarred fearfully. had speech titles in printed type, a few titles in kind of lettering and a few more in another kind lettering, until the attention became centered upon designs rather than upon the subject matter of the ti with the result that they surely didn't register prope

Anna Little, as the French girl, registered very s factorily, but would have been much better had been given more close-ups.

Olive Tell, as the wife, started off great, but in m of the scenes which followed she didn't photogr to advantage and the general impression, particul since she was doing such a boob character, was any too favorable. Why in the world they made character hold out through so many reels of film fore finally pulling the forgiveness stuff is beyond

Daniel Galaher, as the boy who caused all the tro id rather well with a weakling character, although at mes he overplayed a bit.

Others who appeared were Juliette Moore, Henri Val-el, Valentin Petit and Geo. Clark.

The Box Office Angle.

If Robert Warwick pulls you business—and I under-and he is very popular in some sections, while in thers he doesn't go so big—I would say that this ould go over satisfactorily because of the atmosphere nd the fact that the star has such a dominant part, espite the woful weakness of the story itself. The rly part of the film has some very good meat, but e last half slumps badly, leaving rather an unfavor-le, incoherent impression at the end.
If you play this up, however, as the first produc-on by one of France's best directors, Leonce Perret, u will undoubtedly be able to buffalo your fans into thinking that it is quite worth while as a special production.
The picture is an adaptation of one of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novels, "The Court of St. Simon," and that fact may be worth something in your advertising.
I wouldn't rave too much about this offering as to its merit, but would depend principally upon billing the star, announcing that it is Producer Perret's first offering, mentioning the fact that it is adapted from a famous novel and hammering at the unusual light effects and the correct detail of atmosphere. This gives you something of an alibi if they don't like it, in that you will not have definitely promised anything regarding the points they will not like, and I believe if you will hammer these particular items hard enough you may make such an impression that the average fan will be a bit afraid to criticise such a combination of apparent strength.

OLD IDEA LIFTED BY TREATMENT HAD SEVERAL GOOD MOMENTS

Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels in

THE FIRES OF YOUTH

Thanhouser—Pathe

IRECTOR	Emile Chautard
UTHOR	Agnes C. Johnston
AMERAMAN	M. Bizeul
S A WHOLE	Old idea made rather interesting by treatment, with a few very good moments
ORY	Hard-hearted mill owner reformed by living with employees stuff
IRECTION	Had some pleasing lightings, several very good moments, with action generally satisfactory
HOTOGRAPHY	Generally very good
GHTINGS	Some excellent; others ordinary
AMERA WORK	Quite satisfactory; not exceptional
ARS	Good characters, although actory gestures crept in occasionally
PPORT	Kid very good; others acceptable
XTERIORS	Ordinary
TERIORS	Fair; lightings helped
TAIL	Acceptable
ME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED as a program release, this gets a little above the ordinary because the producer has taken rather an old idea and dignified it by making a few of his dramatic moments truly impressive by close-ups, nice timing of emo-ns and intelligent cutting and flashing. This was par-ularly true of the scene where the millionaire owner the mills, who had been living with the workmen get their viewpoint, found that the little boy who d led him to do this human thing had gone into e foundry to save his molds, so that the old man uld not be fired for neglect. An accident had loos-ed the molten metal, burning the boy badly, and in at way it was brought home to the owner that his glect had placed this child, who had become so dear him, at death's door. The handling of this scene me was enough to make the offering worth while. It s well done, the tempo was splendid, and I believe will give a lump in the throat to the average audi-ce.

Considered as a whole, the story was very old stuff. e situation of hard-hearted mill owner being brought wn among his employees, incognito, through the love or friendship of a child, has been done many times. There was nothing particularly new about it and we knew all the time that he was going to announce wonderful reforms on the finish, with everybody happy. With this handicap it was necessary for the director to make his action rather interesting and give some distinctive lightings in order that this production might have any chance whatever.

Mr. Warde has a very pleasing personality in such a character, except when there is a trace of the actor slipping into his gestures.

Opposite Mr. Warde was Jeanne Eagels, and this little lady has big possibilities, I believe, if she will be handled so that there will be no artificiality in any of her action. This was only her second picture, and in many of her scenes she was very effective, but occasionally there was a touch of "acting" which didn't ring true, with the result that it marred her characterization at times.

Little Helen Badgley, as the boy, had some good scenes and will make good with an audience because she is a clever youngster.

The other members of the cast were ordinary, and some of the extras were very bad. The scene outside the mill owner's home where a group of extras were going to do violence was awful. They shoved one another around in the usual manner, with much arm waving, and of course there was one gink that wanted to fight his way through, and somebody wished on us the title "Let me get at him!" Oh, boy—why will they do those things!

Others in the cast were Ernest Howard and Robert Vaughn.

The Box Office Angle.

This has been sufficiently well done to justify your putting it over as a program offering, and I believe that the contrast between the three principal characters, Mr. Warde, Miss Eagels and Little Miss Badgley as the boy, gives enough human interest to the action to make the average audience figure that they have spent their time to advantage.

You might arouse some interest in this by such advertising as the following: "Are you too old to play? See 'Fires of Youth.'" "Are you missing the joy of being young, no matter what your age? See 'Fires of Youth.'" "Should December wish for May? See 'Fires of Youth.'"

EXCELLENT ATMOSPHERE AND FITTING PART FOR STAR MAKE ORDINARY PLOT DISTINCTIVE

Mme. Olga Petrova in

THE UNDYING FLAME

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR ..... Maurice Tourneur
AUTHOR ..... Emma Bell
SCENIC SETS BY ..... Ben Carre
CAMERAMAN ..... John v. d. Broek
AS A WHOLE ..... Atmosphere and treatment makes ordinary story impressive
STORY ..... Reincarnation theme painfully lacking in dramatic incident; terribly convenient DIRECTION ..... Provided distinctive impressive atmosphere, putting production over
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Many distinctive; generally very good
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally very good
STAR ..... Best character for her in long time
SUPPORT ..... Quite satisfactory
EXTERIORS ..... A few beautiful; generally good
INTERIORS ..... Egyptian scenes impressive; generally very satisfactory
DETAIL ..... Some convenient twists, but quite acceptable
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

I SAW this in Sam Rothapfel's Rialto, and certainly the way "Roxie" put it on, it was "some" picture.

The atmosphere provided by Producer Tourneur was most impressive, and this production gave Mme. Petrova the sort of characterization which she can do to the best advantage, because it was one of those dignified, queenly parts which made it possible for her to stand around and make every one look like they were worth about thirty cents while she could sign a check for a million at least.

Roxie's presentation of this offering was certainly splendid. He pulled a little atmosphere before the picture started, with a lot of half-dressed females making angular gestures as they walked slowly across the stage, pulling the stuff that is supposed to be the way the Egyptians used to express their emotions. Preceding this, we had some short films that sort of led us into the Egyptian atmosphere, and then the music was most appropriate. Since this offering gets over because of the atmosphere and the star, it can be readily understood that the Rialto presentation lifted it even more.

The story, as a story, was rotten. The use of the reincarnation theme was all right, and some day we'll probably get a big picture along that line; but here they pulled some convenient coincidences that were enough to make any audience say, "Oh, boy!" and there was a noticeable lack of dramatic incident, with the production sort of sluffing off on the finish with the anticipated clutch coming without a struggle.

As a sample of the coincidences which they pulled, we found that the hero in the modern story had part of a scarab which the ancient lovers had divided, his father having found this in the ruins at Thebes. The other half of this scarab landed in the possession of the modern heroine when she visited a fortune-teller who said that it had been taken from the tummy of a sacred carp, from the River Nile. Well, as a friend of mine said, of course that made it impossible for us to "carp" at this. Who let that dog in?

There were other bad spots in this story construction, but the producer gave us so many beautiful shots that he just simply is going to buffalo any average audience into believing that this is great because it is distinctive and beautiful.

One of the mysteries of the story was the situation where hero rode out into the desert in answer to a note summoning him to help a friend, with the result that he found upon arrival that the friend was a female who desired his attentions. Now came the blow. Petrova suspected that all was not well and started out to locate hero. Her horse must've been some sort of a "date palm bloodhound" or something of that sort, because he took her directly to the scene where hero and willuness were talking, without any one knowing how in the world she located them so readily. Of course, when she arrived there, willuness had her arms around hero. I do hope that somebody some day will pass a law against the use of this misunderstood situation thing. It has certainly been overworked in the past year.

In many of the scenes and close-ups Mme. Petrova was truly beautiful, but in a few shots the make-up under her eyes was too much in evidence, with rather unsatisfactory results.

Mahlon Hamilton, playing opposite the star, was rather more pleasing than usual because he was kept from acting too much. He seemed to have a little "private corporation" that was rather in evidence, this marring his otherwise heroic figger; but considered as a whole he was very satisfactory in this.

Particular credit should be given to Producer Tourneur for his handling of the Egyptian atmosphere. For studio scenes they were quite impressive, and the prologue of Egyptian stuff starts the production off in a manner to make it register as big and worth while.

Others in the cast were Charles W. Hamilton, Violet Reed, Charles W. Martin, Herbert Evans, Warren Cook and Edward Mordant.

The Box-Office Angle

Despite the fact that this story is pretty punk, I believe you can figure on this as a big money-getter that will please most any one because of the distinctive, impressive atmosphere.

Petrova has been a big box-office attraction even with the dozens of very bad productions in which she has appeared, and consequently with a background such as has been provided here, I would say that this should be a clean-up.

I would make it plain that this is a reincarnation theme with the famous star in Egyptian scenes and also in modern scenes, but in my advertising I would make considerable use of the Egyptian sets, which are the most impressive, explaining in the type matter the fact that the story is both ancient and modern.

I believe that exhibitors have an unreasoning prejudice against costume productions because we have had so many of them which were nothing but costumes. I believe that the public will accept a costume production just as readily as they will a modern production, providing it registers the human note.

If you are doubtful about this point, however, you need not worry regarding the costume angle on this, because you get both the costume part of the story and the modern, which in itself should be a very good advertising angle.

The fact that this is the first Lasky production in which Mme. Petrova has appeared should alone be a valuable point to yell about. Every one will figure that certainly the first one will be good.

You might use a teaser campaign on this preceding the announcement, in which you would ask whether or not they believed in reincarnation. As, for instance, "Did you ever feel when something happened that you had been in exactly that position many years—even centuries—before? Do you believe in reincarnation?"

"What part do you think you played in the days of Cleopatra? Do you believe in reincarnation?"

STARS AND NEWSPAPER ATMOSPHERE MAKE JUMPY PLOT HOLD

Marguerite Clayton and Jack Gardner in

THE NIGHT WORKERS

Essanay—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR.....J. Charles Haydon
AUTHOR.....J. Bradley Smollen
AS A WHOLE.....A bit different, with newspaper atmosphere, but story rather jumpy and consequently misses heart appeal
STORY.....Not nearly as effective as atmosphere
DIRECTION.....Gave much interesting newspaper detail, but failed to explain it sufficiently for layman to get full value
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS.....Acceptable; little attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK.....Generally good
STARS.....Very pleasing personalities
SUPPORT.....Some good characters
EXTERIORS.....Acceptable; not distinctive or artistic INTERIORS.....Good newspaper atmosphere; many interesting bits, but not sufficiently explained
DETAIL.....Some good little touches; explanation would have helped
TIME.....Fifty-two minutes (5 parts)

FIGURED from this first appearance, Jack Gardner registers as something like a cross between George M. Cohan and Clifton Crawford. If given the proper opportunity in screen work, I would say that he should become a favorite because he has that breeziness and clean-cut appearance which will undoubtedly make many friends.

Marguerite Clayton is a pretty girl and has a very pleasing personality, so that when you figure these two young folks full of pep, in a newspaper story that just oozes atmosphere, you can readily understand that, while the story of this never really grips and at times sort of missed at the heart because of it being quite jumpy, the production is still entertaining and worth while as an hour show.

I would never bank on this as a big offering, but for a community house, or, in fact, most any house, I believe this will appeal more generally than the average surface melodrama because it has a great many human touches and most folks are interested in newspaper atmosphere, even when they don't understand all of the details.

Had the producers of this taken the trouble to work in titles which would have clearly explained the various technical processes which were shown during the course of the story, I believe this would have been much more interesting. Many things were screened which any average human would like to know about, but they will be unable to get them without titles. These could have been inserted without interrupting the story and without making them seem straight educational explanatory titles.

The plot had to do with the young girl who came to work on the city sheet where our hero was the star reporter, afterwards city editor, with his one failing—that of getting stewed occasionally.

The general atmosphere of the story tended to explain the fact that the "night workers" who grind out the news for the world are compelled to live a life which almost forces slips such as made our hero an occasional absentee from the office, and in contrast to this we found him later on working with Miss Clayton running a small town weekly, which she had inherited, and the young folks were having one grand time with their one-horse printing outfit. The issuance of an extra by the weekly was a little touch that will probably register anywhere.

I believe that this production is in need of titling more than anything else, because some intelligently worded titles would make the atmosphere much more interesting and would clear up many of the story jumps, bridge the gaps and smooth out the construction.

As it stands, however, the average fan will consider this at least interesting, and I believe they will like the featured personalities.

In the cast were Julian Barton, Mabel Bardine and Arthur W. Bates.

The Box Office Angle.

For the average community audience I believe this will go over very satisfactorily because it is a human contrast between the wearying, killing night work of the gang who grind out the big city dailies, and the clean, wholesome life in the small town. We are shown in a fairly convincing manner how even a confirmed city bred newspaperman can learn to enjoy life getting out a weekly in a small town.

There was a great idea here, because every newspaperman that ever worked in a big city has hugged to his heart the thought of some day running a sheet of his own in some small "burg," but it hasn't been worked out in as big a way as might have been.

You will have to depend chiefly upon the statement that this film does provide a contrast and upon the personalities of Mr. Gardner and Miss Clayton. Since this is Mr. Gardner's first appearance in feature films, although he is rather well known to those who follow the Keith vaudeville houses, I would play up the point and try to arouse interest in his first appearance. Unless I'm a bad guesser, he has real possibilities if properly directed.

Miss Clayton has done a number of very much worthwhile things, and I would suggest that you refer to some of her better pictures in billing this, because it is always a good idea not to trust to the fact that your fans remember a star's past successes. If you will give them definite subjects to refresh their memory, it always helps.

You might arouse interest in this by saying, "Have you ever wished that you were a city newspaperman? See 'The Night Workers,' and realize that it is far from being a wonderful life."

Benjamin Chapin
Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays
The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J.
Telephone 583 Hackensack

VERY, VERY OBVIOUS PLOT HELPED SOMEWHAT BY LIGHTINGS

Wallace Reid and Myrtle Stedman in

THE WORLD APART

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR.....William Desmond Taylor
AUTHOR.....George Middleton
SCENARIO BY.....Julia C. Ivers
CAMERAMAN.....Homer Scott
AS A WHOLE...Chessboard melo made fairly interesting by lightings, atmosphere and personalities
STORY.....Obvious melo that never impressed or hit the heart
DIRECTION.....Gave exceptional lightings and good atmosphere, but badly handicapped by story
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Gave perfect natural lightings, but frequently these printed too dark for public
LIGHTINGS....Calculated to a nicety and very effective, except public, accustomed to more light on scene, will consider many sets too dark
CAMERA WORK.....Excellent
STARS.....Pleasing personalities; handicapped by plot
SUPPORT.....Acceptable
EXTERIORS....A few had splendid composition; others good atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Good
DETAIL.....Some good touches
TIME.....Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

CONSIDERING the fact that this story was a painfully obvious surface-action plot that wandered along without much doubt in any one's mind as to what was going to happen, Producer Taylor has made it fairly interesting by unusual lightings and a few splashes of good action.

The story told of a young Easterner who stole money from father's bank with the result that he was ordered to go West to make good. He prevailed upon the girl he had been going with to marry him secretly, and then he departed for the mines where Hero Wally Reid had already been planted.

Of course, every one will immediately know that it is only a question of wandering through several reels of footage until wife can arrive in the West, hubby be disposed of and hero and wife get together for a clutch.

Producer Taylor has given us rather a pleasing atmosphere principally by the use of unusually good lightings, yet it is very doubtful if the average audience will consider this truly worth while, because the story is so pitifully weak.

In the early scenes we had some good sets and several exterior shots which registered excellent composition, and toward the latter part of the action there was a lot of unusual lighting, in that the producer managed to photograph his scenes in what would certainly have been just about the natural lighting of the sets. Unfortunately, this natural lighting, while to be commended in a way, was a bit extreme for the screen, since it left many of the scenes so dark that the average audience will have considerable difficulty in following the action. It is possible that these scenes were printed darker than the producer intended, which may have made them unusually hard to distinguish.

Miss Stedman is a beautiful girl and was quite pleasing throughout, there being many close-ups in which she registered particularly well because of good lighting.

Wally Reid is a regulation 'ansom' 'ero type, and the other characters were acceptable but not unusual. They were John Burton, Florence Carpenter, Eugene Pallette and Henry A. Barrows.

The Box-Office Angle

The name of this means little or nothing, and it will be impossible for you to promise very much regarding the offering, so that it is a question as to whether or not you should use it.

If you are playing the routine program releases and can afford to take chances on your patrons feeling satisfied when they see an obvious chessboard melo, then the personalities of Miss Stedman and Mr. Reid may pull this through. Of course, the atmosphere provided by the producer was very good, but the offering is little more than ordinary, and your fans will probably say that they can't figure it worth while from their viewpoint.

If you feel that you can play this, I certainly would go very easy on it and be particularly careful about telling them the story, since it is unusually flat.

JANE LEE SAVES ORDINARY PLOT WITH CAMERA CONSCIOUS STAR (?)

Jane Lee and June Caprice in

A SMALL-TOWN GIRL

Fox Film

DIRECTOR.....John G. Adolfi
AUTHORS.....Adrian Johnson and John G. Adolfi
CAMERAMAN.....Rial B. Schellinger
AS A WHOLE...Painfully ordinary except for Janey Lee
STORY.....Decidedly convenient surface meller
DIRECTION.....Ordinary atmosphere; permitted much acting
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Just acceptable; a few good spots
LIGHTINGS.....Generally ordinary; not distinctive
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable; some good close-ups
STARS.....Janey delightful; Caprice painful
SUPPORT.....Ordinary movie characters
EXTERIORS.....Ordinary
INTERIORS.....Not distinctive; generally ordinary
DETAIL.....Quite convenient
TIME.....Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

HERE was more money spent on a boss' effort to carry out his promise—or should we call it a threat?—to make a little lady a star.

If June Caprice can be prevailed upon to quit acting, and if she were very, very carefully directed in something which allowed her to do nothing but Cinderella, ragged princess stuff, she might get by. In offerings like this, where she was artificial from start to finish, with repeated camera-conscious attempts to be cute, I can't feel that she can win a following anywhere.

This production was absolutely flat until little Janey Lee busted into the story, about the third reel. Immediately things began to pick up, and from that time on Jane at least kept us from internal groans.

The story started off with a statement that it had to do with small-town folk such as we read about. Well, believe me, they were the sort you "read" about, because they certainly were not the sort "as is." Most of the characterizations as screened will be funny to the people who live in small towns in this country, and we must remember that a tremendous percentage of the film fans do live in small towns. These folks will laugh at these characters—not with them.

They had everything from the old constable who rubbed his badge and spat terbacker juice on the willun's boot, to the two grown-up girls who stood around giggling with their fingers in their mouth.

The plot took some time to plant the fact that Caprice wanted to get to New York, and she almost went with the city chap who happened to be a burglar by profession. Of course, when she finally did go it somehow happened—for which we must cuss the scenario writer—that the willun lived right upstairs, and the hero, who had left the small town earlier in the film, promptly got into the story again as a rent collector working in this particular tenement section.

The willun, who, as I stated before, was a crook, figured in a big diamond robbery and after the getaway, which appeared to be very clean, they pulled a "defective" on us that was sure SOME guesser. Simply because a maid had been working in this house and had disappeared, this "defective" immediately decided that the guilty party was "Mame, the maid." He had no clue whatever, but nevertheless he said, like a flash, that he knew the guilty goil.

Fortunately, about this time Little Janey Lee was getting fairly prominent in the action and her cute tricks, with the assistance of some good subtitles, lifted the offering quite a lot. They then worked in some rather interesting stuff having to do with the planting of the diamond in the heel of the crook-maid's slipper, with this slipper being thrown out of the window by a dog and picked up by Little Janey, and on account of this incident the latter part of the offering gets over fairly well. Without Little Miss Lee, however, and her comedy titles, I believe these scenes would be just as flat as the others, because at no time does Caprice register as real.

There was one title down towards the end of the film which said, "The following morning blind chance takes a hand." Well, bo', take it from me—from the way the various characters had been pulled together, it struck me that the old blind lady had had several "hands" already.

Considering the fact that Caprice and Little Janey Lee were living in a cheap tenement, the time period of this offering must have been some time ago, because Janey was sent out rather nonchalant-like to buy a bag of eggs. They don't have such luxuries in the tenements nowadays—even though the incident was brought in to register the one title and bit of business regarding the fact that the eggs which were broken were rather "sick."

The Box Office Angle.

I certainly would feature Jane Lee in this above Caprice, in case it is necessary to play this as a program offering, because I am quite sure that Janey has a much larger following than Caprice and certainly her work lifts the offering, while Mr. Fox's threatened star sinks it pretty deep. Caprice is camera-conscious to the extent that even her attempted cuteness misses fire, and unless her work takes a decided turn for the better I would figure that she is pretty near hopeless as a real box office attraction.

The offering as a whole is little more than ordinary, with most of the action just plain surface melodrama, and if you can get something more worth while, I'd forget this.

If you have to play it, gamble hard on Janey Lee and pull for her work to save the day.

GETS SOME GOOD LAUGHS, BUT MAKES FUN OF DRYS AND WOMEN VOTERS

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon in BRINGING HOME FATHER

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	William Worthington
AUTHOR	H. O. Davis
SCENARIO BY	Bess Meredyth
CAMERAMAN	Friend F. Baker
AS A WHOLE	Got many laughs and will register as entertaining
STORY	Very simple and has been used before, but funny in spots
DIRECTION	Made a few incidents big; kept it fairly interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; not exceptional
LIGHTINGS	Not distinctive
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable
STARS	Registered rather well all the way
SUPPORT	Father excellent; others good types
EXTERIORS	Acceptable
INTERIORS	Satisfactory
DETAIL	Some funny bits
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THE fact that this was designed principally for laughing purposes provides something of an alibi from the very start, as regards many bits of detail, and certainly it must be said that the producer has registered a number of real laughs in this, and, although the action and fun slumped at times, the general average was rather good for a five-reel comedy.

Franklyn Farnum is rather pleasing because he didn't go to extremes in attempting to imitate another well-known comedian, and Brownie Vernon registered very well, because she is a pretty young lady who knows how to get the most out of the least action. She plays very humanly always. An excellent assortment of types helped the fun, because many of the scenes depended almost entirely upon the laughs to be gained by the odd contrasts provided and by the various types.

They had a lot of fun with some preparations for a parade boosting the candidacy of the girl's mother, who wanted to be alderman and was running on the prohibition ticket. Mr. Farnum was dragged into the parade to carry a banner, and the candidate's husband, a meek little critter, was compelled to place a "Vote Dry" penant across his chest and mount a big fire horse to ride in the procession.

I believe this stuff will get any audience going, and certainly when Mr. Farnum fixed it with a kid to turn in the firm alarm, with the result that the old fire horse took father on an unexpected joy ride, it will get a yell.

From this time on, however, there was a slump until we got into the jail scenes where the funny bum tried to flirt with Miss Vernon. These flashes will be sure-fire and can be counted on for a couple of yells.

After that there was another slump until they got down to the distribution of the spiked punch at the prohibition party which brought a lot of close-ups which will certainly register.

Of course, you know the plot. It was a case of Mr. Farnum getting "stewed" with father after the prohibition parade, with the result that when he took father home and made a noise, father said it was a burglar, so that the police who were summoned caught our hero doing a get-away. After he'd been arrested, he made a deal with the ward boss to get the prohibition candidate out of the running, provided he was released, and he took the spiked punch method of eliminating the hatchet-faced candidate.

In some sections it might be well to consider the fact that this is a "drunk" picture which makes a lot of fun of prohibition and women who want to butt into politics. If you happen to be in a section where the "drys" are very strong, or where the women have successfully entered politics, it might be very advisable to dodge this on that account.

The atmosphere of the entire offering was not distinctive, but it was quite satisfactory, and the producer kept the action fairly interesting even where the fun lagged between the best comedy moments.

Those who appeared in support were Florence Mayon, Arthur Hoyt and Richard La Reno.

The Box-Office Angle

Figured as a five-reel comedy, this is fairly satisfactory because it has spots which are genuinely funny. Figured as an average program release, it is certainly better than the cheap melodrama and vampire stuff because it has a certain amount of fun and is clean, except for the drunk stuff.

This production is hardly to be classed as artistic or exceptionally well done as to photography, but as entertainment for the average film fan I would say that this should get over very satisfactorily, except in communities where the women in politics or "dry" factions can't be made fun of.

OLD TWIN SISTER IDEA MADE RATHER INTERESTING BY TREATMENT

Jackie Saunders in

THE CHECKMATE

Balboa—Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Sherwood Macdonald
AUTHOR ..... Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke
CAMERAMAN ..... William Beckway
AS A WHOLE....Star's personality and camera work will put it over
STORY....Has been done before; not very convincing, but interesting
DIRECTION....Close-ups, lightings and "doubles" helped
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied decidedly, but generally pleasing
LIGHTINGS.....Some excellent; some not very good
CAMERA WORK.....Close-ups and doubles splendid STAR.....Personality and pep helped decidedly
SUPPORT.....Acceptable; not unusual
EXTERIORS.....A few very pretty; generally acceptable
INTERIORS.....Satisfactory; a few very good; others ordinary
DETAIL ..... Acceptable
TIME.....Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

THIS story has been done several times before, but nevertheless will undoubtedly prove interesting as a story, even though it doesn't convince, and surely the personality of Jackie Saunders, who plays two parts, together with some good lightings and unusual camera stunts, will make this register as quite worth-while and rather entertaining.

The story was the good old thought of twin sisters who looked exactly alike, and we found one of these sisters leaving the farm to go to the city, with the result that she promptly fell for a young hero willun who got her stewed, took her to his apartment, and then prevailed upon her, after the rude awakening, to remain as his mistress.

Of course, after a time he refused to marry her and kicked her out, while all along we had had many cutbacks to the other sister, happy on the farm, frollicking through the meadows and playing tricks on the boy in overalls, with whom we knew she was in love.

They then suddenly shifted the hero willun from the city to the farm on a camping party, and he fell in love with the sister, while the ruined sister came home to the farm, after finding it impossible to get a job.

Although the hero willun learned immediately that this was the sister of his former mistress to whom he was making love, he somehow never learned that his former friend had returned from the city. The net result was that, after considerable footage, the hero willun proposed an elopement to the country lass, and by manipulation of arrangements the former mistress took her sister's place and was married to the man who had ruined her life, while the carefree youngster of the farm was left disappointed on the roadside, with the result that in a few months she recovered from her thought-to-be love to discover that she really cared only for the farmer boy.

They finished this off with a letter stating that hubby had been told all and had forgiven, and we saw the city chap with his former mistress, now wife, and a healthy pair of twins. They surely seemed to run to twins in that family!

They used quite a number of double exposures in this, and certainly full credit must be given for this stuff having been very well handled. Frequently we had lightings which made Miss Saunders very beautiful, indeed, but occasionally—particularly in the exteriors—the lightings showed her make-up badly, with the result that she looked very different from the scenes which made her appear beautiful.

No one will take this story very seriously, and it never really gets under the skin, except possibly in the scenes where the ruined girl awakes to her position, but the action is fairly interesting all the way and Miss Saunders keeps it snappy, so that I believe the offering will get over very satisfactorily as an average program release.

The supporting cast was satisfactory, but none of the members were distinctive, Miss Saunders carrying the burden of the action at all times.

The cabaret scenes were rather well handled by cutting, with the actual development of the "stew" nicely treated.

In the supporting cast were Daniel Gilfether, Cullen Landis, Mollie McConnell, Edward Jobson, R. Henry Grey and Margaret Langdon.

The Box-Office Angle

If Jackie Saunders has a following in your community, I believe you can figure that this will prove very pleasing, unless you are afraid of the rough stuff having to do with getting the girl stewed and taking her to an apartment. This is a little bit raw.

The story will hardly convince, but it will be interesting, and Miss Saunders has planted enough fun in it to lift it out of the ordinary melodramatic rut.

If you can stand for the rough stuff, I believe I would advertise this along these lines: "Has a girl from the country a fair chance in the city? What do you think? See 'The Checkmate.'"

TOO MUCH DRUNK STUFF AND BATTLE BETWEEN KEPT WOMEN

Marjorie Rambeau in

THE MIRROR

Frank Powell—Mutual

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Powell
AUTHOR ..... Clara S. Beranger
CAMERAMAN ..... Billy Wagner
AS A WHOLE ..... Rather incoherent dream story, with too much "drunk" stuff
STORY ..... Ancient plot of tempted wife who has warning dream; rather rough in spots
DIRECTION ..... Gave rather good atmosphere, but had unpleasant action, general effect being unsatisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... At times very good; varied decidedly
LIGHTINGS ..... Generally excellent for sets; sometimes fine and sometimes bad for characters
CAMERA WORK ..... Generally good, but varied
STAR ..... Beautiful and capable actress, but should not do "drunk" parts
SUPPORT ..... Good; not exceptional
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable
INTERIORS ..... Generally good; same angle too often
DETAIL ..... Too much disgusting action
TIME ..... Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

THIS idea of showing the happy family with the tempter approaching the wife, followed by her dream in which she went through the awful warning which saved her in time, has been used—lo, these many years. I think the formula number is 28, since it is one of the early ones.

Marjorie Rambeau is a beautiful and talented actress capable of establishing a very large following if given an opportunity. Certainly productions such as this will not help, because she was shown in many scenes disgustingly drunk, and the fact that Miss Rambeau has played this very realistically only tends to make the scenes that much more repulsive to those who do not like to see women intoxicated.

From the time the dream starts—and most of your wise fans will figure it as a dream almost immediately—we get two or three reels of battle between two kept women who fight over a "Generous John." This battle ceases to be a combat of wits toward the end, and finishes with a regular free-for-all, with hubby discovering the faithless wife, smashing up the furniture and rushing in to break up the performance when wife was having her first try-out on the stage.

We found all of these dream scenes decidedly incoherent, and certainly they were suggestive of a nightmare. The struggle between hubby and the manager was quite funny, and this was supposed to be going on while the wife was trying to act, with the result that it so upset her that she couldn't remember her lines, and so the curtain was rung down. Even though this was afterward alibied as a dream, the fact that the heroine is placed in a position which makes her appear to be a senseless boob is surely not liable to build any sympathy for her.

We then found that the manager who wanted to keep the wife took her out to a restaurant, despite her failure, and there the men all crowded around, walking out on the other women, when, as a matter of fact, she would have been the joke of the town instead of everybody's favorite.

Irene Warfield, who appeared as the other kept woman, who battled with Miss Rambeau for the Generous John, worked up her scenes with the star rather well, and had these two been working on anything less disgusting, it might have been interesting.

Throughout the offering the lightings were rather good when figured as to their effect upon the sets, and in some instances the characters were beautifully lighted, but frequently the lightings showed the sets to advantage and the characters to disadvantage. The photographic values varied quite a little, although they were generally good.

In the supporting cast were Paul Everton, Frank Ford, T. Jerome Lawlor, Aubrey Beattie, and Robert Elliott.

The Box-Office Angle

If you have a community house catering to rather particular people, I would say that you should dodge this, because the drunk stuff is hardly what the average family cares to see. They would hardly consider it entertaining. If you have a house catering to transient business or to a goodly percentage of roughnecks who like melodrama sex stuff, pictures that are just a little rough and off-color, then this may please them because of the subject-matter of the story. The lightings and the beautiful star make the film a bit different from the average junk, but you must carefully consider the class of patronage which you play to in figuring whether or not you should book this offering.

If you should decide to play it, don't be so foolish as to tell them it is a dream, in your advertising, since if you do you will have killed whatever element of suspense might exist. Of course, the title, "The Mirror," means nothing, and so if you are going to play it I would center my advertising on the thought of "should a wife seek a career?"

JUST A MINUTE!

INDEPENDENT FEATURE PRODUCERS

At the Trade Showing

THE MUSICAL SETTING

IS A MIGHTY FACTOR IN PUTTING THE PICTURE OVER

Don't take chances on the house orchestra spoiling your production with a setting that doesn't fit. The themes and tempi of the picture and mere "incidental" music frequently clash—And Your Buyers Blame the Picture

HAVE A SPECIAL SCORE ARRANGED

that Fits the Picture Perfectly. It will aid wonderfully in selling State Rights at the TRADE SHOWING

GEORGE W. BEYNON

505 Fifth Avenue, New York City

SPECIALIZES IN ARRANGING
SCORES THAT SELL PICTURES

Some of my most recent Musical Settings

"One Law for Both" Now Playing LYRIC THEATRE New York City
"Enlighten Thy Daughter," Ivan Film
"Pride of the Clan," Pickford-Artcraft
168 Paramount Releases and 3 Triangle

Before Presenting Your Next Production

Phone	Call	Write
Murray Hill 9876	505 Fifth Ave.	George W. Beynon

PAINFULLY DRAGGY "MOVIE" STUFF THAT NEVER ARRIVES

Earle Williams in

THE SOUL MASTER

Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... Marguerite Bertsch
AUTHOR ..... James Oliver Curwood
SCENARIO BY ..... Marguerite Bertsch
CAMERAMAN ..... Fred Held
AS A WHOLE.. Surface-action movie that wandered and dragged without ever registering
STORY ..... Fair one-reel of chessboard characters
DIRECTION.... Never impressed, with tons of superfluous continuity
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Acceptable; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS ..... Ordinary; very few good
CAMERA WORK ..... Just acceptable
STAR ..... Stood around through oodles of footage
SUPPORT ..... Ordinary
EXTERIORS ..... Acceptable; were very few
INTERIORS ..... Store set good; others ordinary
DETAIL ..... Tiresome
TIME ..... Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY no one will ever consider this entertaining. It drags and drags through hundreds of scenes that fail to get anywhere, and never at any time does the action register convincingly or really impress.

Mr. Williams, who is presented as the star, is allowed to stand around on the sidelines through most of the action, while a young girl has various ordinary experiences, with the result that if we didn't know that Mr. Williams was supposed to be the star we would certainly figure that they were trying to star this young girl, with Mr. Williams playing the character part of the father who wasn't to learn until the finish that he was the girl's father.

This was that time-honored situation of lonely soul who learned to love a girl, partly because she sassed him, with the result that he afterward discovered that she was in love with a poor but honest youth who also loved her.

He decided to help her get this youngster, and then we had the wicked willun entering into the action with both heroes saving the day when willun had, with the assistance of a wicked woman, trapped heroine in a house, alone. Then they gave us the terrible jolt of calmly informing us that the heroine was Mr. Williams' long-lost daughter.

There was nothing distinctive about the atmosphere of this nor the photography or lightings, and certainly no one would ever enthuse over the story or the playing of the characters. I can't figure that you should book this unless it is absolutely impossible for you to get something human, and it would seem to me that you would be justified in playing almost anything in preference to this colorless, ordinary, draggy "movie" that wanders through oodles of footage without ever arriving anywhere in particular.

In the supporting cast were Billie Billings, Julia Swayne Gordon, Denton Vane, Don Cameron, Mildred May, Annie Brody, Albert Howson, and Katherine Lewis.

The Box-Office Angle

If Earle Williams has them buffaloed in your section, you can possibly sneak this by with fair business, providing you go very easy on your advertising and feel that you can stand for the gang looking it over and leaving with a sort of wasted-time feeling.

Certainly this is a "weak sister," and if you are building your house reputation in the hopes of having them come regularly because you always have the best you can get, I would certainly dodge this—and, while I think of it, that is what every one of you should be doing. Build on the reputation of your theatre for having the best you can get rather than to depend upon the reputation of any producing company or star.

TREATMENT MADE ODD IDEA JUST ORDINARY MOVIE MELO

Shirley Mason in

THE TELL-TALE STEP

Edison—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR ..... Burton George
AUTHOR ..... William Addison Lathrop
CAMERAMAN ..... Charles Gilson
AS A WHOLE ..... Ordinary surface-action movie
STORY .. Blind girl caught murderer by recognizing walk
DIRECTION ..... Very ordinary as to treatment
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Varied decidedly; never distinctive LIGHTINGS ..... Generally too uniform; never artistic CAMERA WORK ..... Old-school methods; lacked distinctive touch
STAR ..... Acceptable; little to do but stand around
SUPPORT .... Mostly movie characters who acted much
EXTERIORS ..... Very ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Ordinary
DETAIL ..... Movie stuff
TIME ..... Fifty-nine minutes (5 parts)

THIS is only "movie" caliber about in a class with the one- and two-reel stuff that we used to get several years ago. The atmosphere was never distinctive, with most of the lightings, locations and general atmosphere decidedly ordinary throughout.

The story told of a blind girl who came from Italy with her father, who was promptly murdered by "the society" with the blind girl spending the rest of the footage listening for the step of the murderer.

She found him about the third reel, and he was arrested and then they took a little time to restore her sight by the well-known operation—performed principally in the movies—before they pulled the courtroom scene, when a number of extras were walked past the girl, who sat blindfolded and picked out the guilty man.

A little bit of suspense (?) was introduced by the district attorney showing interest in the Italian girl, which peeved his fiance, but of course on the finish the faithful Italian boy was happy with the Italian girl, while the district attorney made up with his true love.

There was no reason for putting this in five reels, so far as I can see, except that the producers felt that they might get it by on the program system. Certainly it would not have a chance in the world on open booking.

There was much brutality in evidence, with the father of the Italian boy playing Simon Legree on any and all occasions. Someone must've had a grudge against the cops also, because they showed the "bulls" giving the "wops" some sure-enough rough treatment.

In the early part of the offering a number of scenes were played in a studio set supposed to be a basement, with a street drop in the background, and in order to supply "atmosphere" the director had a number of extras walk back and forth in front of said drop to register action on the street. Since it was plainly visible that it was nothing but a drop, this attempted atmosphere will not make any impression, and, as a matter of fact, it detracted decidedly from the interest in the scenes as played in the foreground.

On the finish they pulled a lot of farm stuff in short flashes, with the two Italian youngsters enjoying life with the chickens, cows, sheep, pigs, etc.

In picking the supporting cast some one chose quite a chunk for hero's mother. She would be better in comedies.

Shirley Mason, through the McClure advertising, has been played up as a star, but she has never shown anything to justify such billing. In this she stands around most of the time with little to do.

Others in the cast were Guido Collucci, Pat O'Malley, Nellie Grant, Bigelow Cooper, Sally Crute, Charles Sutton, Jessie Stevens and Bob Huggins.

The Box Office Angle.

This is rather an odd little idea to base a story on, that of a blind girl listening for a murderer's step, and some audiences may overlook the technical errors in this and figure that it is fairly interesting as a surface melodrama. Many of the bad spots, such as the brutality registered and some of the overacting, will jar with most anyone, but if you figure this as a filler on an off-day, you may get by with it as well as you might with some of the other cheap program meller.

By all means don't figure this as a production that an intelligent community audience will like. The general caliber of the offering is only that of the one- or two-reel movies of some time ago.

If you cater to patrons who aren't so discriminating, the story idea of the blind girl searching for the tell-tale tread of the man who murdered her father may appeal.

The advertising McClure gave Shirley Mason may have given her a little value, although I would be careful and try to determine whether or not your fans like her. It doesn't pay, to my mind, to force this ordinary stuff upon discriminating fans, because by doing so you are only killing off your own game.

IMPRESSIVE PREACHMENT FORCEFULLY REGISTERED, BUT MANY MAY NOT CONSIDER IT ENTERTAINING—HAS BIG MOMENTS AND DRAGGY SPOTS

Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley in

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE

Lois Weber Productions—State Rights

DIRECTOR.....Lois Weber
AUTHORS.....Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley
CAMERAMAN.....Allen Siegler
AS A WHOLE.....Impressive preachment, but a bit too heavy to be considered entertainment by many
STORY.....Was argument regarding birth control, pro and con, showing various conditions, causes and effects, leaving subject open on finish
DIRECTION.....Made individual incidents quite powerful, but had draggy spots in between, with many exits and entrances
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally excellent, with some fine effects and other portions just straight lighting
LIGHTINGS.....Some effects great, but frequently too uniform
CAMERA WORK.....Generally excellent
STARS.....Impressive personalities
SUPPORT.....Very fine types, although occasionally they seemed a bit camera-conscious
EXTERIORS.....Rather well chosen for atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Some very fine, but others too much furniture and small space
DETAIL.....Too much preachment
TIME.....One hour and twenty-five minutes (6 parts)

IF you make it very clear to your fans that this is a birth-control discussion, so that they will have no alibi of having figured that they were going to be entertained, then I would say that this should register as an impressive offering.

Considered as entertainment, it is too preachy; because, even though some of the incidents are quite dramatic and we have quite a bit of kid stuff in the early part to provide relief, still from start to finish the construction hinges at all times upon the discussion pro and con of the problem of birth control, and I fear that you will find many who do not care to spend an evening considering this problem alone.

Lois Weber has given us the same power to individual incidents which has marked many of her big successes, but in this there are a number of draggy spots in between, and the entire seven reels doesn't hang together as smoothly as it should. There are some wonderful characters, the types having been carefully chosen, and for the most part they register very effectively. Occasionally a scene was marred by the fact that some of the characters seemed a bit camera-conscious, this being particularly noticeable because the story construction made the action little more than a discussion instead of the unfolding of a plot which builded to a climax.

Miss Weber and Mr. Smalley appeared in person, and both made their characters very impressive because they have poise, authority and repose.

Priscilla Dean was the surprise to me. I have seen Miss Dean in many smaller films, but never did she register as effectively as she did in this. In some scenes she was truly beautiful, due to the manner in which her hair was dressed and the lighting, and throughout the offering she made her part stand out.

Wedgwood Nowell, as Miss Dean's husband—this couple typifying the young folk who didn't like to discuss such problems as birth control—was very true to type.

Harry De More, who will be remembered from his work in "People vs. John Doe" (now called "God's Law"), and Evelyn Selbie, who played his wife, had the burden of the dramatic action to carry. They were both excellent in most of their scenes and registered very effectively.

The best set and lighting in the offering was the scene of the home of Miss Dean and Mr. Nowell, where the kiddies figured so prominently, and these scenes, whenever they cut into the story, stood out. The general atmosphere was very good, but occasionally the lighting was a bit too uniform. Throughout, however, the photography was excellent, and for the average audience the general impression as to the artistic excellence of the production will be very good.

The Box-Office Angle

If Birth Control is a live problem in your community—and it should be anywhere—I believe this production will get you money, but certainly I would be very careful to make it very clear to my patrons that this is a birth-control preachment and discussion, because, if you don't, many will say that they didn't care to spend an evening considering such propaganda.

In many ways this production follows the case of Mrs. Margaret Sanger, although at no time is her name mentioned. At the start we found several people disagreeing as to whether or not birth control is a good thing, and on the finish we found very little change in their attitude, despite the fact that the young couple, particularly, who refused to alter their opinion had been through some rather strenuous experiences.

Because of the fact that this is not an absolutely straight-to-the-point preachment along the one line, it loses its strength. Undoubtedly it was necessary to temper the discussion with varying opinions, since a film which preached the virtues of birth control would have very probably found opposition which would have kept it out of theatres.

Here in New York License Commissioner Bell attempted to stop this offering, but the Universal Company secured a temporary injunction and played out the engagement at the Broadway. The question as to whether or not you may have any difficulty on that point is worth considering.

The many successes with which Miss Weber has been identified of course add to the possibilities of your doing business with this, and it is rather interesting to note that her big success, "Where Are My Children?" was very much opposed to birth control, while this, in many ways, preaches for it when handled by the proper authorities.

ATMOSPHERE AND PERSONALITIES

Nell Craig in

THE TRUFFLERS

Essanay—K-E-S-E

DIRECTOR.....Fred E. Wright
AUTHOR.....Samuel Merwin
SCENARIO BY.....Fred E. Wright
AS A WHOLE.....Was different because of atmosphere and quite interesting, but rather incoherent and didn't register convincingly
STORY.....Basic plot idea seemed good, but treatment made it jumpy, heart appeal missing
DIRECTION.....Made atmosphere very interesting and gave good character touches, but permitted overplaying and failed to keep story human PHOTOGRAPHY....Generally good; some bits excellent, but some ordinary
LIGHTINGS....Not many effects; often too uniform, but generally satisfactory
CAMERA WORK.....Good; not distinctive
STAR.....Very pleasing; personality helps many scenes
SUPPORT.....Some excellent types, but frequently overplayed badly
EXTERIORS.....Acceptable; not unusual
INTERIORS.....Rather good atmosphere, but often seemed like sets
DETAIL.....Some good little touches
TIME.....Sixty-five minutes (5 parts)

FOR the most part, this was an atmosphere and character study working out a demonstration of the fact that a young girl should not attempt to defy all the conventions. Miss Craig is shown as the lady who decided to live the Bohemian life, and on the finish we discover that she is much happier as the mother of twins and another for good measure.

During the development of this thought they worked in the production of a moving picture, with many scenes of the studio and some sidelights on the financial troubles of independent companies, which will probably prove interesting to every one, even though there wasn't much big dramatic interest in the action.

Frequently we had philosophical titles arguing the points at issue in reference to the conventions, and much footage was devoted to the Bohemian atmosphere and the development of the characters, there being some humorous little touches worked in to show what foolish children some "nuts" are.

Unfortunately, the director permitted a lot of overplaying. Richard Travers, Sydney Ainsworth and Ernest Maupain have done some very good work and in parts of this they were excellent, but occasionally they pulled some "acting" that crabbed the performance and kept the scenes from being convincing. I feel quite sure that the director was at fault in this, because we found many of the extras acting—oh, quite some!

INTEREST DESPITE OVERPLAYING

Despite the fact that this overplaying keeps the offering from being as human as it should have been, the general trend of the production was decidedly interesting, and certainly it is different. On that account I believe the average audience will not only accept this, but they will think that it is better than the average, because it at least takes them away from the routine surface melodrama. It is decidedly different in spots.

The Box-Office Angle

Considering the fact that this production has such a different atmosphere with Nell Craig, who is a very charming girl, starred, and three such well-known Essanay players as Messrs. Travers, Ainsworth and Maupain in support, I would think that this should register anywhere as a very satisfactory offering despite the fact that the story construction is a bit incoherent with overplaying marring the possibilities of this registering at the heart as it might have.

I think you can stir up some interest in this if you will start a little teaser campaign along this line: "What is a truffler? Would you like to be a truffler?" Run that for several days and let them dig around and find out what "truffler" is, and then talk particularly about this offering having such a different atmosphere with unusual characters who are unlike the ordinary movie melodrama heroes, sheroes, vampires and seducers.

The fact that the plot centers around the production of a motion picture, in which Nell Craig is appearing as Eve, should also arouse some interest, particularly if you will display a few of the still pictures registering the costume in which she posed.

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

SERIAL STYLE SURFACE MELO ONLY FAIRLY INTERESTING

Mollie King in

BLIND MAN'S LUCK

Astra—Pathe

DIRECTOR	George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR	George Brackett Seitz
CAMERAMAN	Arthur C. Miller
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR	Eric von Stroheim
AS A WHOLE	Ordinary action melo fast, but didn't convince
STORY	Written in serial tempo with no new idea
DIRECTION	Kept things moving ,but failed to register human note
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied decidedly; occasionally good; frequently poor
LIGHTINGS	A few very good; generally ordinary and too uniform
CAMERA WORK	Varied
STAR	Quite easy to look at
SUPPORT	Acceptable melo characterizations
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	A few very good; wreck stuff registered
DETAIL	Convenient serial construction
TIME	Fifty-three minutes (5 parts)

WHILE the average audience which accepts wild-eyed surface melodrama as it comes without sitting back to analyze to any extent, may figure that this is fairly interesting and gets by as something to kill time, I can't feel that the intelligent community audiences will approve of this, because it savors too much of the cheap serials which swing along at bing-bang speed without at any time seeming human or convincing as honest-to-goodness real life.

The story idea of this hinges on our well-known situation of the train wreck which made it possible for two girls to change identity, and in this instance we found that the hero had married a "chicken" picked up on the street, while he was stewed, with the result that our shero, escaping from being suspected of smuggling, was on the same train, and after the smoke cleared away she proclaimed herself the wife of the stewed hero, so that the detective couldn't arrest her as a smuggler.

This led to complications, with the hero's family insisting upon a religious ceremony, and then the balance of the film was spent reconciling hero's father with hero's accidental wife, and his mother planting the little baby in father's path so that he would learn to love the child, with the result that he eventually forgave hero.

The general atmosphere of this was certainly not distinctive nor artistic, because it seemed to be moving too fast, with every one aiming for speed rather than the heart-interest angle. Occasionally they gave us some very good lightings, but to offset these there were many poor lightings and many scenes that were lighted too uniformly, so that the net result was a rather mixed impression which didn't register any too favorably.

Mollie King, as the shero, wore many gowns and occasionally adopted the L. & B. H. style, which made her an attractive shero and one quite easy to look at.

Earle Foxe, as the hero who was so gloriously stewed in the early part of the offering and afterward had little to do but wait for father's forgiveness, was quite satisfactory. In a number of scenes he helped the situation by little bits of business which registered with his happy-go-lucky character.

Others in the cast were William Riley Hatch and Geffie Tilbury.

The Box-Office Angle

Figuring this as an ordinary program offering aimed principally to get by as satisfactory without stirring any unusual excitement, this may sneak through. It appeals rather as a serial than as a feature, because the action is of the same type as we have come to expect from the serial melodramas; and while this may be interesting to many, I feel that the intelligent community audience rather resents this sort of production, preferring decidedly to see something which is a bit more human.

I wouldn't tell them about the story of this, because this thing of changing identity after a wreck has been done five or six times in the last two or three months, and when old friends are brought back so frequently in such a short space of time, many feel that they are being imposed upon.

You might ask a question something like this: "What would you do if you woke up in a wreck on a train headed for Niagara Falls and a young woman introduced herself as your wife, with a marriage license to prove it? See 'Blind Man's Luck.'"

REMEMBER!

All back numbers in stock, and we can complete your files---but don't forget that BINDER!

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

WM. DESMOND TAYLOR
DIRECTOR
Morosco and Pallas-Paramount.

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Ithaca New York.

JAMES YOUNG

AUTHORS

ANTHONY KELLY

EVE UNSELL
Famous Players—Lasky Corp.

CHARLES E. WHITTAKER
Adaptor of "THE WHIP" and
"THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN"
Address—Broadway Central Hotel.

EDWARD WARREN
Producer of
STATE RIGHTS FILMS
1482 Broadway, New York City

YOU'LL REALIZE WHAT A BINDER
REALLY MEANS WHEN YOU CAN'T
FIND THAT "WID'S"

IN FORM THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM — A MAGAZINE — IN FACT A SERVICE INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

WID'S

Always Independent Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1917. NO. 23 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

DELIGHTFULLY HUMAN KID FUN AND PATHOS DIGNIFIED BY LINCOLN HISTORICAL CONNECTION. WONDERFUL IF PROPERLY EXPLOITED

Benjamin Chapin in

THE LINCOLN CYCLE

Charter Features Corp.—State Rights

Four two-reel subjects:
"My Mother," "My Father," "Myself" and "The Call to Arms"

PRODUCED UNDER SUPERVISION OF ..... Benjamin Chapin
DIRECTOR ..... John M. Stahl
SCENARIO BY ..... Benjamin Chapin
PHOTOGRAPHED BY ..... J. Roy Hunt, Walter Blakeley, Messrs. Freyer and Fishback
AS A WHOLE ..... Exceptionally human, entertaining kid stuff dignified by Lincoln historical connection
STORIES ..... Little human incidents from life of Lincoln
DIRECTION ..... Some technical errors, but registered at heart
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good; at times splendid; sometimes ordinary LIGHTINGS ..... A few fine bits, but generally too uniform
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied decidedly from excellent to fair
STAR ..... Very impressive, human and easy of manner
SUPPORT ..... Boy Lincoln wonderful; other kids excellent; grown-ups not so good EXTERIORS ..... Some beautiful cloud effects and some fine shots; others ordinary INTERIORS ..... Generally very good as atmosphere, although bad back drops in a few studio exteriors shots
DETAIL ..... A few slips, but will get by TIME ..... One hour and forty minutes (8 reels)

BENJAMIN CHAPIN has certainly made good on the screen. He has come along at what is certainly the psychological moment for the sort of films he has been working on for the past two or three years, because never before has the fan and exhibitor been so anxious to secure truly human productions. Of course, in addition to this market angle, Mr. Chapin gets the benefit of the present sweep of patriotism which makes the Lincoln connection an exceptional box office value.

These pictures would have been most entertaining and satisfactory, as well as historically interesting at any time, but they could not have been released at a more favorable time.

Much will depend upon how these productions are handled as to just how much can be realized on them. I am afraid that there is the possibility that many will fight shy of just a Lincoln cycle if they have a hunch that they are going to see a lot of dry historical stuff, and it will be of supreme importance to have these intelligently exploited so that the public, upon whose support the success of the productions depend, shall have a true conception of what the films are.

As a matter of fact, these four two-reel offerings are human-interest kid stories played for the most part by kids, with all the delightful human interest that centers around well handled kid situations, with the additional advantage in this instance of having every situation dignified by the fact that we constantly realize that these situations are presenting chapters from the life of one of America's greatest men. Working along these lines, it would seem that Benjamin Chapin has material enough to keep on producing films for a year or more without ever running out of human, entertaining situations.

While these offerings had the touch of dignity all the way, they were about fifty per cent. comedy, with some very, very effective bits of pathos perfectly timed and nicely played, dropping in at regular intervals to mingle the tears with the smiles. A number of the more important bits of pathos were exceptionally well handled, and I believe that they will "get to" most any audience. Particularly will these situations appeal in small towns, where the people appreciate more than they do in the city the importance of trifles in life.

In the present form this is presented as an eight-reel feature. I believe that the company made a mistake in offering this in eight reels, because, despite the fact that there is some truly delightful comedy and some very effective pathos packed into the eight reels, the footage is a little long and the average audience, accustomed to a one-hour feature, will very possibly become a little uneasy in their seats when the fourth two-reeler starts. It would be much better, to my mind, if this is to be played as a feature offering, to take the four two-reelers as they stand now and reduce them in footage to something under 7,000 feet, which would mean that the meat of all four could be retained without sacrificing any valuable situation or incident.

If played as two-reelers, any one of the four would stand just as it is, or they could be played two together, or even three together as they stand, very successfully, but eight reels seem a bit too much.

It looks like the conditions under which these productions were made had varied quite a lot, because we found some very fine camera work and some that was just "good." We also found a decided variance in technique. At times the photography and lightings were exceptionally artistic, and at other times the lightings were too uniform. In a number of instances the producer had unfortunately seen fit to use back drops, with a number of studio exteriors showing back drops that could easily have been taken without the drop being visible. Any ordinary fan today knows a back drop the minute it looms up, and they resent their use.

There were a few little errors in detail, such as the appearance of the White House, in one or two shots, and modern awnings. These points, however, will all be overlooked by any audience because of their appreciation of the heart-interest moments. Some of the titles were excellent, but a few missed rather badly.

Occasionally we found scenes where close-ups would have helped very decidedly and it was noticeable that the adult extras in many of the situations were decidedly less effective as actors than the kids who figured in most of the footage.

Mr. Chapin, as Abraham Lincoln, seemed almost like a reincarnation, figured from what we have all been taught to think of the martyred president. His features are strikingly similar to those of Lincoln, and he has gone to the trouble of growing a beard exactly like that worn by the president. His portrayal of the part of Lincoln's father was also very well handled.

Next to Mr. Chapin comes Charlie Jackson, who played the part of Lincoln as the boy. This youngster had many very important scenes to play and his work stood out as strongly as that of any boy I have ever seen on the screen. The producer of these films is also deserving of real credit for having kept the tempo of the heart-interest scenes moving at just the proper speed to make them truly effective.

Madeline Claire, as the mother of Abraham Lincoln —Nancy Hanks—was very pleasing, she having features suggesting unusual intelligence, and it was easy to understand how Lincoln could be a great man with such a mother.

John Stafford, as the neighbor willun Carter, was acceptable except for an awful beard. His make-up was inexcusable, and since many of the titles referred to the fact that Carter dyed his whiskers, it was truly too bad that the producer didn't have him take more care in his make-up.

Most of the other truly important characters were kids, and these youngsters were very good.

The Box Office Angle.

Personally, I believe that kid stuff is the most popular sort of screen entertainment that can be provided I think this is particularly true when you have entertaining kid stuff that is placed in a human setting which makes it all seem real, with something, such as the Lincoln historical suggestion in this case, to dignify the action and make the pathetic moments impressive.

As far as worrying about this pleasing your fans is concerned, I can tell you that it should register with a bang anywhere and make people talk to the extent of having them recommend these productions to their friends, providing you don't give them too big a dose at once. I think eight reels is too much. But if these eight reels were put in 6,500 feet they would be a wonderful feature, and in any shorter length they are a very, very safe bet.

You must be very careful, however, if you are going to play this, to be sure that your fans understand that these are human little stories from Lincoln's life, for the most part played by kids. In other words, make it plain that these films are not dry historical biography but kid-stuff anecdotes with the added interest of being true to life and having to do with one of the greatest Americans.

The name "Benjamin Chapin in The Lincoln Cycle" may not pull a lot of business, but if you know how to handle printers' ink you can get business on this by diagramming just what these films are.

GYPSY ATMOSPHERE HELPS MELO THAT GETS FUNNY AT TIMES

Ethel Barrymore in

THE CALL OF HER PEOPLE

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR	John W. Noble
AUTHOR	Edward Sheldon
SCENARIO BY	June Mathis
CAMERAMAN	Herbert O. Carleton
AS A WHOLE	Held rather well until final rescue, which got big laugh
STORY	Gypsy meller that over-reached and became funny
DIRECTION	Held interest generally, with good atmosphere, but overstepped at times, losing balance
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS	Some excellent; others very ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied decidedly
STAR	Good in repose, but fails to impress in dramatic moments
SUPPORT	Gypsies good; others ordinary
EXTERIORS	Some beautiful shots; some just ordinary
INTERIORS	Good; not exceptional
DETAIL	Acceptable
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH the early titles of this seemed to be burdened with explanatory facts, the gypsy atmosphere held the offering rather well for the first few reels, with the action seeming quite interesting. As the plot developed, however, we got into melodramatic situations which became more melo as they went along, until the final climax when Miss Barrymore chased out of the house in a wedding gown with a long veil trailing behind, to run to the rescue of her gypsy lover. This was overstepping just enough to lose the balance and make it all seem funny. When Miss Barrymore in this bridal costume rode up on a horse to face the mob of arm-waving extras who was about to hang her lover, and he, with a wild leap jumped to the back of her horse and rode away, the audience, with one spontaneous gulp, laughed heartily.

Coming back from this laugh to the finish, after a lapse of six years, which showed Miss Barrymore happy as the wife of her gypsy lover, even though she was in rags, we got a touch registering the underlying thought of the story, which eased off the melodrama and helped the offering quite a lot.

Right off the bat we got a battle between a couple of gypsies who both wanted to win the fair Ethel, and we knew immediately that this was to be one of those melodramatic things with many fights and much action.

The interest was held fairly well, however, until we reached the climax mentioned above, when the whole story received a jolt which will make most anyone say in speaking of it, "Some wild meller for a star like Miss Barrymore to be in!"

The plot hinged entirely upon the thought that a gypsy could never leave gypsy folk and be satisfied.

We were told early in the offering that years before a gypsy girl had run away and married a man not a gypsy, only to leave him eventually because he would not allow her to do the little superstitious things, such as telling fortunes, which are part of a gypsy's life. We were led to believe that Miss Barrymore was this woman's daughter and she was returned to the man thought to be her father, by the gypsy chief, despite the fact that his son wanted to marry her.

The chief's son and Miss Barrymore plighted their troth gypsy fashion, but the girl was taken away and forced to live as her new-found father wished, with the gypsy chief keeping his son under guard so that he couldn't return to claim his bride.

Later the chief died and we found that Miss Barrymore was not the daughter of the man to whom she had been given, but that the chief had placed her in his home as revenge for this man having stolen a sweetheart of years before. This sent the gypsy chief's son hurrying back to claim his bride and he arrived when she was preparing to marry a man chosen by the man who thought he was her father.

When the gypsies arrived near the home and pitched their tents in the old camp, the new chief overheard a man insult the woman he loved in a saloon, with the result that he stabbed the insulter to death as the finish of a fight. The victim proved to be the sheriff's brother and a mob of several hundred started after the gypsy, with the director developing a rather good melodramatic tempo in this chase effect up to the point where the gypsy was allowed to escape from the house where the wedding was about to be performed, with Miss Barrymore deciding to follow him instead of remaining to be married.

If Miss Barrymore had taken off her veil or changed her costume before leaving the house, these final situations might have been saved; but it was truly funny to see her rushing through the woods with this long veil trailing in the wind. The public find it hard to accept Miss Barrymore in a melodramatic story under any circumstances, and when they see her riding on horseback in such an outfit it is bound to appeal to their sense of humor.

The photography and lightings varied very decidedly, and there was certainly a lack of close-ups which might have helped many of the important situations.

The mob used in the final scenes behaved rather well in some shots, but occasionally they insisted upon waving their arms and performing like most groups of extras will do when turned loose before a camera.

Robert Whittier, as the young gypsy chief, had all the necessary dash and spirit to make this part stand out.

Frank Montgomery, as his father, was a vicious old gypsy willun, and the other gypsy types were quite satisfactory. In the cast were William Manderville, Mrs. Allan Walker, Helen Arnold and Hugh Jeffrey. William Davidson was the man chosen to marry Miss Barrymore. He had little to do.

The Box Office Angle.

Ethel Barrymore is probably good for business, no matter what she appears in, and this is interesting if for no other reason than the fact that the gypsy detail has been rather well handled. At times the melodrama is effective, and, considered as a whole, your audiences will probably pass this by as satisfactory without kicking too severely, even though they do get a few very good laughs out of certain spots.

I think you can safely play it because the final scene takes the curse off of the laughs which come at the end of the melodramatic sequence, and there is a thought behind it all which is fairly interesting.

In billing this I would play up this thought which runs through the entire story: "Can a gypsy resist THE CALL OF HER PEOPLE?" "Have you ever felt the desire to live in the open? Possibly you have some gypsy blood. See Ethel Barrymore in 'The Call of Her People.'" "Do you know about those wonderful people, the gypsies, who are happy despite their rags and crude ways of living? See Ethel Barrymore in 'The Call of Her People.'"

INTERESTING STUFF BECAME VERY WILD. STARS HELPED IT

Antonio Moreno and Mary Anderson in

THE MAGNIFICENT MEDDLER

Vitagraph

DIRECTOR	William Wolbert
AUTHOR	Lawrence T. McCloskey
CAMERAMAN	Reginald E. Lyons
AS A WHOLE	Interesting at start, but became very wild meller like Keystone Komedy
STORY	Newspaperman reforming Western town, attacking heroine's father stuff
DIRECTION	Permitted meller to run wild, making everyone act all over the place
PHOTOGRAPHY	Varied from good to poor
LIGHTINGS	Some good; many poor; others ordinary
CAMERA WORK	Varied decidedly; never distinctive
STARS	Real personalities, but made to act
SUPPORT	Routine Western meller types
EXTERIORS	A few very good; generally ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Some poor bits, but generally acceptable
TIME	Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

ALTHOUGH the story was the same old junk of young Eastern reformer running a newspaper in a wild Western town with the shero's father a political boss who he had to attack, the first few reels ran along very nicely with the action interesting and the personalities of Tony Moreno and Mary Anderson helping decidedly. Then came the sweep of melodrama which carried this into the Keystone burlesque class, with the last reel particularly wild. Because of this finish I am afraid that most fans will vote thumbs down on this one.

Tony Moreno is a very likeable young chap. He does his best to save the day all the way, but fights against awful odds. Mary Anderson is a very pretty youngster who can ride a horse as if she liked it, but unfortunately her work in this was a continuous procession of being rescued or rescuing someone else, with many occasions where she had to fall into someone's arms at the finish of an incident. She seemed to be acting most of the time, and since everyone else was suffering from the same trouble, I'd say that the director is probably at fault. Figured from her beauty on the screen and her ability to ride, with occasional flashes of personality, I would say that Miss Anderson properly handled should be a very good bet. She has done some good things in the old Vitagraph days here in the East when she played small parts, and if given the right opportunity I should think that she could register very satisfactorily.

The early incidents of the reformer's battle to stir things up in the Western town brought out some good comedy stuff and several little scenes that will go over nicely. But when they commenced to pull the wild-eyed stuff they kept it going so fast that most anyone will feel like letting it run without caring what happens.

Towards the end they had battles galore with roughneck Westerners, Mexicans and cowboys from a neighboring town all mixing it up fast and furious. They burned up the newspaperman's shop and of course the shero was locked in, so that she had to escape through a window.

A few of the scenes during the fight outside the burning cabin were rather good as night photography, but were funny otherwise because most of the fighters were shooting right up in the air. The hero pulled the stuff of climbing up in a tree to escape and then dropping on the back of the willun as he rode past, and all the rest of the routine wild meller stuff, so that you can know just about what this was.

They even went so far as to pull the old stuff of riding in front of a freight train to cut off the pursuing horseman, and the central dramatic situation of this entire plot was a scene where the shero's father collected his share of the blood money from the man who ran his gambling house in front of an open window without turning around to see if anyone was looking, this being obligingly done so that the newspaperman could take a flashlight photograph of the passing of the coin. It was this photograph, which was converted into a cut with lightnings-like rapidity by the newspaperman's cartoonist, that caused all the trouble. With the crude equipment which they had in this Western frontier town, these enterprising publishers managed to print several copies of this cut showing the passing of the coin while the hero was still leading the angry mob a wild chase through the woods. Truly, the special extras on the baseball game in the cities had nothing on these newspaper fellers for speed!

In the supporting cast were Leon D. Kent and Otto Lederer.

The Box Office Angle.

If your fans accept the wild melodramatic stuff, this may be a good bet for you because it starts off rather well and only goes off at a tangent on the finish.

Tony Moreno and Mary Anderson have pleasing personalities, and it is possible that their work will put your fans in a sufficiently good humor that when the wild stuff comes it will be accepted without any feeling of genuine resentment. Since Keystone Komedy folk have been burlesquing this melodrama, it is pretty hard for the old-time producers to get away with this stuff any more, but some of them evidently have not seen Mack Sennett's efforts and still feel that these things are taken seriously.

If you have to deliver real productions all the time to your fans, I believe it would be advisable to hunt for something more human. If you feel that you can afford to play wild meller, I would go after this along these lines:

"Can you imagine what would happen if a young newspaperman stepped into a frontier town and told them that they were all wrong and had to get right? Well, you should see what Tony Moreno stirred up in the town of Horizon as 'The Magnificent Meddler.' Truly, it is some wild doings!"

If you will take that tack in your advertising it will serve as an alibi for the extreme meller in the picture without injuring the possiblity of your doing business on it. If you can get your people to see the humorous angle of this, it may go over very satisfactorily.

DELIGHTFUL KIDDIE HANDICAPPED BY WEAK PRODUCTION

Baby Marie Osborne in

WHEN BABY FORGOT

Lasalida Film—Pathe

DIRECTOR	W. Eugene Moore
AUTHOR	Harrish Ingraham
AS A WHOLE	Had a few bright spots, but generally very ordinary
STORY	Elementary, with too much emphasis on husband and wife trouble
DIRECTION	Rather crude; didn't develop kid stuff sufficiently
PHOTOGRAPHY	Ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform; never really good
CAMERA WORK	Ordinary
STAR	A clever kiddie; handicapped in this
SUPPORT	Some funny coons; others ordinary
EXTERIORS	One or two big houses which certainly didn't match interiors
INTERIORS	Rather ordinary
DETAIL	Not good
TIME	Fifty-two minutes (5 parts)

LITTLE Mary Sunshine is a very clever kiddie, but she is going to slip if she is not given better material to work with than such offerings as this. In other words, I think the fans enjoy her, but if they come to understand that it is necessary to sit through a lot of ordinary junk in order to see her do a few cute tricks they will probably be inclined to pass her productions by

There were several bright spots in this where Baby Marie did some cute stunts, but there were nothing near as many as there should have been. About the only really funny spots were the two bits where she took the little coon to Sunday school and then afterwards went to a nigger church.

The plot centered around the fact that her father and mother fought after slowly drifting apart, with the separation placing Baby Marie with her father. She had been taught a little prayer by her mother and when she couldn't remember this it worried her so that after trying eventually to find it in Sunday school and the nigger church, she was taken down with a fever.

Of course, they finally sent for mother, and while mother taught the kiddie the prayer again, father came in and said "Janet," and they got to the clutch.

The general atmosphere of this was very ordinary, and they pulled some society stuff that was truly awful. The extras used in what were supposed to be the best of sassiety surely didn't get more than a dollar and a half a day—and if they did, they cheated! Their clothes looked like they were undoubtedly their own and the way they danced would have been good for comedy except for the fact that they were supposed to be at a classy tango tea and this wasn't a Keystone. Why producers who are supposed to be intelligent will allow their directors to get away with this sort of thing is more than I can figure.

The exteriors of the home shown as that in which the tango tea was being held would give the suggestion of real wealth, and yet we found sassiety inside that was truly funny. They pulled other fool things in this, such as sending a butler out on the street to ask a roughneck crook if he knew a child's prayer, and then, not being satisfied with this, they had him ask a newsboy, inserting tough titles in the hope of getting a laugh. They may get a laugh, but it won't be "with" it.

There was much footage devoted to getting in and out of automobiles and walking up to the entrances of some classy looking home, which is easy enough to take in Los Angeles, but is mighty hard on the dispositions of the fans who have to sit through it.

In one place where wifey went out with Lord Eustace —which could've easily been Lord Useless—he being the "other man," hubby stood behind a bush to watch them go away, and then we had a title which said: "After several hours of anxious waiting . . . " and the director shot Lord Useless and the wife right back into the scene in an automobile, and there was hubby still standing back of the bush. He must've been SOME patient gink!

In the cast were Margaret Nichols, Fred Newburg and Lee Hill.

The Box Office Angle.

Because Baby Marie Osborne is in this, you can probably get by with it very nicely, since she has had other productions which were not what they should have been and still have gotten over—although, really, I can't remember of one in which she has had so little genuine opportunity as in this.

I would go very light about saying anything regarding the production itself, depending for the most part upon the popularity of this kiddie to pull you some business with those who will forgive most anything else in the picture for an opportunity to see this youngster. It is certainly a shame that better stories, better atmosphere and better direction aren't given to this little girl, because with the proper opportunities she would register big.

This had bad spots, but it also has a few bright spots, and for a moderate priced feature it is decidedly better than some cheap melodrama. Just be careful to stay away from promising anything definite about the production itself and tell them that it is a clean little story about the baby who couldn't remember her evening prayer, with the result that she got her parents into rather interesting complications because of this fact.

VERY HUMAN CHARACTERIZATIONS WELL DONE IN FINE ATMOSPHERE

Enid Bennett in

THE GLORY GIRL

Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR	R. William Neill
AUTHOR	C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN	L. Guy Wilkie
AS A WHOLE	Delightfully human combination of pathos and comedy relief, with beautiful, appealing star dominating
STORY	Simple little characterization study, but human and effective
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive atmosphere, fine little touches and good characterizations
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent; many very distinctive bits
LIGHTINGS	Some wonderful bits; generally good
CAMERA WORK	Very good
STAR	A big winner; beautiful and appealing
SUPPORT	Some excellent types; grandfather great
EXTERIORS	Good small-town atmosphere
INTERIORS	Very good; some fine lightings
DETAIL	Many fine little touches
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

ENID BENNETT has had a chance to sort of get acquainted with your fans in her previous productions, so that I believe you can go to this big and feature her heavily. Certainly she is truly beautiful and very appealing in this story because the plot is a human little characterization study with her presented as the daughter of an old soldier who disgraced her by getting drunk on Decoration Day, with the result that she planned to get into the one saloon in town will be served with a drink so that the saloonkeeper would be breaking the law, which would mean that the saloon could be forced out of town.

The atmosphere of this offering was excellent, there being many fine types with scores of little human touches that will appeal principally because they were things which any one might have done at some time.

Throughout the offering we had many close-ups of Miss Bennett, and the director had undoubtedly taken great care in lighting her, because these close-ups were certainly effective. We also had many bits of distinctive, unusual lighting which gave an atmosphere of class to the offering, lifting it out of the ordinary rut and marking it as a production very much worth while. There were many bits of pathos and some good action in spots, so that while the story was elementary it was big in a way because it registered at the heart very frequently.

Walt Whitman, as Miss Bennett's grandfather, gave a great performance. He will be remembered for his work in this part for a long time to come.

Darrell Foss, as the sporty son of the saloonkeeper, was an excellent type, nicely handled, and, in fact, the entire cast were particularly well chosen as types and held well in control.

In the cast were William Waters, Margery Bennett and J. P. Lockney.

The Box Office Angle.

I would say that Enid Bennett is one of the big discoveries of the year. She is beautiful, has personality and expression, and can troupe when necessary. This production will register anywhere as very much worth while because it appeals at the heart and has many human touches that will go over with a bang.

I believe that film fans anywhere prefer most decidedly stories which have to do with characters that seem real and human and this is one of that type which continues to convince despite the fact that there is a touch of melodramatic action here and there.

I should say that this is an offering which has a splendid chance of satisfying most every one, and they are rare enough these days. Go to it big!

The title can be tied up in a way with the present wave of patriotism, since in this Miss Bennett appears as a girl named after Old Glory by the Civil War veteran, her grandfather. The Memorial Day parade in which the veterans march along the street is sure-fire stuff for applause anywhere, in the present situation, and I would tie this up with your local conditions by inviting all of the members of the G. A. R. to see the production. It will probably hit some of them pretty hard, because a lot of these old boys have to fight that enemy booze; but the character of the grandfather who drinks has been handled so nicely that no one can object, and the blame is plainly placed upon the saloonkeeper, who, as a matter of fact, in most similar cases is chiefly responsible.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD

Yorke--Metro

EXCELLENT TREATMENT AND PERSONALITIES LIFT AWFUL MELLER PLOT

Sessue Hayakawa in

THE JAGUAR'S CLAWS

Lasky—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Marshall A. Neilan
AUTHORS	William M. McCoy and Roswell Dague
SCENARIO BY	Beatrice C. De Mille and Leighton Osmun
CAMERAMAN	Walter Stradling
AS A WHOLE	Wild blood-and-thunder "To the rescue, boys!" meller beautifully treated with real personalities in cast
STORY	Awful
DIRECTION	Gave hackneyed, ancient situations delightful treatment and made atmosphere distinctive
PHOTOGRAPHY	Excellent
LIGHTINGS	Many splendid bits; generally very pleasing
CAMERA WORK	Very fine
STAR	Forceful personality; impressive willun
SUPPORT	Personalities that stood out
EXTERIORS	Many fine shots; well lighted
INTERIORS	Good; fitted atmosphere
DETAIL	Some good bits
TIME	Fifty-seven minutes (5 parts)

THEY blame this on to four authors. I can't figure why this should be done, unless they were trying to save it or spread the blame so that no one would be burned at the stake for putting it through as a story for a Lasky production.

Of all the ordinary, old-time, obvious "Bring the boys to the rescue!" rip-and-tear mellerdrammers that I have seen in many, many weeks, this was the limit! Producer Marshall Neilan, by intelligent treatment and with the assistance of such personalities as Sessue Hayakawa, Tom Moore, Fritzi Brunette, Marjorie Daw and Mabel Van Buren, made this rather interesting as a study of what the director and players might have done with a good story, but all of their efforts couldn't lift this melodramatic junk out of the rut of time-honored mediocrity, considered technically as a production.

Can you imagine in this day handing a capable director like Mr. Neilan and such a cast, a story which was entirely based upon the old stuff of the Mexican bandit who captured the women folk of the young mine manager, with hero riding into the bandit's stronghold while his friend went to the border to bring the troops to the rescue. There was nothing in the way of suspense at any time and the only possible method of redeeming this sort of bing-bang junk is to have some suspense.

The messenger started for the border just as soon as the women were kidnapped, so that of course we knew that the troops would arrive on time. In order to make this possible the authors decided upon the pitifully convenient thought of having the wild bandit allow the manager to think over night about whether he wanted to take his wife or his sister home with him, leaving one or the other with the bandit. This calm granting of time for a choice of course provided the necessary hours for the troops to arrive. And they expect intelligent fans to consider this sort of story seriously!

Lurking in the offing there had been a woman who had been kidnapped early in the story to prove the bandit's brutality, and she put a knife into the willun just before the troops arrived, so that when they got there they were not needed because all of the henchmen had previously departed when news came of the troops' approach.

Mickey Neilan has demonstrated that he can take ordinary stories and make them into rather interesting productions by treatment, but just because he can do this it seems to me that it is unfair to take advantage of him and keep him working at that rather strenuous job. Why not give him a good story for a change?

There were many fine exteriors shots, with some of them so good that they will probably bring applause. The general atmosphere was excellent and the tempo was very good.

Hayakawa is a distinctive personality and he made the Mexican bandit willun all that could be desired.

I believe, however, that Tom Moore as the hero managed to make his part stand out so that it was equally as big as that of Hayakawa, and certainly that winning smile of this Irish lad will win the hearts of all the girls, and most of the men folk, too.

Fritzi Brunette gave a very pleasing performance as the mine manager's wife, and Marjorie Daw and Tom Forman were very satisfactory as the juvenile lovers.

Mabel Van Buren had a few good little scenes as Hayakawa's favorite.

The man doing the part of Hayakawa's lieutenant, and the girl who played the outraged bride were both excellent, making their parts stand out by their playing.

Others in the cast were Horace B. Carpenter and Lucien Littlefield.

The Box Office Angle.

Because of the manner in which Mr. Neilan has produced this and the fact that he has a splendid cast, it is possible that the swinging tempo of the old "Boys, to the rescue!" hokum may get over even though your fans smile up their sleeves all the time and refuse to be stirred very much.

As Paramount productions go, I'd say that this can be counted good, and even better than the average, despite the very crude melodramatic bing-bang story, because the general effect at least lifts it out of the ordinary rut and puts it over as a well-done meller.

With the present international situation, the scenes of the American rescuing party riding across the Mexican border will undoubtedly bring applause, and sometimes the good old hokum when exceptionally well handled—as in this case—gets over better than good stories that have been maltreated in the producing.

In advertising this I would play up Tom Moore as much as Hayakawa and would particularly mention him in everything prepared by yourself, since Hayakawa is starred alone by the producers. I believe Mr. Moore has as large a following as the Jap, and probably larger, when it comes to the sympathetic hero-worship fans.

Make it clear that the story is a melodrama dealing with the brutality of a Mexican bandit, and in a way that should prove an alibi when they come out and tell you it's pretty wild. I believe the producer's efforts have saved the situation sufficiently to make anyone admit that at least it was very well done.

Romaine Fielding

THE LAMBS

[Engaged]

TREATMENT, HUMAN BITS AND LIGHTINGS LIFT SIMPLE STORY

Vivian Martin in

GIVING BECKY A CHANCE

Morosco—Paramount

DIRECTOR	Howard Estabrook
AUTHOR	Lois Zellner
SCENARIO BY	Edith Kennedy
CAMERAMAN	James Van Trees
AS A WHOLE	Treatment, lightings and human touches make ordinary story entertaining
STORY	Elementary and convenient, but provided some human bits
DIRECTION	Gave distinctive atmosphere and made action convince by human handling
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally excellent; some very fine bits
LIGHTINGS	Generally very good; night stuff exceptionally good
CAMERA WORK	Varied from fine to fair
STAR	Appealing personality in character she fitted
SUPPORT	Several excellent; all very satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Generally very good; a few fine
INTERIORS	Very good atmosphere; several excellent shots
DETAIL	Many splendid bits
TIME	Sixty-one minutes (5 parts)

WHILE the story of this is far from being what anyone might call big, it has some human moments and the director has intelligently treated the development of the action so that it registered as human and convincing n an atmosphere that lifted the entire offering because of its distinction. The lighting was particularly good n many of the scenes, there being some exceptionally effective night stuff with automobiles, some of these scenes being taken to register a car drawing up in front of a home or store, in a manner which was particularly striking as to effect.

The plot was decidedly simple and had to do with the adventures of a spoiled young girl whose parents saved and scrimped so that she might be sent to boarding school, with the result that when she arrived there a lie just naturally slipped out and she allowed everyone to think that she was an heiress.

As a result of this deception she was invited for the Christmas holidays to the home of a wealthy girl and there she met the girl's brother, a young doctor. Of course, they fell in love and then the doctor just happened to be in a drugstore of her home town when word came that her mother was ill, with the result that he was at the house caring for mother when daughter arrived the next day.

The mother's illness having been caused by her worry and overwork, the doctor of course said some mean things to the selfish little lady who had permitted her parents to slave for her, and then we found that father needed money to keep his business going and the near-willun of the story needed a dancer for his father's soon-to-be-started cabaret, and so heroine signed up as the masked dancer in order to earn the five hundred dollars needed by father, because she had spent all of his money going to boarding school.

After appearing as the masked dancer to earn the money, the near-willun became truly willunous as he was driving her home, since he demanded a kiss before he would give up the check. This resulted in a clash between hero and willun, while shero picked up the check and chased in to tell father that he was saved. The doctor understood, forgave and everybody was happy.

Vivian Martin is just the sort of appealing young thing that belongs in a little human story like this, and Producer Howard Estabrook has carefully chosen the types to provide the proper atmosphere to surround this young lady. The net result is that we have an offering which is better than the average program release, because there is no overdone melodrama and there are many little human bits that register at the heart, while the distinctive lightings and the many little touches of human detail tend to make the action convincing.

The story provided opportunity for several little situations which registered appealing bits of pathos, and these were handled very well. The comedy relief was also well balanced, but some of the titles which had been written into the action were truly awful! In one place there was a title "Oh, father . . . " for which somebody in the scenario or editing department should be severely chastised.

Jack Holt as the hero was a well chosen type because he looked like a clean-cut young professional man, and P. H. Sosso, as the father, gave a decidedly pleasing performance, his make-up being excellent.

Others who appeared were Jack Richardson and Alice Knowlan.

The Box Office Angle.

Considering the fact that the wild-eyed melodrama is pretty well worked out, with fans everywhere calling for human things, I would say that this has a splendid chance of registering as very satisfactory entertainment, because the story, although elementary, develops a nice little moral and certainly the producer has lifted it decidedly by intelligent artistic lighting and by the human bits of detail that help make the action seem real.

In billing this I would mention the productions in which Miss Martin has appeared which have gone well with you, and I would also speak of the fact that this has been produced by Howard Estabrook, since he is remembered favorably as a star and gives decided promise of being a director whose work you will be able to get business on if you acquaint your fans with the fact that he is producing.

You can play up this sort of an angle in advertising, in order to make this a bit different from ordinary routine movies. Ask: "Do you think every young girl should have a chance to go to boarding school, even though her parents must economize to send her? See Vivian Martin in 'Giving Becky a Chance.'"

Mid-Northwest Trade Journal

AMUSEMENTS

Four Thousand Theaters in Eight Live States
Established 1914. Published Weekly.

Thomas J. Hamlin, Managing Editor.
T. E. Mortensen, Business Manager.

Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

PLEASING HUMAN CHARACTERIZATION BY HART PUTS THIS OVER

William S. Hart in WOLF LOWRY
Kay Bee—Triangle

DIRECTOR	William S. Hart
ART DIRECTOR	Robert Brunton
AUTHOR	Charles Turner Dazey
CAMERAMAN	Joe August
AS A WHOLE	Heart interest character stuff that will appeal
STORY	Elementary, but develops good sympathic character
DIRECTION	Registered good atmosphere and made action hit heart
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good; a few bits excellent
LIGHTINGS	A few very effective generally just good
CAMERA WORK	Good
STAR	Very pleasing personality in good characterization
SUPPORT	Quite satisfactory
EXTERIORS	Good atmosphere; a few excellent
INTERIORS	Good for atmosphere
DETAIL	Several nice bits
TIME	Sixty-two minutes (5 parts)

THERE is only one Bill Hart, and I believe that he stands to-day as one of the most popular personalities in filmdom. His work carries a sincerity that makes the characterization seem real and he has a delightful manner of putting over those little awkward bits of business as the bashful lover which so few know how to register and keep them convincing.

In this there were a few splashes of action, but the story was really just the development of a character which the audience learns to love in the first two or three reels, only to feel a tremendous amount of sympathy for him on the finish, when he sacrificed the woman he loved to the man she loved when he learned that he was not her choice.

As in all of Mr. Hart's productions, the atmosphere was excellent. The supporting cast was quite satisfactory, although, with the exception of Margery Wilson, the parts didn't stand out. It was virtually a two-character story, and it was a sure proof of Mr. Hart's ability that he carried so well the many scenes which were centered upon Miss Wilson and himself.

The story told simply of the ranchman who fell in love with a young girl who came into the community, and we had rather a thrilling fight in the dark, where Mr. Hart saved Miss Wilson from the attentions of the willun.

This was followed by her nursing Mr. Hart back to health, his proposal and the preparations for the wedding. About this time a stranger drifted into town and we learned that he was the man Miss Wilson had always loved. She had come West to find him after having heard nothing from him for a long time. When Mr. Hart had seen her former sweetheart's picture she had lied to him, saying that the man was her half-brother.

The reunited lovers planned to run away just before Miss Wilson was to be married to Bill, and the rancher was tipped off by the willun, with the result that the brute showed, and we found the Westerner tying the man who was to steal his bride, to a tree in the woods to await the coming of the wolves.

He changed his mind in time, after learning that the girl really loved this man, and after a spirited fight with the wolves, which scenes were very well handled by effective night photography, we found the rancher substituting the lover for himself as groom at the wedding, which had been arranged with detailed preparation.

There were some very effective scenes at the finish where Mr. Hart made his big sacrifice, but the cutting here was bad, with the result that the tempo was lost and these didn't register nearly so well as they should have. For instance, there was one splendid silhouette with a cloud effect where Mr. Hart stood on the hill ready to mount his horse and ride away, and instead of allowing this to play through at a slow tempo, some one cut it up so that the short flashes killed the effectiveness of the situation.

We also found a lot of scenes here at the finish that were unnecessary, because the story was over and any audience will be reaching for their hats and half-way out of the theatre. It was desired to show Mr. Hart alone in the North while the lovers were happy, and this was a splendid contrast, but the cutting should have brought these scenes quickly following the clutch, using only the bit of Mr. Hart going away cut in between. Better cutting would have made this finish ten times more effective.

Others in the cast were Aaron Edwards and Carl Ullman.

The Box Office Angle.

If you know how to handle this stuff, Bill Hart should get you as much money as any personality in the business. He has some delightful little awkward-lover scenes in this and the character develops into a big, lovable fighting man capable of a supreme sacrifice which throws all of the sympathy to him on the finish.

I would hammer Bill Hart in all of my advertising, with the statement that this production presents him as one of the most lovable fightin' men he has ever played.

Do You Realize

That the music in your theatre can either make or break a picture and affect your box-o ce accordingly?

THE MANAGERS OF 20 N. Y. THEATRES and their capable Musical Directors realize this and depend solely upon

GEORGE W. BEYNON
FOR MUSICAL SETTINGS

That's my specialty—I arrange settings for all the big features.

SCORES THAT PUT THE PICTURE OVER
AND DRAW DOLLARS TO YOUR BOX OFFICE
In this advanced day of Motion Picture art

DON'T TAKE CHANCES
on music that burlesques the picture. Why spoil a good picture with inappropriate music? Bolster up the poor one with music that covers the weak spots. Let me fit your next week's program. Your musical director has heard of me—ask him!

SCORES OF SCORES THAT SCORED
"Pride of the Clan" — "Enlighten Thy Daughter"
168 Paramount Releases — 3 Triangle Superfeatures

My score for "ONE LAW FOR BOTH," now playing LYRIC THEATRE, New York, is the talk of the musical and feature picture world.

INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS!

Before presenting your next production, consult BEYNON —Phone Murray Hill 9876.

EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE

I can provide you with orchestral setting for any feature on reasonable rental basis. Write BEYNON—505 Fifth Ave., New York City.

GEORGE W. BEYNON,
505 Fifth Ave., New York City.

ENTERTAINING LITTLE FARCE THAT WILL PLEASE GENERALLY

Emmy Wehlen in

THE DUCHESS OF DOUBT

Rolfe—Metro

DIRECTOR.....George D. Baker
AUTHORS.....John B. Clymer and Charles A. Logue
SCENARIO BY.....George D. Baker
CAMERAMAN.....Joseph Schelderfer
AS A WHOLE.....Artificial, but entertaining
STORY.....Poor orphan playing duchess stuff; had some good spots
DIRECTION.....Played as farce and kept it interesting
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied from fine to fair; often too contrasty because of lightings
LIGHTINGS.....Occasionally excellent, but generally too contrasty
CAMERA WORK.....Varied
STAR.....Rather good; wears clothes well
SUPPORT.....Some good types; fitted into action acceptably
EXTERIORS.....A few fine shots; generally good
INTERIORS.....A few excellent; generally good
DETAIL.....Satisfactory
TIME.....Fifty-nine minutes (5 parts)

BECAUSE this is played from start to finish as a farce, the fact that many of the characters are a bit overdone doesn't detract to any extent, and I believe the offering will register as acceptable entertainment most anywhere, because it picks up towards the end and has a good heart-interest twist on the finish which is pleasing, even though it may be expected by many.

The story tells of a boarding-house slavey who has a hard time in life, getting much enjoyment out of reading a novel called "The Duchess of Doubt," which told of a waitress who had traveled incognito, with the result that she had been accepted in society as a duchess.

After a certain amount of footage having to do with the trials and tribulations of a boarding-house, the star boarder died, leaving the remainder of his fortune, amounting to about eight thousand dollars, to our heroine. She calmly started out to have one grand time, and we next found her in a fashionable summer hotel entering with a chauffeur, maid and all the trimmings, with an air which startled the hotel clerk and brought the proprietor double-quick to offer her the best the house afforded.

This was followed by the complications of the wealthy man and the ribbon clerk who wanted to marry her, with ambitious mamma and jealous daughter who wanted to meet the "duchess," with daughter trying to marry the ribbon clerk, while mother wanted daughter to wed the wealthy guy. Of course, the ribbon clerk fell for the "duchess," who liked him despite his job, and then came the blow-off when the jealous daughter uncovered our heroine's past and an accidental mix-up brought to light the fact that the "duchess's" jewels were phoney.

Our heroine made a getaway after the expose, and then we found her applying for work in the department store where our ribbon clerk was much in evidence. Now, however, we discovered that the clerk was really the boss' son, and not a clerk at all, and, seeing the girl, he pretended to be a clerk, made the floorwalker fire him for talking to her and then promptly took her to the probate court and put her through the marriage ceremony. It was only after they returned to the store that he explained to her that he was not a counter-jumper. Of course, he had learned that she wasn't a duchess when she did her getaway, and the sympathy had been planted with him at the hotel because he had so cheerfully admitted that he was only a ribbon clerk instead of pretending that he was what he really was.

Miss Wehlen was rather pleasing in this because she got away with the boarding-house slavey stuff satisfactorily and really looked very good in the gowns which she pulled in her good time while spending the eight thousand bucks. Of course, at no time did she do anything that was wrong, because she only let other people decide for themselves that she was a "duchess." It wasn't necessary for her to tell them that she was.

George Stuart Christie, as the hero, was quite satisfactory, although he didn't stand out very strongly, and the other members of the cast were just good types who fitted in where needed.

In the cast were Frank Currier, Peggy Parr, Kate Blancke, Ilean Hume, Ricca Allen, Fred C. Truesdell, Charlie Eldridge and Walter Horton.

The Box Office Angle.

This isn't big, but it is fairly entertaining, and since it is presented as farce from start to finish, I believe it will be generally accepted and counted quite worth while.

Figured from the box office pulling power, there is quite a question regarding Emmy Wehlen's value, and I would think that it would be decidedly necessary that you stir up some interest in this title, because the name of the star and the name of the picture will hardly be enough to pull them in without some effort on your part.

You might say: "Do you believe that a waitress could travel incognito and be accepted as a duchess? It has been done! See Emmy Wehlen in 'The Duchess of Doubt.'" "What would you do if someone left you eight thousand dollars. Would you have one good time, or stick it in a bank? See Emmy Wehlen in 'The Duchess of Doubt.'"

As program releases go, this is better than the average because it is clean and funny at times without a vamp, a willun or the usual wronged-shero stuff.

A Binder

for WID'S

$1.50 Prepaid Everywhere

PITIFULLY, UN-FUNNY, CRUDE ATTEMPT AT FARCE

Ralph Herz in

THE MYSTERY OF NO. 47

Selig—K-E-S-E

)IRECTOR	Otis B. Thayer
.UTHOR	J. Storer Clouston
AS A WHOLE	Awful Junk; rather pitiful forced attempt at comedy
STORY	Mix-up over imaginary murder that had possibilities
)IRECTION	Painfully old-school, making points miss fire
'HOTOGRAPHY	Very ordinary
LIGHTINGS	Generally too uniform; frequently poor
'AMERA WORK	Ordinary; sometimes poor
STAR	Un-funny; very forced
SUPPORT	Looked like extras
EXTERIORS	Setty; rather cheap
)ETAIL	Movie caliber
TIME	Fifty-three minutes (5 parts)

CERTAINLY if Mr. Selig expects the exhibitors and the public to take his brand name seriously he should not put out this sort of junk as a five-reel feature.

Ralph Herz as a comedian on the screen is about as un-funny in this as any stage personage with a reputation that I have ever seen. All through the)ffering his work was forced, and because of the fact hat he starts out with a pitiful make-up, he never has a chance to win his audience during the course of the)roduction.

A little later he discarded the whiskers and the bum wig, but after that he insisted upon playing to the camera whenever given a chance, and he evidently didn't realize that there is nothing worse in a feature than a comedian who forces his attempts by mugging to the lens.

The story builded and builded with many complications and fast-twisting farcical situations into a complex mess that, intelligently handled, might have been rather funny. It all had to do with an Englishman's attempt to get rid of a bishop who was his cousin, which resulted in the Englishman being suspected of having murdered his wife, with the suspected murderer discarding his whiskers and hair to return to live in his own home under an assumed name, where he added to the complications built up around the imaginary murder, until several people were threatened with arrest.

If this had been handled by capable people, with a director who knew comedy values, there might have been a chance of making it a good farce. As screened with Mr. Herz and the extras who appeared as his supporting cast, it was awful!

The general atmosphere was cheap, with the lightings uniform and the sets very far from showing class, so that the general impression created by this will certainly not be a favorable one.

The average fan after watching this for ten or fifteen minutes will either go home, go to sleep or begin to cuss the feller that wished it on to him.

In the supporting cast were Louizetta Valentine, James Fulton, Casson Ferguson, Lloyd Sedgwick, Nellie Hartley, Edgar Murray, Fred Eckhart, May White, Mrs. Wiggin and Tony West.

Box Office Angle.

I can't figure that Ralph Herz has any real draft at the box office billed as a star, and certainly you cannot safely under any circumstances boost this, because it isn't there. If you hope to retain the confidence of your fans you can't afford to play this, because at no time does it register as sure-enough feature material. There is a juvenile in the film—Lord Harry, or some other "Lord Help-us" who had a hair cut that marked him as a five-dollar-a-day man. Certainly I don't feel that you can afford to put over this sort of production in a house where your fans expect to see really worthwhile productions.

Of course, if you are catering to people who don't care much and you have the same feeling about your place of business, then this can sneak by with the rest of the movie junk and probably you will be able to get it cheap. If you expect to stay in the business I'd dodge all such as this.

KEYSTONE THRILL STUFF PRESENTED AS SERIOUS MELO—AWFUL

Mary MacLaren and Eddie Polo in MONEY MADNESS

Butterfly—Universal

DIRECTOR	Henry McRae
AUTHOR	Frank Spearman
SCENARIO BY	William Parker
CAMERAMAN	Fred Le Roy Granville
AS A WHOLE	Wild-eyed melo
STORY	Everything but the kitchen stove
DIRECTION	Made seriously stuff Mack Sennett has been putting in Keystone
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally ordinary; a few good spots
LIGHTINGS	Generally poor; occasionally good
CAMERA WORK	Not good
STARS	Overshadowed by rushing action
SUPPORT	Ordinary movie types
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable
DETAIL	Some wild stuff
TIME	Sixty-three minutes (5 parts)

ZOWIE! This one raved and ranted and sped along at an eighty-mile-an-hour clip with everything happening from a run on the bank and the raid of the gambling house to the half-dozen auto chases, with the grand finale where the willuns stole an engine and were overhauled after a grand and glorious chase by the pursuing party in an automobile.

You certainly remember seeing many Keystones in which Mack Sennett has pulled all of this wild junk and made it truly funny. Well, in this they have everything but the kitchen stove, and if your fans are of the eat-'em-up-Dick kind they may think this is great, but, to my mind, even those who like the blood-and-thunder stuff will feel that this is a little too much for their money, and consequently it will get a good many laughs before it is through.

Certainly, an intelligent audience will not enjoy this from any angle other than seeing how far producers can go when they cut loose and try to make a wild mellerdrammer.

Mary MacLaren, when under the direction of Lois Weber, has given us several very human characterizations. In this, Mary didn't have a chance to do anything but be the typical meller shero, and the wild action ran so fast that, unless they look at the lithographs before they go in, your fans will hardly know that she is in the picture.

So far as concerns Eddie Polo, if they hadn't said that he was co-starred, I would have figured that he was an extra.

Just to prove that they could do all the Keystone mellerdramatic burlesque stuff, they had the fight-on-the-roof scenes, with some of the men going from one building to another on a plank and then pulling it after them, while the policeman jumped across the chasm, fought with the men on the edge of the roof and was finally seen hanging over the edge of the building with these doity devils stamping on his hands to force him to fall to his death. I've laughed at that several times when comedians have pulled it with the proper flourishes, but it seemed just as funny here—except that there was a touch of pity to it when one realized that somebody was making this as a serious dramatic offering.

The plot—what there was to it—had to do with the fact that the president of the bank (which was in trouble when the story opened, with arm-waving mobs standing in front) wanted to pay off the depositors, while the willunous vice-president and the other directors didn't want to. The president took the bank's funds to his home in order to be able to protect them and the vice-president, with the assistance of a couple of crooks, swiped them. It took the hero, who was of course a clerk, and the shero, who was the president's daughter, several reels to go through all this exciting melodramatic chase stuff before the funds were recovered.

Whenever they needed a cut-back—and this was entirely too often—they showed us a flash of the arm-waving mob in front of the bank. They must've ground out a lot of that stuff while they had the chance, and decided to just sprinkle it here and there through the film.

In accordance with the other stuff in this, they had one of those fellers who could open any safe made. There certainly are a lot of those guys in the movies—aren't there?

I think the title of this refers particularly to the men who release such productions. Certainly this is a case of "Money Madness," because producers wouldn't dare offer any such junk on the Open Market. They know that the Program system will make it possible for them to get a certain amount of money with this production, and so it goes out even though they realize in their hearts that it is wild-eyed hokum.

At no time did this convince or register as human, and the speed of the surface action was such that it didn't even provide a thrill when they pulled the wild chase stuff.

In the cast were Al Vosburgh, Don Bailey, Rex de Roselli, M. Everett and Charles Hill Mailes.

The Box Office Angle.

Unless you cater to an audience which seems to like the wildest of the wild serials and the rabid mellerdrammers, I would certainly steer clear of this. If by any chance there is a reason why you have to play it, I would announce in unmistakable terms that it is a melodrama of automobile chases, robberies, house-top fights, etc., so that those who like that sort of junk may come and the others stay away, with any one who does come having no kick to present after they've seen it.

IBSEN DRAMA INTERESTING, BUT NOT ALTOGETHER ENTERTAINING

Dorothy Phillips in

A DOLL'S HOUSE

Bluebird

DIRECTOR	Joseph De Grasse
AUTHOR	Henrik Ibsen
SCENARIO BY	Ida May Park
CAMERAMAN	King D. Gray
AS A WHOLE	Well-done, interesting, but unhappy ending and a bit burdensome at times
STORY	Holds right well because of handling, but underlying points will be missed by many
DIRECTION	Made dramatic moments effective, but frequently missed the heart touch because of action complications
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally good
LIGHTINGS	Some fine, but frequently faces too chalky
CAMERA WORK	Generally good, but occasionally poor
STAR	Very good characterization
SUPPORT	Some good types nicely handled
EXTERIORS	Very few; but good
INTERIORS	Good; not exceptional
DETAIL	Generally good; one sequence assembled wrong in print shown in theatre
TIME	Seventy minutes (5 parts)

A FOREWORD helps this because it points out the underlying thought, but even then the average audience is going to miss many of the points in this, with the action of the story, as they see it, proving interesting but not exceptionally entertaining. The unhappy ending will not register very favorably with a film fan, but the curse of this is taken off somewhat by the fact that the producers have finished the production with a signature of Henrik Ibsen—which sort of puts the blame on the author in case anybody has an idea that they don't care for it. In other words, your alibi on this will be that, if somebody tells you they don't like it, you just look superior and they will think it is their fault for not appreciating such a genius as Ibsen. That will get you by very many outright arguments, but nevertheless I fear you will find many of your regulars disappointed with this as entertainment.

The story of "A Doll's House" has to do with the characterization of the self-sufficient husband who can do no wrong and the wife who sacrifices much in order to help him, only to find that when the test comes he denounces her instead of assuming the blame, as she thought he would.

The foreword announces that this play did much towards bringing about woman suffrage in Norway, and explained that the author was hammering at the thought that most men considered their wives as a plaything, or doll.

Dorothy Phillips is rather interesting in the character of the wife and she carries many of the big dramatic scenes very effectively. Miss Phillips has done some very much worthwhile work in the past year, and those who like her will undoubtedly consider this a splendid characterization.

Lon Chaney, as the forger friend of the husband who is redeemed by the love of the woman he had failed to get early in his life, had poise and authority and made his part register in every scene.

William Stowell, as the self-sufficient husband, was very satisfactory in a difficult part.

Sidney Dean, as the old friend of the family, made his part stand out, and the other members of the cast were quite satisfactory. They were Miriam Shelby and Helen Wright.

In the print which I saw in a theatre one sequence was assembled all wrong with the husband and the woman friend of the family jumped into the middle of a scene between Miss Phillips and Mr. Chaney, after which Mr. Chaney finished the scene he had been playing in the same set and made an exit while husband and the woman entered. This will be very confusing to those who don't understand what has happened. Be sure the print you get is O. K. It came in about the last of the third or the first of the fourth reel.

The Box Office Angle.

You can safely play this and by talking enough about Henrik Ibsen beforehand you can build an atmosphere around the production which will make it proof against the disapproval of the average fan. It isn't what I would consider really pleasing entertainment, because, despite the fact that some of the scenes are made very dramatic, the production as a whole lacks the weight which the lines of the play give it.

Dorothy Phillips has had some very good productions in the past few months, and if you will refer to those which have gone over very well, you can probably do a nice business with this and find that it registers very satisfactorily.

I would not plug too strong on the production itself, but would talk about Miss Phillips, her work in the past and the thought of the play, mentioning particularly the fact that it had a real influence in securing woman suffrage in Norway, the first European country to make this concession to the fair sex.

IMPOSSIBLE WILD-EYED ATHLETIC HERO MELLER FARCE MIX UP

George Walsh in

THE BOOK AGENT

Fox Film

DIRECTOR ..... Otis Turner
AUTHOR ..... Walter Woods
SCENARIO BY ..... F. McGrew Willis and Otis Turner
CAMERAMAN ..... R. E. Irish
AS A WHOLE ..... Wild-eyed impossible junk
DIRECTION ..... Neither burlesque nor good melo; neither comedy nor drama— just a mess
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Occasionally good, but frequently off focus and poorly lighted
LIGHTINGS ..... A few excellent and many poor
CAMERA WORK ..... Varied from fine to poor
STAR ..... Made him mixture imitation of Fairbanks and Chaplin
SUPPORT ..... Mixture of farce-meller-movie characters
EXTERIORS ..... Some very good; others ordinary
INTERIORS ..... Some fine; others fair; wasted on production
DETAIL ..... Awful
TIME ..... Sixty-seven minutes (5 parts)

TRULY, this was a mess!

Starting off with an attempt to present George Walsh, who is something of an athlete, in the farcical character of a persistent book agent, they soon drifted into some wild meller-drammer which even outdid the name "wild" without becoming funny or interesting.

The average audience will look at this rather good-naturedly for a time and will then commence to laugh at it, instead of with it—and the chances are that most of your intelligent fans will quit long before it is through.

There is no rhyme of reason to most of this and it isn't even a burlesque melo, because there was no trick to the mad stuff such as there was in "Manhattan Madness," nor was it kidded in the titles as they did in "The Sixteenth Wife?" It was just plain wild-eyed meller with opportunity after opportunity for athletic hero to rush to the rescue, with periodic attempts at comedy that fell very, very flat.

This book agent guy was supposed to climb into a girls' seminary right off the bat, and then later he obligingly wandered into the home of a wealthy gink who was ready to die, with several grafters trying to cut in on his will. The girl the book agent had met in the seminary was the old gink's granddaughter and she applied as nurse, to be near him, with the book agent conveniently getting a job as chair-pusher for the invalid grandfather, after he had rescued fair heroine from the guy who had expected to inherit the coin.

That planted things for much footage in which many assorted willuns attempted to do doity woik, with hero always on hand. There was much kidnapping, attempts at robbery, etc., with our athletic one on the job to thwart the Desperate Desmonds.

In the final incident, where Mr. Walsh went to the rescue, we found him rushing up a stairway to save the old man and the girl, with the willun pressing a button which allowed the stairs to part and precipitate hero into a cellar below. This was quite a shock, but what followed was worse.

Nothing daunted, our hero piled some boxes one upon another and then promptly put his head through a trapdoor in the ceiling which let him up into a room on the first floor. He then piled some more junk together and stuck his head through another trapdoor, which landed him in the room where the willuns were doing their doity deeds. No one ever explained who built these trapdoors so conveniently—they "just happened."

George Walsh is a good little athlete, and properly handled can make rather a pleasing impression, but if they give him any more of these, the fans will be off of him for life.

The cast was the general assortment of ordinary movie types to be found in the average farce or melodrama, with the two rather mixed up so that you are not quite certain most of the time whether the feller that made this was serious or not.

In the cast were Doris Pawn, William Burress, Velma Whitman, Reginald Everett, Josef Swickard, Willard Louis and Phil Gastrock.

The Box Office Angle.

By all means dodge this!

If for any reason you have to play it, come out very frankly and say that it is a mad mixture of farce and wild-eyed melodrama with an athletic hero who rescued the heroine eight times in every reel, and a few rescues for her wealthy grandfather thrown in, and promise them plenty of action with many ridiculous situations. If they come to see it after that, they can't blame you if they want to know what it's all about after having seen the five reels.

If George Walsh has established any following in your community and you have also been playing the Douglas Fairbanks stuff, I believe I would keep this on the shelf, because it will certainly not do Walsh any good and may hurt you for his next, which might be worth while.

There were a lot of titles in this that were pathetic in their attempts to be funny and there was one title which was simply the word "Impossible!" Yea, bo!—that described it!

DISGUSTING DOPE FIEND DRUNK MELLER MESS BADLY PLAYED

Gail Kane in

THE SERPENT'S TOOTH

American—Mutual

DIRECTOR.....Rollin S. Sturgeon
AUTHOR.....Forrest Halsey
SCENARIO BY.....Doris Schroeder
AS A WHOLE..Wild mess; sort of dope fiend's nightmare
STORY....Disgusting in spots; certainly not entertaining
DIRECTION.....Gave some fine lightings, but permitted wild meller, and consequently not pleasing
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied from fine to fair
LIGHTINGS.....Many splendid; some ordinary CAMERA WORK.....Varied from excellent to ordinary
STAR.....In unsatisfactory part
SUPPORT.....Overplayed too much
EXTERIORS.....Varied; some excellent; others ordinary
INTERIORS.....Some very good; others just fair
DETAIL.....Too much unpleasant stuff
TIME.....Fifty-five minutes (5 parts)

I AM afraid that intelligent discriminating fans will sort of resent this offering because it is built around the delightful idea of husband who tired of his wife, preferring a coarse, vulgar-looking female to the beautiful Miss Kane, with the result that he began to dope his wife and continued until she became mentally unbalanced, while husband himself ranted and raved as a result of being stewed most of the time.

Of course, there was a doctor in the offing who loved the wife, and on the finish they pulled one of those quick twists where drunken, no-account hubby was disposed of by death, with the future seeming promising for the lovers.

There is so much disgusting detail to the feeding of the dope and its effect, the drinking of booze and the wild acting it caused that I feel sure most family folk will want to get up and go home before this is half over. It is just one of those wild things that somebody decided would provide what they call "big scenes" with characters raving all over the place, and consequently it was put over as a feature. I imagine some one was under the delusion that these raving spots were going to be tremendous dramatic situations.

The general trend of this was very much rip-and-tear, 10-20-30 mellerdrammer atmosphere, and there was nothing about it that was sufficiently redeeming to offset the bad spots.

There were many lightings that were excellent and frequently Miss Kane was so lighted in close-ups as to make her quite beautiful. But then again, we had spots which were not so good and these discounted the better bits, with the result that the average didn't hold up.

Those who appeared in support of Miss Kane were Edward Peil, William Conklin, Charles P. Kellogg, Jane Pascal, Mary Lee Wise and Frederick Broom.

The Box Office Angle.

To my mind, the average community audience doesn't like to sit for an hour and watch wronged-wife stuff in which the husband feeds his missus dope and gets stewed himself almost every scene. I think this is very messy; at times disgusting. It seemed a pity to waste good lightings on the material provided in the story situations.

I can't feel that even the sort of audience which cares for productions that are a little blue and somewhat wild will enjoy this, because too much emphasis has been placed on the dope fiend ravings and the drunk's wild actions. There is too much overplaying and the human note is never there.

If you can find something which isn't so lurid, I would surely think that it would be more satisfactory to nine-tenths of your patrons.

ORDINARY SURFACE ACTION MELO WITH SOME WILD SPOTS

Carlyle Blackwell and June Elvidge in

THE CRIMSON DOVE

Peerless—Brady—World

DIRECTOR.....Romaine Fielding
CAMERAMAN.....William Cooper
AS A WHOLE.....Ordinary surface-action melo that doesn't impress
STORY.....Crowded with incident, much of it melo; some awful
DIRECTION.....Kept things moving, but never hit human note
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varied decidedly
LIGHTINGS.....A few excellent, but many ordinary
CAMERA WORK.....Varied
STARS.....She rather impressive; he camera-conscious hero
SUPPORT.....Mostly camera-conscious melo characters
EXTERIORS.....Acceptable; not distinctive
INTERIORS.....Acceptable; lacked class
DETAIL.....Atmosphere artistic
TIME.....Sixty-four minutes (5 parts)

THIS was another surface-action melodrama in which much happened without any of it registering humanly enough to become truly impressive.

The best incidents in the offering were the scenes in which Miss Elvidge taught some Bowery children in a school, but such good little bits as these were more than offset by the wild melodrama which came at the finish, where our minister-hero was shown to be quite some fighter, whipping the bully, etc., with the church set on fire at the end by an arm-waving mob, and hero rushed in to save the half-wit boy and a child who had been caught in the belfry of the burning building.

There was one incident alone that was enough to condemn this offering in the minds of intelligent fans. After the scene had shifted from the city where the scarlet woman had been established and the hero and this woman had drifted into the lumber camp in the mountains, we found a roughneck saloon-keeper getting into the action, and he was treating the goil who loved him "jest turrible!" Finally a stranger blew in, and he decided to run away with her, despite the protests of his loving friend, and then a few scenes later we got the terrible shock. A title went up—"Meanwhile . . . Carewe, having killed Nevada, is hunted by the sheriff." Since we had only seen Carewe meet this strange female and ride away with her, it was certainly quite some shock to be informed so abruptly that he had "done" gone and killed her.

For those who like wild mellerdrammers and ten-twent'-thirt' stories of the minister who finally redeems the sin woman after whipping the lumber camp bully, this may register as great stuff. If you have a theatre in a community where your fans appreciate good things, I would certainly not feed them this sort of production. Let the fellers who cater to the class that kept alive the rip-and-tear stock companies book these things. Because when you continue to present surface "mellers" like this to intelligent fans, you are only driving them away from your house to that of the man who selects worth-while productions directed and played humanly.

This offering seldom has a real chance, because the story keeps moving from one meller situation to another without ever pausing long enough to make the action seem real.

In the supporting cast were Dion Titheradge, Edward N. Hoyt, Maxime Hicks, Henry West and Marie La Varre.

The Box-Office Angle

I believe it depends entirely upon the character of patronage to which you appeal whether you can afford to consider this sort of production. It is surface melodrama all the way, with decided emphasis on the "melo," in spots. The tempo toward the finish is such as to make any one who enjoys human things sit back and smile.

If you are catering to a clientele that seems to enjoy the blood-and-thunder stuff, with the righteous, 'ansom 'ero who conquers all, then this may get over for them. It fails to hit the human note or seem like anything but "movie" melo at any time.

BADLY FORCED ATTEMPT AT COMEDY QUITE UNFUNNY

Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen in AMERICAN—THAT'S ALL

Eastern Fine Arts—Triangle

PRODUCED UNDER SUPERVISION OF	Allan Dwan
DIRECTOR	Arthur Rosson
ASSISTANT DIRECTOR	Dick Rosson
AUTHOR	Robert Shirley
CAMERAMAN	Roy Overbaugh
AS A WHOLE	Painfully forced attempt at comedy; missed fire badly
STORY	Formula No. 14; son, to make good, corners vinegar so father must buy it back to make pickles
DIRECTION	Missed human note badly, making action mechanical and forced
PHOTOGRAPHY	Acceptable; not distinctive
LIGHTINGS	Just good generally; poor at times; no attempt for effects
CAMERA WORK	Acceptable; not enough close-ups; most of scenes too far from camera
STARS	Tried hard to be funny
SUPPORT	Ordinary
EXTERIORS	Ordinary
INTERIORS	Acceptable; would have been good with proper camera angles
DETAIL	Much un-funny junk
TIME	Fifty-eight minutes (5 parts)

ANY average audience will laugh at this—not with it.

The story is the old, old chestnut of no-account son of wealthy father who married the actress and then had to make good, with the result that actress had the brilliant idea of cornering all the vinegar so that father couldn't make pickles, thereby forcing father to buy back the vinegar from son, forgiving the couple.

From the start to the finish they tried so hard to do funny things that they were decidedly un-funny. The action was mechanical and forced, with many little stunts which were dragged in by the heels failing utterly to appeal to the sense of humor.

Jack Devereaux got away to a good start in his first Triangle release, but he has failed sadly to keep up the stride he hit, because in his last picture he was somewhat mechanical and in this one he was awful. There is nothing so pitiful as an attempt to do something funny which fails to go over. One or two of these could be overlooked in any average five-reel picture, but when the offering is presented as a comedy and these attempts to be funny crop out about every hundred feet with 90 per cent. of them falling flat, then the production is one grand "fliv."

The story moved slowly through a lot of junk about the wealthy pickle manufacturer wanting to marry his son to a lady of title, with much detail about father's notions of having a family tree, a crest and paintings of ancestors, down to the marriage between the actress and hero, with the vinegar incident coming at the end of it all. This might have had a chance if Devereaux had not insisted upon trying to do something funny on any and all occasions. Surely the ability to pull little bits of business and get a laugh is a gift. I can consider it nothing else after seeing the success in this work of a few of our real comedians and the failure of many who have tried to do these things in a mechanical way.

There is no reason in the world why Winifred Allen should be picked out and featured, so far as I can see, because while she is a fairly pretty little girl, she certainly lacks anything that could be called personality.

This, as an instance of supervised production, certainly does not speak well for the methods, or else it proves that, while Mr. Dwan is a very good director himself, he isn't nearly so good as a supervisor.

The general atmosphere was just ordinary, with the decided fault of too many scenes being played too far from the camera, with too few camera angles and decidedly too few close-ups.

In the cast were Mrs. Blanche Davenport, Charles Mussett, George Rennavent, Miss Cummins, Jack Raymond and Walter Walker.

The Box Office Angle.

I would certainly dodge this one. It has a peach of a title for the present moment and it finishes up with a lot of Star Spangled Banner stuff showing the featured players centered on the screen with several presidents grouped around them, but I have a hunch that fans will not respond to the wave-the-flag appeal after they have looked at such a forced attempt at fun-making as this is. They like to see something which glorifies the American, but, believe me, this American was quite some boob and at no time in this will he win an audience sufficiently to have them raving over him as a fine specimen of Uncle Sam's best.

If you have to play this I would call it a nonsensical farce and make similar alibis, because if you don't they will probably say things to you when they leave. If they don't say them, they will think 'em.

Most anything should be better than this, because the attempts to be funny in this antagonize more than they please.

CRUDE MELLER POORLY PLAYED, FEATURING TY COBB

Ty Cobb in

SCOMEWHERE IN GEORGIA

Sunbeam Photoplays—State Rights

AUTHOR	Grantland Rice
SCENARIO BY	L. Case Russell
AS A WHOLE	Very ordinary movie melo built for ball hero
STORY	Crude, convenient, obvious meller
DIRECTION	Atmosphere lacked class and overplaying made entire offering seem ordinary
PHOTOGRAPHY	Generally poor; occasionally acceptable
LIGHTINGS	Not good
CAMERA WORK	Very ordinary; frequently poor
STAR	As actor, good ball player, but better than support
SUPPORT	Ordinary; acted much and overplayed regularly
EXTERIORS	Ordinary; neither beautiful nor distinctive
INTERIORS	Ordinary sets
DETAIL	Some very convenient spots
TIME	Sixty-eight minutes (6 parts)

IT seems a pity that so popular an idol as Ty Cobb is with one portion of our great American public should be made to appear so foolish to the millions who comprise another portion of our amusement loving public. It is very rare indeed that we find an athlete who is also a great actor, but certainly if I were a great athlete and thought I could act I would be particularly careful about the acting that I tried to do, the story that I tried to work in and the selection of the man who was to provide the atmosphere to serve as a background for my efforts.

As an actor, Ty Cobb is a good ball player. But nevertheless the general result of his histrionic attempt in this planted him as a better performer than any of the supporting cast who were supposed to be actors.

The story of this is credited to Grantland Rice. Probably Mr. Rice unloaded it on some magazine as a short story because of the dialect and clever baseball speeches which he worked into the plot development. Certainly no editor ever bought the story because of the skeleton of action provided. It was all very old stuff and painfully convenient and obvious.

The plot started off with Ty as a poor but honest bank employee who also played ball, and we found him giving up his bank job to get a trial on a big ball team at two hundred a month. Of course, there was the girl who happened to be the banker's daughter, and the willun, and after much footage we found Ty successful as a ball player, with willun trying to win the girl back in the old home town.

In order to secure complications they registered a brother of the girl, who of course was a weakling, and the willun promptly framed him so that it appeared as if he had robbed the bank. Then the willun forced the goil to agree to marry or have brother exposed.

About this time the willun planned a big ball game between a neighboring town and Ty's home town team and the willun secretly sent a wire to Chicago to secure a professional battery. Somebody slipped on this wire, because while this one was certainly sent to Chicago, the answer came from New York and the professional battery afterwards came from New York.

Of course, that was the cue for Ty's friends to sen a hurry call for him and he arrived to save the day.

To provide additional thrilling (?) suspense they sen Ty out hunting the morning of the game, and the willu —doity dog what he was—sent out a lot of roughneck to grab Ty and lock him up in a shed way out in th dark, deep woods.

Well, after that the game got under way and they go through with eight innings before Ty managed to mak his getaway and hurry to the rescue in an automobile Ty's old friend the storekeeper somehow just knew tha he was coming at the psychological moment, because h dug up Ty's ball outfit and chased way down the roa to meet him so that our hero could be all set to jump into the game in the last inning with two men on bases when he arrived, and of course Ty hit the first ball pitched for a home run.

About the same time, through our hero's detective work of the day before, the willun's doity deed in framing up the goil's brother was made public and the willun was handcuffed after one of those terrific rip-and-tear mellerdrammer struggles, and that ended the agony.

Most everyone has heard of Ty Cobb, whether they have seen him or not. Undoubtedly they will be interested in seeing him on the screen, but it is a serious question in my mind whether you can afford to play this ,because it is so painfully crude and ordinary.

In the supporting cast were Elsie MacLeod, Will Corbett, Harry Fisher and Edward Boulder.

The Box Office Angle.

If your fans are of the intelligent, discriminating community class I'd say that you cannot afford to play this, despite the fact that it would bring you some money. The production is crude from start to finish, the story is ordinary and there is nothing about it to make it entertaining.

Naturally there is some interest in watching Ty Cobb trying to appear unconscious of the camera without succeeding very well, but I fear that the intelligent patrons will not appreciate this through six reels, particularly when there are a lot of dubs figuring in scenes that cut in between Cobb's appearances.

If you are catering to transient business or to a clientele which isn't so particular and rather strong for baseball, this ought to be rather a good bet because of the possibility of getting money and the interest in Cobb's efforts. Even the boob fan will hardly consider this a good picture, but they will overlook many of the shortcomings because of the fact that they all understand that the offering has been adjusted to fit the baseball hero's acting limitations.

If you are going to play this you might use a line something like this: "Which should you train your boy to do—work in a bank, or play ball? See Ty Cobb in 'Somewhere in Georgia.'"

Benjamin Chapin

Author and Director General of the Lincoln Cycle Photoplays

The Benjamin Chapin Studios and Executive Offices: Ridgefield Park, N. J. Telephone 583 Hackensack

DIRECTORY OF DIRECTORS and

WILLIAM F. ALDRICH
FEATURE PRODUCER
Screen Club, 117 W. 45th St., N. Y. City.

GEORGE D. BAKER
PRODUCING FEATURES
METRO.

ALBERT CAPELLANI
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG CORP.

BERT CARBER
TECHNICAL DIRECTOR
THANHOUSER SCREEN CLUB

AL. E. CHRISTIE
DIRECTOR GENERAL
CHRISTIE COMEDIES

HAL CLARENDON
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL

J. GORDON EDWARDS
FEATURE PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE FITZMAURICE
PRODUCING
PATHE FEATURES

CHARLES GIBLYN
PRODUCING
Clara Kimball Young Features

JACK HARVEY
FEATURE PRODUCER
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

HOBART HENLEY
Producer of
"PARENTAGE"

ALLEN J. HOLUBAR
STAR AND DIRECTOR
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

WILLIAM J. HUMPHREY
PRODUCING FEATURES
Ivan Film Corp.

LLOYD INGRAHAM
MANAGEMENT
GRIFFITH-FINE ARTS STUDIOS

REX INGRAM
FEATURE PRODUCER
UNIVERSAL FILM CORPORATION

GEORGE IRVING
GENERAL PRODUCING DIRECTOR
Frohman Amusement Corporation

JOSEPH KAUFMAN
DIRECTOR
FAMOUS PLAYERS

HARLEY KNOLES
FEATURE DIRECTOR
WORLD FILM CORPORATION

FRANK KUGLER
DIRECTOR
Address Screen Club, 117 W. 45th, N. Y.

ROBERT LEONARD
PRODUCER
FEATURE FILMS

O. A. C. LUND

MARSHALL NEILAN
Directing for
LASKY FEATURE PLAY CO.

JOHN W. NOBLE
FEATURE PRODUCER
B. A. Rolfe-Metro Pictures Corporation

EUGENE NOWLAND
PRODUCING FEATURES

HENRY OTTO
FEATURE DIRECTOR

STUART PATON
FEATURE DIRECTOR

PAUL SCARDON
FEATURE DIRECTOR
VITAGRAPH

RICHARD STANTON
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

FREDERIC SULLIVAN
DIRECTOR THANHOUSER
Screen Club

WM. DESMOND TAYLOR
DIRECTOR
Morosco and Pallas-Paramount.

OTIS TURNER
DIRECTOR
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

PERRY N. VEKROFF
PRODUCING FEATURES
VITAGRAPH

JAMES VINCENT
PRODUCER
FOX FILM CORPORATION

LOIS WEBER
Lois Weber Productions

THE WHARTONS
FEATURE PRODUCERS
Ithaca New York.

JAMES YOUNG

AUTHORS

ANTHONY KELLY

EVE UNSELL
Famous Players—Lasky Corp.

CHARLES E. WHITTAKER
Adaptor of "THE WHIP" and
"THE PRIDE OF THE CLAN"
Address—Broadway Central Hotel.

CAMERAMEN

DAL CLAWSON
MOTION PHOTOGRAPHER
FOX

CHARLES KAUFMAN
CAMERAMAN
FOX PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS

ROY H. KLAFFKI
CINEMATOGRAPHER
UNIVERSAL FEATURES

IN FORM A MAGAZINE—IN FACT A SERVICE
THE BRADSTREET OF FILMDOM
WID'S
INDEPENDENT REVIEWS OF FEATURE FILMS

Always Independent
Issued Every Thursday VOL. III. THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1917. NO. 24 25 Cents a Copy $10.00 a Year

Published by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc., Times Building, 1475 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Entered as Second-Class Matter August 17, 1916, at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., Under the Act of March 3, 1879.
Copyrighted by Wid's Films and Film Folk, Inc.

EXCEPTIONALLY HUMAN ENTERTAINMENT AND FORCEFULLY IMPRESSIVE THOUGHTS PERFECTLY BLENDED IN VERY REMARKABLE FILM—TREMENDOUS STORY MADE MORE POWERFUL BY CONVINCING NATURALNESS OF TRULY EXCEPTIONAL CAST OF TYPES—KID STUFF DELIGHTFUL—HAS EXTRAORDINARY ADVERTISING POSSIBILITIES

